24 hour visitation is hanging in check awaiting final decision

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

Twenty-four hour dorm visitation may soon be a thing of the past.

It has been proposed by Student Life that the rule allowing guests to be in the residence halls at any time of day or night be repealed.

Julie Anderton, Vice President of Student Life has in fact made a regulation limiting visitation hours but resinded it upon request by ASWC President J.B. Meade in order to allow the students a say in the matter.

"I'm happy we have the chance to be a part of the decision," said Meade. "If she hears our arguments and tells us why she agrees or disagrees and makes her decision on that basis, I'll feel we've been a part."

Meade is heading a group of students that hope to have their position outlined by Oct. 3.

A position paper will be given to Anderton for review.

Many issues will be considered before the final decision on this policy is made.

Anderton thinks the 24 hour visitation policy that is currently practiced is not representing the values which Whitworth wants to project.

"I have been less than satisfied with the 24 hour policy as it is," said Anderton. "We are trying to put forward values that are a part of our educational experience for students who choose Whitworth."

"One value of Whitworth is freedom of choice," commented Wendy Hinand, South Warren Vice President. "From our Freshman year on they are pushing it on us."

"They are infringing on a lot of people's rights who would not break the rules anyway. They're punishing the whole for what a few do."

Meade agrees with Hinand that freedom is a big issue to be considered.

"Combining the no 24 hour visitation and no cohabitation policies cuts back freedom for students," said Meade. "To learn from a decision you have to make a choice which is a part of residential living. Struggling with your freedom gives you a chance to test your faith and if you fail you're in a place that will support you."

Janelle Thayer, Resident Director in the Warrens, sees a need for some kind of change.

"I think the 24 hour and cohabitation policies need to be more congruent — there needs to be consistency," said Thayer.

The Warrens RD also sees a possible problem with new hour regulations.

"One of the fears that I have is it may be too easy to confront the hours issue and not face the sexuality issue."

Janae Fox, a Resident Assistant in Arend, agrees with Thayer.

"I can understand their point," said Fox. "It does seem contradictory to have no cohabitation but still allow 24 hour visitation."

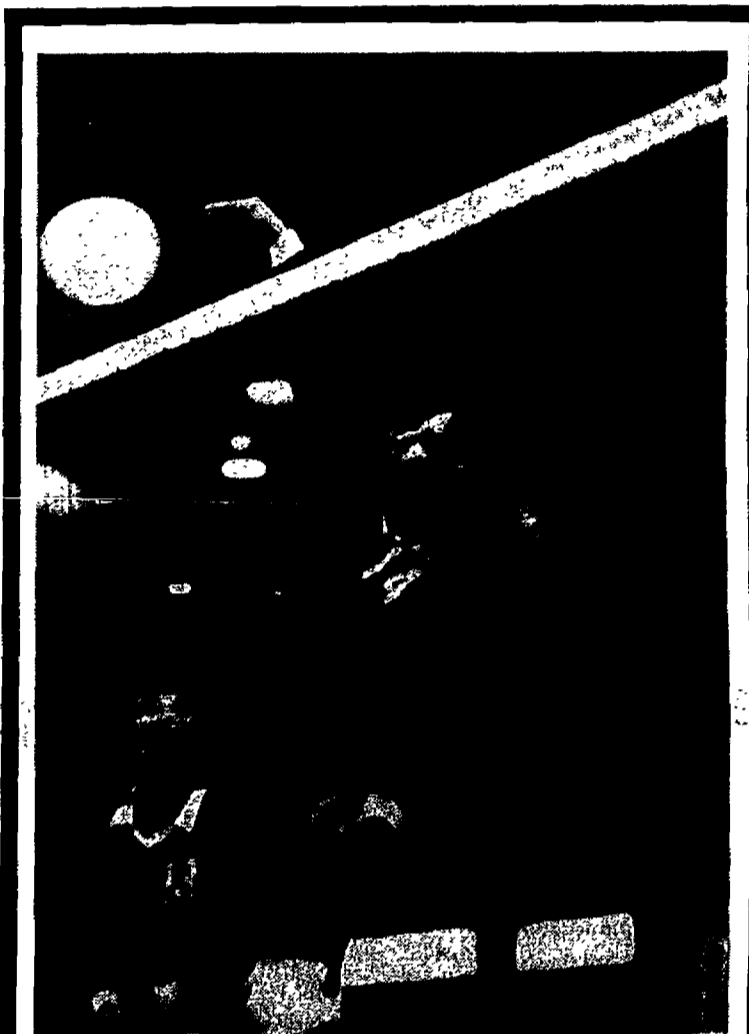

Other students disagree with this position. Chuck Crabtree, a resident of McMillan, is one of those students.

"I don't think there is any contradiction at all," said Crabtree. "If you start taking away the trust, they're not going to support you."

Anderton believes limiting visitor hours in the dorms can make Whitworth a better place to learn.

"It's my sense of integrity," said Anderton. "I have to be honest with myself — I can't say that the residential life is the best it can be. As a community we may have to give up our freedom for the better of the whole."

For now, no hours have been set for the policy. The criteria will still have to be determined before the policy is put into effect. This issue will be discussed in upcoming Senate meetings next week.

"The major part of the renovation is the rooms with the high-quality furniture," said Holden.

Many students who were looking forward to coming back to a re-done Arend Hall were a little surprised when they were informed that the furniture would be late.

"They told us the furniture was supposed to be here in August, and that we would have to live out of boxes for the first two weeks," said Arend resident Tom Gerken. They said that the beds would already be here, but that the dressers and wardrobes wouldn't get here until the 15th of September and the desks would be here on the 9th of September."

Tracy Riddle, Resident Director of Arend Hall, explained that the reason for the late furniture was that both the trucking and furniture companies failed to make their deadlines.

Holden emphasized that the problem of the late furniture was not the fault of Bopcar, the private contractor. "The problem that we had was not a contractors' problem. It was a furniture supplier problem and had nothing to do with the contractors. I think the contractors did a marvelous job considering the limitations that were placed on them by time constraints."

Robbin Erickson and Mark Kim, both returning Arend residents, had mixed opinions on the renovation. Erickson stated, "I don't like what they did with the windows, but the new jacks that were installed for personal computers are pretty nice."

Kim added, "The furniture is pretty nice, but I think it's a bummer that the furniture didn't get here in time for us and I hope that the school gets some form of compensation from the furniture company."

Both Erickson and Kim agreed that although the late furniture was an inconvenience for them, it was worth it to live in the newly renovated Arend Hall.

Arend's new furniture, restrooms highlight this summer's facelift

by Barry Elkin
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth College spent this summer being renovated, and a major part of the campus renovation was Arend Hall.

One major area of restoration included new restrooms and shower facilities. The restrooms and shower rooms were enlarged by incorporating the single sleeping room that was immediately outside of the existing old shower rooms. All the plumbing was changed to copper.

One Arend resident explained in further detail the extent of the renovation to the new restrooms. "It has new tile, a dressing area, three additional shower head and handicap facilities on the first floor," said Gayle Reddekopp, a resident of Arend.

Other renovations included the replacing of all windows in the sleeping rooms to comply with the state energy code. By doing this the glass area was reduced to 22 percent of the over-all wall surface. The building was also rewired, increasing the available power by about 97 percent.

New lighting fixtures were installed in all of the rooms and the hallways. All of the lighting fixtures that were put in the building are florescent, leaving only one or two small fixtures that are still incandescent, energy wasters, according to Don Holden, Director of the Physical Plant.

All new flooring was installed in the dorm rooms and new carpeting in the hallways

85-86 Natsihi on its way

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

The 1985-86 yearbook "Natsihi" will be distributed in mid-November after a four month delay in production. Last year's editor left without fulfilling her responsibilities resulting in this delay.

As of mid-August Trey Malicoat, ASWC Financial Vice President, has taken up the task of finishing the uncompleted yearbook.

"The yearbook will be deficient in some areas, especially sports," said Malicoat. "We have some good photographs.

The construction will be good, if not better than previous year's."

"We apologize for the problem," added Malicoat about the unexpected departure of last year's editor. "It could have been avoided, but due to it being summer and the switching of officers, it did happen."

Malicoat is a graphics art intern this year and has worked on a high school yearbook staff.

Although last year began poorly for the "Natsihi," with no official editor and few deadlines being met, this

He may be a nice guy, but Is he really your friend?

by Dan Thompson
of The Whitworthian

When "Prince Charming" becomes "Mr. Hyde" many women may find themselves victims of date rape.

This controversial subject was the topic of discussion lead by Janelle Thayer, Resident Director of the Warrens, on Tuesday 16, at 10 p.m. in the Baldwin-Jenkins lounge. About 40 Whitworth men and women attended the event.

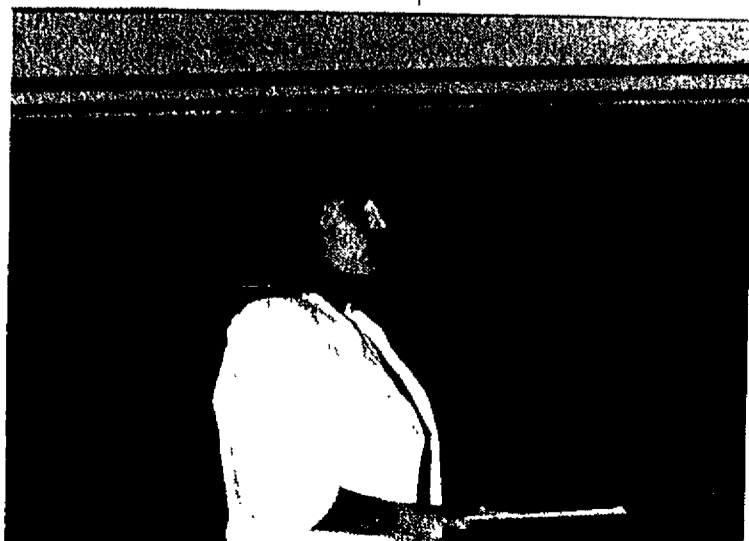

What is date rape? It's any forced sexual activity among acquaintances or possibly between two people who know one another very well. According to Thayer, this is not always the case but relationships of this type might be all too familiar to many people — even here at Whitworth.

"One quarter of all college women have been a victim of rape or attempted rape. Up to 90 percent of them know their assailant," said Thayer. "Many think they know him very well — he may be a fellow student, professor, or ex-boyfriend.

Among the topics of discussion were the "ambiguous ground rules" for dating relationships. Thayer defined these rules as stereotypical roles, mixed messages, poor communication, and learned violence.

Thayer asserted the need for better communication between dating couples and the hope that those beginning to date would develop a greater understanding of each other's

Coulon moved by despair

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth College, the Whitworth International Club and the Washington Association of Churches/Church World Service will present the first International Week on Refugees beginning Sept. 26.

Highlighting the nine day event are well known films, distinguished speakers and many other activities designed to increase awareness in the Whitworth and Spokane communities about the problems of refugees.

The idea for the week resulted after Philippe Coulon, President of the International Club, returned from his exchange trip to Korea.

The poverty and despair of Korea were the things which moved him to the point that he felt compelled to begin a project to increase awareness and understanding of this global problem, according to Coulon.

How can students use this event to improve their awareness?

"Participation will be a key factor in this event," said Coulon. "I would like the Whitworth community to get involved in the activities and discussions planned for the week.

The theme is awareness. The more people know and understand about the problem, the more they will be able to help these people."

Among the purposes of the week of events is the hope of removing misconceptions concerning refugees in this country.

"Refugees aren't immigrants. Refugees often have no choice but to leave their country if they are to survive," said Coulon. "This is just one of the misconceptions. International Week would like to make clear."

Two speakers will be at Forum Monday and Friday of the International Week. Speaking Monday, Sept. 29, will be Sue Morton, the founder of Refugees International. Speaking Friday, Oct.

3, will be Linn Yann, a refugee from Cambodia. Both will give information on the status of the refugee problem and also a personal viewpoint from Yann.

The week will end in a cultural fair in the HUB which will include food, fun and entertainment.

Brochures with the complete program listing are available in the Student Life building.

Whitworth men.

"It was good to see guys there with real concern," said Joni Baysinger, senior English major.

Another participant was simply pleased that the issue was discussed.

"It's an important issue because it does happen at Whitworth," said Stephanie Halton, junior communications major. "People need to be shook up with it."

Signs like this one are all over campus showing one of the more visible grounds improvements which took place over the summer.

Recent grounds improvements should save Whitworth $$$

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

There were a number of improvements to Whitworth's campus this summer but it's likely that most went unnoticed by students.

Improvements included complete insulation of campus steamlines and the drilling of a new well.

The improvements are the type that are most noticeable when one looks at the heat and water supply before and after the renovations.

Whitworth's campus is heated by a network of steamlines. If the lines are not insulated properly heat will be lost and energy efficiency will be reduced. During the summer, the Atkinson Construction Company excavated the lines and reinsulated them, cutting the heat loss through the pipes by 90 percent, according to Don Holden, Director of the Physical Plant.

"This is probably the first time since the installation of the original system that it will be leak free," said Holden, who expects that Whitworth will save $55,000 annually.

The total cost to upgrade the steamline was $329,000. Half of the funds came from Whitworth and the other half from a federal energy grant.

A related concern to the steamline was the removal of asbestos insulation installed years ago when the lines were first installed.

Is there a possible threat to those who live on Whitworth's campus?

"There is absolutely no health hazard to anyone," said Holden. "It was immediately removed by a certified company and disposed of in the way authorized by the Environmental Protection Agency."

The areas where the excavation has taken place, leaving little or no grass at all, have been seeded but must be protected through this fall and winter until spring arrives. Then students will be able to walk on it, according to Holden.

In addition to steamline improvements, Whitworth's water source has been improved.

A new well was dug behind Westminster hall which increased water supply efficiency.

The old well supplied 700 gallons of water per minute. This meant that if the grounds were being irrigated at peak dorm hours, the water pressure in the showers would decrease. This is not the case with the new well. It will normally pump 1500 gallons per minute.

The increased water supply means it will be possible to supply the water needs of Whitworth's campus, according to Holden.

Another benefit resulting from the new well is reduced fire insurance rates due to a larger amount of water on hand in the event a fire should occur. Holden believes that the well will be very cost effective.

Travelin' shoes are the ticket for a January in Berlin

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

A three-week study visit to Germany entitled "Berlin Encounter" will be lead by Dr. Darrell Guder, Academic Vice President, this January.

"This will not be a tourist event," said Guder. "The students will immerse themselves into the culture and live as West Germans."

While there, students will study a variety of topics including the Third Reich, the relationship between the state, society, and church from the Persian Empire through the Weimer Republic and the differences between Western and Eastern ideas of church and society.

The students will not be spending all of their time studying.

Cultural events will include visits to major museums in West and East Berlin, city tours and participation in musical events.

The Berlin Encounter will be conducted in partnership with three institutions: the Diaconic College which will emphasize ministry responses to social issues; the Oberlin Seminar for Social Welfare Workers will emphasize social work in both state and church institutions; and the Institute for Catechetical Ministries will emphasize religious education in public schools, with discussion of church-state-society issues.

"There will be occasions for students to spend informal time with students of the three partner organizations," said Guder.

The last four days of the trip will be spent in London. Group tours will be provided but students will be free to make their own plans as well.

"The fee for the trip will be less than $1400," said Guder.

Included is airfare, accomodation and all meals in Berlin, the program in Berlin, hotel and breakfast in London. Students will need to provide their own funds for other meals and activities in London.

Preparatory meetings will begin in mid-October and take place weekly. There will be some preliminary reading.

For those who are interested, all students are eligible, although freshmen must make special application to the dean. Selection of the travelers will be based upon interviews with the coordinating faculty.

Applications will be available beginning this week in Grieve Hall. The application deadline is Oct. 17.

Is Whitworth? four viewpoints

Big "C"?

by John A. Sowers
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

At the end of school last year the four members of the newly appointed Editorial Board decided to open this year's editorial page by addressing the questions, "What is a Christian liberal arts college?" and "Does Whitworth meet that criteria?"

While mulling this question over during the summer, my mind kept returning to the definition of "Christian" in Christian liberal arts college. A quick study of curriculum and programs concludes in an affirmation of our liberal arts status. What remains to be answered is our commitment to a big "C" Christian ideology.

This country is scattered with colleges and universities which began as Christian institutions and were eventually secularized in a gradual but steady erosion. Harvard, Yale, Princeton, University of Southern California, as well as Whitman and University of Puget Sound all started as Christian institutions. They will still claim to be somewhat Christian today and indeed in a small "c" Christian sense they probably are.

Small "c" Christian by my definition is a nice, soft, safe, "all you need to do is just love everybody," pie-in-the-sky Christianity. You don't believe that Jesus came and died to free men from their sinful state? Well, that's fine as long as you're good.

A big "C" Christian college should be bold in proclaiming, and acting on the claim, that the focus of this institution is firmly founded in an absolute belief that all truth emanates from one source: the Creator, Jehovah, the one and true living God.

Admittedly any administrative or faculty member of the Whitworth community would agree that the Christian God is the focus of Whitworth, but is there evidence of that claim in the curriculum structure of Whitworth? One required religion course in four years of schooling does not demonstrate that commitment.

Although Core 150 explores the history of Judeo-Christianity it is at best a rudimentary introduction to all the mysteries and intricacies of the Christian world. We recognize that the math and science disciplines are complex enough to require two courses and yet there is no Bible requirement (a religion course does not have to be a Bible course). This is the Word of God, and yet it receives less attention than other disciplines. How can this be?

Certainly the Mounce Presidency will be looked on as a time when Whitworth was brought back to a more Christian foundation — and indeed I applaud President Mounce for eight years of steering Whitworth back toward the traditional Christian ethic — but we must grow stronger yet in our zeal for Christ as the Creator of all joy and goodness.

To conclude, here are the words of former Whitworth President Frank Warren who said at his inauguration: "(The Christian college)...shall not postulate Diety nor question the eternal verities of the Christian life, but sensing the majesty of God and recognizing His sovereignty, it must build upon the fact that, 'In the beginning was God,' and in these ungodly days God is, and that we have not outgrown Him, but rather when the weird history of these troubled days has all been written and proud institutions have crumbled into the dust of pleasant memory, still God shall be the Eternal God of every honest quest."

Christian free arts?

by Sandy Wark
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

What's in a name? "A rose is still a rose by any other name." You could call a cesspool a rose but it would not smell sweet.

Whitworth calls itself a Christian liberal arts college. What is the meaning of this name?

Liberal arts initially brings to mind visions of students majoring in underwater basket weaving. Whitworth does not yet offer this major (however as an area of concentration...).

The "liberal" in liberal arts may hold the key to understanding this nebulous term. Liberal is a derivation of "liberty" or "freedom." Christian free arts.

Defining freedom is tricky business. Freedom for some at Whitworth would mean the abolition of the "big three," "Down with Student Life, grades, Forum and term papers!" An interesting proposal but a rather narrow vision of freedom.

The American vision of freedom is the notion of freedom of opportunity: "Any hard-working individual can make it in America." However, if you are white, wealthy, good-looking and smart, chances are you'll make it a lot sooner.

Whitworth is a reflection of American society. The institution makes an effort to offer aid to those financially and academically disadvantaged. Still there are few minorities on campus and many of those who are are likely enough playing on the football or basketball team.

Each year the average GPA of the incoming Freshman class is raised a few notches. It is too easy to think, "Aren't we Whitworth people wonderful!" and to forget about those less white, beautiful, intelligent or wealthy.

An expanded vision of freedom asks more than "Am I free to get what I want?" Whitworth as an institution encourages a wider field of vision through classes, study tours and personal interaction so that a student might see some connection between his or her freedom and the freedom or lack thereof of a Central American, a South African, an Ethiopian or a homeless person in downtown Spokane.

Ultimately freedom means that the institution cannot dictate to the student what a Christian liberal arts education will mean to them. Neither the meaning or the adjective "Christian," nor the meaning of "liberal arts" can be dictated to the individual. A good measure of a Christian liberal arts college is the degree that open questioning of the status quo is allowed and encouraged.

So does Whitworth come off smelling like a rose or a cesspool in the "Christian liberal arts" business? It's up to the students to decide.

We're different!

by Michael K. LeRoy
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

Whitworth College inundates prospective students with a fantastic marketing concept: "We're different! We're a Christian Liberal Arts College!" Great! What does that mean? All Whitworth students maintain varying perceptions about what a Christian liberal arts institution is and where Whitworth fits in comparison to others.

At first it seems that putting the words "Christian" and "Liberal Arts" in the same phrase is like speaking of celibate prostitutes. If we look deeper into our college we discover that through the integration of faith and learning we are receiving a unique and worthwhile education. The Christian values on which this college is based and the commitment to a liberal arts education form an excellent check and balance system.

Liberal Arts, according to Webster, combine the academic disciplines of the arts, philosophy, history, rhetoric, languages, sciences, with the general encouragement of free and critical thought. This definition is closely adhered to by faculty and

by Tim Boggess
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

At some time or another, every Whitworth student asks the all important and sometimes disconcerting question: Why am I here? Why am I paying $10,000 per year to study when I can do the same at a state school for one-third of the cost? Why am I making loan payments instead of car payments? Why Spokane when I could be in Santa Barbara? We are here — most of us — because we feel that Whitworth offers a refreshing and necessary alternative to secular education. But do we really know what it is we are looking for?

You need not spend such a large sum of money if all you want out of college is a marketable skill, better enabling you to get a job once out of school. There are plenty of schools out there that could fit the bill without so much financial anxiety. But that's not what a liberal arts college sets out to do.

Arthur F. Holmes in his book "The Idea of a Christian College" says: "...The needed clue is that the liberal arts are those which are appropriate to man-as-man, rather than to man in his specific function as a worker or as a professional or even as a scholar...If man is to be anything more than a half-human specialist or technician, is if man is to feel life whole and to live it whole rather than piecemeal, if he is to think for himself rather than live secondhand, the liberal arts are needed to educate the person."

to make the student a "jack of all trades and master of none." This is what I call the curse of a liberal arts education and, if unchecked, could turn one perfectly good student into one big, flat waffle. Socrates said that he was a wise man because he knew that he didn't know anything. We seem to learn just enough of a particular subject to know that we haven't learned enough.

It is at this point where secular universities and strictly liberal arts colleges sell themselves short of a total education. Where is the unifying thread that ties all of the seemingly disjointed disciplines into one total body? What value is learning?

The integrating thread is Jesus Christ, a kind of D-Con fogger that permeates every nook and cranny of our world. We learn about this world because it was created by the Lord and is good. God is not only the God of religion, but also the God of psychology, biology, English, etc. It is this integration of faith and learning that focuses a liberal arts education to an occupation that will best honor God and man.

This is the essence of a Christian liberal arts college. Does Whitworth meet these criterion? I cannot answer that, for as always we are allowed to choose by our own free will the path our education will take. I do think this is an opportune place for faith and learning to be integrated, but the choice whether to take advantage of it or not we must all make for ourselves.

Our society unfortunately interprets "Liberal Arts" synonymously with atheism in the humanist sense. Many of my friends at secular liberal arts institutions view God as a hindrance to learning.

When the definition of liberal arts becomes cloudy, Whitworth's Christian base proves that learning can be an effective tool of mind and heart.

The purpose of the "big three" is not to impose an impregnable structure, but rather to provide a boundary. At this boundary students choose. In the event they choose to break policy they are called to be responsible for their actions. Whitworth takes the learning process at least one step further than most colleges by calling us to be responsible for our actions.

Whitworth College seeks a unique and admirable goal in this day and age. It provides an education in a diverse academic atmosphere while urging us to live as God calls us. And in the end to simply take responsibility for our actions.

RELIGION

Christ: king on campus?

by Lance Weeda
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth and Christianity. Are these two terms synonymous or contradictory? How you answer this depends on your preconceptions. Or, how you choose to define the terms.

Implied here also is the problem of how one is to relate religion and the institution (church and state?).

How does one view the role and function of Whitworth College?

That Whitworth sees itself as a Christian college is a given. Its goal is to "...offer an unmatched combination — the centrality of Jesus Christ and the relevance and adaptability of a liberal arts education." (Whitworth College Catalog, 1985-87, p.2).

Is this goal being realized?

Most people would agree that the liberal arts half of the goal is being accomplished, but what of the centrality of Jesus Christ?

Is this half being accomplished?

Should this be part of the goal(s) of a college (even if it calls itself a "Christian college")?

If this part of the goal is to be relevant and fulfilled, just how can it be done?

Stricter screening for incoming teachers? More rules and regulations — required chapel, a gospel radio station, no dances and no movies, etc...?

Never mind how Whitworth could "make" Christ more central, is it even its place to make the attempt?

When Christ is central, there is Christianity. When Christ is not central, there is not Christianity.

Christianity is Christ, and therefore all that is Christian revolves around the center: Christ.

If we are Christians, does everything we do revolve around Christ? Do we care whether or not our college revolves around Christ?

Are we doing all we can to allow Christ to be The Center? Is Whitworth doing all it can do for the same purpose?

That Christ be central is crucial and should be felt unanimous among Christians. But how to make or allow Christ to be central is not agreed upon.

The implementation of more rules and regulations could possibly help in the goal, if it is done for this purpose of making Christ central and not for legalistic reasons.

Perhaps we should stress the individualistic, freedom of choice aspect to the point of not only deciding against adding more rules but lessening some which already exist.

Noteworthy here is the fact that those who cry "foul" at the idea of having (more) rules because it may lead to legalism are often legalistic in their endeavor to reduce rules. Their only rule is that there be no rules.

But, we can make the "how to" of Christ's centrality the object of our energies rather than Christ himself.

Just as there are those who feel that Christ is not central enough or at all at Whitworth, there are those who think that He is indeed central.

As a consequence of this each side has its own ideas on how Whitworth is to function. It is not then necessarily a question of who is right and who is wrong.

Rather, the question is one of whether or not Christ is in fact the center of the institution of Whitworth College — its faculty, staff, administration and students.

Of course if one is not concerned with the centrality or all-pervasiveness of Christ on our campus then one should disregard the above as well as the statements found in Whitworth's catalog on its mission and heritage, etc...

Speaking of heritage, what is the fate of Whitworth College?

Do we applaud the secularization of other "Christian colleges?" Is this to be Whitworth's fate?

Christianity, Whitworth and Me

by Paula Zeller
of The Whitworthian

Yeah, Virginia, there's Christianity at Whitworth.

This has nothing to do with the fact that Whitworth College is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church — a rather small denomination of Christianity. That's like saying since the president of our college associates himself with a particular Walt Disney character, the bookstore must sell articles with this character on them. It does sell them, but I don't think it is required to do so. And just because Whitworth has connections to a branch of Christianity, this does not cause Christianity to exist here.

It does seem rather incredible that I could actually believe Christianity exists at Whitworth. After living on campus the entire length of my attendance and being the pessimist that I am, how can I believe that there's Christianity at Whitworth? That's about as ridiculous as believing that an all-good, all-loving, all-powerful God exists in a world constantly impacted by evil. Has living "behind the pine cone curtain" dulled my faculties to the point of idiocy? No.

I have been exposed to the evils that abound upon this campus. I have noticed that Baldwin-Jenkins is no longer called "The Virgin Towers" and I am rather thankful for the new mattress I've been sleeping on that doesn't reflect the previous tenant's living habits. I haven't forgotten the bomb scare that had those of us living in Arend evacuated at 2 a.m. three years ago. Even eating SAGA food and listening to KWRS has caused me to reexamine my ideals and values, shaking my faith like Core 150 and 250. But even beyond these, I'm learning much about those evils that abound within myself.

I was born an original sinner and I was born from original sin. And if I had a dollar bill for all the things I've done... I'd pay off my bill and my GSL's! Still, whether I am a sinner or not, I am a Christian.

My being a Christian does not rely upon the fact that I am a religion major. And being an American has nothing to do with it nor does attending Whitworth College.

I could list my "good" accomplishments such as working in the Chaplain's office, going to the Urbana Missions Conference and being involved in my youth group with my home church. After all, these are more directly related to Christianity than my secular accomplishments. But even these are futile in "making" me a Christian. So if the evil that I do cannot keep me from being a Christian and if all the good I do does not make me one, what makes me so sure that I am a Christian?

My faith is not based upon anything that I've done, but it is supported by what God himself has done through Jesus: His life, death, resurrection and the Holy Spirit whom he has imparted to me. My faith is not set upon anything that I've seen, but it is encouraged by the witness of those who had hoped for him and who had seen him, that is, what is written in the Bible. My Christianity is not determined by my actions.

Our society sets human value on productivity — your self-worth is determined by the amount or quality of what you do. So it's no wonder many people place the value of Christianity in what Christians have done. And therefore, to question the existence of Christianity at Whitworth involves the analytical state of mind, that is, questioning the values of the Whitworth community. So with this frame of mind, how can I possibly look at the good, the bad and the ugly values expressed on this campus and still say with sincerity that Christianity exists at Whitworth?

Well, with that frame of mind, I cannot. I have come to realize that Christianity exists apart from the Whitworth community's activities. What happens on or off campus amongst this community's members does not cause Christianity. In fact, nothing that the school has ever done or will do can establish Christianity.

Christianity exists because of the work of Jesus in the individual lives of the members of Whitworth's community: past, present and future. His existence has instigated Whitworth's Christian basis.

This isn't to say that we shouldn't care at all about what we do if we proclaim to be Christians. Just because we are saved by grace, we cannot go on living as if we were "unsaved." Our Christianity may not be determined by our actions but our actions should be influenced by it.

The Whitworth community is composed of a large diversity of people, some of whom do not proclaim to be Christians.

In the example of my own life, there are some areas which have not been given over to the control of Christ. Since I am a whole being, these various areas of myself influence the interrelationships between themselves. Similarly, each member of the Whitworth community affects other members and even Whitworth itself. Each member is neither "good" nor "bad" but what he or she does affects the community positively or negatively. From Whitworth's diverse Christian basis we get diverse actions.

I do see in some of our actions the effect of Jesus' presence. His influence is changing each of our lives which in turn affects the whole Whitworth community.

Poetry Corner

Wasn't it just yesterday,
That I was young and handsome —
And all the girls would come to me,
And I would make them cry.

My songs told of lovers lost,
— Mansions in the desert,
Fallen hopes and sleepless nights,
That turned young hearts to stone.

Time seems to be the cure,
For all your pain and sorrow —
Just one thing I'd like to know is,
What is the cure for Time?

With shaking hands I raise,
This final cup to my lips —
I'm terrified —
I've reached the end without accomplishing anything I truly wished to do,
I've lived a lie,
And I'm afraid now it's too late,
Go back in time —
Let me go fulfill my destiny
And live...

Seasons blend into years,
A tear slips down a sea of wrinkles —
Memories of youth and laughter, Melting into dust.

I'd give all that I have,
To smooth the tattered pages —
Of a life that lay in ruins,
That has paid the toll of time.

Time seems to be the cure,
For all your pain and sorrow —
Just one thing I'd like to know is,
What's the cure for Time?

Swenson to visit White House and meet First Family

Senior Delaine Swenson

by Kim Nacke
of The Whitworthian

Walking the road of involvement has led Delaine Swenson to the White House.

In January, Swenson, a fifth year senior, will be honored at a special banquet in the White House hosted by President and/or Nancy Reagan. The banquet is given to recognize outstanding representatives within America, participating in community activities.

Swenson said that it is his involvement in Circle K that has led him to such an honor. Swenson has been a part of Circle K for the past four years, which includes working with International Circle K for the past two years.

Circle K is a club or organization involving 750 chapters throughout six countries. The club started as a fraternity at Washington State University in 1933, but has since become a co-ed service organization.

Circle K is sponsored by Kiwanis Club and was started as a result of Kiwanis' concern that people take an active interest in their community. The purpose of Circle K International is to be used as a tool by

New wheels open eyes

by Jim MaGee
of The Whitworthian

If you were a handicapped member of the Whitworth community, and for some reason signed up for or were teaching Core 150, how would you get into the Little Theater?

Suppose you became hungry, and wanted to eat lunch at SAGA. How would you get in?

Finally, that evening you decided to go see the Bucs play in Graves Gym. Where is the handicapped entrance?

These were all things I would have to find out over the course of the next several hours.

In an attempt to gain a rudimentary understanding of exactly how well I would cope as a handicapped member of the Whitworth community, I decided to enter the Whitworth community as a handicapped person for a short while. The several hours I spent in a wheelchair were the source of a completely new point of view.

The moment I sat in the chair, I entered a new world. I had limitations imposed upon myself. I had to deal with physical barriers and also a sense of frustration. My daily movements, formerly a series of thoughtlessly routine actions, suddenly necessitated a great deal more thought and effort. I didn't just buzz here or there, I began to realize the necessity of economy of motion. It is hard work to push yourself around.

The two most difficult obstacles which I encountered were doors and unpaved parking lots. The potholes that formed in the unpaved lots represented impassable obstacles. In addition, the lack of curbs and sidewalks in many parts of campus often forced me into major vehicular traffic arterials. Narrow, self-closing doors were a nightmare because of their weight and the excessive resistance afforded by their self-closing mechanisms. The thresholds on many doors were difficult to roll the chair over. Another problem of importance was the difficulty of finding many poorly or unmarked handicapped entrances.

The mental implications of knowing I faced certain physical limitations presented me with a great deal of frustration. The endless detours and relatively slow pace with which I had to complete many tasks were a source of tedium.

Another aspect I found I had to deal with was others' reaction to myself. I caught many people staring, and almost always caught them averting their eyes in embarassment. Even though I was not a very skilled actor and it was most likely somewhat apparent that I was indeed not handicapped, it still seemed as though many were uncomfortable being confronted with my presence in a wheelchair.

My initial thought when I began this project is that I would be confronted with an endless supply of doting dogooders. However, that was not the case. I was very surprised to find the maturity with which people who decided to assist me, helped out.

Debbie Lithgow, a handicapped member of the Whitworth community shared some of her thoughts and experiences, as well as a little history, about being a handicapped member of the Whitworth community. Whitworth, Lithgow states, "...has made tremendous progress in the last five years...but there are still a lot of problem areas." Whitworth would be considered somewhat "rugged" by most handicapped individuals.

I have to surmise that my time spent as a handicapped member of the Whitworth community was an eye opener. The simple became complex, the mundane a new adventure and a new way of looking at things was attained — the point of view that pride can be gained from doing what you can.

students who are interested in helping others. Circle K clubs are self-governing and largely self-financing, independent of, but working in cooperation with, Kiwanis clubs.

Swenson first became involved in Circle K his freshman year of college.

"It was a good way to get involved with people on and off campus," he said. "I saw an opportunity for leadership development in a service organization."

Over the next four years, Swenson gradually climbed political ladder within the club which seats him now as the current international president.

But with that title comes a lot of responsibility, said Swenson. "Part of my responsibility as president is to travel," he said. "I will be gone 35 weekends over the course of the year traveling to over 14 different districts."

Swenson explained that he will speak all over the country, from a convention of 3,000 high school students of Key Clubs in Toronto, Canada to 15,000 members of Kiwanis International in Washington D.C.

"The best part of my involvement (in Circle K) is the interesting and influential people I come in contact with," he said. "I get a chance to meet the business and political leaders of the country."

Swenson seems to be living a double life in that while his Circle K commitment takes him all over the country, he's also involved with the Whitworth community as a student Senator-At-Large.

Swenson's involvement as Senator-At-Large was inspired by what he said was a desire to be involved with the new constitution which he helped write.

"I wanted to see the new Senate at work, under the new constitution," he said.

Looking toward the future, Swenson, a History/Political Science and Theater Arts double major, said he plans to attend law school in the East, pursuing a career in constitutional law.

"It's the very competitive nature of the schools in the East that makes me want to go there," he explained.

Swenson is striding for the top.

New coach lays down groundwork for excellence

by Lisa Jenkins
of The Whitworthian

"Christianity and sports go hand in hand. There is certainly a place for the Christian athlete and coach in the sports field today," offered Soccer

Coach Einar Thorarinsson. Thorarinsson, in his first season at Whitworth, is filling this place and laying the groundwork for a tradition of excellence.

Thorarinsson carries with him a seemingly endless knowledge of soccer. After entering the game in Iceland at the age of seven, he traveled to the United States at the age of 19. Thorarinsson played at the community college level for two years before he went on to Cornell University where he was named All-American.

While in New York he acted as assistant coach/player to the Yugoslavian National Team. Most recently Thorarinsson has coached in Spokane for St. Georges High School and the Skyhawk Soccer Club. He was then contacted by Whitworth Athletic Director Bruce Grambo.

Of Coach Thorarinsson, Grambo said, "He is an excellent coach who has brought an area of excitement to soccer at Whitworth. A very competent coach and a well thought of individual. There is no question in my mind that he is a great asset to the Whitworth Community."

Meeting a new challenge in his first college coaching position, Thorarinsson is quick to state that the true measure of a team's spirit is evident in how they rise up to face adverse conditions.

In preparing for the challenges that lie ahead Thorarinsson takes each situation differently depending on the team's set up. If a team is made up of extensive skill, he attempts to train them to become skilled and physical. On the other hand, if they hustle, he tries to stress technique in training. He added that he stresses physical and mental conditioning on and off the field.

On the field, Thorarinsson said, he starts with defense and works up from there with aggressive play. Through quick counter attacks, the team drives toward the goal and ultimately scores.

"Coach Thor really understands how to play the game, and play it well," said Freshman halfback Bill Burks. "Up to now, we can base our wins on utilizing a lot of defense. We get out there and score one or two goals and hope that we can hold the other team. It's all in the way we play our game. Coach uses constructive criticism but the true responsibility for our game rests in our own hands.

Echoing Burks sentiments, Freshman forward Paul Markillie noted, "Coach has brought unity amongst the team. Now, we share a team spirit rather than just being a bunch of hot shots out there kicking the ball around." He continued, "We are looking forward to our best season ever, possibly even a winning season. We will hang in there as a team. In the end it will be close but we will have worked together as a unit."

Thorarinsson said that the backup from the Whitworth community and the athletic program has far exceeded his expectations. In return Thorarinsson plans to stay on and build a winning tradition as long as Whitworth is willing.

Swink — learning the RD ropes at Whitworth

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

Perhaps you've noticed a tall, good looking, dark-haired man walking around campus that you don't recognize.

This is Jim Swink. Who?

Swink is the newest member of the Student Life staff and working as the Resident Director of McMillan and Ballard.

"I really wanted to work at Whitworth," he commented. "I felt called to be here."

The 26-year-old from Ashland, Ore. has a good background for this type of work.

As an undergraduate at the now defunct Judson Baptist College, Swink was involved in student government, and worked as an RA and in the admissions department.

In June, 1986, he obtained his masters degree in Interdisciplinary Studies, which included communications and psychology, from Southern Oregon State College.

While Swink and his wife Becky are getting settled into their new home, his staff members are also adjusting to the changes.

"It's hard right now because he hasn't been here very long," said Marianne Deal, president of Ballard. "He's finding out where he fits into this position."

Shawn Dewberry, president of McMillan, also shared these sentiments. "He's new and doesn't know the ropes, but a person in that position has potential."

Besides working as an RD, Swink maintains hours at Student Life working in career planning with Gail Berg.

He is responsible for planning dorm programs that are related to the goals and plans of students. These programs will be aimed at specific age groups, who have specific needs.

One class that will be offered is for seniors who are applying for graduate school — another is for freshmen and sophomores trying to declare a major.

"I really enjoy both ends of the job," said Swink. "The positives balance the negatives. I have a great staff of RA's who are very helpful."

For the most part, Swink has been efficient, consistent and fair, according to Dewberry.

What are Swink's plans for this year?

"I would like to make an impact on student's lives in some way," he said.

Swink hopes to spend the first semester getting to know the people around him. In the second semester, he hopes to learn more of the needs and help the leaders work toward common goals for the dorms.

"He's not uptight and he's not policing," said Deal. "He's open to input and he seems real."

Swink is working hard at this new leadership position, and plans to for at least two years. At that time, he will re-evaluate his priorities and make further decisions.

But right now, he is asking a lot of questions and learning about how the system works.

"He wants to be involved, and I like that," noted Deal. "He's interested in us."

Jim Swink is here...

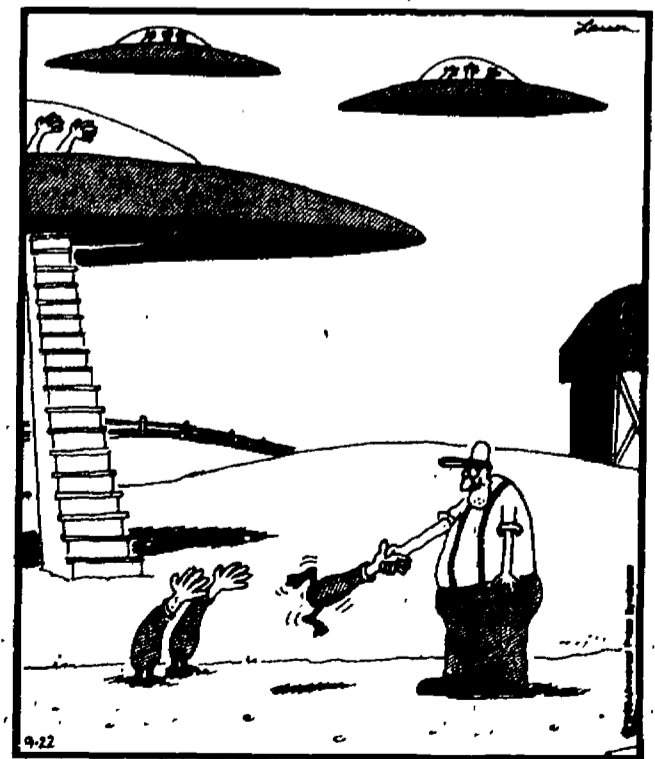

"It seems like he came for the right reasons," said Deal.

If you recognize him, say hello and introduce yourself.

All students interested in becoming a member of The Whitworthian staff are encouraged to attend the weekly meeting. See calendar for day and time.

Japanese student eager to absorb American scene

Freshman Takashi Katoh

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

We all saw Michael J. Fox transported from 1985 to 1955 in "Back to the Future," but how many people actually consider the obstacles and fears associated with adapting to a new and foreign culture? Take Takashi Katoh for example.

On Sept. 4, 1986, 19-year-old Katoh left his Tokyo home for the first time and came to the distant city of Spokane.

Arriving at Whitworth College eager to observe and absorb American speech and culture, Katoh said that he was surprised that many of the Japanese social customs and traditions lag decades behind the United States.

"I felt overwhelmed yet delighted by the friendly and talkative manner of most of the Americans I've encountered," he said. "In Japan silence represents strength and respect while talking open is looked upon negatively."

He said he enjoys conversing with others and feels very relaxed, although some language barriers tend to frustrate him.

He said that an intense, 5-month training at the Institute of Foreign Studies in Tokyo gave him a "fairly good grasp of the English language, but few Americans speak perfect English."

He looks forward to SAGA because he said it gives him the opportunity to meet new people, listen to them, and participate in conversations.

Katoh has also noted many cultural differences since he has been here. The relationship between men and women is one that he said both confuses and delights him.

"In Japan," he said, "close friendships, as well as displays of affection, such as hugging and kissing, remain reserved for engaged or married couples."

When asked why he chose to study at Whitworth, Katoh said that the IFS school where he studied had several ties with colleges in the United States, including Whitworth and Gonzaga University in Spokane.

"I desired to study at a school where it would be unlikely to encounter any other Japanese students so I would be forced to concentrate on mastering English," he said.

This year English courses in grammar, reading and conversation consume most of his time, but he looks toward next year as an opportunity to concentrate on theater arts, which he hopes to carry with him after graduation toward a career in the movie industry.

Katoh asserted that adjusting to the culture differences is an educational as well as an enjoyable experience. Although he misses his family and friends, he now calls Spokane home, and has no immediate plans to return to Japan.

With a strong determination, Katoh vowed, both himself and his parents, "I'll remain in America until I have accomplished all my goals."

A star-filled weekend

by Holly Hoskinson
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth College will be invading Camp Spalding Oct. 10-12 for "The Weekend."

"The Weekend" is a retreat sponsored by the Chapel and organized by Whitworth students. This year's organizers include co-chairmen Tim Henson and Joanna Blanford and Steve Matthies, Program Director.

What will be discussed at the retreat?

"The illustration of the 'theological aspects of God protecting us' will be the basis for the theme 'Starthrowing,'" said Henson.

This theme was inspired by a story about a man who went out of his way to save stranded starfish from those who would kill them for commercial uses.

"Understanding why the theme is 'Starthrowing and not starthrower is important,'" said Henson. "The man protected the starfish by throwing them back into the safety of the ocean, so God shelters us, and in this way we can help others around us."

The guest speaker at "The Weekend" this year will be Mr. Steve Swayne, Chaplain at Seattle Pacific University. He will focus, primarily, on the initial theme of the retreat.

In addition to Swayne, faculty and staff speakers will be present including Ken and Janelle Thayer. Janelle is the Resident director in the Warrens, John Reed, Director of Admissions, Kathy Storm, Psychology Professor, and Kathy Lee, History and Political Science Professor.

Included in the program are games, seminars, food, camp-fires, more games and even, more food.

The atmosphere is to be really casual with lots of hiking, swimming, boating and other outdoor activities around Camp Spalding.

"It's a great time," said Matthies.

"It may be different for different people," said Henson. "Everyone is going to meet a lot of new people."

"The best part was being able to take off in the mornings and go hiking alone," said Nancy Moomaw, a student who attended "The Weekend" last year. She also felt that it was good to be with other Whitworth people without the pressures associated with the atmosphere of school.

Both Henson and Matthies agreed that the talent show would be terrific and that Todd St. Marie and Barry Elken, the masters of ceremony for the show, are the "greatest things since Sonny and Cher and the Monkees."

As an added attraction, Henson has been in correspondence with the Governor and Mrs. Booth Gardener and has invited them both to the retreat.

Departure and arrival times were not available, but Oct. 10-12 are the definite dates. A bus will be available for those without other transportation.

Cost is $15 for students who live on campus and $18 for those who do not.

Henson and Matthies pointed out that these prices are lower than last year. Commemorative t-shirts are available for $5. Both tickets and t-shirts can be purchased in the chaplain's office or at SAGA up to one week before the event.

Bearcats claw Bucs

by Mark Westly
of The Whitworthian

The Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, Custer was ambushed by the Indians, and David destroyed Goliath. The Pirates were not as fortunate Saturday in Salem. The Willamette Bearcats took advantage of an anemic first half defense and a sputtering offense on the way to a 30-6 victory. It could have been worse if the defense hadn't decided to show up for the second half.

Offense was the showcase throughout the game. The Bearcats scored first with 1:30 left in the first quarter on a 1-yard run by senior running back Gerry Preston. It was the first of four scores in the span of less than fifteen minutes. Two of the scores were aided by Whitworth turnovers.

The first followed a Pirate fumble, the second a 90-yard interception run back for a TD by junior cornerback Kyle See.

Just four and a half minutes later the Bearcats took one play following a Pirate punt and turned it into a 43-yard TD pass from sophomore quarterback Ryan Wiebe to junior receiver Gabe Gomez.

The final first half score came as a result of an 85-yard, 8-play drive featuring eight running plays. The TD was scored by senior running back Wayne Valencia on a 26-yard run. At the break the Pirates were down 28-0. Not only had they given up 28 points but used three quarterbacks who produced nothing but stats.

The second half saw fireworks. With a rejuvenated defense and the offense still at-large the game developed some character. The third quarter began with Willamette sacking Todd White in the end zone for a safety. End of scoring for Willamette.

The lone Pirate score came on an 89-yard drive ending with a 10-yard pass from Blaine Bennett to running back Dan Pilcher. The pass failed, leaving the score 30-6.

Fireworks would be putting it mildly. The two teams combined for 787 total yards of offense, each team capitalizing on their forte.

Willamette racked up 277 yards on the ground and 50 in the air. They were led by Preston with 185 yards on 30 carries and Valencia with 78 yards on 15 carries. The Bearcats attempted 5 passes out of 65 plays.

On the other side, it was a record setting performance for the Pirate quarterbacks and Wayne Ralph. The quarterbacks were a combined 43 for 77 for 429 yards. The attempted 77 passes breaks a school record. Why should anyone be surprised? Whitworth led the nation last year in attempts per game averaging just over 57.

Blaine Bennett led the way going 35 for 57 for 365 yards with one TD and two interceptions. Ralph lead the busy group of receivers with 20 catches, also breaking the school record of 15 (which he tried last year) covering 219 yards.

Additionally, the Pirates also ran the ball 20 times for 68 yards. But with five sacks involving various Pirate QB's for 37 yards in losses the net rushing deflates to 31 yards.

Eddie Davis and Pilcher each carried the ball six times for 20 and 29 yards respectively. Pilcher also caught eight passes for 72 yards.

Next Saturday Whitworth is at home hosting Central Washington University. Central is coming off a 41-32 loss to Linfield. A game which saw Linfield QB David Lindley pass for 331 yards and five TD's. Let's hope the Pirate offense decides to show up with the defense this week. My pick: CWU 24, Whitworth 27. See ya at the game.

X-Country sprinting into season

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

With two meets already under their belts, the Whitworth cross country team is ready and eager to head into the rest of the '86 season.

Coach Hal Werner says of this year's team, "The attitude of the entire squad is positive. It should be a good year, and I'm looking forward to working with them."

The men's team has a lot of experience behind it this season with five returning runners from last years squad. Senior Peat Sutherland, juniors Mike Lawrence, Scott McQuillen, Rod Holman and sophomore Scott Hink make up the teams veterans. The returnees won't be the only ones that are bringing experience to the squad. Two newcomers, Alan Bracken and James Blakely, both transfer students, have competed in nationals, and bring this experience to the Buc squad. Bracken, a junior transfer from North Idaho Community College, who is originally from Dublin, Ireland, is currently the number one man on the team. Sophomores Peter Houston and Jeff Mullaney, along with freshmen Guy Duryee and Joe Cabler round out the rest of the men's teams.

With more depth, experience, and a new rule that allows three teams from the Bucs' district to go to nationals, Coach Werner is optimistic about the men's team this fall. "We have a reasonably good chance at nationals this year, but it's going to be a lot of work."

While the men's team has five veterans and two runners with national experience, the Lady Bucs' squad boasts only two returnees. Melissa Johnson, a junior from Alameda, Calif.; and Bobbi Mishler, a sophomore from Deer Park. There are six new faces to the women's team this year, they include Janice Aubrey, a junior transfer from the Community Colleges of Spokane, Kelli Burch, a sophomore, and four freshmen: Dawn Hale, Lisa Jenkinson, Laura Parker — all from Spokane, and Lynnae Stevens of Deer Park.

Burch, a newcomer to cross country, has been a pleasant surprise for Coach Werner this season. According to Werner, "Kelli had no prior running experience, but she worked hard over the summer, and she shows a lot of promise."

Burch showed some of that promise Sept. 13 at the Arnie Pelleur Invitational held at Whitworth. She was the top finisher for the women's team, and 7th overall, with a time of 20:22 for the 5K course. The top male finisher for the Pirates was Bracken. He placed 15th overall with a time of 27:30 for the 8K course. In the Pelleur Invitational, Hink was injured midway through the race, while running in 7th place over-all. Those in attendance at the meet were: Whitman, Gonzaga, Central Washington University, Eastern Washington University, Spokane Community College, Mount Royal College and the River City Striders.

Saturday, Sept. 20, the Pirates hit the road in Walla Walla at the Whitman Invitational.

The Lady Bucs were in a field of 66 runners from 10 schools. They finished 9th overall in the standings, but there were some strong individual results. Burch once again was the top finisher for the women's team with a time of 18:53, and a placing of 12th overall. Mishler achieved a personal best for her this year with a time of 22:35 for the 5K course.

The men's squad fared a little better, placing 6th in the field of 13 teams. The Pirates were only 15 points behind 5th place Central, who went to Nationals last year. Whitworth's top male finisher was Holman with a time of 26:30 for the 8K course. Mullaney turned in a strong performance placing 44th overall with a time of 27:10, a personal best for him this year.

Bucs host tourney; capture third

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Volleyball teams from throughout the Northwest gathered over the weekend for the endurance event we know as the 11th Annual Whitworth Invitational Tournament.

Pat Shelton, head coach for Whitworth, was busy preparing for the tournament early this week. "We're excited about hosting the tournament again, and the visiting teams seem real excited to come," she said.

They must have been. On Friday morning 16 teams showed up at the Fieldhouse, the largest number that has ever competed in the invitational tournament.

Action began Friday at 8 a.m. with the commencing of "pool" play. The teams were broken up into four pools consisting of the black pool — Whitworth, Eastern Montana College, Northwest Nazarene College and Montana Tech; the red pool — Western Washington University, Carroll College, Pacific Lutheran University and Gonzaga University; the grey pool —

University of Puget Sound, Whitman College, Northern Montana College and Western Oregon State College; and the white pool — Lewis-Clark State College, Western Montana College, Warner Pacific College and Simon Fraser University.

By 7 p.m. Friday night the teams that had gone undefeated in their pools were: Whitworth, Carroll College, Western Oregon and Lewis-Clark State.

Whitworth easily fended off their challengers Friday. They faced Montana Tech at 8 a.m. and methodically broke them down to capture the match 15-3, 14-16, 15-7.

Eastern Montana was next to feel the power of the Pirates. The young EMC team had trouble communicating and Whitworth didn't help their cause. EMC Coach Kathy James admitted, "We made a lot of mistakes at the net and they capitalized on them." The Montana team fell quickly, 15-6, 15-12.

At 4 p.m., Whitworth faced their last opponent of the day, Northwest Nazarene, whom Coach Shelton predicted would be "the team to beat."

From the start, the Lady Bucs were in control. Setter Erin Mackay kept the game running like clockwork with her accurate sets. Debbie Burkhart was obviously a nuisance to NNC as her hits repeatedly bounced off the Crusader's back line. The two freshmen on the team, Barb Lashinski and Kim Gray, also got a chance to contribute to the team's victory. Final score — 15-8, 15-8.

Saturday's matches used the double elimination process. After 10 a.m., four teams had gone down — Montana Tech, Western Montana, Warner Pacific and Northwest Nazarene.

By 2 p.m., four others had been eliminated. Whitman, PLU, Eastern Montana and Simon Fraser all lost their second game midway through the tournament.

Whitworth played a role in the demise of both Whitman and Simon Fraser. After an especially successful game against Whitman, Senior Lei Ann Akau was very positive about the team, "This season has been frustrating for us so far. We've practiced well and played well together but when the games come we fall apart. This weekend, we've found that spark we needed."

Whitworth continued their impressive play by handing Western Washington a 15-8, 15-11 loss. The Pirates took the sting away from Western's hitters. Very few spikes made it past the hands of blockers Julie Cordes and Burkhart and those that did were dug up by Senior Colleen Schlonga.

In the next round, Carroll College fell prey to hot Northern Montana, while the local favorites, Whitworth, took on Lewis-Clark State.

L-C had been doing very well in the tournament and it looked like a tough match. Lewis-Clark jumped off to a great start and rattled Whitworth in the first game, 15-9. The more experienced Pirates proved to be too much for the younger Idaho team however, and defeated Lewis-Clark, 15-12, 15-2, in the next two games.

Coach Denise Lytle commented after the game, "We lost the intensity we had in the first game. We thought beating them was going to be easy, but Whitworth has a very talented team."

The last battles of the tournament were going to be exciting, it was plain to see. Whitworth and Northern Montana had scrambled to play for third place, and now it was time for a fight to the finish.

For the championship, UPS and Western Oregon had become established as the "unbeatable" in the Whitworth Invitational. Now one had to be beaten...

Western Oregon had beaten UPS rather soundly in pool play so WOSC Coach Jim Callendar deduced, "There is no doubt that we can beat them. We've already done it."

The championship match was a joy for volleyball fans, but the UPS Loggers continued their streak and dominated the Wolves 15-10, 15-6. "It's been fun," Flick said after the game.

The match between the Bucs and Northern Montana was as much a test of endurance as anything. Both teams had competed every two hours since 8 a.m.! The struggle for third place was filled with lengthy volleys, but Whitworth seemed to get the best of most of them. Spectacular saves and powerful spikes from the Pirates eventually wore down the NMC team as they lost to Whitworth 15-7, 15-8. As a spectator was overheard saying, "Now that's more like it!"

Soccer off to shining start

by John Kessel
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth soccer is off to its strongest start in years. With a new coach and a young team, they hope to have a consistently competitive team for this season and for several seasons to come.

At the end of the first two tournaments, the Bucs were 7-1, the highest standing in the conference, with their only loss to the University of Puget Sound. The starting goalkeeper, Dave Benz, was listed as the top goalie in the conference, while Mark Eilers was the second ranked scorer, with five goals.

The Bucs' first tournament was the Gonzaga Tournament, held in Spokane. In the first game, they faced Washington State University. They came up victorious, with a score of Whitworth 1, WSU 0. Later that afternoon they played Central Washington State, winning again, 2-1. The third game was against the across town team, Gonzaga, who played well, but could not keep the Bucs from scoring the only point of the day.

Whitworth played Central in the championship game. The score was tied 0-0 sixty-five minutes into the match, when second string forward, Ed Sheppard was put in. Sheppard was in the game for less than three minutes, when he was given the ball at mid-field. Seeing a chance to give the Pirates a victory, he single-handedly worked the ball past the defense and drew the goalkeeper out of the goal. Dribbling past the goalie, he, on the verge of a misstep, put the ball into the goal. The Bucs' Eilers scored a second point on a penalty kick, to give the Bucs a 2-0 win.

The second tournament was played in Olympia, hosted by Evergreen State College. The Bucs did well in the tournament, placing second. The first game was against Evergreen; Whitworth won 2-1. The second game was against Pacific Lutheran College, with the Bucs winning 1-0. The third game was against the College of Idaho, again the Bucs won 1-0. In the championship game the University of Puget Sound won 3-0.

and its applications in medicine, warfare, the Third World and the environment.

"We'll be asking if technology is a good thing -- we all like our homes heated, or a bad thing when robots take away jobs," said Wauzzinski.

"In the class, students will be trying to become aware of their own personal assumptions and relating them to technology."

What are some of those personal assumptions?

According to Wauzzinski, certain technologists assert that we must dominate the creation while the Christian assumption, or belief, is that we must be stewards of creation.

Students will be challenged to ask which view they endorse, or to begin to develop their own views more clearly.

The upper-division course will be held Wednesday 7-10 p.m. beginning Oct. 1. It will be worth .8 credits.

Subjects to be covered will range from communication in relationships and making life choices, to one's self-concept and ways to stay in touch with the world beyond Whitworth.

In addition to holding the Chair, Wauzzinski will become involved in the community by doing some preaching around the Spokane area.

"In my work in the Church, I am concerned in helping people grow and learn in the Christian faith," said Wauzzinski.

Large enrollment means big money

by Steve Brown
of The Whitworthian

A major problem rocked the ASWC this week following an announcement that they will be receiving approximately $3000 more to be allocated to student activities for the fall semester.

The announcement was made Wednesday, Sept. 24, when the official full time undergraduate count was released. There are 1268 full time students enrolled, surpassing the expected budget mark of 1200. This means more money is available for ASWC and other Whitworth concerns.

Enrollment is up 55 students over last year at this time.

The $3000 for ASWC is a rough figure estimating that $50 from each additional student will be placed into an unallocated account for the fall semester.

Second semester funds were budgeted on 1150 students, anticipating that not all students will be returning in the spring. For this reason ASWC might not receive a full $3000 at that time.

Unallocated funds will be distributed to worthwhile activities, according to Glenn Smith, Director of Student Activities.

"We're always glad to hear about more money," said Smith. "We have not had this luxury for a long time."

ASWC came in with a goal this fall to have a spring festival. They questioned where the funds would come from and this money is one possibility, according to Smith.

No decisions have been made on where the funds will be dispersed in the ASWC. All allocations will be determined by the House and Senate.

The increased enrollment means that students will benefit in other ways as well.

Off the top, Whitworth plans to allocate an undetermined amount of funds to Financial Aid, according to Mike Goins, Vice President of Financial Affairs.

The net income which will remain after funds are transferred to Financial Aid will be distributed to salary and wage increases for college employees, equipment and any other needs of the college.

So far, the only decision which has been made is to designate 50 percent of the net income for salary and wage increases for college employees. According to Goins, the amount of increase should be around 3 percent.

Decisions will be made at the October board meeting concerning the ways to divide the money throughout the campus.

"Every part of the campus will need funds," said Goins. "It's a really nice problem to have to allocate the surplus."

The conservative estimate of 1200 students was made last spring when there were changes made in the staff. The changes were expected to result in lower enrollment but this did not happen, according to Paul Olsen, Registrar.

Another reason for the large amount of full time students is the retention of students. 85 percent of last year's students are back on campus this year.

Bonds totalling $7 million will fund more renovations

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

There will be more improvements made on campus thanks to $7 million worth of tax exempt bonds.

In the next three years, Whitworth will remodel McMillan, Ballard and the Warrens. Other areas marked for improvements include SAGA, classroom areas and many areas on campus will receive improved light fixtures.

The grounds surrounding the Aquatic Center are going to be landscaped and certain parking areas will no longer be covered with dirt — they will be smooth asphalt.

The improvements will be funded by the bonds. Bonds are a way of borrowing money where interest rates never change and payments remain level. Had Whitworth borrowed from a bank, this would not have been the case.

The bonds were issued in sums ranging from a minimum of $5000. Maturity dates range from 1987 to 2006. Mike Goins, Vice President of Business Affairs, said that he is very pleased with the purchase of bonds during this time period because the interest rate that Whitworth will pay to the investors is low. Whitworth will pay 7.24 percent. In comparison, when Pacific Lutheran University paid interest on bonds, they paid over 9.75 percent.

This 2.51 percent difference should correspond to a $600,000 savings, according to Goins.

Goins was also pleased that Whitworth received a good credit rating on the bonds.

If Whitworth has any trouble paying the bond interest, they have planned for a safety valve.

The Bank of Tokyo has a letter of credit which is a guarantee that says they will come to the rescue if Whitworth can't pay.

The Bank of Tokyo charges Whitworth a fee for this service and also holds a security agreement in 127 acres of Whitworth land as collateral in the event that the college should forfeit on its requirements.

Normally, the money for payments will come from tuition fees paid by the students.

"The largest source of income is from the students," said Goins. "So it certainly will be a factor."

"The good thing is that the bonds are at a fixed price so any tuition increase will reflect that cost and then level out. Any further increase will be caused by the changing cost of living, college salaries and wages, and institutional costs."

There have already been several improvements funded by the bonds — renovation of Arend Hall, the steamline insulation, and the newly drilled well.

The remaining improvements need to be made in the next three years or the bonds will no longer be tax exempt.

Goins is pleased with the way things are going with the renovation project so far. "I think the Lord has had a hand in this," said Goins.

Whitworth students seem to be content with the upcoming improvements as well.

"I think it's nice that they're making improvements," said student Scott Heinz. "Last year there weren't too many and now they've gone after the big problems."

"I think that it will help improve the Whitworth community," said Sophomore Rob Schlieke.

SAGA complies with FDA

by Kim Riemland
of The Whitworthian

The Food and Drug Administration banned the use of sulfites on raw fruits and vegetables and it broadened its labeling requirements for sulfite ingredients in packaged foods in early July.

In compliance with this recent ban, SAGA has eliminated several products that contain sulfites.

"We've done the best we can do to eliminate sulfites," said SAGA Food Service Director Jim O'Brien, "and we will continue to do so."

Among the items eliminated were dehydrated green peppers, dehydrated sliced potatoes, and certain canned vegetables.

"Salad bars have been associated with most of the serious problems," said FDA Commissioner Frank E. Young, MD.

But salad bars aren't a problem at Whitworth. O'Brien says sulfite is not added to any of the food that comes into the kitchen, the only sulfite found in SAGA is in some pre-packaged foods.

The only sulfite-containing food left on the SAGA menu is the instant mashed potatoes frequently served upstairs.

The pre-packaged potatoes are necessary to serve the large number of students.

"To do mashed potatoes for the five to six hundred plus is almost impossible for us in this kitchen," said O'Brien.

What's impossible today may be possible by November.

SAGA is anticipating the arrival of a potato peeling machine that would greatly reduce the time it takes to peel fresh potatoes.

Once the machine is put to use, virtually all sulfites will be gone from SAGA's food.

Sulfite is a chemical additive that is used in the preservation of foods.

The preservation was banned by the FDA after reports of about 500 reactions and thirteen deaths possibly associated with sulfite-treated foods.

Most reactions are not severe. The most common effects of the chemical include hives, nausea, diarrhea and shortness of breath.

"As with any additives, certain people have allergic reaction to it," said O'Brien.

O'Brien urges anyone who thinks they may be allergic to sulfite to contact the SAGA office.

From the ASWC

by J.B. Meade
Special to The Whitworthian

During ASWC's fall leadership retreat, dorm presidents and senators brainstormed on what would make ASWC successful. The consensus of the group was ASWC's need to assemble a team which promoted first rate projects: a team willing "to go the extra mile." With this commitment to excellence in mind I am pleased to disclose the outlook for ASWC has never looked better. We are currently working on a wide range of projects and issues.

"Octoberfest" will be the theme for this year's Homecoming Week. Extensive plans have been drawn up by Eric Roecks, ASWC's Special Activities Coordinator. Kicking off the week will be a fund-raiser for the American Heart Association, entitled "Swim for Heart." The twenty-four hour swim has already received generous publicity in the Spokane community and we are excited about its possibilities.

Homecoming Week will conclude Oct. 25 with a dance at Cavanaugh's Inn at the Park.

Plans are also in the works for a Spring Fair in early or late April. Ideally this event will raise money for our clubs and dorms while promoting the college to the Spokane community. The ASWC House will be considering the option of a Spring Fair in the next few weeks.

One of the major dilemmas of ASWC in the past few years has been our inability to creatively advertise our programs and activities. A position description has been written for an ASWC publicity coordinator and if passed by the House, ASWC will most likely become more efficient. Those who were early to Forum on Sept. 19 previewed a video production of Mr. Rogers (Eddie Davis) advertising the "W" Society Dance. This type of unique exposure for ASWC events is what we are seeking with the publicity coordinator.

The twenty-four hour visitation issue is also on ASWC's agenda. The decision to make a change in this policy has been rescinded by Student Life in order that ASWC may present a "position paper." A sub-committee of the House and Senate is working on the first draft of the paper. A major reason for the proposed change is characterized by what Dr. Julie Anderton considers a "less than best situation." The rhetorical battle over the policy change will ultimately include student concerns over their freedom and trust; which certainly are important. Student Life seeks to better the Whitworth community. I believe drafting a position paper provides us with the same responsibility and opportunity.

As you can see, much is happening in ASWC. Many thanks go to the dorm presidents, senators and coordinators for their enthusiastic efforts. Also paramount to ASWC's success is the diligent work of Steve Broughton (Executive Vice President), Trey Mallicoat (Financial Vice President) and Glenn Smith (Director of Student Activities). We openly solicit your input into the issues and events of the ASWC.

Science department changes chemistry

by Barry Elkin
of The Whitworthian

"I don't think there's been any department at Whitworth that has gone through a total revision process such as the one the Chemistry department is going through now," said Robert Bocksch, Professor of Chemistry.

According to Bocksch the new curriculum will eliminate freshmen students from taking a full year of general chemistry and the often difficult math that goes along with it.

The freshmen will now be taking half a year of general chemistry without the math and general inorganic chemistry, and half a year of an introductory biology course.

"The students will have essentially no math at all, and I think this program will help students go better into biology and help them to cope with the highly intensive math that they will get later on," Bocksch explained.

Bocksch also stated that the change in the curriculum is unprecedented across the country. "No other school has tried it yet."

Another area that is significantly different than what anyone else is doing, according to Bocksch, is the fact that in the first year students will study bio-chemistry first and organic chemistry second. At other schools it is the exact opposite.

There was a long process that brought about the changes in curriculum.

The Chemistry department studied the change for several semesters and even had outside reviewers come in and give their okay. The change was then reviewed and passed by Whitworth's academic affairs committee.

In addition to the initial changes, the department will also add 13 new courses to replace the ones being dropped in conjunction with the change. The labs have also been completely revamped.

The change will be phased in over three years with the first part occurring this year.

Summing up his feelings on the new curriculum, Bocksch stated, "I think it's gonna make it a lot better all around. Even the upper-classmen say it's a good way to go."

Mexican excursion offered in January

by Lynn Stevers
of The Whitworthian

This January something new is being offered at Whitworth. A health education trip to Mexico is being planned by Kay DeRoos, the Assistant Professor for Health Education.

The three week excursion will include trips to hospitals, health care facilities, rural villages, social centers and the beach.

The study is open to all Whitworth students and to the health care professionals who are taking night classes. There are no prerequisites for the trip.

"It doesn't matter if the student is planning to major in health science or education," said DeRoos. "We want to encourage anyone interested in going to contact me." DeRoos is located in Calvin Hall, the Health Education Building.

DeRoos is willing to work with other students in related fields to see if a possible project could be worked out. The trip does count as one full credit towards health education or multicultural experience.

DeRoos stressed that "this will be a fun and educational experience not only for the health education majors but for all students."

The trip will take place Jan. 10-31. The application deadline has been extended from Oct. 1 to Oct. 31.

The trip will cost $1300, which covers airfare, ground transportation, and lodging in "good quality hotels." It also includes the fares for three guided tours and a bilingual guide for the health centers. DeRoos has the complete itinerary and cost break down.

As a part of the International Week on Refugees, Forum will feature "The Girl Who Spelled Freedom" — Linn Yann, on Oct. 3. Mr. Jeb Stuart Magruder, Executive Minister for First Community Church in Columbus, Ohio, and former Watergate participant, will address the issue of "Christian Ethics in a Secular Society," Oct. 6.

As a Cambodian refugee, Linn Yann has had many traumatic experiences, which she will relate, in part, to her audience Oct. 3. These experiences are exemplified by Yann's three years in a Cambodian concentration camp where she ate rats and berries to survive.

Also covered in the presentation will be Yann's ability to go from knowing absolutely no English to competing in a national spelling bee, having memorized 3000 words, only four years after coming to America to live with her adoptive parents, George and Prissy Thrash.

Yann did not win the contest but was quoted by one journalist as saying, "I'm going to study harder for next year's spelling bee and win."

After hearing about the plight of the refugees, Mr. and Mrs. Thrash decided to serve as sponsors. They adopted Yann, her mother, and the five other children in the family into their Chattanooga, Tenn.

The Rev. Jeb Stuart Magruder is the Oct. 6 Forum speaker and former Watergate participant.

A Disney movie based upon Yann's ordeals in Cambodia and her subsequent life with the Thrashes was shown on television last February. Clips of this film will be shown during the forum.

Jeb Stuart Magruder speaker at the Oct. 6 Forum, has been through his own rough times. As a part of the Watergate scandal, Magruder was convicted and served time in prison. Upon returning to civilian life, Magruder became an ordained minister and eventually an Executive Minister. Magruder authored "An American Life: One Man's Road to Watergate," and "From Power to Peace."

Education department earns "A"

by Sally Anne Sadler
Of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth Education department is the second-largest area of study at the college earning a big "A" on its report card.

Why is it number two at Whitworth?

"Partly, students feel a calling to teach," said Tammy Reid, Chair of the Education Department. "Teaching is a fruitful way to work with people — and an intimate way. It makes a difference in the world."

Each year at graduation, 18-20 percent of Whitworth students qualify for a primary or secondary teaching certificate. To do so, a student has completed an entire year's worth of education courses above their major or area of concentration requirements.

The percentage of students choosing education hasn't varied significantly over the years. "Whether the market is tight or open, Whitworth students are still choosing education," said Reid. That is not to say people don't consider the job market.

"Twenty people this year are here exclusively for certification," said Reed. "Right now, with a teacher shortage, more people are looking into the field."

Although job placement is difficult to determine, Whitworth has consistently placed as well, or better than state institutions.

The main attraction to the department seems to be students' awareness of the classroom relationships.

Students recall their third grade teacher who was so positive — but even if the model was negative, it is the students' awareness of the power in the classroom that attracts them, according to Reed.

Being nationally accredited, Whitworth education graduates can teach in at least 37 states. Some states, like California, require a fifth year.

What will Whitworth's graduating teachers expect in the field?

"Teaching is becoming extremely complex," said Reed. "Teachers are expected to be all things for all people."

"They must know about psychology, suicide, drug and sexual abuse, and be a moral leader. Legislation has also added to the complexity with mainstreaming both the physically and mentally handicapped.

"The paperwork and meetings add to the level of stress for these teachers. They are now expected to know the diet, allergies and cognitive capability of 30 to 150 students," Reed said.

What is it that makes Whitworth's education department unique?

"When reviewed by a national accrediting team last year, what we heard over again was Whitworth's teachers care more," said Reed. "The conclusion was made after interviewing principals, teachers, alumni and school affiliates.

"This is because of the mission of the college — Whitworth attracts very caring people."

The college's emphasis of service, professionalism and caring education as a calling has apparently made the education department a success.

Letters Rights in jeopardy 24-hour visitation curbed?

To the editor,

As a fifth year senior, I believe I've had the chance to observe the environment here at Whitworth and analyze what has been beneficial and what has not. 24-hour visitation has been beneficial. I have heard the arguments for imposing a curfew. In reply, I would like to state that if you limit visitation hours, I believe you will handicap the Whitworth education.

Here's the basic principle:
— Responsible adults make their own decisions.
— People learn through practice.

— Therefore, if you want responsible adults, let students practice making their own decisions.

I've often heard that the true value of an education lies in learning how to think. At Whitworth, I have learned how to think for myself, inside and outside of class. I've learned by making my own choices, making mistakes, and making new choices based on what I've learned.

I assume that whoever proposed the change considers the students incapable of controlling their behavior under the current policy. In this case, I believe the proposed curfew would not solve but add to the problem. Adding rules limits the student's personal responsibility. Cutting dormroom visitation hours only cuts out one time and place. You cannot make foolproof restrictions because there is no way to babysit 24 hours a day. And I would hope no one would want to. Consider: If I am "moral" because there is no other possibility, then what happens when I graduate and the restrictions are gone?

We all have to learn to make decisions on our own. We can learn now or later. Now we have a supportive environment with peers and mentors who share our basic beliefs. This is a good time to learn to deal with freedom of choice. If I were to propose any change in policy, I would suggest lessening restrictions rather than adding them. You cannot learn to swim satisfactorily wearing a life jacket.

Those are the practical reasons. Now let me give you the personal ones. I lived in the dorms for three years. Night time is when students are awake. Night is when some of the best conversations happen. I remember numerous late night talks and late night cries that might not have happened if we'd had nowhere private to go. I value those good times and I value the freedom and trust that made those times possible.

I told my parents about this possible policy change when it was brought up two years ago. My parents said if this had been the policy when I applied to Whitworth they would have asked me not to attend this school. They knew I would feel condescended to and limited by such a policy. I don't have to live with this personally; I'm graduating after this semester. But I care about Whitworth. I want the educational environment to continue to be as good as it has been. I want this to be a school I can continue to support.

Freshman dorm "graduate's" reflection

by Michael K. LeRoy
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

Last year I had the opportunity of participating in the freshman theme dorm. Reflecting upon my personal experience I feel I am capable of adding insight to one of the hottest campus issues in the past two years. Isolation, Student Life indoctrination of freshmen, inefficient dorm leadership, and a lack of role models were among the criticisms of the freshman dorm one year before new freshmen even arrived. Although the majority of these concerns never quite materialized, the underlying theme of this uproar appeared to be a typical student inability to cope with change. I advocate the purpose and the intent of the program, but in all fairness wish to weigh the pros and cons of it and offer some suggestions for improvement.

A significant inadequacy in the freshman dorm program is its inability to provide many interpersonal relationships with upperclassmen. It took a great deal of effort for many residents to become acquainted with upperclassmen. We must realize that this is a two way street, both upperclassmen and freshmen must take responsibility for this important networking. Yet, with few exceptions sophomores to sixth year seniors simply made no attempt to visit BJ.

Another defect in the program lies in its inability to meet the demand of the students that desire to participate (due to lack of space in BJ). Many students that did not meet the first come, first serve criterion expressed bitterness over their exclusion. May I suggest an alternate facility (the Warrens) capable of meeting that demand. Moving the freshman theme dorm from BJ to the Warrens would simply make a good program better. It solves the demand problem and also extends some interesting options. For instance, West and South Warrens might be used for freshmen only, leaving East free for upperclassmen. This would solve the socialization problem between the freshmen and others.

Although I extend these previous criticisms I affirm the concept of the freshman residence. It provided a supportive environment and a sense of mutual identity. The opportunities for leadership the dorm offers also add an element that Whitworth desperately needed: freshman representation. It was also a comforting thought to know that my peers were my equals. Equal in their naivete as well as enthusiasm and general insanity. These suggestions offer us some alternatives to make a good program better while improving the role of the freshman dorm in the Whitworth community. If I had to do my freshman year all over again (God forbid!) I would change many things, but would undoubtedly choose to live in BJ. The advantages far outweigh the disadvantages.

Bogus Proposal

To the editor,

As a parent of students and member of the Whitworth community, I would like to respond to the proposal to end 24-hour visitation.

It seems that one of the basic goals of the college is to encourage students to take responsibility for themselves and their actions in a mature manner. Telling them when they may or may not visit each other hinders this choice and may even encourage hypocrisy.

According to Julie Anderson, the current 24-hour policy is incongruent with other existing policies, such as cohabitation. Inherent in this belief is the suggestion that just because the students have access to each other during the night, they will be engaging in sexual activities. This could be true in some cases but seems to me to be an invalid assumption. Again, students need to learn to be responsible adults.

One of my goals as a parent involved letting my children begin to set their own limits as seniors in high school, such as determining what time to be in at night etc. All three seemed to handle themselves responsibly without abusing the freedom. I would have been less than a trusting, supportive parent had I assumed that because they were out beyond midnight, they were doing drugs, drinking or involved in sexual activities. What is the visitation cut off time? Most students I know are generally up late into the night anyway.

At this point, this proposal seems absurd to me — a step backward, at least for my children. I would like to hear a more valid rationale than what has been stated to date in The Whitworthian.

Is God masculine or feminine?

The question is moot Our Heavenly Mother

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

God is a man. This was the opinion I was taught to believe by my Sunday School teachers, youth directors and pastors. Along the same line, I was taught that because God is a man, Christian leaders must also be men. I no longer agree with these views.

The belief of Biblical times was one that subdued women in a way that made them second-class. This may have been the acceptable culture of that time; yet, does that make their role definitions accurate for today? Most Christian educators would agree that it is not only acceptable but also applicable to modern-day Christianity.

I would argue with these sexist Christian educators that they have fallen into the trap of believing everything they read and hear. In other words, they have fallen prey to whatever authority figure they encounter. This is a pattern humans follow throughout their lives. They rely on the authority of teachers for what they learn in classes at Whitworth; they rely upon the authority of their parents in determining their life goals; and they rely upon the authority of their peers to determine their self-esteem.

The most devastating authority Christians rely upon is the Bible. The idea that I have encountered endlessly is the view that God somehow stood behind the authors of the Bible and guided every stroke of their pens, making the Bible 100 percent perfect, totally divine, and free of all error.

Come on — we all know that whenever humans are involved, error will exist. To suggest that the Bible is free of error is wrong. It is also the product of minds seeking the warm security of an all-perfect authority.

I must assert that I believe most of the Scripture is divine; yet, the inclusion of sexist references was a human element resulting from human conditions.

So, can we believe the Scripture that tells us that God is our Father (male)? Or, was the name Father a human assumption inspired by a male dominated society?

Who cares? — I would hope that humanity has progressed beyond that point.

If the men and women of today would rely less on authorities and more upon their own abilities to make judgments, the first thing they would see is the emergence of women in our society as both quality Christian and business leaders. The second thing they would see is the equality of men and women.

In our present age, we have progressed and acknowledge the equality of women, regardless of the Biblical perspective.

Now, the important thing is this. As Christians, we need not fight meaningless theological battles concerning the gender of our God. It would be like chasing the wind. Instead, we need to get down to the real issue. If God "is," then we must offer ourselves as servants regardless of the gender. I think the whole issue is moot.

Is the Bible wholly true?

This will be the subject of discussion for next week's Religion page. We will be asking if the Bible is the perfect, inspired work of God, or if the content has been influenced by humans. Please write your responses to the editor.

by Paula Zeller
of The Whitworthian

Doesn't that phrase make your skin crawl? I certainly shuddered the first time I heard it, but maybe that's due to mental conditioning causing me only to see God as a Father. Maybe I need to open my eyes a little wider and take a closer look at the maternal or feminine side of God. I think we all need to do this for a fuller understanding of God.

How is God maternal in His dealings with people? After all, the cultures in which the Bible was written and to whom it was written were all paternalistic. Our culture on the other hand has been strongly impacted by feminism. Are there any references to God's femininity or maternalism? You bet!

In the beginning, "God created human beings, making them to be like Himself. He created them male and female." (Genesis 1:27; GNB/TEV) God's image as we have seen it on this planet comes in these two forms, male and female. Unfortunately as we see it on this campus, the latter form is the more prevalent.

My favorite verse can be found in both Matthew 23:37 and Luke 13:34. Jesus is expressing His love for Jerusalem and He cries out, "How many times I wanted to put my arms around all your people, just as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings, but you would not let me!" I may not be a farm girl, but a hen is the epitome of maternalism for me.

The image of the hen leading her chicks around the barnyard reminded me of the Exodus, Israel's ultimate event in its Holy History. At Mount Sinai before giving the Ten Commandments, the Lord says to Israel through Moses, "You saw what I, the Lord, did to the Egyptians and how I carried you as an eagle carries her young on her wings, and brought you here to Me." (Exodus 19:4)

Wings are also used with the idea of protection. David cries out to God, "Hide me in the shadow of Your wings." (Psalm 17:8) We also are told, "He will cover you with His wings; you will be safe in His care." (Psalm 91:4) Protection isn't the sole job of the guy "who wears the pants." It's part of the maternal instinct.

In 1 Peter 1:3 it says, "Because of His great mercy He gave us new life by raising Jesus Christ from death." Jesus speaks of this new life to Nicodemus in John 3:6 using the phrase "born of the Spirit." Sorry dudes! Pregnancy is still the female occupation — so much for equality! Bringing new life into the world is a maternal item.

30:26, God is the Restorer of Israel, "bandaging and healing the wounds." Now, honestly, didn't you call to "Mommy" whenever you had an "ouchy"? Curad band-aids were fine, but Mom's kiss and hug always make everything "all better."

The most binding relationship is not between man and woman, but between mother and child. "It was You who brought me safely through birth, and when I was a baby, You kept me safe. I have relied on You since the day I was born, and You have always been my God." (Psalm 22:9, 10) The Lord spoke through Isaiah saying, "You will be like a child that is nursed by its mother, carried in her arms, and treated with love. I will comfort you...as a mother comforts her child." (66:12-13) We are dependent upon God as children to their mother, and as a mother responds to the needs of her children, God supplies us with our basic necessities.

We do realize that all mothers are not perfect because they are human. Many must play the father's role too. Some fathers must be "Mommy" as well. However we do believe that God is perfect and this puts Him beyond maternalism. To this effect He says in Isaiah 49:15: "Can a woman forget her own baby and not love the child she bore? Even if a mother should forget her child, I will never forget you." Thanks Mom!

For the record

To the editor,

I read last week's issue of The Whitworthian and really enjoyed the paper, especially the Religion section. However, I was displeased about an article which appeared on page 2 concerning the Refugee Week at Whitworth, and the interview with Philippe Coulon, the President of the International Club.

Some words are not true. I don't say that because I am a Korean student. I don't deny that there is poverty and despair in Korea. Of the article about Korea, it could be acceptable; however, it is about refugees. I'm Korean, there are no Korean refugees. And many Korean people who live in the United States are not refugees. They are immigrants. As I know, a refugee camp in Hong Kong gave the motivation to Philippe Coulon, not poverty in Korea. The poverty doesn't mean refugee. The article gave me that kind of conception. Really, the article was a shock to Korean students. It gave us a curiosity whether the writer knew a definition of refugee or not.

Seong Jin Kim

The Whitworthian regrets any misunderstandings emerging from the "refugee story" on page 2 of last week's issue. Philippe Coulon was misquoted and misrepresented. We hope this letter helps to resolve any of the problems that have occurred.

Whitworth gallery hosts Korean paintings

by Jennifer Seyler
of The Whitworthian

Koehler Art Gallery in Whitworth's Fine Arts Building is presently hosting a diverse collection of Korean paintings on an exchange from the faculty of Keimyung University, Korea.

Composed of work by 12 fine art faculty members, the show will be on campus Sept. 21-30. At present, fourteen paintings and graphic art designs are being displayed, and there is room for potential growth in future exchanges.

"The art that was sent doesn't nearly represent all they would have liked to send," said Gordon Wilson, Associate Professor of Art. "There was a mailing problem so we only got what would fit in a cardboard tube and a small package," he said.

The exhibit shows a variety of art styles and techniques. Eastern brush paintings represent the traditional Korean painting style. "The Korean art was more for detail than the American art, and I like detailed art," said Al Vining, a Whitworth staff member.

Sharon Bailey, a sophomore International Studies major, particularly enjoyed the colorfulness of the paintings. "The colors are bright and they jump out at you," she said.

Several graphic art instructors at Keimyung display their commercial art. Sophomore, Carey Bostic said of a commercial-style poster, "I like the Olympic hurdler the most. It has a lot of colorfulness in it."

While the Korean professors have their native country's style, a Western influence is occasionally seen in their art. Bailey commented on an abstract painting displaying a Western look, and said that, "It's pleasing to the eye. The thick oil paints they used make a good medium."

It was the originality and diversity that attracted International Business major, Steve Olsonowski. "There were

Camaraderie characterizes Inland Empire Masters

by Jim MaGee
of The Whitworthian

Using Whitworth facilities, and in return rendering a useful service to the Whitworth community, the members of the Inland Empire Area Masters Swim Organization are having fun keeping fit.

Beth Mastel-Smith, Assistant Aquatics Center Director, and Inland Empire Masters coach explained the Masters Swim program.

She said that it is a nationwide organization with the purpose of promoting fitness, swimming education, and a social outlet, all in the context of a fun, non-threatening and supportive environment.

Mastel-Smith added that the program also provides the option of competition to all members 20-years-old and up.

"80 percent of Masters swimmers never compete... Most of them are just here for the fun and exercise," she said.

Mastel-Smith encourages anyone, regardless of ability or age, to consider the Masters Swim program.

"If we can just get people over that 'I'm not good enough' syndrome," she said. "I've got people in the morning who can barely swim."

The support and close relationships which develop throughout the season are some of the benefits of Masters swimming, according to Mastel-Smith.

"The Masters team is characterized by a lot of fun, a lot of camaraderie, and mutual support for one another," she said. "The people really care about one another."

She explained briefly that Masters swim competition structure is much different from that of other competitive leagues. "Anyone who is a Masters member may swim in any event in any region." There are no qualification races, finals, semi-finals or point requirements which would be seen as restricting someone from participating.

She stressed that the heat in which a swimmer is placed is determined by his or her own personal best time in that event. In other words, entrants swim in heats with those of like ability, rather than with those of like age. Points are then awarded to individuals according to how they placed against each other in their age and gender category. These points are attributed towards year end awards such as most improved and greatest total points.

"For those who do compete, the season extends from October through May, with meets every three to four weeks," said Mastel-Smith.

Mastel-Smith stressed that Masters swimming has a lot to offer, on many levels, and encourages members of the Whitworth community to come and join in the fun, fitness, friendship and coaching they have to offer.

"We're not into the right and the best," she said. "We want people, number one, to enjoy our facility, swimming and the byproduct of fitness."

Education opportunities impress Mahmud

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

How far would you go to gain independence? Sajeelah Mahmud traveled half way across the world and discovered educational and religious freedom in America.

This 18-year-old freshman spent most of her life in Pakistan, except for a three year stay in California while her father worked on his PhD in Public Health Education. Her family now resides in Nampa, Idaho, where her father works for the World Bank.

Mahmud encountered Whitworth at an Idaho college fair and was pleased with the curriculum. Although her parents preferred she stay near home, Mahmud told them that she "desperately needed a sense of identity and independence."

Her interests include biology and psychology, and she said that she sees "far greater potential" in her studies at Whitworth than she'd receive in her homeland.

"There is no problem as long as you follow the orders of the government."

The educational system in Pakistan doesn't offer much variety in courses, according to Mahmud. "You either take science or art," she said. Mahmud explained that a major emphasis is placed on studies from grades 1-12, but after that, the standard of education sharply drops.

"Most people desire to come to the States to complete their education, hoping to find better jobs, which remain scarce in my country," said Mahmud.

In Pakistan, only well-educated people receive good jobs, stated Mahmud. She continued saying that "all schools are public, which means they cost a lot of money. Most people simply can't afford the high cost of an education. Free schools don't exist."

Pakistan, the second poorest nation in the world, has no form of welfare or federal aid for the poor, so the people live from day to day without much hope for their condition, she said. "Most villagers remain uneducated and have no choice but to work in agriculture."

The middle class mostly receives education, and Mahmud asserted that "the middle class keeps Pakistan stable, but at the present economic rate there soon won't be a middle class, only extremes."

Mahmud further explained that most wealthy people work in some branch of the military which has ruled Pakistan for the last ten years.

Nestled between India and Afghanistan, with Iran and China on either side, Mahmud said that Muslim Pakistan prefers neutrality rather than get involved in much of the violence which occurs on all sides. But, she continued, it often does serve as a haven for many refugees from warring countries.

"Most common people don't feel the tension around them, and their knowledge of the violence comes from the media," said Mahmud.

"There is no problem as long as you follow the orders of the government," said Mahmud, "but each step must be carefully taken. You can't speak out against the government and get away with it."

Mahmud's father found the military government too oppressive, and desired permanent freedom in America. According to Mahmud, the situation in Pakistan is worsening each day.

"In many ways you can almost disregard education, it's who you know and how much money a person has which determines their success, but I suppose a lot of governments operate that way," she said.

Although she misses home occasionally, and hopes to visit, Mahmud said she has no desire to again reside in Pakistan. Her family now practices Christianity and she enjoys her studies at Whitworth.

"I feel I've found personal freedom and a sense of identity in America as well as hope for my future," she concluded.

Snorkeling, hiking planned for Belize tour

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

Do you want to see another part of the world? Do you want to explore other cultures?

If you are an upper division biology major at Whitworth College, you are in luck.

Preparations are being made for students to travel to Belize, in Central America, this January.

A group of 27 students, led by Dr. David Hicks, will be leaving Jan. 5 from the Houston airport to explore the tropical rainforest and coral reefs of Belize.

"The course is designed to introduce students to the biology of the tropics," Hicks said. "We will look at the most diverse water system, and the most diverse land system, side-by-side.

"The academic prerequisites are Biology 151, 152 and 153," continued Hicks. "It would also help if they are in good physical shape and can swim. Some knowledge of scuba diving might also be useful."

There will be several lectures given this fall to allow students to familiarize themselves with the coral reef and rainforest.

"They need to get ready to be overwhelmed by the number of plants and animals," Hicks commented. "Besides the numbers, they still need to understand how the system works."

Twelve out of the total of 25 tour days will be spent snorkeling and scuba diving on the reef.

"There is money in the department for an underwater camera, so we'll be taking that," Hicks said. "We'll be able to get some great pictures."

About seven days will be spent in the tropical rainforest, with the rest of the time devoted to traveling.

Hicks said that they plan on touring the Mayan ruins in Tikal, Guatemala and backpacking through the Mayan mountain range. He said that he would like to visit the "Blue Hole," a deep limestone pit called a cenote, which natives used for sacrifices.

"The trip affords students the opportunity to study in the field," said Dr. Howard Stien. "The two systems are very different from what most students are accustomed to. The benefits of going in the field are that students get to see organisms first hand. It's difficult to understand their natural context when in the laboratory."

Besides the biology, Hicks notes that there is a cultural dimension as students will be exposed to both the Mayan and Carribean populations.

"Students may not be able to see both the ecology and the cross-cultural dimension if they are in some large European city," offered Stien.

Addressing the concern about the safety of the tour, Hicks notes that there are no certainties.

"But Belize is the most politically stable country in Central America," he said. "Although it is an independent country, it is backed by British defense. And no one really wants to confront Britain."

Nancy Gronhovd, the Administrative Secretary for the Biology department, said she is really excited about the trip.

"I am most looking forward to learning a great deal, and spending quality time with the biology students. They're like family."

Mike Sardinia, a senior Biology/Chemistry major, said he is ready to go.

"While I'm down there I'll get the chance to do research of my choosing, in an environment that's suited to that," he said. "Oh, and I'd like to get a tan."

But it won't be all fun and games. There will be some work involved.

"Most of the lectures will be at the beginning of the course, and gradually tapering off," said Hicks. "About two-thirds of the time will be in field work, and the other one-third in lectures, exams and labs."

"I want them to be able to examine the similarities between the forest and the reef," he went on. "In fact, that might be a final exam question."

"The academics will be rigorous," said Sardinia. "They will require a lot of self-motivation."

Just a short plane flight away from Spokane there lies another world, another culture, another way of life for these select students of Whitworth.

many different styles of art in the show and all of them were different than the kinds I'm used to seeing," he said.

Wilson anticipates a tentative exchange of the Whitworth faculty's art work traveling to Korea in about a year.

"Once the mailing problem is taken care of, more of Keimyung's faculty will be able to participate too," said Wilson.

Kell Soo Chung, President of Keimyung University, writes in the brochure accompanying the show that the exchange program "enhances mutual understanding by both communities in a cultural dimension."

"This art show added an expanded dimension to Whitworth and I encourage those who want to broaden their perspective to attend," said Olsonowski.

critic (krit' ic) n. One who forms and expresses judgments of the merits, faults, value or truth of a matter.

In this case the "matter" is movies, those little gems from Hollywood (and occasionally elsewhere) that eat our $2.50 every Monday night and stir our emotions in the process.

Some people enjoy attending movies they know absolutely nothing about, hoping to discover an entertaining surprise, but often they encounter something simply mediocre or dismally worse.

My heartfelt moral duty then, is to rescue you from the clutches of those wastes of time and hard-earned SAGA wages.

On the other hand, I hope to be able to enlighten you also, perhaps convincing you to see a wonderful film you normally wouldn't have heard of or considered attending.

In the case of this week's new offerings, writer Leonard Michael's screenplay "The Men's Club," directed by Peter Medak and playing at Newport Cinemas, initially looked to be the most promising.

Billed as a chronological progression of the human-maturation genre, after "The Breakfast Club" and "The Big Chill," the film begins with an ex-baseball star, Roy "2010" Scheider, coaxing, prodding and organizing a varied group of acquainted professionals into a Wednesday night Men's club — providing a forum for men to be open, honest and sharing with one another, telling stories, smoking marijuana and debating infidelity.

A number of humorous scenes occur during the actual meeting, which takes place at the home of a Marin county psychotherapist (vaguely played by Richard Jordan).

Mental debate and discussion is balanced with the physical exertion of knife-throwing, wrestling in the living room, raiding the refrigerator and howling arm-in-arm. Unfortunately, the false, forced closeness developed among the group fails to impress.

All comparisons to the quality of "The Breakfast Club" and "The Big Chill" end here.

After a single, truly funny scene in which the psychotherapist's wife (refreshingly played by Stockard Channing) returns to find her house a shambles, the remaining six men head for San Francisco and the scene of the second half of the movie, a high-priced brothel.

Several poignant scenes give insight to the almost real quality of these men. But they are not worth digging through the scenes of sex, immorality debates, boredom and the film's horrific view of women to find.

This is definitely a man's movie, and perhaps I am still too young to appreciate all of what the film might say to me otherwise, but I tend to doubt that.

"Growing up is hard to do," quotes the advertisement, and maybe that's what I wanted to see, people reflecting upon and working through realistic difficult situations with a peer group and growing up in the process.

For your money, go see "Stand By Me" a second time; besides, the soundtrack is better, too.

Dedication—Akau's #1 concern

Heather Harwell

Leil Ann Akau practices her serving technique in Saturday's practice.

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Leil Ann Akau is a fifth-year senior this year at Whitworth, by choice. Although she had enough credits to graduate last year, Akau returned this semester to play volleyball.

A Business major, Akau misses her Waimanalo, Hawaii home. "I thought about not coming back this year," she said, "but when I looked at their (her teammates) faces, I knew I couldn't let them down."

Because of a knee injury, Akau couldn't play volleyball her freshman year. This was very hard on the powerful hitter, "I didn't know what to do with myself; volleyball has always been my life."

This love of the sport and devotion to her team is very characteristic of Akau. "I grew up in a very sports oriented family. Whenever we all got together we always played volleyball." Akau has played competitively since she was 10, and unlike many high schools here, Lei's team in Hawaii played year-round.

She says that the person most responsible for her getting so involved in volleyball was her father, who died of cancer six years ago. She smiles as she thinks back, "I remember him practicing volleyball with me, hitting back and forth, even when the sun went down and we couldn't see the ball anymore. He always wanted me to be a good player."

Her achievements indicate that she has reached that dream. Both this year and last Akau was named to the Whitworth Invitational All-Tournament Team, and last season she was honored with the all-district tournament team and the all-district team.

Akau plays down her individual success, however, "I sometimes feel guilty about getting those awards because volleyball is not a one person effort." She can't seem to emphasize enough how much her teammates mean to her, "They inspire me...this is the first time I've ever played with a team that's really a team. After four years of playing together, there's just no way to give up."

Akau sees the team as the most important aspect of playing volleyball. "You've got to make it easy for your teammates," she said.

Most would agree that Akau does just that. Freshman player Barb Lashinski said, "Lei never brings the team down. She's a silent leader."

Coach Pat Shelton agrees that No. 13 on her team has very special qualities, "Lei is the kind of player that you wish you had eleven more of. She's a hard worker, extremely talented, and she works well with others. I hate to see her go."

Lei Ann Akau will leave behind her an image of sportsmanship and athletic prowess, her presence will be missed.

Pirate strikers come alive score 3 against Alumni

by John Kessel
of The Whitworthian

Although Whitworth soccer had a poor last tournament, losing all three games, the team played well Wednesday against the Alumni, winning 3-0.

Last weekend's tournament was played in Idaho and the Bucs just could not seem to get their offense to score. The defense played as well as ever, but everytime that they got into scoring position, they could not get the shots into the goal. All week the coach has had the team working on attacks from the 18-yard line. Most of these were low to medium level drills, and, if the score from the Alumni game is any indication, they have worked out some of the kinks in our scoring drives.

Playing against the Alumni team last Wednesday was fun for everyone. The old met the new, both teams played hard and there was an abundance of good spirits throughout the match. Before the game Coach Thorarinnson said, "It will be like playing a Spokane all-star team."

The scorers of the game were Mark Eilers with a goal at 42 minutes and Scott Downes, who scored twice, once at 35 minutes and again at 75 minutes.

This weekend Whitworth played the University of Portland in Oregon and Warner Pacific College. Both of these teams are highly skilled, and Warner Pacific is ranked on the National level in collegiate soccer.

On Saturday the Pirates tied Warner Pacific, 0-0. Goalkeeper Dave Benz had nine saves. The results of Sunday's game were unavailable at the time The Whitworthian went to print.

The next game for the Pirates will be Wednesday, Oct. 1, at 4 p.m. behind the Fjeldhouse.

X-Country face toughest competition

by Mark Eldson
of The Whitworthian

Coquitlam, British Columbia and Expo '86 were the sights of the Buc's third cross country meet this season, the Simon Fraser Invitational. Being only the third meet of the year, expectations weren't too high going into Saturday's meet, but Coach Hal Werner was equally pleased with both squads results. "This is the toughest competition we've probably faced this season, and we did real well."

The men's team placed eighth overall in the field of 10 teams. "In the men's field there were some runners from the Canadian National team that ran in the Olympics," explained Werner. The Buc's fared much better against their NAIA district opponents. They placed fifth with 212 points, only three points behind Simon Fraser who placed in the top 10 nationally last year.

The top finisher for the men was Rod Holman, who placed 17th overall with a time of 25:59 for the 8K course. "That was Rod's best race this season, he went out strong, but was injured at the 5K mark, and couldn't finish as strong as he could have," explained Coach Werner.

Alan Bracken was the next Whitworth finisher with a time of 26:36 and an overall placing of 38th. Jack Mulaney — 49th, Peat Sutherland — 52, Mike Lawrence — 56, Guy Duyree — 68, and Peter Houston — 82 rounded out the Pirate finishers. The men's team is very solid from one to five this year," commented Coach Werner. "They usually have times that are all pretty close together."

The women came out a little worse for the wear than the men did in Coquitlam. They had an overall finishing score of 237 points — 120 behind UPS who placed ahead of them.

One runner stood out from the rest of the pack. Kelli Burch, in her first year of cross country had an overall placing of 13th with a time of 17:49 for the 5K course. "Kelli's time is the fastest a female cross country runner has ever run for Whitworth for a 5K," said Werner. "Kelli was the number five finisher from our district, and the top five finishers from the non-winning team in districts, go to

1st half lead slips away; Pirates lose to Wildcats

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

Home, sweet home... almost. The Whitworth Pirates opened their home schedule hosting the always powerful Central Washington Wildcats. Both teams were coming off losses in their season openers. When all had been said and done, the Wildcats left the Pine Bowl with a 29-15 win over the Pirates.

When the final gun had sounded the game appeared even on paper. Whitworth totaled 305 total yards of offense, just edging Central's 304 yards. But once again the scoreboard told a different story. Saturday's game, played in wet and stormy conditions, saw the Pirates passing attack suffer in the rain.

The opening drive of the game saw the Pirates move 91 yards in 16 plays seemingly

The second quarter was productive for Whitworth as they regained the lead at the half. The Pirates momentarily took the lead as a result of Bob Coleman's 42-yard field goal. Coleman punted five times during the game, and came away with a 43.4 yard average.

Central fought back and scored on an 11-yard draw play by Watson to lead 14-9. The final score of the first half, and for Whitworth in the game came with 4:08 left. Bennett, who was 32-for-52 for 228 yards and two interceptions, hit Mark Houk with an 11-yard pass. At the half, the Pirates led 15-14.

In the second half Central broke the game open with two scores. Dillingham scored both touchdowns on runs of seven yards in the third quarter and 23 yards in the fourth, on a fourth down and three play.

The Pirate offense was unable to get rolling in the second half. They didn't get any help from Mother Nature at all. A handfull of Buc backers stayed through some heavy downpours that washed away the Pirate passing attack.

Through the rain a few bright spots shone for the Pirates. Wayne Ralph added 10 receptions to boost his two-week total to 30.

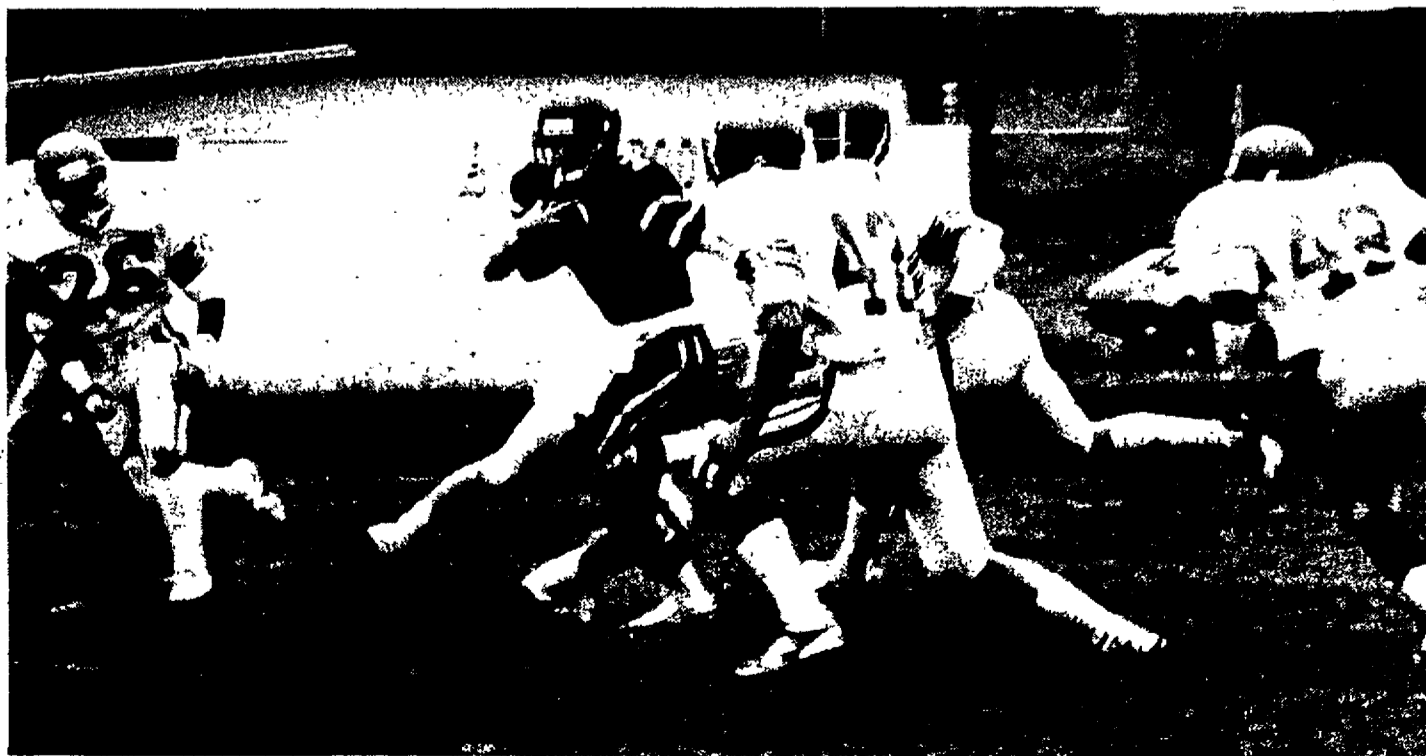

Defensively, Freshman free safety Tom Shanholtzer turned in his second strong performance in two weeks. Last week against Willamette Shanholtzer was credited for nine tackles, five assists, and one pass broken up. Against Central, he had 10 tackles, two for losses, one assist, an interception, a fumble recovery, and two passes broken up.

Saturday's win was the seventh consecutive Central victory over the Pirates. Whitworth returns to action next Saturday in the Pine Bowl hosting Western Washington University.

with no trouble at all. Almost five minutes after the kickoff, quarterback Blaine Bennett scored on a 1-yard sneak to put the Pirates up 6-0. The kick failed to keep the score at six. At this point it looked as if the offense had worked out all the bugs. The defense was the next question.

The answer: two Central runningbacks combined for 279 yards, each gaining over 100 yards a piece. Ed Watson, Central's big bruising fullback, crunched his way through the Pirate defense for 174 yards on 25 carries. Tailback Jim Dillingham ran for 105 yards on 16 carries. Between the two runningbacks, they scored three touchdowns.

Central came back to answer the Pirate score with a 7-yard pass from Jim Hill to John Bower. It was an 11-yard drive set up by a Pirate fumble. At the end of the first quarter Central led 7-6.

Gary Dawson looks for daylight in the Pine Bowl Saturday but finds Wildcats instead.

run on an RBI single by Kurt Krauth after Gene Baker had singled and Mark Skubinna had walked.

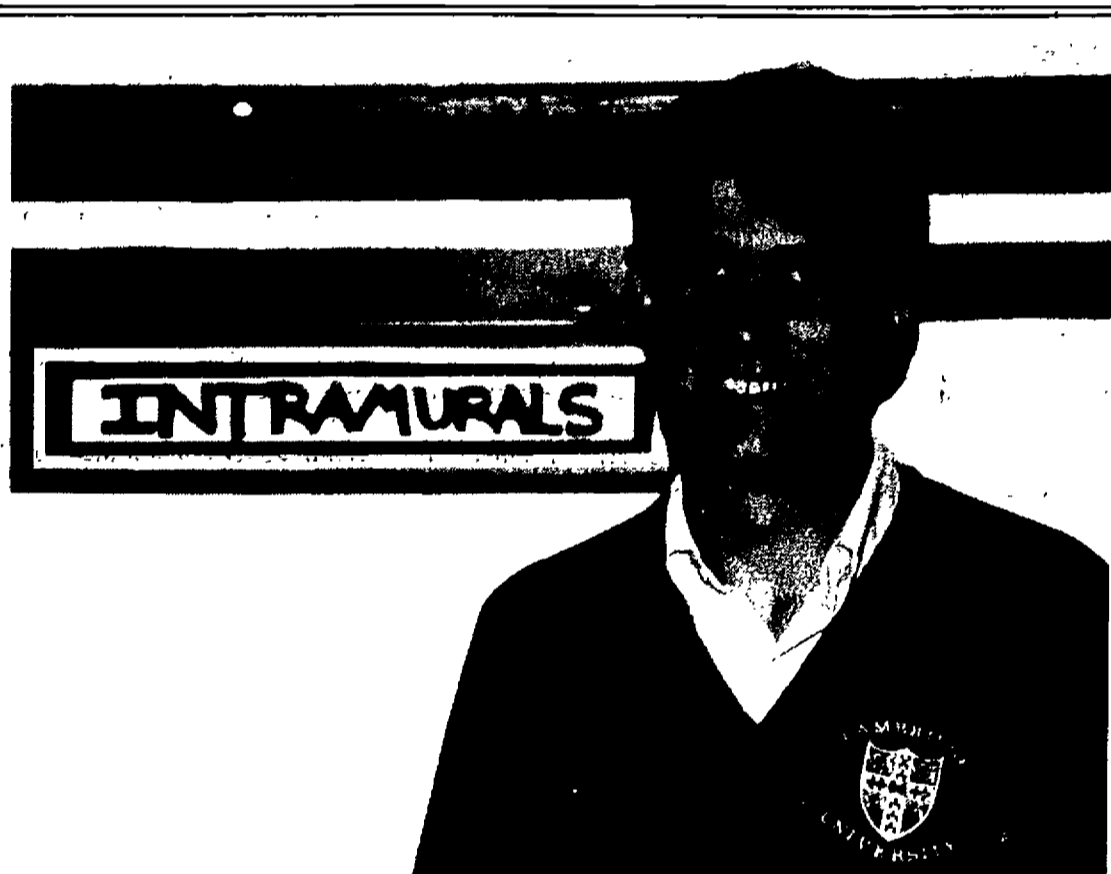

Sunday was a big day in baseball. The Boston Red Sox clinched the Al East finalizing post season pairing. At the same time the Whitworth baseball team was playing a double-header at Stannard Field against a group of alumni players.

The Bucs wrapped up the scoring in the seventh on singles by Jeff Bare (whose father, Al, was the elder alum from the class of '58), and Edlin, Hare walked, and Parisotto hit a 2-RBI double. Brian Cook, making his first fall appearance after resting a sore back, pitched three innings striking out two, and not allowing any hits or runs. Ian Cameron pitched the final four innings allowing only two runs on five hits while striking out three.

The first game was won by the young Bucs, 6-2. Ed Beloeate hit a solo homerun in the fifth inning. The alums answered in their half of the fifth with a run on a couple singles and an infield out. Brian Wharton drove in the run, but was thrown out at second by Don Edlin.

The second game was won by the Alumni 5-4. The Alums scored four runs in the 9th inning off Pirate pitcher Edlin. The four runs were scored with a combination of two walks, two errors and three singles by Wharton, Shawn McDougall and Dwayne Huan.

In the sixth inning the Bucs scored two runs on a double by Scott Barkley and singles by Vern Hare, Dan Demchuck and Brian Parisotto. The alums added another

Intramurals offer wide variety from Ping-Pong to water polo

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

Flag football will be kicking off the Intramural season according to new Intramural Sports Coordinator Pete Jones. Jones, Stewart Hall Resident Director, said there are currently five teams signed up, but has given students until Monday, Sept. 29, to turn in their team roster. Games will start the following Sunday, Oct. 5. Jones also notes that it is "flag" football this year and not "touch" as in the past years.

Along with flag football, the Intramural season will be followed by volleyball, basketball, softball and water polo. In addition, individual sports, such as a Ping-Pong and Pool Tournament, and a winter Snow Shoe Softball Tourney will be incorporated into the program.

According to Jones, "The primary goal is to get a wider variety of students to participate by meeting the diverse interests of the student body." So dig out your dusty cleats, break in your new mitt, or work on your serve, because this year's Intramural program plans to offer an activity for you.

nationals," explained Coach Werner.

Jan Aubrey was the next Lady Buc finisher with a time of 18:26, placing 23rd overall. Melissa Johnson, Lynnae Stevens and Bobbie Mischler were the rest of the women's finishers with placings of 66th, 68th and 82nd respectively. Coach Werner said of the women's placings, "We need to bridge the gap between the top and lower runners."

The course that the Pirates ran on is the same one that will be used for the Pirates District Championships. An interesting fact about the course, Whitworth's own Hal Werner helped design the course in Coquitlam. "I may be a little biased, but I think it's an excellent course," confessed Werner.

The Pirates hit the road again next weekend, as they travel to Salem, Ore., where they will run in the Willamette University Invitational, Oct.

Rubbish is piling up behind the Physical Plant. Maintenance official claims money is the problem.

Whitworth landfill unsightly addition in campus woods

by Dan Thomson
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth College has been creating a landfill project in its "Back 40," Rubbish and waste material, including old furniture, appliances, sheet rock, shards of metal, broken glass and an assortment of automobile parts, are being dumped behind the physical plant.

"It's just not cost effective to haul it away," said Ed Eccles, Maintenance Manager, "It's primarily natural products like logs and brush."

There is no law in the state of Washington that prohibits the disposal of private waste on private property.

The Environmental Protection Agency cannot act because the dumping of non-hazardous waste on private property, even though it can be a threat to the environment, is out of their jurisdiction.

Eccles emphasized the necessity of a landfill but Laurena Ketzler, International Trade and Politics major, questions the decomposition ability of some of the material involved.

"A lot of that material will not decompose for years," said Ketzler.

Some students did not realize that Whitworth has a landfill. "I didn't know that we had one," said Robin Worrell. "I don't think that it's warranted."

Whitworth students do not have an organization, ecological society or any other group that works for the protection of the environment. A group of this kind could bring this matter to the attention of an administrative body.

For now, the dumping will continue.

World hunger awareness key issue for task force

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

The news media has brought the plight of the world's hungry people into the homes of America. Now it appears that much of that attention is being focused in different directions.

"It's not in the newspaper or media anymore," said Doug Segur, Organizer of the Hunger Task Force. "People aren't reaching out — it's not in the forefront. We want to remind people that hunger is still with us and it does need attention."

A series of events, organized by the Hunger Task Force and Nutrition 2005, will begin Oct 8 and end Oct. 16, intending to reassert the importance of hunger awareness.

On Oct. 8, a representative from the Spokane Gleeners will speak in Nutrition 2005.

Gleeners are primarily people who are low income or welfare recipients who have networked together to provide better food for themselves than is available on their welfare dollars.

The gleening program also intends to educate people of the different ways to obtain good foods and to provide for other people in a similar position as themselves.

Gleening involves the removal of usable produce from fields and orchards following commercial harvests and just before the farmers predict a crop damaging frost.

A gleening field trip is planned for Saturday, Oct. 11. Organizers of this event hope that a frost will cooperate with their plans or the trip will probably be canceled.

"Gleening has been tried for the past three years without success," said Linda Grandfield, Nutrition 2005 Coordinator. "We're praying that something (frost) will break."

Organizers are hoping to do the gleening somewhere in the Spokane valley or near Green Bluff, Wash., a small community north of Spokane. Since so much depends upon the weather, no definite plans can be made.

About three-quarters of the potential harvest will be donated to the Spokane Food Bank. The remainder will be used by Nutrition 2005 in compliance with the program's goal of modeling ethical eating.

"We're cutting out the middle-man," said Grandfield. "Using the produce will be more of a token gesture than anything else."

The movie Ghandi will be shown in the Cowles Auditorium Sunday, Oct. 12 at 6:30 p.m. Organizers are asking those who attend to provide a can of food or $1 for admission. All food will be donated to the Spokane Food Bank.

The annual Fall Fast which hopes to promote hunger awareness will take place Thursday, Oct. 16 — World food day.

The event asks that students skip breakfast and lunch and attend a soup kitchen style dinner Thursday evening at Nutrition 2005. The evening meal will feature a representative from the Spokane Food Bank.

A film has been tentatively scheduled for Thursday, 12 p.m., in the Chapel. The film will present hunger issues.

In order to participate in the fast, students are asked to turn in their meal cards Wednesday, Oct. 15. SAGA will donate money for each card turned in and the ASWC has been contacted to see if they will provide contributions for each student as well.

"We would like to raise $1,000 with the fast," said Segur. "With involvement of students, it shouldn't be that difficult."

"We want people to become aware. This is a chance for people to reach out."

Refugee Week paints picture

by Tim Boggess
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

I would like to begin this editorial by applauding the efforts of Philippe Coulon, members of the International Club, and those on the organizing committee for a job well done on the "International Week On Refugees." All of the long hours, overcoming roadblocks, and pavement pounding paid off. Bravo Philippe and company!

Being involved in various aspects of the week myself, I struggled with finding the appropriate methods of educating the community to such an important issue. How do you effectively encapsulate a topic which encompasses millions of people, myriad nationalities, and a multiplicity of situations? How do you portray the big picture? You portray the big picture by adding up lots of little ones. And that is what we did.

The "week" officially began with the showing of "The Killing Fields. We got to see 2½ high-voltage hours of mass genocide on a grand scale, bones and blood practically dripping from the screen. What an introduction, huh?

This was followed by Monday's Forum with Sue Morton from Refugees International. She gave a plea for the refugees and proposed how we in our own way could help through fasting to raise money for a documentary. This documentary concerning Cambodian refugees, will be used to try to persuade the US government not to deport thousands of refugees back to their homelands, where they would surely die. Approximately 300 students gave up one or more meals to help the cause.

On Wednesday, Joe Gaffney-Brown, parish priest of St. Ann's Cathedral discussed his experience with the Sanctuary Movement of El Salvadoran refugees. He stressed that helping others should be motivated by love, not by guilt.

The "week" reached its climax with the Forum of George and Prissy Thrash and little Linn Yann. Through an emotional presentation, Yann brought the vestige of hope that good may come of such a horrible situation.

"Refugee" is such a nebulous term, and if nothing else, this past week has shown us just how vast it is. Hopefully last week has broken down some old stereotypes, and replaced them with true empathy. At the most basic level, these are human beings. People who had families, jobs, countries and hope. Often, the only thing they now have is fear. But we can help. No, we must help if we consider ourselves as brothers in the human race. Sponsorship is not the only way to help. We should help in the ways we can; be it giving up a meal or a simple prayer. We cannot expect to toss mountains into the sea, but if we all push a little it just might move.

"The Killing Fields" showed us the brutal reality of many a refugee's life; Morton told us how we can help in our little way; Gaffney-Brown said that we shouldn't act out of guilt for all that we have, but rather by Christ's mandate of loving our neighbors; and Yann put a face on the "faceless" refugee. Any of these small pictures, by itself, can be misleading and a bit frustrating; but together, that's the big picture.

Scriptures authored by God

by Terry Malsam
of The Whitworthian

The Church teaches that the Bible is the very breath of God. In other words, he breathed out the words. But in order for us to have a proper understanding concerning the inspiration of the Bible, we must first define inspiration.

Here's a simple definition: "All Scripture is God breathed." Accepting that by faith, you begin to understand that the whole of Scripture is authored by God, through human instruments, by the power of Christ and his Spirit. But if you choose not to believe in the message of Scripture, then you are on your own, whereas others accept the message by faith and leave it up to God, thus no longer on their own. All people must remember that the authoritative teaching in Scripture is holy and good, regardless of their view.

The Bible is presenting a message. And that message is the good news about salvation. So its content focuses on that message alone. And as it presents itself by human authors, we are given proper advice concerning this salvation. These writers continually speak of a righteousness of God that can be only understood by those who's faith is in the Revealer, who is Christ.

Now if there is any teaching that presents itself against the holiness of Scripture, it is to be put under submission or rejection by the most Holy Church of God. Likewise all teaching concerning God is to be measured against Scripture with all submission. Those who follow after other doctrines contrary to Scripture, must be labeled as heretics and not allowed to teach in any parish.

When people ask the question, "Is the Bible holy or good?" The Church teaches, "Yes it is!" The problem is that humans divided concerning its reliability or accuracy. And the end result of some people's understanding is that they become insecure, confused and without conviction. What I am trying to say is that those who put their trust in their own ideas about the Bible, ultimately lose sight of the message in the Bible. Jesus warned the Pharisees about this... "You diligently study the Scriptures because you think that by them you possess eternal life. These are the Scriptures that testify about me, yet you refuse to come to me to have life." In other words, the Bible is a message about Christ.

The approach men ought to take when seeking to know the holiness of Scripture is this: It is not your dogma about the Bible, but whether or not you submit to the teacher who inspired the Bible.

God's word unquestionable

by Scott Bean
of The Whitworthian

"In the past God spoke to our forefathers through the prophets at many times and in various ways, but in these last days he has spoken to us by his Son, whom he appointed heir of all things and through whom he made the universe." (Hebrews 1:1-3).

That God has spoken no one can deny; but, have we heard him right, or, have we heard only what we wanted to hear? Or, have we heard what our culture has conditioned us to hear?

If we assume that God spoke, we must also assume that he would speak to this very important subject. Therefore, what God said about the inerrancy of his own word(s) must be our real question.

To begin with, Scripture assures us that God is wholly unknowable to man. That is, if God had not spoken of (revealed) himself to man, we would not know anything about him. We cannot, as Scripture said, by the process of our own reasoning, know God (Ephesians 3:5).

Scripture further tells us that the truths spoken of God through the mouths of the prophets and apostles were beyond their own thinking and knowledge. (1 Peter 1:10-12). The prophets and apostles were in fact, "...carried along by the Holy Spirit." (2 Peter 1:21).

Beyond this, even more astounding, the Scripture tells us (Heb. 2:7; 10:15-16; Acts 28:25; 2 Sam. 23:2), that the Holy Spirit spoke through the prophet and apostles in such a way that not only were the thoughts given by the Holy Spirit, but also the very words themselves. (1 Cor. 2:13). What the prophets and apostles spoke was the Word of God. (Mark 7:13; 2 Sam. 23:2; 1 Thess. 2:13).

If, as Scripture indicates, the words they spoke were his words, does it not stand to reason that they would be true whether spoken or written?

In other words, if God had such control over the words spoken by the prophets and apostles, that the words were his own, would he not easily have control over the written words as well? If he had ab-

...as they do with other scriptures." (2 Peter 3:15-16). So it would appear that Paul's letters were put on the same level as the Old Testament.

In addition, Paul tells Timothy that, "...all Scripture is inspired by God and is useful for teaching, rebuking, correcting and in training in righteousness," (2 Tim. 3:16).

All of Scripture then, tells us that it is God himself who is solely responsible for what is contained in it.

The Bible is the inerrant Word of God — in so far as we translate it correctly from the original language it was written in.

To deny the inerrancy of Scripture which in past centuries was called heresy, is to deny the supreme power of God and to invalidate all of Scripture. For if we, as mere men, cannot know God by our own reason and, if parts of the Bible are wrong, how do we know which parts are wrong or which parts are right? How do we know that the whole thing is not completely wrong?

Where man and the Bible differ; it is due to either a mistranslation which is not all that likely, or man, with his limited incorrect knowledge, which is more likely.

God, speaking to Job asked, "Would you discredit my justice? Would you condemn me to justify yourself?" (Job 40:8).

And God, speaking through the prophet Isaiah asked whether the clay has a right to question and complain to the potter. (Isa. 45:9)

"To deny the inerrancy of Scripture is to deny the supreme power of God and to invalidate all of Scripture."

solite control over one, could he not have it over the other too?

Jesus said he did! In his earthly ministry Jesus gave authority to all that was written in the Old Testament. He said he had not come to abolish the Law of the Prophets, but to fulfill them. (Matt. 5:18). He also said that scripture could not be broken (it is always true). (John 10:35).

It is clear that the apostle Paul and the other apostles believed this.

Without hesitation they were constantly quoting the Old Testament. In addition, Peter tells us that Paul's words

Handicapped group forming on campus

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

Something new is in the works at the Student Life Center. Dave McKenzie, a commuter student and Gail Berg, Career/Life Advisor are in the process of putting together a support group for the handicapped students here at Whitworth.

The group will not only benefit the physically handicapped but also the vision, hearing and learning impaired.

There are 25-28 known handicapped students at Whitworth. McKenzie is one of those students. He was diagnosed as having multiple sclerosis about five years ago.

He attended Spokane Falls Community College and then transferred to Whitworth this year as a junior, majoring in educational psychology.

McKenzie noticed that there could be some improvements with the facilities on campus, but the biggest improvement that can be made is in the awareness and understanding of the handicapped students according to McKenzie.

"Handicapped people, or 'handicapable people,' are different than you and me," said McKenzie. "Many of them don't want you to find out that they are 'handicapable.' We must respect that."

That's where the support group will come in. It will be a support group which will have "good positive input by it's members and not a 'woe is me' kind of atmosphere," said McKenzie.

Berg is the Career/Life advisor but also helps out the students that have special needs in the classroom.

"My part is that of a representative. For instance, if a student has problems hearing a professor because of a hearing impairment and can not speak to the professor about it, he or she can come see me and I can contact the professors to explain the situation," said Berg. "The professors here at Whitworth are very understanding and try to help out where they can."

Berg stressed that this group is open to all handicapped and impaired students. They are thinking about meeting once a month. Right now the goals are to educate fellow students about the handicapped and their needs. They also would like to try to improve the handicapped facilities on campus.

Bank aimed toward students

by Khris Vogel
of The Whitworthian

Perceiving a large market segment that had yet to be reached in the Spokane area, the Student Bank of Spokane was created last spring.

The Student Bank, came into being as a group, led by Bank of Spokane President John Ritchie, who saw the need for students "to have a separate place to do their banking, and not be intimidated by a large institution," said Student Bank Coordinator C. Daron Howard.

Beyond just expanding its business, the Bank of Spokane hopes to use the Student Bank to teach college and high school students about bank management and operations. The Student Bank has its own Board of Directors, as well as its own credit and marketing committees, all comprised of area students.

"With students directly involved in the management of the bank," said Howard, "we see a good opportunity to further the learning process."

Besides having students involved in day to day operations, the bank's sole customer is the student. "When we set up the bank, we kept the student in mind in our philosophy," said Howard. "For students, many of our fees are lower than they would be able to find elsewhere in the area.

"Most eighteen or twenty-year-olds have little or no credit rating, so it is often difficult for this age group to obtain loans. We're designed to

3 freshmen bid for ASWC senate

All three Senate candidates were asked to address the following question: What unique qualifications and characteristics do you possess that make you the most able candidate to represent the Freshmen class in the ASWC Senate?

Why do I believe I am the most capable candidate for representing the Freshman class in ASWC Senate? For several reasons; I believe that I am levelheaded and have developed good listening skills, I feel that I am dedicated and motivated, and finally, that I am honest and responsible.

When I was a senior in high school, I was a student counselor. Part of my training was to develop good listening skills and to learn objectivity. When confronted with an issue, I believe I can look at both sides of the story and in so doing, make the best possible decision for the long run.

If I am elected Senator, I will place the Freshman class first on my list of things to do. I see the Senate as a big responsibility and am happy to go that extra mile. I will pursue the tasks set before me. I will not be a "do nothing" senator.

If elected, I will do my very best for the Freshman class. Since I would be representing you, I will need your input. I do not hope to do the job alone so I will be looking for that input, but at the same time, I am willing to take responsibility for my actions. I also feel that honesty is very important and I am not afraid to be blunt in dealing with people and issues.

Finally, and most importantly, I feel that I am a good choice because I want to work. I see the Senate as a way to get involved with and to work for the Freshman class. If elected, I will give 100 percent.

Keith Blodgett

I believe that I am the most able candidate to represent the Freshman class in the ASWC Senate this year. I come to this conclusion by looking at my political experience and my personal characteristics.

My range of political experience is very broad. At West Seattle High School I was Student Body President and, while working with a full schedule, was judged to have done an admirable job by my principal, teachers, peers and community, resulting in several awards, including one presented to me by the Mayor of Seattle, Charles Royer. I actively worked in the 1984 statewide election for Phil Talmadge who was running for the position of Attorney General. I attended Boy's State as a junior in high school and became very interested, as well as involved, in politics. Through all of these experiences, I have learned the ins and outs and rights and wrongs of government. I am thoroughly familiar with the functions and limitations of a student government. Thus, I tend to focus on what I can do instead of what I will do.

My personal characteristics have been developed through my experience in politics. I am very organized and when in a government position, I always work diligently to get the job done right and done on time. I'm open to ideas and suggestions, and I go out of my way to please those who I am serving. I am committed to serving Whitworth College, especially the Freshman class. As far as I'm concerned, we're pretty impressive and I'm confident that we can have a positive impact on Whitworth College. Many issues that will affect freshmen are on the table now, especially Student Life's 24-hour visitation. I believe that you can trust me to represent you and your best interests, and because of that I suggest one of your votes goes to your Freshman Senator, Kurt Helmcke.

Kurt Helmcke

Remember those few years we all went through that were kind of awkward and really disappointing? Well, those had to have been my junior high days. I was always the "Gomer" of the class, trying to be something I wasn't, and often tripping and falling on my face along the way.

That's when my drive for achievement began. I saw people around me who I admired. I hated being a follower. In sixth grade, I ran for office and was devastated when I lost. I picked myself up and tried again and again — but I still lost. I reasoned it out in my mind and came to the conclusion that I didn't have the "student leader" type qualities. I wasn't outgoing. I didn't know too many people, and I didn't have any idea of what they did in those meetings or what it even meant to be a leader. But I was very determined.

The next year as a freshman, I got involved with as many things as I could. I was an Associated Student Body (ASB) room representative and chaired the homecoming float committee. I created enthusiasm in the class and school. I got people involved who never would have in other circumstances. I listened to the other students' ideas and concerns and became their voice in the government. I was willing to work harder than anybody for improvement and special events. I put my mind to it and became that leader I wanted to be. I finally did get elected my sophomore and junior years to a class office and my senior year I was elected ASB secretary.

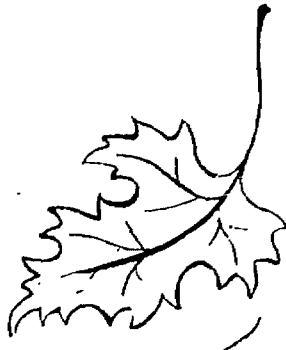

Now that you've heard my story, determine for yourself whether I possess the qualifications and characteristics needed to be your leader. I know I do. I won't let you down.

Stress help is here

by Jennifer Seyler
of The Whitworthian

Arrgh! The everyday pressures of life in the academic world have built up and it seems like there is no one to turn to.

But there is! Devon Greyerbiehl, Whitworth's new psychologist, is able and willing to help.

"It's a choice to live as opposed to going under," said Greyerbiehl of the students who come to her for help.

It takes a lot of courage to risk showing yourself and your "baddies," she said.

Originally from Seattle, Greyerbiehl now resides in Spokane with her husband, a CPA, and her two teenage sons. A private practice in Spokane at Marymount and a position with Lutheran Social Services occupies her time away from her office at Whitworth's Health Center.

Greyerbiehl completed a Master degree in Applied Behavioral Science at Whitworth after getting a Bachelor degree in social psychology from Central Washington University. Of returning to Whitworth, she commented, "I like this campus. It feels like coming home to me."

Greyerbiehl expects to deal with a wide spectrum of issues this year. "I think I'm going to see everything here," she said. She added that struggles with upbringing and sexual identity issues are among the topics frequently brought up by students.

"Who am I really?" is a question many of her counselees find themselves asking.

"That is the struggle the young people are in right now," said Greyerbiehl. "This is great stuff. I love working with this age group and their life struggles."

With a fairly confrontive and straight-forward counseling style, she doesn't play games. Greyerbiehl asks, "Why are you doing that?" "People expect for me to point out the destructive things, not give them band-aids," she said, "and in the process they come out the other end OK."

Women's spirituality has recently become a main focus in Greyerbiehl's life and she spends a lot of time studying the issue closely.

"I believe in supporting women in being all they can be," said Greyerbiehl. "I'm doing a lot of growing in this area and plan on doing a lot of sharing."

Greyerbiehl plans on seeing a lot of students as well as conducting several workshops this year. Communication skills, self-esteem, journal writing, stress and conflict management, human sexuality and women's spirituality will be primary topics of the workshops. She is confident of her ability to lead them and commented, "I feel real comfortable discussing these issues."

Watching students grow and overcome the destructive things in their lives give Greyerbiehl great satisfaction. "I feel privileged to be a part of that — it's a lot like the miracle of birth."

Even though she's only been at Whitworth a short time, Greyerbiehl has already made a favorable impression on her colleagues. "She's a very nice lady," said Tracy Riddle, Resident Director of Arend Hall. "I think she's going to contribute wonderful things to the Whitworth community."

Proposed program combines fitness, nutrition and health

by Jim McGee
of The Whitworthian

"Whitworth College is going to reunite that which American culture has separated...the spirit, mind and body," said Aquatic Center Director Jon Buzzard in reference to PINE, a recently proposed program.

PINE, an acronym for Program In Fitness & Exercise, is a unique combined effort of the recently consolidated Health Education, Physical Education and Recreation departments, and the autonomous Nutrition, Athletics, Aquatics, SAGA and Health Center departments.

Buzzard explained that PINE, which was approved for further study by Academic Vice President Darrell Guder last spring, is an "attempt to combine the traditionally separate areas of health education, nutrition and physical education together in one place in order for people to have easy access to it."

PINE Director Beth Mastel-Smith said that at the heart of PINE, programs will be formulated that are an extension of the fitness and nutrition curriculum present in Whitworth's Physical Education classes. The programs, she explained, are offered to the community-at-large through organized activity programs.

Mastel-Smith explained that the programs proposed under PINE will integrate a health education curriculum with Masters Swimming, water aerobics, learning how to swim, Masters Running and race walking.

"Later program additions will include a children's day camp and further availability of Whitworth facilities to the public on a fee for service and space available basis," she said.

The program directors and staff, who will implement the athletic and educational programs, will consist of campus, as well as outside people having experience or expertise in a particular athletic or professional field.

According to the proposal, experts will come from various fields such as athletics, nutrition, health, exercise physiology and medicine, and will be called upon in order to assist in the formulation of varying health, nutrition and exercise curricula for the different programs under PINE.

"We are trying to get expert Whitworth people to run these programs," stated Mastel-Smith.

Kay DeRoos, Assistant Professor of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, stated, "I think it is a neat approach, we have the facilities and experts. I think PINE is an excellent way to integrate physical exercise and nutri-

Urie choreographs "Damn Yankees"

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

Male ballet dancers are rare at Whitworth. But they stand out in a crowd.

Many of you have seen Ken Urie dance.

Now, he is broadening his horizons.

Ken Urie, a senior Psychology major, is the sole choreographer for the musical production of "Damn Yankees," which will be performed Homecoming weekend, Oct. 24-26.

"This is an incredible opportunity for me," said Urie. "I'm excited about the play."

Urie has danced in several productions over the past four years. Most recently, he portrayed Franz in the Copellia Ballet production last spring.

His major background in choreography is the modern jazz dance routine performed by the group "Color Blind" at Mac Hall in Concert last year.

"We were impressed with Ken's dance at Mac Hall, and wanted to talk with him," said Rick Horner, director of the play.

This is the first time that Whitworth can boast a student choreographer, because in the past a professional from the Spokane area has been hired.

"I'm committed to education," stated Horner. "I'm willing to go out on a limb to hire a student."

So far, it's working. Many people think that movements are included in the script, but they are not.

"We have to create movement," shrugged Horner. "Ken and I have to agree on the concept of movement. There are no problems with agreement."

On the stage, he said, each step must lead into the next and this requires a lot of work.

"With Rick, I'm not under a lot of pressure, I'm comfortable in rehearsals," laughed Sophomore Kara Colyar. "Sometimes Ken makes me nervous because he's a perfectionist. That makes me work harder."

What kind of work does Ken have to do for this type of production?

He said that he first listens to the music, visualizes the choreography in his head, and dances the routine himself. Then, he takes this to the rehearsal, teaches it to the dancers, and finally, polishes the entire routine.

"It takes a lot of time," said Urie. "But I really enjoy the time."

Freshman Todd Bloomquist shares these sentiments.

"It's real exciting that I got to be in it," he said. "I don't have any background in dance, but I love it."

Ken Urie, choreographer of "Damn Yankees," demonstrates his dancing talent in "Bonnie and Clyde."

Although there is another three weeks until the curtain rises, there is a lot of pressure. The cast, or parts of it, are rehearsing afternoons, evenings and Saturdays.

"I think the ballplayers and the character Applegate are working the hardest, because they are in almost every scene," admitted Horner.

"I think it has a long way to go, but as a whole there is a lot of talent," expressed Colyar. "It's going to come together."

"There is an electricity with this show that I have never experienced before," Horner added.

And there is a real unity on the stage.

"All the guys get along really well," stated Bloomquist.

"We're all giving 100 percent."

Colyar also noted the closeness.

"We're all becoming good friends, which will help us in the performance," she said.

Urie hopes that he can use this production as a springboard in the future.

"It's a way of getting experience without having had any experience," he remarked.

Over the past years, Horner noted that Urie has established himself as a responsible student, and not just in dancing.

"There is no one professionally who could have done a better job with this play," said Horner. "Ken is an incredibly fine person to work with."

'Crocodile Dundee' receives high rating

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

Good friends and companions can turn the worst movie into a good time. For instance, my best friend and I went to opening night of "Howard the Duck" this past summer and I loved the film. It wasn't until a few days later, after reading several bad reviews and thinking about the movie itself that I realized the film wasn't really as good as I had believed. Don't get me wrong, I'm not advocating the sacrifice of your own opinion if everyone else disagrees with you. I still like "Howard the Duck," but I liked it better because my friend, Jay, was there to make comments to, joke around with, watch people with, and share a friendship with. Movies can be more than visual entertainment.

This week's new film is just that, visual entertainment and something more. Directed by Peter Falman and playing at Lyons Avenue Cinemas, "Crocodile Dundee," written by and starring Paul Hogan, is a comedy-adventure-love story with just a hint of documentary. It's a piece of quality film from down under.

It is the story of Michael J. (Mick) "Crocodile" Dundee (whew, catch my breath), the real man behind a living legend. The fact that he lives in the Australian outback and was raised by aborigines adds a wonderful naivete to his character.

Discovered by "Newsday" reporter Sue Charlton (enjoyably played by newcomer Linda Kozlowski), Dundee has a chance to show her his Australia; wide-open spaces, jungles, water buffalo, kangaroos, poachers, aborigine bushmen and, of course, snakes and crocodiles. Anxious to prove worthy of legend and newspaper coverage, Dundee is comically phoney, yet the true stuff of which heroes are made shines through the contrived exterior. And when Charlton invites him to New York, his first city experience, we get to share in the fun of seeing two people from different cultures learn about and fall in love with each other.

Dundee's culture-shock in New York is an understatement here. Charlton has a boyfriend (Mark Blum), menus are in Italian, and 'nice ladies' have pimps that won't let the court the old-fashioned way. And worse, not all people in dresses and makeup are ladies. At a very social party Dundee is exposed to cocaine. When he asks what it's used for he is told "...to get a buzz," to which Dundee replies, "You mean like sticking a blowfly up your nose?"

Backed by Peter Best's original soundtrack and some great cinematography, "Crocodile Dundee" is a fun flick.

It hasn't fit anywhere else, but I really want to include Mick Dundee's 'destined to be a classic' line (it must be said in heavy Aussie accent), "Me and God; we be mates."

Grab a friend and have a good time. There's no discount showings for this one, but it's worth even $4.50.

Bucs hold off Vikings win first game, 31-27

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

The stands were packed. The weather was perfect. The Western Washington Vikings were undefeated. The Pirates responded to each aspect and provided an exciting game for the 1,173 fans, winning 31-27.

Times are changing. After two frustrating losses the Pirates put together the most complete four quarters of the season. The Pirates were passing, running and tackling with a consistency that had been absent in previous games. The rejuvenated combination resulted in the Vikings first loss and the Pirates first win.

After a defensively superb first half and a 15-6 advantage, the Pirates had to hold off a Viking 21-point second half. With only a few minutes left in the fourth quarter the Pirates had driven inside the 10-yard line of the Vikings. Leading 31-21 and seemingly about to ice the score Pirate quarterback Blaine Bennett was intercepted at the goal line. It was returned 49 yards and the Vikings found a breath of new life. With 21 seconds remaining in the game Viking quarterback Kriskovich threw a 2-yard TD pass to close the score to 31-27. The ensuing on-side kick was recovered by Wayne Ralph preserving the Pirate victory.

The Pirate defense looked unmoveable the first 35 minutes of the game. The defense in the first half held Western to 35 yards rushing, 62 yards passing, and no points. The only first half Viking score came on the second play of the game. Bennett's second pass was picked off by cornerback Jeff Gulliford. He ran it back 39 yards to give Western a 6-0 lead 23 seconds into the game.

The Pirates came back to answer the Viking score. Eddie Davis scored on a 1-yard run with 4:22 left in the first quarter. Two minutes later Bennett hit Gary Dawson on a 69-yard pass for another touchdown.

The second half was a little more wide open. Rolling up 270 first half yards was just a start for the Pirates. The Vikings got a little warmed following intermission also.

The Vikings, after 97 first half yards, gained 220 yards in the second half and put 21 points on the board. The Pirates added 346 yards to their first half 270 total to finish the game with 616 yards of offense. The big play continually greeted the Pirates in needed situations. Dan Pilcher scored with 33 seconds remaining in the third quarter on a 46-yard run. For the day Pilcher managed to reach a foreign Pirate plateau by gaining over 100 yards. Picher carried the ball 13 times and gained 113 yards. Eddie Davis gained nine yards on three carries and scored one touchdown. Three other Pirate rushers carried 12 times and lost 11 yards.

At the end of the day Whitworth had gained 111 net yards on 28 carries. Not bad for a team that averaged less than 30 yards rushing a game last year.

The big numbers once again came in the air. Three Pirate quarterbacks combined for 505 yards on 32 of 64 passing. Bennett led the way with 403 yards on 29 of 57 passing with two touchdowns and two interceptions. Rick Bolen was 2 of 6 for 32 yards and Todd White, on a halfback option, threw a 70-yard pass to Terry Freiter.

The Pirate attack ended the day with 616 yards of offense.

The defense gave a little in the second half but came away with the most impressive outing as a team. The Viking quarterback was sacked three times and intercepted twice. Mike Valente, Dean Bitz and Dave Campbell each had a sack. Valente also recovered a fumble. Tom Shanholtzer and Sean Alcántera each came up with interceptions. Campbell also batted down two passes and had three tackles for losses.

The next two Pirate football games are on the road. Whitworth travels to Western Oregon next weekend and to Simon Fraser the following week. The next home game will be homecoming, Oct. 25, against Lewis and Clark.

V-Ball has 9-2 week

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

The women's volleyball squad faced two opponents on their home turf this week. Not showing much hospitality to their guests, Whitworth humiliated first Central Washington University and then Lewis-Clark State.

Monday was anything but manic for the Lady Bucs as they took on the Central Washington Wildcats. Whitworth played nearly flawless volleyball against CWU and crushed them in three games 15-13, 15-6, 15-5. The Pirate defense performed, enabling the offense to run smoothly. As Coach Pat Shelton summed it up, "Everything was working right."

The victory was a combination of teamwork on Whitworth's part and a lack of it on L-C's. A frustrated Denise Lytle, L-C's head coach agreed, "Our season has definitely been going downhill since the (Whitworth Invitational) tournament."

But L-C's Junior Julie Moberg, who was named to the All-Tournament team at the Whitworth Invitational, kept the match interesting.

The first game saw both teams commit numerous errors, but Whitworth came out on top 15-13.

By the second game the Pirates turned around. Senior Colleen Schlonga and Julie Cordes teamed up to harass Lewis-Clark and Whitworth quickly jumped to a 13-3 lead. L-C attempted a comeback but were eventually finished off 15-8.

Whitworth again took early control of the third game. Lytle saw her team losing their "mental intensity" and called a time-out with her team down 10-2.

A more determined L-C came onto the court and got back into the game. A flustered Whitworth became plagued with troubles and resorted to a change of offense. That factor combined with several impressive saves by Cordes prevented a L-C upset and the Bucs triumphed again, 15-11.

Debbie Burkhart had 13 digs for the match, Erin Mackay 15 assists, Cordes 10 blocks, and Schlonga eight kills.

Schlonga pointed out, "Everyone contributed."

The volleyball team spent the weekend at the University of Puget Sound Tournament where they placed a very respectable third out of twelve teams.

Coach Shelton praised her team's performance but admitted, "We did it the hard way." After losing their first game on Saturday morning to Seattle Pacific, the Lady Bucs were forced to play six consecutive matches for the rest of the day in order to place third.

"We did better than anyone expected," Shelton said, "The other teams were amazed at our endurance."

A great example of that endurance during their volleyball marathon was when Whitworth faced Carroll College Saturday afternoon. Always a tough opponent, Carroll got ahead of Whitworth 11-3, but the Pirates fought tooth and nail to capture the victory.

During the last match of the day, the Lady Bucs came out looking strong and trampled Lewis and Clark College of Portland in the first game, 15-6. But by the second game, "exhaustion overwhelmed us," as Shelton put it, and Whitworth fell to the tigers.

Eight teams battle for football championship

by Jeff Gardner
of The Whitworthian

Intramural flag football started its first week of action with four men's games Sunday.

In the opener, Baldwin I forfeited to the Carlson Duckmen because they did not have the nine players necessary to play an official game.

Game two however, pitted the Carlson Birddogs against a fired up Baldwin II team. The first half ended in a 0-0 tie as both defenses played well. Tom Gerken had two interceptions for Carlson. In the second half Carlson came out throwing as Steve Flegel found Daryl Dixon wide open down the left sideline for six points. Flegel converted the extra point on a sweep right, and Carlson led 7-0. Then with five minutes remaining Mark Kim jaunted nine yards around the left end and Carlson stretched its lead to 13-0. Kim then darted around the right end for the one point conversion to cap the 14-0 victory for the Birddogs. Flegel noted that, "It was simply us correcting our first half penalties and mistakes that made the difference."

The 3 p.m. game saw Warren Zoo thump Mac Hall 25-6. Bob Dobbs caught one pass for a score and threw for another to lead the Warrens. Marty Miller also put the Zoo's on the board as he intercepted a Mac pass and rambled thirty-five yards for a touchdown.

In the finale, the Off-Campus Mexicans posted its first win of the year by shutting out Stewart 19-0. Mexican's QB, Brad Larkin's fine scrambling avoided the heavy Stewart rush all day. He connected with a variety of his receivers. Scott Wetzel and Jeff Gardner scored for Off-Campus.

Intramural Coordinator Pete Jones, said the first week went well with beautiful weather and excellent competition. Next week women's play begins along with week two for the men. Those interested in intramural volleyball may note that games begin Oct. 21.

Pirates win 2, tie 1 in wild week of soccer

by John Kessel
of The Whitworthian

The Bucs soccer team fired up early in the week with a decisive victory Wednesday over the Gonzaga Bulldogs.

The Gonzaga game was rough. The Bulldogs seemed frustrated on the field. The score for the first half was Whitworth 1, Gonzaga 0, while in the second half the Bulldogs scored once and the Bucs put in two more goals.

Tempers started to flare and on one run a Whitworth attacker was brought to the ground. A few minutes later, during a slide tackle, Randy Hartman was kicked in the back by a Bulldog. He returned fire, and the game was stopped. The Bulldog who was involved was given a red card for unsportsmanlike conduct, as was Hartman. In college play, a red card means ejection from the game being played and from the next game as well. Both teams were glad to hear the final whistle of the match. Whitworth College won with a score of 3-1.

This weekend, Whitworth played two games at home: the first against Western Washington University, with the final score 3-3. The second was against Seattle University with Whitworth winning 4-2.

In the game on Saturday against WWU, Whitworth had only a few shots on goal compared to WWU's many. Continuous efforts and a double penalty kick were the two factors that helped Whitworth to tie the game. WWU has a strong, quick game. They took advantage of the fouls and mistakes that were made during the game. The score was 3-2 in favor of Western at 89 minutes when they made a foul inside the penalty area. This foul resulted in a free kick at the goal from 12 yards out. Mark Eilers took the kick and their goalie saved the shot.

This would have been the end of the game, but the goal keeper moved before the shot was made, so the shot was called back. Andy Borrevik took the shot this time, and he scored. This tied the game at 3-3 with 31 seconds left. The ball was batted around by both teams and, since there is no overtime play in the NAIA rules, the match was a tie.

In Sunday's game against Seattle University, Whitworth dominated the field with many shots and with much effort. Both of Seattle U's goals came from penalty kicks in the second half. Scott Downs was all over the SU goal with half a dozen shots and the first goal of the game. Joel Hunter, who played well in both this weekend's games, scored in the second half. Mark Eilers was playing up to his past levels, with two goals. The second, 87 minutes into play, was a long throw-in from just above the corner flag. Somehow the goalie let the ball slip past him as he stepped forward to catch the ball. The ball bounced into the net, while both teams stood around looking at each other and the referee, who called it a fair score. The Bucs showed good hustle on the field.

Men 11th, women 10th in Willamette Invitational

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

With running conditions near perfect, the men's and women's cross country teams made a pilgrimage to Salem, Ore. this weekend, to compete with over 25 teams at Willamette University Invitational. Whitworth was matched against such giants as Oregon State University and University of Oregon, and pups such as Linfield and Willamette. "There was some good competition there this weekend, and it was good for both teams," said Hal Werner, the coach of both the men's and women's teams.

The men went into the weekends competition without Scott Hink, who was running number one for them before his injury at the beginning of the year. "Scott isn't completely healed from his injury yet, but when he's back he will definitely round out the men's team at the top," commented Werner. Alan Bracken lit up the trails for the men, being the number one finisher for Whitworth, and 45th overall. His time was 25:46 for the 8K race; his lowest personal record this year. "Alan gave a real strong effort this weekend, and he's getting stronger every meet," said

Werner. Rod Holman was the second for the Pirates, with a time of 25:53. The other Pirate finishers were: Jeff Mullaney-26:04, Peat Sutherland-26:32, Guy Duryee-27:37, and Mike Lawrence-27:38. The Pirates placed 11th in the field of 27 teams.

On the women's side of the meet, Kelli Burch once again came in as the number one finisher for Whitworth. Burch finished with a time of 18:40 for the 5K course, and placed 25th in the field of over 150 participants. "I was real pleased with Kelli's performance this weekend. She couldn't run her best because she was being cautious of a hamstring pull she suffered last week," said Coach Werner. Jan Aubry came in as the second Lady Buc finisher, with a time of 19:16 and an overall showing of 56th. Mary Adams was the next women's finisher for Whitworth. She placed 74th with a time of 19:59. Werner said, "She (Mary) has added a new dimension to the team by bridging the gap in the middle runners." The rest of the Lady Buc finishers were Melissa Johnson-20:16, Lynnae Stevens-21:35, and Laura Parker-21:58, who helped lead the women to a 10th place finishing.

Werner was pleased with both the men's and the women's results. "It's always tough to go on the road, both of the teams performed well this weekend, and I was pleased," said Werner. Next week the Pirates stay in Spokane and compete in the Eastern Washington University Invitational at the Finch Arboretum.

Diana Marks, chair of the recently combined Physical Education, Health Education and Recreation departments summed up her view of PINE. “It’s just got possibilities everywhere...It’s a great thing and I’m committed to seeing it go through,” she said.

The vision of Whitworth providing leadership in and for the community through exercise, health and nutrition education on a fee-for-use basis may soon become a viable reality through PINE, said Mastel-Smith.

But she added that before full implementation of current goals can be accomplished, PINE will have a three to five year development period.

Although PINE has not received final approval for implementation, Guder stated that he has “given them the freedom to explore and formulate. We are fundamentally open to what could happen. I’m very excited about it.”

take care of these people. We look at employment records, grade point averages, among other things.

At the present time, the Student Bank has no policy as to making only certain types of loans. “We’ll loan for class rings, cars, stereos and even a new set of wheels for a car, anything our Credit Committee will give approval for,” said Howard.

Another goal behind the creation of the Student Bank is to reward its depositors through scholarships. “Seventy-five percent of all profits generated by the Student Bank are devoted to scholarships for any school of the student’s choice,” said Howard. The only criteria for the scholarship being is that the recipient be a Student Bank depositor.

Howard hopes to have Whitworth students represented in the bank’s management “immediately.”

85-86 Natsihi cancelled ASWC loses $3,200

Whitworth yearbooks like these have been published for many years — but the 1985-86 addition will not be printed.

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

The ASWC recently reported that the 1985-86 yearbook was on its way. Now, there is no longer a delay — it's not going to be published.

Whitworth's 1985-86 yearbook, Natsihi, was being compiled and edited by Angela Harvey, a freshman last year, and her associates. There were many delays which plagued her. She decided to terminate her position on the 1985-86 yearbook staff when the school year came to a close, according to Glenn Smith, Director of Student Activities.

Harvey has not returned to Whitworth this year.

Smith found out about the uncompleted yearbook when the Taylor Publishing Company, Whitworth's contractor, informed him that none of the material had been turned in.

In mid-July, Trey Malicoat, ASWC Financial Vice President, and Smith took over the yearbook and turned in a completed copy to Taylor Publishing. Smith said that the project was considered to be of poor quality by the publisher and that it would not be worth printing.

"This is not going to happen again," said Smith. "This year's editor is way ahead and there are people in the yearbook class who have been editors of their high school yearbooks."

"With the stuff we had, this book would have been subpar."

Under the Taylor Publishing contract, Whitworth was to pay $10,000 for the yearbook. Regardless of whether it was published or not Whitworth was bound by contract to pay $5,000.

Taylor Publishing chose to return all but $1,700 regardless of the contract. The decision was made by the company citing that Whitworth has been a good customer, according to Smith.

The $1,700 retained by the Taylor Publishing reflected money spent on pages which had already been printed.

In addition to the $1,700, the ASWC has paid Harvey about $1,500 for her uncompleted project.

The loss on the 1985-86 Natsihi totals $3,200.

Some students around Whitworth offered their responses to the yearbook situation.

New bill cuts back GSLs

by Barry Elkin
of The Whitworthian

The United States Senate is expected to pass a bill this week that would ultimately cut back on the number of students eligible for Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs) starting this year.

According to Bill Rusk, Director of Financial Aid, the Higher Education Reauthorization Bill would take $100 million from student financial aid and use it to expand the nation's anti-drug program.

"The bill includes hiring more drug enforcement officers to help go after the drug peddlers," said Rusk.

As a result of the bill, requirements for GSLs will go up and it will become harder for people with assets and non-taxable incomes such as preachers, farmers or homeowners to obtain them.

"The worst cases will come from kids who live on farms around here that are worth about $1 million yet they only make $10,000 annually," said Rusk. "I've always fought against using assets to keep students out — that is exactly what the bill is doing."

The bill also adds another requirement for becoming an independent student. Students will have to live independent from their parents for three years instead of the two years it is now.

"For those students who want to be independent for the 1987-88 school year they'll have to say they lived with their parents way back in-between 1985-86," said Rusk.

To combat the problem of students not obtaining GSLs, Rusk said that he would freeze scholarship money that Whitworth allocates and would give that money to students who normally would have received the GSLs.

"I think we could still distribute it around and come to where we are now," said Rusk. "We could help about 30-40 students with up to $2,500 apiece."

In addition to the obvious problems the new law will create, Rusk said that it has put a tremendous amount of work on the Financial Aid Department. Currently the department is working on verifying loans before a certain date, a job which has started in February and is still not finished.

Even though Whitworth is having its own problems caused by the bill, Rusk suggested that it will be the 4-year public institutions that will be affected the most.

"Big public institutions make it hard already for a student to get a GSL and now this will cut their student loan program in half," said Rusk. "I can't believe that Washington D.C. isn't being overwhelmed by phone calls from these big institutions. This is really going to show the amount of influence public institutions have in this country."

The bill began in a conference committee between the House and the Senate in an effort to help curb the drug problem in America. Rusk doesn't agree with the reasoning.

"I think what it really is is a re-election scam," said Rusk. "These congressmen come back from their big dinners with three martinees in them and start saying that they need to do something about the drugs in America—more damage has been done to youths in America from alcohol than drug abuse."

"Also why do we need more drug officers? Why don't we use the military to clean up the drug problem, after all they're on the payroll?"

Rusk added that the bill had easily passed the U.S. House of Representatives and most people expect it to pass the Senate just as easily. The president is expected to pass it with no problems.

Many people who attend Whitworth have studied the Ten Commandments, but it seems some have overlooked the eighth — Thou shalt not steal.

So far this school year, Whitworth has waved goodbye to several hundred dollars worth of property, ranging from new chairs for the commuter student's lounge to albums from the campus radio station, KWRS.

Theft isn't new to the Whitworth campus. Just last year a $2,500 change machine was stolen from the HUB gameroom.

Mattresses, which are the number one targets for thieves according to Physical Plant Director Don Holden, disappear year after year.

Overall, Whitworth loses at least $1,500 per school year as a result of theft.

Holden estimated the personal losses suffered annually by students doubles that of the college itself.

Each year students file reports of such things as stolen bicycles, stereos, clothes, cash, television sets and other belongings.

How can people allow this to happen?

"Some students have a real trusting nature," said Janelle Thayer, Resident Director in the Warrens.

It was that trusting nature that made Kathy Lee, Professor of Political Studies, leave her office door open while she was out of the room earlier this month.

When Lee returned to her office, her purse was gone. The purse was found in a garbage bin that same week with $25 in cash no longer in her wallet.

Holden thinks students put too much faith in the people they go to school with.

"They're naive," he said. "They just don't think their roommates or dormmates will steal from them."

Student Activities Coordinator Glenn Smith believes most of the stealing is done by those within the Whitworth community.

"Most of the crimes that seem to happen whether it's vandalism or theft are done by students," said Smith. "People just don't care."

Those students who do care can be the best deterrent of campus theft.

"Students should watch, be aware, and try to take responsibility," Smith said. "Confront behavior that doesn't look right."

If a student feels they can't confront the behavior themselves, they should consider calling campus security or reporting their suspicions to someone who will do something about the situation.

One of the most effective protections against theft is locking up your belongings.

A Whitworth security officer summed it up the best.

"If you leave it, lock it," he said. Another suggestion is to mark your belongings well with indelible ink, or better yet, a special engraving pen that can be checked out at local law enforcement agencies.

The Society of Chartered Property and Casualty Underwriting said marked items are less likely to be stolen, and if they are stolen, they are easier to recover.

Insuring your personal belongings is another thing to consider.

"I would encourage anyone to get some kind of property insurance," said Greg Hamann, Associate Dean of Students.

A student may also want to try to get on their parents' insurance plan.

Student Life has information on a personal property insurance plan that has been designed especially for Whitworth students.

This insurance is available for both on and off-campus students.

"It shows a lack of responsibility," said Sophomore Tom Gerken.

"Let's not do something if we can't do it right," said Sophomore Steve Flegel.

One student took another view.

"Let's try and make the new one (1986-87 yearbook) a lot better — add things from last year," said Senior Brian Meyers.

All of the students who paid for a yearbook will receive a refund. There will be a special booth set up in SAGA and in the HUB for refunds. Seniors who bought yearbooks will receive refund checks.

170 donors make deposit in blood bank

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

Giving blood is all about saving lives.

Almost 200 students and Spokane residents participated in the blood drive held last Thursday and Friday in the Hub. The drive was sponsored by SERVE and ASWC, and the blood was given to the Spokane Blood Bank.

Senior Lorri Albin, SERVE coordinator, was pleased with the turnout of 170 donors, although her goal was 200.

"God totally blessed all of this," said Albin. "It went so smoothly."

There were also about 30 non-blood donating volunteers that helped with the setting up and checking people in.

"I have had friends that have had surgery and needed blood," said Sophomore Bonnie Hine. "It's a good cause. I've never given blood before, but I can donate my time. It's a fun way to help."

"It seems like if someone needs something that you can give, it's a sensible thing to do," said Freshman Bob Moses who was a donor.

A rotating trophy will be given to the dorm that had the highest percentage of residents participate in the drive. The drive is held biannually, in the fall and spring. In other years, a pizza feed was held for the winning dorm.

Albin was asked to be SERVE coordinator only a week before the drive was held. She was responsible for recruiting volunteers and setting up the event. Glenn Smith, Director of Student Activities, helped out with the advertising and ASWC connections.

"It was neat to see community helping community—the Whitworth community sponsoring the drive and helping out the Spokane community," said Albin. "There's something positive about giving blood. It saves peoples' lives."

'Process' is inspiring growth, pride, leaders

by Steve Broughton
Special to The Whitworthian

I can clearly recall a venture in high school when a friend and I attempted to concoct two bowls of "Royal Chocolate Pudding." The task seemed simple, with directions plainly stated and illustrated, compliments of Betty Crocker. The process was nearly complete when we added the eggs... Ah yes, the incredible, edible egg. My dear friends, never stir unmixed raw eggs into hot, boiling pudding. They scramble on the spot. We toiled for nearly a half hour employing every technique possible to blend the chunks of cooked egg into the pudding. It was a feeble attempt so the problem was resolved to Rover's dish. Time was wasted, energy expended, the kitchen resembled salmagundi, and we still did not achieve an end product. However, the entire process created hours of laughter and excitement, learning took place, and a friendship deepened.

The goals of this year's ASWC reflect the above example to the extent that they are embodied in the word "process." There are numerous tasks to be achieved, items pending immediate consideration, and "chunks of egg" within the new bi-cameral system. Yet, within the tasks and chores, "process" constantly edges forward, inspiring growth, learning and the development of our leaders.

ASWC 86-87's goal is to tap into "process," stimulating, encouraging and developing students' ability to lead through the avenues of pride, teamwork and credibility.

With this internal push, we expect external results. In other words, if our leaders are in an environment which promotes growth and they are encouraged to give 100 percent, then productivity will be increased. The other approach is to trudge through the chores and just get the job done, with emphasis on the task.

We are deepening friendships, learning about what it means to commit 100 percent, growing as leaders, and having a good time.

We are moving forward and are excited about the hard work coming from this year's leadership. This promises to be a landmark year which could change the face of the ASWC. We cannot guarantee you won't find any "chunks of egg" in our organization; rather, we encourage you to embark on a journey with us this year and be a part of our "process" helping you to develop valuable skills, heightened friendships, and of course, a few good times.

Nat. conferences offer vision for peacemaking and justice

by Dan Thomson
of The Whitworthian

National student conferences sponsored by the Presbyterian Church (USA) are inviting students, campus ministeries and chaplains to congregate and analyze the personal, national and global dynamics of "God's vision for peace."

"It's going to be intense and full of excitement," said Cheryl Sloat, Design Coordinator. "There will also be a follow up organization created by those who attend the conference."

The events will take place in Los Angeles, Atlanta and Kansas City, Mo. between Dec. 28, 1986 and Jan. 1, 1987.

Each conference will offer worship experience, Bible studies, workshops on practice and theoretical topics, experience with peacemaking and justice building projects, networking, entertainment, Christian music and a New Year's Eve celebration.

The conference in Los Angeles is featuring speakers like Rev. Ben Weir of the Presbyterian Church (USA), Rev. Elizabeth Nordquist, a minister at the Bell Air

Presbyterian Church and Richard Schaul a liberation Theologist.

Travel arrangements will not be offered but each regional contact will send out information about buses and carpools planned for specific areas. The contacts will also have directions to each location.

A $25 non-refundable registration fee will be due by Oct. 15, 1986 and the cost of room and board for each of the events will vary from $74 in Kansas City to $125 in Atlanta and Los Angeles.

Financial Aid will be available through the chapel.

Christian economics, service highlight upcoming Forums

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

A fool and his money are soon parted...

*George Buchanan
Tutor to James VI of Scotland*

In order to avoid waving goodbye to hard earned money it is necessary to make wise decisions concerning its use. Wise decisions require questions to be asked. Sometimes the questions might be difficult to answer.

The Oct. 17 Forum speaker, Teresa Amott, Professor at Wesley College and currently a visiting professor of economics at the University of Massachusetts, will attempt to answer one of those questions. Her topic will be "Christian faith and economics: does one impact the other?"

"She is an incredibly effective communicator," said Ron Frase, Chaplain. "She relates the concepts of economics so well that people not involved in the field of economics can understand them."

Amott is a popular lecturer and is in great demand as a college and business speaker.

"She's a great entertainer with a great sense of humor and variety," said Frase.

On Oct. 20, Forum will feature Robert Mitchell, President of the Young Life Foundation. He will be reasking the question posed by Jesus Christ centuries ago — "What do you want me to do for you?"

"Mitch," as he likes to be called, has been involved in Young Life from his early high school years. He attended founder Jim Rayburns Dallas Young Life club while he was in high school. After graduation, he became a volunteer club leader at a local high school while going to college. He received a degree in physics, and went on to Biblical studies in Portland, Ore. for a year. After that he joined the Young Life staff full time and worked with Rayburn for six years.

He was promoted to Western Regional Director and was instrumental in the development of the Young Life summer camps. After 10 years of service in the western region, he was again promoted but this time to Vice-president of Operations for Young Life; a position he held for 10 years.

Later, he became vice-president of training which placed him in direct responsibility for the quality of the Young Life program. Mitch became President of Young Life in 1977. He held that position for nine years and then resigned. He then became the President of the Young Life Foundation, the position he is currently holding.

Now, Mitch is the main spokesman for Young Life.

Darrell Guder, Vice-president of Academic Affairs, knows Mitch well.

"He is a nationally recognized communicator. A great speaker and in demand across the country," said Guder.

Guder was a member of a Young Life club for 10 years and is still involved.

"I was involved with a Young Life club in Germany while I was there and I am still involved in Young Life here on campus," said Guder.

Young Life is a Christian/Catholic organization which spreads the word of Christ to high school students who would otherwise not be exposed to it. The organization also works with foreign countries. Locally, Mead High School has a program and there are some volunteer club leaders here on campus.

point The Forum Blues

by John A. Sowers
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

Sometimes I feel sorry for the audience, sometimes I feel sorry for the speakers themselves. One thing's for sure, almost every Monday and Friday at 11:15 I begin to cringe as once again I'm forced to endure yet another Forum.

At the outset I need to say that some Forums are very good and I walk out enriched and educated. But Forums of this type are too few and far between.

Also before I begin my main treatise, let me explain that this editorial is in no way meant to justify the boorish, childish behavior of those people who constantly talk (in everyday conversational tones) throughout Forum and then wait for one "ding dong" to get up and leave early so that 200 other equally unintelligent so-called students can begin noisily milling around waiting to leave. Such people embarrass themselves and this college.

But a problem with Forum does exist and polite students will not make it go away. That problem?...BORING! Come on Forum Committee, stop hitting us over the head with liberal propaganda about Central America. We've heard enough. And let me tell you, there's a real tingle of excitement throughout the Student Body about a whole series of Forums on economics! Oh Boy, be still my beating heart!

Now, head down Division St. to Notre Dame West and look who is speaking or has spoken there: Sandra Day O'Conner, Gen. Wm. C. Westmoreland, Kurt Vonnegut and America's own "lil' child of darkness": G. Gordon Liddy. (Granted the Watergate Felon Scoreboard still reads Bucs: 2, Dawgs: 1.) I realize that we have more Forums than does Gonzaga and hence a smaller financial base but this also shows who has larger endowments for speakers — proving old-fashioned Catholic guilt will raise you more money than new-fangled Presbyterian social responsibility any time.

The solution to the Forum Blues is a simple one: Take the money spent on 52 Forums a year and instead spend it to bring in top quality, entertaining, nationally-known speakers for 18 Forums a year. You want a Forum on economics? Bring in Lee Iacocca — he'll tell us about economics. What's the scoop on South African sanctions? Fly in Richard Lugar, the chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Mario Cuomo, with the death of New Deal Liberalism. Where's the Democratic Party now? Jesse Jackson and Pat Robertson at Cowles Auditorium debating the role of religion in politics.

The idea of Forum is noble and good. We, as a liberal arts college, need to hear a broad range of topics if we are to be truly educated; however, we are tired of having to sit through 8 dull Forums to hear two good ones. 18 quality Forums from outside sources coupled with nine more presented by Whitworth itself (study tour slide shows, Fine Arts Christmas and Easters, Convocations, etc.) would demonstrate once again that quality is superior to quantity.

Forum committee — accept the challenge. Give us that quality rather than the quantity. Stop inundating us with the liberal views of administrations past. We students clamor for a stimulating education at Whitworth, Forums included.

counterpoint Forum: learning tool

by Sandy Wark
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

Okay, so we both agree that those rude and obnoxious "so called" students who leave Forum at the first strike of 12 noon ought to be shot at the exit doors. (Ha! That might slow them down getting to the SAGA line.) Rudeness is not the issue.

Neither is this the issue: whether "Catholic guilt" or "Presbyterian social responsibility" are better fundraising techniques.

The issue is the value and content of Forum and it is a pleasure to defend this beloved Whitworth institution.

So the Forum topics don't thrill you? Central America is old hat to you? There is a group of citizens in Washington DC who are nearing the 40th day of a fast to raise America's consciousness about Central America. They'd be thrilled to death to know you think it's a moot issue.

As an education major, John Sowers must be looking forward to hearing Madeline Hunter, a "big wig" in education circles, in Forum. You know what? There are plenty of people who couldn't care less. Forum topics aren't designed to thrill everyone — that's why there are many of them. One is not required to attend them all — one could skip both the "liberal propaganda of administrations past" and the "conservative propaganda" of administrations present if one's discerning capabilities are not up to the challenge.

Forum Committee is hardly swamped by suggestions from students for Forum topics or speakers. It is easier to complain.

Lee Iacocca, Jesse Jackson, Richard Lugar and Mario Cuomo at Whitworth? Sounds great! Do you have any idea of what those guys cost?

Sure, Gonzaga has some big names. Their ASB budget for speakers is 20 percent larger than ours (their $30,000 to our $24,000). This does not include money spent by Gonzaga's administration to bring speakers. G. Gordon Liddy received $4,500 for speaking at Gonzaga. Why pay that kind of money for Liddy when you could get a "Mac Man" to burn a hole in his hand for free?

Big names do not necessarily make great speakers. Last year Eberhard Busch, world renowned theologian, spoke in Forum. Surely Busch would have had a lot to say if only he could speak collegiate level English. Who is to say Richard Lugar has something more significant to say about South Africa than one of our own South African students. Big names create a lot of hype, but is that what we want for our Forum program?

Fewer Forums and flashy names places a sugar coating on Forum. It may be easier to swallow but it does not address the need students have to approach their education with discipline. One can avoid challenging courses at Whitworth. At the end of four years you have a diploma, but have you got an education?

Forum is a tool for broadening a Whitworth student's education. In a 1985 survey of 1974-1979 Whitworth alums, Forum was mentioned again and again as being one of the most valuable components in providing them with a complete education. One woman wrote of Forum, "The pine cone curtain provides the settled environment from which one can look clearly at the cruelties of the world. In my 30's, work day family life I would avoid all thought of what is really out there if I'd not been emboldened in those years at Whitworth."

If you're looking for big names and subject matter to titillate your senses, why not go to a "cheap" Monday night movie. If you want an education, come to Forum.

Feeble Frequency KWRS under fire

To the editor,

If there was one radio station I wish my stereo couldn't receive it would be 90.3 FM. Another argument for living off campus. "New Music 90" huh? Whatever happened to "The Alternative FM"? Whatever happened to quality college radio? Did you have to throw the baby out with the bathwater?

This fall I was surprised to turn my dial to 90.3 and hear the deejay announce "KWRS, The New Music 90." Is it true that ex-General Manager Tom Hancock sold his soul (and our logo "The Alternative FM") to 92.9 KZZU? Hey Tom, thanks for asking me, but I just never had time to fill out your flyer concerning the name change. (believe me?)

Actually, maybe he did us a favor. This station isn't "The Alternative FM" anymore. It was good.

I understand that college radio needs to be on the fringes of the music movement and is therefore "anti-Top 40;" but do you in the process have to be "anti-format"? jazz on Sunday is great, but it sure can't make up for six other days of "Neanderthal Rock."

Speaking of Neanderthals, who were those guys — about three weeks ago — who spent an evening cussing and scratching records over the air? If you don't know, find out and put them on the payroll. At least they were interesting.

Just as our forefathers got all bent out of shape for "taxation without representation" (remember the Boston Tea Party?) so we shouldn't put up with "radio without representation." Give us a voice. Poll us or something; just do something. We pay for it, don't we? (ugh.) Attical Attical!

Whitworth is still listening to the "Alternative FM," but now it's on a different frequency.

RELIGION

Ministry is living for glory of God

by Lance Weeda
of The Whitworthian

What is the Ministry? How does one minister?

Is one supposed to bang heads with Bibles or feed the poor?

The answers are not as simple as one or the other, or both.

It will be helpful to consider the following five guidelines when trying to define the ministry.

First, ministry is a passion, not a profession. A passion for God and a passion (compassion) for people. If you don't have the passion(s), forget it, you won't be much of a minister. The most serious problem facing seminaries today is that they are teaching the ministry as a profession and not as a passion.

Secondly, the ministry is for everyone, not only for some. Every Christian is a minister of the Gospel of Christ — every Christian is in the ministry. It's not only for the professionals or the PhDs in theology. A church pastor is no more of a minister than a secretary (or any other vocation). The only difference is each minister's "audience." Both audiences should be receiving good ministry.

Next, the ministry is both proclaiming and participating. It involves word and work. Sometimes we have to speak with our hands as well as our mouths. We do, or say, in order that people may know that Christ came, died, was buried and raised to life again for them.

Bible stands true

To the editor,

"Is the Bible wholly true?" Some people say that inerrancy is either unimportant, irrelevant or unnecessary to the faith. Therefore all the debate is for nothing. But that simply is not so. Inerrancy is a crucial issue, for if the Bible is not completely without error, then it must have at least one error.

Wow — I am not a scholar nor pretend to be one, yet I feel this issue is very important. One might look at the church doctrines as dominos, each having individual importance. By removing one, or ignoring or falsifying it, then the "faith which was once for all delivered to the saints," (Jude 3) is incomplete.

Certainly some doctrines are more important than others. For example, without a proper doctrine of Christ there really is no Christian faith. Yet without a reliable Bible, how Fourth, the ministry is flexible not situational. In other words, a particular application of ministry does not depend on the situation (person being ministered to, etc...). Rather, it depends on flexibility to the Spirit's directions. However God tells one to minister is the right and best way.

Let's take the all too familiar example of the person who claims to be a Christian but is really a churchian (only goes to church). Some would say to "love that person into" becoming a Christian, when that person might need some sound "Bible thumping" (hellfire and brimstone). If God tells you to "thump," thump! If God tells you to "love," love! Don't listen to what others think is right or even what you think is right.

Lastly, there should be more preparation for the ministry, than performance of the ministry. Jesus' actual ministry lasted a short three years. He spent close to thirty years in preparation for that ministry. This does not mean that we follow the same pattern as Jesus, but that we should follow the same balance pattern. If we realize this it could have a profound effect on lessening "burn-out" (getting tired of ministering).

Remember to love the Lord God with all of you, your neighbor as yourself, and, to do all things for the glory of God.

You don't have to be a "faultless" (perfect professional) minister, but rather a faithful minister of the Gospel of Christ.

can we be certain of a true understanding of Christ? So you can see how the credibility of the Bible would be the first domino. How that domino stands or falls, inevitable will effect some, most or even all the other doctrines (dominos).

This all sounds good but what about contradictions? The Apostle Peter said, "There are some difficult things in his (Paul) letters which ignorant and unstable people explain falsely, as they do with other passages of scripture. So they bring on their own destruction." (2 Peter 2:16) Even the apostle himself didn't understand completely the Word of God.

Christ calls us to be children of God, not forgetting our heavenly Father who is sovereign. This does not imply ignorance is bliss, for the Bible can stand all tests. The true question is who's understanding are you going to lean on?

Ministry comes from within heart, mind must be made new

by Paula Zeller
of The Whitworthian

My uncle was working at Camp Pendleton in Southern Calif. and he and a few other guys were the only Christians in their troop. One of these guys always hung around the cooler passing out tracts and talking about Jesus to everyone who went there for a drink. This he did almost to the point of neglecting his other duties. My uncle however devoted himself to his work and to doing it well. One day a superior officer remarked to my aunt that he saw more of Christ in my uncle than in all the chatter of this other guy.

To many people ministry is only done by a professional who gives a sermon every Sunday morning or a missionary passing out Bibles to some dark-skinned, semi-naked tribesmen. At least those with this view have one thing right — that ministry involves people. However ministry isn't just the spreading of a religion; ministry is a way of life.

Of course, this isn't to say that ministry is the American way of life, nor is it any other particular lifestyle. If ministry involves people, and each person is a unique individual in and of himself/herself, then ministry is a way of life that presents itself diversely.

What this means is that ministry doesn't belong to just religion majors, resident chaplains, members of Covenant Groups, and leaders of Urban Ministry, FCA, Hunger Task Force, etc. It belongs to every person who affiliates his/her very existence with Jesus Christ.

If Jesus is lord and savior of your life, then his ministry in your life becomes a ministry to others. Being the social creatures that we are, our lives have a bearing on other people's lives. Our actions as well as our words convey Jesus to those with whom we have contact. You may have heard this: "Your life is the only Bible some people will ever read."

This isn't to say that we shouldn't verbally proclaim this Good News that we have about Jesus. We should, particularly when God calls us specifically to do this, but it's just as important to practice what we preach. "For the Kingdom of God is not a matter of words but of power." (1 Corinthians 4:20; GNB/TEV)

Some would say that words are necessary in convicting and challenging people. Others say that actions speak louder than words, and a person's life can be more challenging than any "fire and brimstone" sermon. After all, Jesus' life so disrupted the course of human history that our dating system is split between BC (Before Christ) and AD (Anno Domini, from the Latin which means the Year of Our Lord).

The Apostle Paul calls Jesus a "stumbling stone," (Romans 9:12-3) — in modern-day Whitworth terms; this is commonly called a "pinecone." The Jewish leaders were irked by Jesus' association with sinners as well as his verbal condemnation of their so-called "good deeds." What would you make of a guy who not only walked on water and raised people from the dead, but also went to parties with prostitutes, thieves and traitors? Or better yet, how many blind people have you helped to see with your saliva? Or how many diseases have you cured by your touch, or how many people could you feed with fish and a couple bagels?

Jesus' life of ministry effected the lives of many people in his day and age. And today he continues to effect the lives of many more people. These, in turn, have ministries effecting still more lives. "And they told two friends, and so on, and so on..."

As Jesus' ministry impacts our lives, we are directed to live out new ministries. He manifests himself in the way people listen and speak to friends, the way people do their jobs, the way homework is done, the way people explore the complexities of big issues and current events, the way people take care of their bodies...the way love is shown.

This is a convicting force because people realize their lives don't really constitute much of a ministry. But in spite of themselves, Jesus uses them to comfort, encourage and challenge. And he has plans, purposes and ministries for all people.

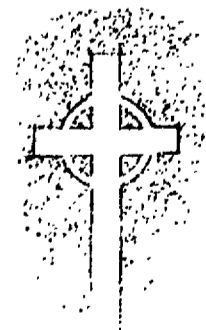

"In the Lord's name, then, I warn you: do not continue to live like the heathen, whose thoughts are worthless and whose minds are in the dark. They have no part in the life that God gives, for they are completely ignorant and stubborn. They have lost all feeling of shame; they give themselves over to vice and do all sorts of indecent things without restraint.

"That was not what you learned about Christ! You certainly heard about him, and as his followers you were taught the truth that is in Jesus. So get rid of your old self, which made you live as you used to — the old self that was being destroyed by its deceitful desires. Your hearts and minds must be made completely new and you must put on the new self which is created in God's likeness and reveals itself in the true life that is upright and holy." (Ephesians 4:17-24).

New emphasis put on ski club

by Jim MaGee
 of The Whitworthian

The reorganized Whitworth Ski Club will offer many opportunities, challenges and fun times this winter to people of all abilities.

"It has been changed to basically a club with a racing team on the side," said Ski Club President, Junior Ty Gebhardt. "Now, the most important thing is not the racing program."

According to Gebhardt, the club aspect of the organization had begun to disappear while racing was becoming much too important. He said that a reconfirmed commitment to the concept of a club is the major change for this year.

In addition, he added, the organization is no longer referred to as the Whitworth College Racing Team/Ski Club, but solely as Whitworth College Ski Club.

"We have new blood in the leadership and have had two good years. This year has the potential to be one of the best ever," said Steve Broughton, current ASWC Executive Vice President and past Ski Club President.

Originally chartered in 1979 by ASWC, the club was revived in 1984 by Paul Schoening, currently a senior, and Broughton, also a senior, who later both became presidents of the club.

The ski club utilizes ASWC support as a sports club, as well as support from outside sources such as the Red Barn Ski Shop.

Gebhardt explained that the Ski Club will offer many social activities, opportunities to travel to and ski at different ski areas, and also instruction by certified technical staff to skiers of all ability levels.

"Even if you are not a good skier it can help you out," he said. "We want people to get involved in what we have to offer."

"I've never had anyone teach me, but when I joined the ski club, I learned a lot about ski technique and equipment, and had a lot of fun," said Junior Jodi Church. She also added that she can see (the ski club) being more organized this year than in past years.

Mary Furness, also a junior, stated, "I was kind of nervous about racing, but it showed me a different side of skiing. I liked traveling to the different ski areas to race."

The racing team, made up of interested men and women from the ski club, will race in the National Collegiate Ski Association racing circuit, as it did last year, according to Gebhardt. He stressed the extent to which racing helped his skiing technique, and how much fun the team members had participating in it.

"We're basically going to let people who want to race be on the team," he said.

Practices for the team will begin in December, and continue on through February, with the racing season falling within that time frame. Gebhardt hopes to hold regular "ski days" for club members in which they can get together as a group, receive some instruction, and then eat lunch and ski together on a social basis.

"The club is going to have a ski trip this year, and club members will be welcome to travel with the racing team to competitions," said Gebhardt.

"Last year we went to Bluewood, Marshal Snow Bowl in Montana, and MacCall, Idaho for competitions."

The enthusiasm for the many changes in the club seems characteristic of almost all of the ski club members, including Gebhardt. He said that he's "looking forward to one of the best years ever."

Running skill brings Irish student to US

by Michele Morn
 of The Whitworthian

How many Americans would continue driving if gasoline cost over $4 per gallon? Visualize most high school and college parking lots completely empty, and cruising obsolete.

As futuristic as this sounds, the present economic situation in Ireland renders most people unable to afford the high cost of private transportation.

Alan Bracken, an international student from Dublin, Ireland, sought an education in the States in the hopes that an American degree might provide economic security for his future.

Running, a hobby of Bracken's since age 12, provided him with a ticket to America. He began to run competitively around age 17, and he ran for an Irish team in France and Belgium.

He and a friend contacted some schools in Idaho about potential scholarships. Bracken was recruited by North Idaho Community College, and ran two years for them while he pursued his interests in business and physical education.

Although his family was hesitant to see him leave home, Bracken asserted, "They couldn't let me pass up an opportunity to study in the States. It was a dream come true."

He chose to continue his education at Whitworth because he preferred the Washington area, which in many ways reminded him of his scenic homeland.

Prior to his arrival in the United States Bracken viewed most Americans, as many Irish do, as quite wealthy and materialistic.

"Most Irish people's concept of Americans comes from television shows like Dynasty or Dallas," he said.

Bracken was pleasantly surprised to find "such a warm and friendly atmosphere at Whitworth. People appear to care very much about one another."

He was shocked to discover the number of broken families and divorces in America. "Family is very important in my country," stated Bracken. "The law of the land and religion wouldn't allow divorce. It just isn't acceptable."

He also marveled at the independence of America's youth. "In Ireland, most young people don't leave home after high school. They live at home and work until marriage," said Bracken.

He said that college isn't really an option for most young people. "There are only four universities in Ireland, which are quite expensive and usually require at least a 3.8 GPA upon entrance," he said. "I never even visualized attaining a college degree."

The present nationalized government provides jobs for many people, but Bracken explained that there just aren't enough jobs to go around. "I was lucky enough to work six years for the government as a bricklayer and contractor, but I never lost my dream of one day attending college," he said.

Two seniors, three frosh unite to rally support for Pirates

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Cheerleaders and football games, like Whitworth and pinecones, the two seem inseparable. Although the function of football players are fairly well-defined, the role of a cheerleader often remains overlooked or misunderstood.

With two seniors, Agar Rojas and Sheridan Parker, cheering alongside three freshmen, Andrea Durall, Ann Campbell and Wendy Calloway, the 1986 fall cheerleading squad is looking toward a season of dedication.

They tried out the first week of school and were judged by 3 of last year's cheerleaders.

"The training was fairly intense because we had to learn a dance routine, and two cheers, as well as make up a cheer, in less than a week," said Rojas.

Rojas, Parker, and Galloway cheered prior to this term, while Durall and Campbell chose this year to discover the challenges, as well as benefits, of college cheerleading.

"I wanted the opportunity to show my school spirit and feel comfortable in front of large groups of people," said Durall.

Campbell shared similar sentiments.

"I viewed cheerleading as a great way to get involved and support the school," she said.

According to the girls, their responsibilities extend way beyond cheering at weekly games. The squad practices three to four times a week in preparation for each Saturday's games. They also make posters and banners to support the team and raise school spirit.

Parker added that they also enjoy giving care packages to the players before the games, "just to let them know we care."

The squad also takes full responsibility for basketball cheering tryouts in November.

"We really encourage everyone to try out, even guys," asserted Rojas. "The current mascot, Freshman Jim Stephens, really helps to raise the crowd's enthusiasm, and we feel that guys would be a great addition to the squad."

Possibly, the girls biggest responsibility centers around their financial situation. Parker explained that, "due to unusual circumstances, and since we were chosen so late, the school couldn't order our uniforms, so we used the skirts left from last year."

The squad, then, spent about $100.00 each on the rest of their uniform, which they hope to make up through fund-raisers.

"Because money transfers to each new squad, we started with about $200.00 total, and we'll build on that base. We are holding a dance on November 21, and AWSC has generously offered to match our earnings," said Rojas.

When asked if they felt cheerleading was really worth the expense and time, they all enthusiastically chanted, "yes!"

Galloway commented that she felt homesick a lot when she first came to Whitworth, and cheerleading enabled her

Dixie land band adding school spirit

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

You've seen them, you've heard them, you've appreciated the new five-membered team at football games.

But who are they?

No, not football players, not even cheerleaders. The newest addition at home games is the Whitworth Dixieland Band.

"This is something for us to do for school spirit," commented Dave Jewett, Sophomore Music Education major.

But, this band doesn't play traditional pep band music.

Their New Orleans Jazz can be heard at halftime, timeouts and various other sections of the game.

"Dixieland is more interesting to us than pep band, and more challenging," said Jewett. "We really enjoy it."

The idea for this type of band was brought to life this fall by Dr. Richard Evans, music professor.

"Doc Evans set up the details with Coach Grambo," shrugged Jewett. "Then, he just approached guys that he thought would be interested."

They got together some songs, and practiced for a few hours before the first game. Jewett said that they are hoping to add more songs to their repertoire for homecoming.

"It's not that we're the only ones who can be in it," he emphasized. "There are quite a few people who would be just as capable."

The crowd seems to appreciate the band's style, because the response is always positive.

The Dixieland Band is only playing for Pirates football right now, but Evans has put their names in as Talent Ambassadors — people who represent Whitworth talent throughout the community.

"There is a possibility of playing for the home basketball games, but that would require a lot more time," laughed Jewett. "But we are available for hire."

Currently, there are five members of the band.

Dave Jewett plays trumpet; Dave Congdon plays trombone; Tim Robblee plays clarinet; Jef Lant plays tuba and Jeff Schmidt is on drums.

"Mostly Jef and Jeff play the background, I play melody, and Dave and Tim do most of the solos," commented Jewett. "It works out well."

It appears that these musicians enjoy the job—and it is a job. They get paid a minimal fee for each performance.

But, more than that, it's just really fun, said Jewett. (We especially enjoy harassing the cheerleaders from the opposing team, he confided.)

"Hopefully we'll be out there again next year," he added.

Resident Chaplain's claim to fame — individualism

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

The doors of second floor Ballard reflect the personalities of the dorm's inhabitants. Some sport photos of good friends, others pianos, and others — others take on a cuter look with balloons or teddy bears. But one door is quietly adorned with an empty package of Marlboro Cigarettes and a Hershey bar wrapper.

Just inside this door, the room is filled with art, three cactus plants — each bearing their own name, a photograph of cowboy boots, organized clutter, a collection of Bob Dylan albums and his poster, and Joanna Coss, the Ballard Resident Chaplain.

Coss admits to living up to her reputation as an individualist.

Many of Whitworth's students might remember her as the girl with wild hair. When she arrived at school last spring, her locks of blonde were dyed bright pink.

Coss described herself as one of "the groovy types" on campus. Some people, she said, just call her "off the wall."

"Last year when I had just gotten to Whitworth, a friend told me that maybe the reason people didn't like me was because of my hair," said Coss. "At first it really shocked me, but then I realized that I might look off-the-wall to Washington farm kids.

"People used to think I was a space cadet too — maybe because I'm blonde." But despite her individualistic appearance, Coss said, "I really don't like to stand out here. I'd blend in Berkley."

Coss decided to become a resident chaplain last year but her Christian leadership skills of today began some time ago. There were some roadblocks along the way.

She has believed in Jesus since age 5. Her parents introduced her to Christianity when she was very young. Both her mother and father were Young Life staff members. When she was 10, her parents divorced and from then on she lived with her mother.

It was later that the Christian faith made a strong impact on her life.

"It wasn't until ninth grade that I really got involved with Christianity," said Coss. "I was active in my church youth group. I was one of the main (student) leaders and recruiters. I was really gung-ho."

"My senior year of high school, things started coming apart," she continued.

"I ran away from home to Dad and was suspended from school for skipping during the last semester after being named a national merit scholar.

"Some of the youth group members thought I wasn't a Christian anymore."

After high school, Coss attended the University of Washington and the University of California at Santa Barbara.

During her first several years of college, Coss dropped out three of nine semesters for reasons of falling behind in class work, not getting up for classes, and the emotional crisis of leaving high school friends, boyfriend problems, and no self-discipline.

While she was attending UCSB she spent some time as a Go-Go Dancer for a local band.

"My roommate's boyfriend asked me to be a dancer in his band," said Coss. "We performed in Santa Barbara, Hollywood, Santa Monica and San Francisco.

"I did it for about one year. One time the guys played in the nude. Us girls didn't.

"Sometimes I'd get pulled off the stage and just dance with someone in the audience. That's how I met my ex-boyfriend."

During her sophomore year of college she attended a summer camp in Malibu, BC. While there she met a woman who took her under her wing and it was at this time that she began to "get back into" Christianity.

"My faith journey was hard because of my parents' divorce," said Coss. "And my faith has been really cerebral. Now, I don't want to go on talents or my own head knowledge anymore but on really knowing the grace of the Lord."

Now that Coss has come to Ballard hall as the resident chaplain, how are things going with her job?

"I'm really revved-up," said an excited Coss. "It's not going to be a barn burner but I want to encourage people."

As a resident chaplain, Coss is responsible for leading a weekly meeting with ministry team covenant group (MTCG).

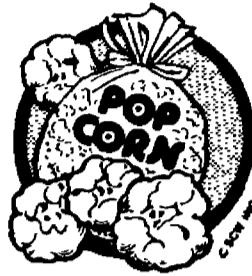

During this meeting, her goals are to support the members of the MTCG and encourage them to move out

Reel Views — "Tough Guys"

Douglas, Lancaster still going strong

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

What makes a "tough guy?" I asked myself this question twice this past week, once while watching the new movie "Tough Guys," the other while watching the Iron Sheik wrestle against half of the world tag-team champion British Bulldogs at the Spokane Coliseum.

In both cases, I viewed professional entertainers in a contrived situation. On one hand I had King Kong Bundy and Big John Studd, on the other hand I had Burt Lancaster and Kirk Douglas, all talented actors in their own right.

Douglas and Lancaster play Archie Long and Harry Doyle, the last men in America to have attempted a train hold-up, (they got caught). Thirty years later, at ages 67 and 72, they are ready to begin life anew as ex-cons and according to society, old men.

Doyle, past maximum retirement age, is placed in a lifeless senior citizens' prison camp. Long is provided with a wonderful job, as a frozen yogurt server. The extremes of both situations are that times have changed, and these men can't be themselves anymore and still fit within the system. Even their probation officer (Dana Carver), who idolizes the two gangsters, offers little solace, "the system sucks."

Long and Doyle finally decide to do the obvious thing

(at least it's been obvious to the audience for at least an hour). Kids, rest homes, customers, and even cops are all abusive; basically, all of society is against these guys, so they get out the only way they know how. They return to a life of crime.

So why do we laugh at all of this? The gags are cheap when rest-home heavies make residents turn off Dr. Ruth and go to bed, or when Archie goes to a new-wave bar and is introduced to slam dancing.

Directed by Jeff Kanew, who also brought us "Revenge of the Nerds," "Tough Guys" shows similar slapstick style when it really set itself up to make a strong comment about modern society. It's not a bad movie, it just isn't a great one. I love Douglas and Lancaster and would recommend it just to see these guys prove they've still got what it takes.

The ad campaign is billing the film as "the action-comedy movie for this fall," so we can't be disappointed by the lack of an Aesop-style moral at the end.

Finally, back to my original two situations. The similarities between the World Wrestling Foundation matches and this movie help illustrate my point. All involved are actors; and in both cases I'm not able to willingly suspend my disbelief and believe that all this stuff is real. It just works out too well, too easily. The good guys always win out in the end; so what's so tough about that? But heck, both wrestling and this movie are fun to watch for a couple of hours; and isn't that all they're supposed to be anyway?

V-Ball sizzles in the sun

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Eat you hearts out, the Whitworth women's volleyball team spent the weekend in California at the Fresno Pacific Tournament. The warm weather didn't seem to distract them too much, however. The Pirates captured 3rd at the tourney, beating two nationally ranked teams.

Not surprisingly, the team came home late Sunday night full of enthusiasm about their performance. The players were unanimous in evaluating the tournament. Senior Debbie Burkhart exclaimed, "Our team did so great!" Ally Heiser, a junior, agreed, "We played really well the whole tournament."

The Lady Bucs lost only two of their 8 matches. They fell first to Athletes in Action and later to Cal State-LA. "They were both very strong teams." Senior Colleen Schlonga stressed Cal State is a much larger NCAA team while Athletes in Action is a combination of former college players. Two players on the AIA team had been All-Americans and Freshman Barb Lashinski saw them as "basically awesome." She likened the Athletes in Action to volleyball's equivalent of the Globetrotters. Schlonga pointed out that Whitworth did not lose one match to an NAIA team.

In fact, the Pirates upset the 3rd ranked host team, Fresno Pacific, who happened to win the NAIA championship last year. Final score 15-10, 14-16, 15-12.

Whitworth also demolished the number 10 team, St. Mary's...twice. Senior Dana Paulson was very instrumental in the victory as she preyed upon St. Mary's blockers and successfully found the weakness in their defense. Scores for the 1st match — Whitworth 15-13, 15-12. In the 2nd match, Whitworth didn't show as much mercy, 15-7, 15-11!

Two members of the Buc's squad were named to the All Tournament Team. Seniors Debbie Burkhart and Lei Ann Akau were chosen amongst the talented field as the elite players. Burkhart felt good about the weekend, "Everything flowed better for me. My defense and hitting were working. The tournament was really exciting for us as a team, too."

Athletes enjoy female trainer

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

The Pirates come to the line. It's third down and short. Quarterback Blaine Bennett takes the snap and hands off to Eddie Davis, who plunges up the middle for the first down. As the players unpile one of them shouts "trainer" to the sidelines: offensive lineman Kenny Hoppus is slow getting up, he's holding his hand. Onto the field runs Brenda Santa Rosa-Hickey.

Santa Rosa-Hickey is the new head trainer for the Whitworth Athletic Department. She is the first certified female head trainer Whitworth has ever had. A female did serve as head trainer in 1983, but she was not certified.

Santa Rosa-Hickey has no reluctance working in a profession that is mainly controlled by men.

"At first I was a little hesitant, but now I have no problem with it. I think there will be more and more female trainers in the future," she said.

If her student training staff is any example, she may be right. Under her are six women and four men student trainers.

Santa Rosa-Hickey seems to be well accepted by the athletes at Whitworth.

Lorie Martin, a senior and third-year trainer, compares this year with last. "Brian (Sanders, head trainer last year) would give them the 'thumb,' (a painful massage technique) and you would only get the real injuries, not just people wanting a massage or a little extra attention. Now there are guys in here all the time."

The male athletes are adjusting to a female trainer quite well.

Scott Sadler, a senior linebacker on the Pirate football squad, admits he was hesitant in the beginning.

"I thought it would be different at first, but it wasn't," Sadler said. "She seems interested to see what's wrong, like she is eager to learn."

Julie Cordes, a senior volleyball player who is suffering from a pulled groin, appreciates the fact that she has a female trainer to turn to.

"It's easy for me to go to her for treatment," Cordes said. "Sometimes you feel uncomfortable going to a guy for some injuries."

Debbie Burkhart, also a senior of the volleyball team, confirms Cordes' thoughts. "She's really easy to talk to because she's a woman," said Burkhart, "and you can tell she knows her stuff."

This is Santa Rosa-Hickey's second stint as head trainer. For the school year of 1984-85 she was the head trainer for the Moscow School District, where she would watch up to three football games a night. She admits the long nights became a "drag" but adds that she "learned a lot."

In 1985 and 1986, Santa Rosa-Hickey worked as a

She was also able to teach the doctors and nurses some things about her specialty.

Santa Rosa-Hickey, a 1978 Ferris High School graduate has done most of her learning just south of Spokane. She attended Washington State University from 1978 until graduating in 1982. Then she moved to the University of Idaho where she completed her Masters in Sports Medicine.

While at the U of I she met a speedy runningback, Kerry Hickey who would later become her husband.

Hickey is still in Moscow, finishing his degree in recreation and coaching high school football, which leaves the couple in quite a predicament. They have what might be called a commuter marriage, they have to commute one way or the other to see each other.

Santa Rosa-Hickey wants to stay at Whitworth for a long time and hopes Kerry can find a recreation job here soon.

"I like my job here. I'm surprised I got it so soon, and in my own backyard," said the Spokane native referring to the short time it took here to get a head trainer's position at the college level.

Martin thinks "it's great" to see Santa Rosa-Hickey as head trainer at Whitworth.

Tough opponents defeat men's soccer

Staff Photo

Marc Eilers knees the ball away from the defender on his back as his teammate runs to help.

by John Kessel
of The Whitworthian

With many fans coming to watch the Bucs play in the Pine Bowl against two outstanding teams, Seattle Pacific University and Simon Fraser University, the Whitworth soccer team played snappy, heads-up soccer, but could not seem to get the right shots in the goal. Whitworth lost both games.

In the first game on Friday afternoon, Whitworth looked as good as they ever have, a marked improvement over last week's games. The first half was surely the best half of the weekend, with 10 shots at the SPU goal, one of which, on a cross by Paul Markillie, was headed into the net by Chad Stoddard.

The point gave Whitworth a 1 to 1 tie at the half. SPU scored once more to win a game that should have finished in a tie.

A fan, Jill Noel, said after the game, "The team looked really good and they are not playing as sloppy as they did last weekend." The team for the most part, said that they played well.

"The team did well and played hard," said Coach Einar Thorarinsson after Saturday's game. "Our opponents this week are in the top positions in college soccer, it was just bad luck that we were scheduled against them back to back.

EWU "outclass" men's V-Ball

by Sheila Farren
of The Whitworthian

The men's volleyball organization opened its season Saturday night in Cheney only to face defeat.

The team traveled to Eastern Washington University and was "outclassed" said Brandon Nishioka, team organizer.

It took the Eastern Eagles just three games to take the match, winning 15-9, 15-7, 15-3.

"In the first two games," said Nishioka, "we would stay with them for six or seven points, then they would break away from us.

"In the third game it was a matter of a loss of intensity and bad passing," added Nishioka.

Nishioka attributed the loss to a number of factors. "We need to work on our blocking and passing.

"We were missing a key player, Steve Mercer," said Nishioka.

Inexperience of the players as well as the coach, is another factor which affected the outcome of the match. "We have a lot of inexperienced players," said Nishioka, "and Saturday night was their introduction into men's competitive volleyball."

It was also Pete Jones' first game as a coach. "At this time we are contemplating whether it is better for me to play and coach or stay on the sidelines and coach," said Jones.

Nishioka said the team was not ready to play the Eagles. "We weren't prepared mentally or strategically for this match."

Though no one player stood out, Tim Robblee had a good match. "Tim hit, blocked and passed extremely well," said Nishioka.

Practicing twice a week, Nishioka hopes for improvement before the team meets the Eagles again.

The Eagles will travel to Whitworth on Nov. 3 for a rematch. The match will take place immediately after the women's match.

Women improve times; men take the week off

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

With most of the men taking the week off, the Lady Bucs went to the Eastern Washington University Invitational cross country meet this past weekend doing a solo performance. The meet was held at the Fairways golf course, a new course that saw its first action Saturday.

"This was the first time the course was used for competition, and it was a little rough," said Whitworth Cross Country Coach Hal Werner.

Kelli Burch turned in her best showing of the year, with an overall placing of second, and a time of 16:58 for the three mile course. She was only ten seconds behind the number one finisher, Susan Taylor of Washington State University.

It wasn't a cakewalk for the young Burch though; she had to make like Sara Lee running from a group of hungry weight watchers to finish second.

"Kelli had to come back and kick past some girls toward the end; but she ran a strong race and her chances for Nationals are looking good," said Werner.

Jan Aubry also turned in a strong showing, placing ninth overall, and second for the women's team, with a time of 17:29. Melissa Johnson was the next Lady Buc finisher with a placing of 30th and a time of 18:50. Just five places behind Johnson was Mary Adams who had a time of 19:22.

"Mary was hampered slightly by a stitch in her side, and that hurt her time a little. Mary is usually our number three runner, but she was slowed by a stitch in her side; if she could have run her regular race, we would've placed higher," commented Werner.

Snapping at Adams' heels like a mongoose chasing its dinner was Dawn Hale for three seconds behind Adams.

Lynnae Stevens, Laura Parker and Bobbi Mischler finished off the women's runners with times of 19:33, 19:39 and 20:03 respectively.

Overall it was a good race for the Pirates.

Johnson, a junior, said about the race, "The team ran really well this weekend, it was a good race."

Werner echoed Johnson's comment, "It was a good run for the girls, and for their fifth race, they're doing extremely well.

Most of the men took the week off due mostly to injuries, but two freshmen competed for the Pirates. Joe Keebler, who finished 66th with a time of 25:52 for the four mile race, and Peter Houston who placed 72nd and had a time of 26:57.

Bucs go down to Wolves, 63-6

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

What's the difference between a bad dream and a nightmare? About 57 points. The Pirates traveled to Monmouth, Ore., to take on the Western Oregon Wolves. The Pirates found out why the Wolves are the 19th ranked NAIA Division I team in the nation. The Pirates absorbed a 63-6 trampling at the hands of the Wolves.

It didn't start out so bad, Whitworth received the first half kickoff and started at their own 15-yard line. The first play from scrimmage Pirate quarterback Blaine Bennett found wide receiver Gary Dawson for a 36-yard gain.

Western Oregon forced a fumble on the next play to take over on the Pirate 43. The Wolves capitalized on the blunder and scored five plays later. It was the first of four first quarter touchdowns.

The Wolves took advantage of six Pirate turnovers, two fumbles and four interceptions. Pirate quarterbacks were sacked ten times in the game. All of this led to an incredibly balanced Wolf attack. They rolled up 555 yards of offense, 210 yards rushing and 345 yards passing.

The Pirate offense rolled up 245 yards of offense, 320 in the air and 75 yards rushing.

They were, although, able to put together a scoring drive. Midway through the second quarter Byron Bokma recovered a Western Oregon fumble on their 42-yard line. Eight plays later Bennett hit wide receiver Steve Turbin with an 8-yard touchdown pass. The extra point failed wrapping up the first half scoring, the Wolves 35, Pirates 6.

In the second half Western Oregon added 28 points to round the score out to 63-6. "The scoreboard looked like a cash register," commented Turbin, "Their half anyway." Individually there were some bright spots. Runningback Eddie Davis gained 25 yards on five carries. Mark Houk led the receivers with 13 catches for 114 yards. Wayne Ralph caught 10 passes for 79 yards. Turbin had the lone scoring catch.

Linebacker Scott Sadler led the defense with twelve tackles and three assists. Defensive Backs Scott Ralph (9/3) and Jason Claw (7/3) combined for 16 tackles with six assists. Brad Spears, filling in for injured Tom Shanholitzer, was credited with nine tackles. Scott Ralph and Sean Alcantera each picked off a Wolf pass.

Next Saturday the Pirates travel to Canada to face Simon Fraser. Last year the Pirates overwhelmed the Clan at the Pine Bowl winning 42-21.

Football continues; V-Ball begins

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

Donna Rodenhurst threw for a touchdown and ran for another as the No Names whipped the AW's, 24-0, in the women's flag football opener. Rodenhurst hit Sheila Farren with 30 seconds left in the first half, leaving the score 6-0.

In the second half Sharon Bailey scored twice, once on an interception and once from a run down the left sideline. Rodenhurst ran around the left side for the final score.

The other women's team, Jenkins, will take on the No Names in the ten o'clock contest next Saturday. On Sunday, Jenkins will play the AW's at two o'clock.

Turning to men's action, the Off Campus Mexican's continued their shut-out streak by blanking the Carlson Birdogs 14-0. Off Campus jumped out on top early on Brad Larkin's 40 yard dash up the middle. Larkin then found Boo Boatmen open in the end zone for the extra point.

Off Campus then struck again, as Larkin rolled right and hit Scott Wetzel down the right sideline for a 37 yard completion. Rob Clancy caught the extra point.

In other play, Stewart bounced back from a 12-0 halftime deficit for a 19-12 come from behind victory over Bald. II. Baldwin jumped out quick on J. Blackman's two touchdown passes to Mayer and Mayo.

The four o'clock game pitted Mac against the Duckmen of Carlson. The score was 0-0 at the half as both defenses played well. Then, with six and a half minutes remaining, Mac's Jay Smith picked off John Wall's pass and darted sixty-five yards for the score. Rob Clancy then hit Smith with a high lob for the extra point. The Duckmen then responded as John Wall scrambled twenty-two yards for six points. Carlson, down by one, decided to go for the two point conversion and the win. Wall rolled left and threw to Glenn Douglass in the corner but the pass was deflected by Jay Smith and Mac held on for a 7-6 victory.

Coordinator Pete Jones did note that Carlson will protest the game but a decision will not be ruled until later in the week.

Earlier in the day Baldwin I forfeited to the Warren Zoos.

Those interested in volleyball will be pleased to hear that Jones said this years turnout may be the biggest ever as the excitement grows for the opening week on Oct. 21.

"I've been here when guy athletes wouldn't let a girl trainer treat them, now they have to."

Sandy Bellenger, who graduated from Whitworth in 1982 and has returned to take some refresher courses agreed with Martin.

"I was here when there weren't a lot of female trainers — one or two at the most. There were a lot of sexist things going on," Bellenger said. "I was surprised that Whitworth hired a female head trainer. I think the attitudes of the players have changed a lot about female trainers; that has helped a lot."

For second-year trainer Tim Vander Does having a female boss has made him change.

"I was always taught in high school that women's sports were a waste of time," said Vander Does. "Now that Brenda has me working with them I have a new respect for women athletes. I get a different look at it."

Santa Rosa-Hickey's duties as head trainer include hiring a student training staff, rehabilitating athletes who have injuries, taping and wrapping ankles, knees and other bodily parts to prevent injuries, and also teaching some sports medicine classes at Whitworth.

In just the few months that Santa Rosa-Hickey has been at Whitworth she has treated many sprained ankles, pulled muscles and other injuries...one of which was Kenny Hoppus' broken finger. And thanks to Santa Rosa-Hickey, Hoppus was back on the field in time for the Bucs' next game.

Students not immune to sexual decisions

by Matthew Rise
Special to The Whitworthian

In the real world, we are surrounded almost constantly by sex — sexual advertisements, network eroticism (let alone what we see in the movie theater!), sexual music lyrics, etc. But all of those horrible, worldly influences are completely deflected by the "Pine Cone Curtain," right? Yes, we at Whitworth are above all of that. We have no sexual feelings or desires — we are IMMUNE! No — like it or not, there is sexuality even on a Christian campus. To have sexual desires is to be human. And at some point in every dating relationship, these feelings must be dealt with. Each couple must make their own decision based on personal beliefs and feelings. The following is a series of relational portrayals of actual couples that met at Whitworth. (Their names, obviously, have been withheld to protect their identities.) Each couple had to make the decision either to or not to make love.

Their decisions based on a variety of motives, had different effects on each couple. As you read the case studies, please keep in mind the following questions: Are relationships influenced positively or negatively by the decision to make love? What is the determining factor in a relationship that will allow the couple to know whether or not sex will tear down what they've worked so hard to build? Does the couples' religious commitment influence the way sex affects their relationship?

Case Study No. 1: Barb had been introduced to Dave at a College Crew meeting and, since then, they had spent quite a lot of time together. They had similar interests: water skiing, partying, each other. Two weeks after they met, Barb and Dave went to an off-campus "social function," and got rather buzzed. Well, their libidos blinded them to common sense, and the rest is history. They rushed into sex without having developed a strong friendship. Their relationship contained no trust, no commitment, no respect, no God — just sex. And as soon as the first wave of disagreements hit (as they always do), their tenuous relationship crumbled. In two months time, they had gone from strangers, to intimate lovers, and back to strangers. Looking back, Barb feels a deep sadness for what she allowed to happen those first few weeks of school. "He could have been the man I was meant to marry," she told me with a faraway look in her eyes. "I guess now I'll never know."

Case Study No. 2: Jack and Diane might be termed the "classic Whitworth couple". They grew up in a Christian home, were youth leaders in their home churches and, to beat all, they met at SAGA! Since they had a class together, they began to casually get together to "study". Their mutually strong convictions, as well as the fact that they were attracted to one another, caused them to develop a good friendship. But as time went on, the physical aspect of their relationship became more and more intense. Each time they saw each other privately, they "went a little bit farther". Finally, after going out for approximately a year, they were forced to make a decision: to give in to lust, disregard their morals, and pay the incredible price in guilt by having sex, or to refrain and, in doing so, attempt to take a step backwards physically. Their choice — to abstain from sexual activity and strengthen their friendship and personal relationships with God. It hasn't been easy, but it seems to have been the right choice for them. Now, six months later, they are happily married and enjoy a fulfilling sex life.

Case Study No. 3: Max and Molly have lived together off campus for nearly two years. They have sex on a regular basis, feel no guilt, and seem to respect one another. They admit that their religious beliefs have been "placed on the back burner", at least until they get married. But they seem to have a very mature relationship, as well as a strong friendship.

Case Study No. 4: Bud had been to church a total of two times (both on Easters) before he came to Whitworth. He had little or no commitment to Christ, and had had several guilt-free sexual relationships prior to college. Jo Lynn, on the other hand, grew up in a church pastored by her own father. They cannot remember exactly how they met, but they began seeing one another regularly. Since this was Jo Lynn's first steady boyfriend, and she thought she was "in love", she was quite intent on keeping him. And since Bud was used to relationships that progressed sexually, he applied constant, not-so-gentle pressure to influence Jo Lynn to go to bed with him. She finally gave in, sacrificing her self-respect, compromising her morals, just to "keep him". The day after it happened, and for months afterwards, Jo Lynn felt dirty, empty, and alone. Her relationship with Bud fell apart shortly thereafter as a result of her aberrant moodiness.

So what are the answers to the previously-mentioned questions, keeping in mind the four case studies? I cannot give you any clear-cut answers, because each person must make his/her own decision concerning pre-marital sex. But here are a few suggestions — It's obvious that sex has the potential to destroy any relationship. The causes for relational break-downs due to their sexual aspect are many: guilt, the feelings of worthlessness and lack of respect, the paramount position sex sometimes assumes in a relationship, the fallacy that sex equals love. Whatever the cause, it becomes apparent that for any couple, the decision to or not to have sex is one of the most important choices they will have to make in their lives together. All too often, a "Yes" can mark the beginning of the end. This choice must be talked about extensively, keeping in mind both person's religious beliefs, the extent to which each would feel guilty afterwards, and the adverse effects it would have on all other aspects of the relationship.

The Lady Bucs won't be seen much around campus this week so you might have to go out of your way to congratulate them. They will travel to Whitman and Willamette this weekend prepare for another tournament this weekend.

This term at Whitworth, Bracken is taking a 4.5 course load, works 20 hours a week, and runs cross-country every day, competing on the weekends.

Currently the number 2 man on the cross-country team, Bracken hopes to steadily improve as the season progresses.

"It's very important to me that I run well for Whitworth," he said. "That is my way of paying them back for the kindness and educational opportunities the school has given to me."

The girls especially thank their faculty advisor, Susan Blair.

"She's been an enormous help with travel arrangements, purchase orders, and support. She's our campus mom," said Rojas.

as ministers in Ballard. Some of the MTCG activities Coss hopes to see started include a prayer group, Wednesday night devotions, and a sing-a-long.

"I want to focus on God's love and power more than our conformity and works — I'm not like a stiff conformist Christian," said Coss. "I feel like I have a touch with Jesus' spiritual side."

Coss intends to be available for residents with an emphasis on relationships not program.

How do the Women of Ballard feel about their "New Wave" Chaplain?

"She might seem bizarre to some people but not to me," said Sophomore Hansa Kerman. "She is just as easy to get to know as anyone else."

Other Whitworth students are simply encouraged by Coss.

"She is an encouragement to me," said Senior Ken Urie, Resident Chaplain of McMillan. "She reminds me to be real — whether that means cussin' once in a while or whatever, but not totally unrestrained."

"She really breaks down some walls (in Ballard). She is reaching some who might not have been reached otherwise," Urie said.

I've known other chaplains but they seem very distant. It's a lot easier to become her friend," said Kerman. "I'm glad she's here."

And so is the Marlboro Chaplain.

New Music 90 strives for quality

Scott Heins, KWRS disk jockey.

by Lisa Jenkins
of The Whitworthian

Rumors travel like music across the airwaves. But the truth of the matter lies in the contribution of KWRS to the Whitworth Community.

"Anything new is going to create controversy," said KWRS General Manager Tonia Bendickson. "KWRS did change its motto from KWRS — Alternative FM to New Music 90. This decision was purely a management decision. The rumor that Tom Hancock, Program Director, sold out to someone is simply not true."

Planning began six months prior to KWRS's change in motto. "This change from Alternative FM to New Music 90 in no way relates to KEZE, Rock 106's use of the word alternative. Alternative is just a word, a word that we have no legal claims to," said Hancock.

"A lot of people feel like this change makes our station more identifiable. It's short, sweet, and to the point," said Bendickson. She continued, "Alternative FM did not say who we are and where we are or even what we are all about. Now we say who we are, where we are, and most importantly what we are all about; KWRS New Music 90."

commented, it is the only radio station in Spokane that capitalizes on new music. Being a small college station, it can capitalize on something no one else does.

This is no change from last year and will remain unchanged in the foreseeable future. Barrett said, "Tom Hancock is very enthusiastic about radio, whether it is KEZE or KWRS, he takes a lot of responsibility to make sure things get done right. He is committed to what KWRS stands for."

Unique in another sense, KWRS is the only college radio station in the greater Spokane, Northern Idaho area to be listed in the Arbitron handbook (radio's equivalent to the Nelson ratings). This means that more than one percent of the total market, 500,000 listeners, or 5,000 plus off campus listeners tune to KWRS. On campus, 23 percent of Whitworth's students listen to KWRS.

Bendickson said, "At KWRS we strive for quality not quantity. We are a force, not a very big one, but a force in Spokane radio."

Music Director, Miriam Cox added, "Our emphasis at the station is on diversity and education. We are not simply here to entertain. We strive to educate, to challenge and invite the critical ear to tune in to KWRS. Critical feedback is a good sign. When we hear criticism we know that education is in the works."

Realizing that a radio station can not please everyone all of the time, KWRS strives to be number two. Stating that when listeners don't like the selection on their number one station they will look to their second choice. Hancock suggested that it is better to be number two than number one.

Looking ahead, KWRS is planning to make qualitative changes while making only minute changes in the format. These changes are highlighted by going to a compact disc system.

Trustees predict upbeat meeting

by Sandy Wark
Special to The Whitworthian

Building and grounds improvements, 24-hour visitation, President Robert Mounce's successor, and the centennial capital funding campaign are some of the issues to be discussed when the Whitworth College Board of Trustees convene for their annual Fall meeting on Oct. 22-24.

Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Jack Hatch predicted an "upbeat" meeting due to the higher than projected Fall 1986 enrollment figures.

The committee will explore the possible reasons behind the higher than average number of returning students this year.

Another major task facing the Trustees is the evaluation of the summer building and grounds improvements made possible by the $7 million bond issue, according to Hatch. The Trustees will tour the newly renovated Arend Hall on Friday, Oct. 24. A Trustee luncheon in Arend's first floor lounge will follow.

The Student Life Committee will inform the Trustees of the status of the 24-hour visitation issue, according to Julie Anderton, Vice President of Student Life.

The Presidential Search Committee will report on their progress in finding Mounce's successor in a closed executive session Thursday, Oct. 23 at 4:30 p.m.

The committee is compiling a list of over 100 candidates from whom 10 will be screened for serious consideration.

The committee hopes to name Mounce's replacement before he leaves next summer, Chairman of the Presidential Search Committee, the Rev. Vic Pentz said in an open letter to the Whitworth community published in the September issue of "Whitworth Today."

Plans for the centennial capital funding campaign will be up for approval by the Board, according to Jon Flora, Director of Corporations and Foundations Relations. If approved, work will begin on the largest capital funding program in the history of the college. A successful campaign would mean many capital improvements for the campus, including new library facilities.

Students will have the opportunity to eat lunch with the Trustees on Thursday, Oct. 23.

The Trustees look forward to talking with the students, according to Debbie Leinan, Secretary to the President.

"They really listen and take seriously what students say," Leinan said.

The Trustees will begin their meetings with a dinner held in Whitworth Community Presbyterian Church's Tiffany Hall. Nutrition Department students will cook the dinner. A dinner theatre will be performed by the Theatre Arts Department.

Students beat the water, help keep hearts beating

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth students pounded the water of the Whitworth Aquatic Center last weekend in an attempt to help sustain the life giving rhythm of the heart.

On Oct. 17-18, Whitworth College and the American Heart Association (AHA) hosted Swim for Heart, a 24-hour swim-a-thon.

The event raised over $2,500, placing it as the second highest Swim for Heart fundraiser in Washington. A school in Tacoma, Wash. placed first.

According to Kathy Jacobi, a representative from the AHA, the money will go into research and into the community. She noted that the AHA works with the fire department to sponsor CPR programs.

used to save people's lives during heart failure.

Whitworth was the only college in Spokane to participate in the event coordinated by Steve Broughton, ASWC Executive Vice President, Junior Paul Joirman, and Jacobi.

Joirman and Jacobi organized the cooperative event between Whitworth and the AHA while Broughton worked with the dorm presidents who encouraged their residents to participate.

"Swim for Heart gives people a chance to donate time, money and energy for the regional direction of the American Heart Association," said Broughton.

Jon Buzzard, Director of the Aquatic Center, was responsible for making the Don't believe everything you read...

President manipulates press

by Michael K. LeRoy
of The Whitworthian

One of the fundamental virtues of democracy lies in the freedom of the press. The free flow of information is not unique in this world yet there exist few tools so instrumental in keeping a government accountable to its people. The press has saved the United States people from bad government on many occasions, from Woodward and Bernstein in Watergate to the Teapot Dome Scandal in the 20's. It is the press that provides our democratic system with the fourth check and balance against corruption and for fair government.

Recently, President Reagan's think tank of foreign affairs geniuses introduced a bold and threatening policy designed to deter the self-determination process (the same one that our country so fondly embraced in 1976) in the third world. One of the chief proposals of this plan makes the following statement: "We propose...conducting public relations campaigns and psychological programs to persuade the news media to support U.S. political and military goals more." One Reagan study even raised the possibility of censoring news reports in case of direct involvement by American forces. In September we saw the Administration blatantly manipulate the press and in turn deceive the American public when they "leaked" false information regarding the status of the Gaddafi regime. And now it has become apparent that Daniloff, the reporter that was held by the Soviet Union as an alleged spy was in fact doing work for the CIA that he was not aware of.

This pattern of events seems to imply a new Administrative policy regarding the press. When the United States government "leaked" information regarding a possible coup in Libya they used the press as a foreign policy propaganda tool. It leads us to wonder if this policy of press disinformation is only the beginning.

The Reagan Administration has lobbied for a new law that would make any leaks a criminal offense. He claims that leaked information is a threat to national security, (unless of course the "press leak" is a planned Administrative manipulation of the press). Agreed that some information thrown out to the press is dangerous in this sense but we have espionage laws that take care of national security violations.

There exists a problem that affects all of us when Reagan calls security into question. It leads the press and the citizens of our society to wonder what the President concerns himself with most, the security of our nation or his administration and reputation. When a cargo plane delivering supplies to the contra rebels is shot down in Nicaragua and a man with a military background claims to be a CIA agent, the Reagan administration denies having any connection to him. Several things are called into question with this issue. By the stipulations made on the Contra aid bills in Congress, American advisors and CIA agents are not allowed within 20 miles on the Nicaraguan border. The Administration or the CIA would undoubtedly be in violation of the law, thus creating a very embarrassing situation for Reagan. In denying any involvement with this incident does the President serve the interests of the country or the interests of self preservation?

Reagan's recent actions do not protect or defend the Bill of Rights or the Constitution therefore we must question the integrity of our leaders and support the efforts of the press. Through their persistence we maintain the free flow of information that promotes fair play in government. Although the intents and purposes of the media aren't always virtuous, consider the alternative to a free press...

The alternative story

To the editor,

In response to last week's letter, concerning KWRS and myself, let's first get the facts straight. 1) I'm not the ex-General Manager or ever was, I'm the Program Director. 2) I didn't sell my soul to KZZU "The Zoo", because I don't work for them, I work for KEZE "Rock 106", and I didn't sell our slogan, or my soul.

I know much of this concerns the fact that Rock 106 started to use the term "alternative" on the air at the same time MANAGEMENT decided to change the slogan. KWRS had been the Alternative FM for 5 years, it was old and very vague. The switch to the new slogan "The New

cause of suffering

by Terry Malsam
of The Whitworthian

Why is there suffering in this world? That is a good question and most bothersome for many people. For they can't see how a loving God would allow such circumstances. The following is one possible understanding on why there is suffering.

Suffering is brought about by cause and effect. That is, certain actions can produce suffering later in our lives. Now not all suffering is brought about by an individual's obnoxious or accidental behavior but, it does account for some.

And it follows that causal actions can be external from ourselves. In other words, some catastrophies occur outside of our control. And these external causes for suffering come in many forms, such as earthquakes, floods, droughts and so on.

Having said this, two important reasons are to be taken into account. The first is we live in a frustrated universe. What is meant by frustration is that our universe is not perfect, it has flaws. Secondly, humanity is frustrated. That is all mankind is subject to ill behavior. Therefore, since our universe is flawed and humanity included, then being in such a position, we can readily expect unfortunate circumstances to occur.

At this point in our thinking one might ask, "Why did God create an imperfect universe and leave us as victims of natural causes?"

The universe and humanity were not always subject to frustration. For when sin came, all living things died. And included in that death

by Lance Weeda
of The Whitworthian

"We will be asking whether there can be a loving God when such conditions as starvation, deprivation and war exist in the world." (The Whitworthian, Oct. 13, 1986.)

Yes, there is a loving God even when such conditions exist in the world, but I would reword the above question to ask, "Can man consider himself loving by nature (or basically good), when starvation and war exist in the world?" This is the real issue. By answering this question, the suffering question may be understood. It is humans who cause suffering not God.

Very well then, this answer is too simple for most people. (Although it is good enough for some.)

But the answer is really that "simple."

However, let's hear some of the classic questions or objections:

"If God's all-powerful and all-loving, then why does evil exist?"

"Why do bad things happen to good people?"

Now for the "simple" answer.

Evil exists in the world and to deny it would be absurd. All truth is not beauty.

God is all-powerful and all-loving. This is the Christian affirmation. It is what the scriptures tell us.

People at this point often say, "Wait a minute, you can't prove to me that God is all those things, especially when there is evil in the world."

It is those people who need to remember that they can't prove that evil exists or that God does not exist.

It's near impossible to prove anything.

You can try and prove anything to anybody until you're blue in the face, but if they don't believe it, you can't prove it.

This doesn't change the fact that what you're trying to prove is true.

What does all this philosophical stuff mean?

'Damn Yankees' hits homerun with hard work, enthusiasm

by Kim Riemland
of The Whitworthian

The Red Sox and the Mets may be playing in the World Series, but around Whitworth it seems everyone is talking about the "Damn Yankees."

The Whitworth Fine Arts department will present the musical "Damn Yankees" at 8 p.m., Oct. 24 and 25 and at 7 p.m., Oct. 26 in Cowles Auditorium.

The two-hour production will feature singing, dancing, and orchestrated music as well as acting.

Sophomore cast member Bonnie Hein said the play is unique in that it involves several areas of performing arts rather than theater alone.

"It takes more cooperation between Whitworth departments," said Hein.

The play will be directed by Rick Hornor, Dr. Richard Evans will conduct the orchestra, Randi von Ellefson will conduct the vocals, and the productions dance routines were choreographed by Ken Urie.

The play brings to life the story of a baseball fan who sells his soul to the devil for a chance to become a hero on the Washington Senators' team.

"It's a modern morality play where good conquers evil," said Hornor.

Hornor thinks the enthusiasm of those involved will make the production especially enjoyable for the audience.

"It will be so obvious that we're having such a good time up there that they won't be able to help having fun," Hornor said.

Jim Bennett, who has a leading role, is one of those who is having a good time.

"I get to stand out and sing and dance, and I enjoy that," he said. "It's just fun."

But along with the fun comes plenty of hard work.

The 40-member cast has been rehearsing five days-per-week, averaging five hours each day since the middle of September.

Homecoming '86 adopting new meaning, traditions

by Lisa Jenkins
of The Whitworthian

With the end of October comes the changing colors of leaves, crisp afternoons, football games and homecoming '86.

Homecoming week began Oct. 17 and will conclude Oct. 26. This year's theme will be Oktoberfest.

Throughout the week, events will build leading up to the headline activities, parents weekend and the homecoming game and dance on Saturday, Oct. 25.

"In past years, homecoming at Whitworth has basically consisted of a parade, football game, a dance and several specially planned events," said Eric Roecks, ASWC Cultural and Special Events Coordinator. "It is time for a change of pace. The change is well into the making — homecoming '86 is taking on new meaning and setting solid traditions for the future."

Roecks continued, "The most revolutionary of these new traditions includes the incorporation of a central theme, 'Oktoberfest,' which will serve as the central focus in all scheduled events and activities."

Friday, Oct. 17, activities began with "swim for heart" a swimathon in the Aquatics Center which benefited the American Heart Association. The event continued into Saturday, Oct. 18.

Each weekday, excluding Friday, one class, with the guidance of their senators, will sponsor a competitive activity for the campus population. Events will be held at 11:05 a.m. at the HUB and include a root beer chug, volkswagon stuff, pie eating contest and iron man competition, Monday, Oct. 20 through Thursday, Oct. 23; respectively.

Adding to the class competition will be a series of talent shows or coffeehouses. Each evening, Monday through Thursday, there will be featured representatives from each class in talent competitions at 5:45 at SAGA.

Bringing all of this "class action" together will be an all new, structured competition for homecoming royalty. Each class will sponsor a candidate for homecoming queen and a candidate for king. Elections will be determined by the number of points each class gains through placement in the competitive activities, such as the daily activities, talent shows, and attendance at the homecoming game.

Judges will consist of the faculty and administration. Coronation will be held at midnight during the homecoming dance on Saturday, Oct. 25.

Friday, Oct. 24, school colors day, will be highlighted by a pep rally, Bavarian dinner at SAGA at 5 p.m., the Alumni Musical Party at 6:30 p.m., and the opening night of the musical "Damn Yankees",

"Damn Yankees", starring

Dr. Tom Tavner, Jennifer Kallenberg, Jim Bennet, Liz Zirkle, John Sowers, and Kara Colyar as Gloria, will be performed at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday night, and 7 p.m. Sunday night, in Cowles Auditorium. Tickets are $4 to general public and $3 for students and groups of eight or more.

Saturday, the big game day, will begin with parents' continental brunch in the dorms from 8:30 — 9:15 a.m. and parents' mini college from 9:30 — 10:45 a.m. The homecoming parade will begin at the Whitworth Presbyterian Church at 10:30 a.m. with activities leading up to the football game.

The Pirates will host Lewis and Clark College of Portland at 1:30 p.m. in the Pine Bowl. Halftime entertainment will include number one rated Mead High School Marching Band, the Whitworth cheerleaders and the Whitworth Dixieland band will perform throughout the game.

Following dinner out on the town, the semi-formal homecoming dance will be held at Cavanaugh's Inn at the Park between 9 p.m. and 1 a.m., featuring the band "Controller." Tickets for the dance went on sale Oct. 15 in the student store. Tickets are $4 per-single and $7 per-couple.

Sunday, the final day, will feature "no host brunch" at SAGA at 11 a.m. and the closing night of "Damn Yankees" at 7 p.m.

Buzzard said that this was a good chance for the students of Whitworth to display their ability to help out the community.

All of the dorms participated in the event. Margy Lee, a participant in the swimathon said, "It started out great. There were lots of swimmers and cheering."

Carlson Hall was in the pool from 5 p.m. to 1 a.m. Some participants were floating in innertubes while listening to music provided by KWRS.

"We're getting requests and tunes by the Beach Boys," said Steve Gaffney, the on-the-spot disc jockey.

From 1 a.m. to 9 a.m. Stewart Hall was in the pool.

"They tried to play football in the pool," said volunteer lifeguard Bill Johnston. "It was active in the middle of the night. People were in the pool all of the time."

Also during the 1 a.m. — 9 a.m. time block, a Jenkins girl swam over 100 laps in four hours.

"I think that it was a really good cause," said Kara Colyar. "I liked seeing people dedicated to helping others."

Peace

How seldom we see the beauty
In the face of any flower,
The brilliant depths of petals silky,
Or the magnificent stamen bower.

We rarely note the unique designs
On the leaves of mighty trees,
With their harmonious veins of delicate line
Waving gently on the breeze.

Our worldly thoughts tarry never long
To drink of God's abundance, And earth bound cares never hear the songs
Of eternal life's reflections.

With guile and greed we fret and fight
With our brothers to the grave,
And passion rules our storm torn life
As we curse a world we made.

A life of peace we seek to find
With gods of man's own making While all along the key is here
A gift, just for the taking.

Hugs high value, no cost healthy communication

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

OK, everybody, survey time.

Who likes to meet new people? Come on, raise your hand.

Who likes to give, and get, hugs?

Well, that includes most of the Whitworth community.

There is an old adage that says, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away." While this may be true, there is a new saying for the '80's.

"Seven hugs a day may help you live a longer, healthier life." This comes from Leo Buscaglia, author of the popular book "Living, Loving, Learning."

But what does this mean here at Whitworth?

Opinions varied but the most students gave hugs a thumbs-up signal.

"Basically, if you go to Whitworth, you have to be a 'Certified Hug Therapist,'" said Sophomore Andy Borrevik, Business Management major.

While Borrevik made this simple statement, Senior Susan Elledge, French and International Trade & Business major, gave the idea of hugs more depth.

"Because of the internal strife and extreme disparity of the tensions in completing strenuous course loads, one must find an access or passage to relieve this distraughtness by embracing in a compassionate and relaxing manner to lift the extraneous burdens at Whitworth College," laughed Elledge.

She continued, "Do them and do them often!"

Although lots of people give each other hugs, there are some differing opinions.

"They're not often given, not as much as I expected at a Christian-orientated college," said Cheryl Sloat, a Junior Computer Science and Business double major. "You get more hugs at camp."

Regardless of these varying viewpoints, everybody seems to like them.

"Hugs are great. They are a non-verbal form of saying hello, and they are more personal than a handshake," said Junior Donna Kern, Education major. "You can hug a teddy bear, but you wouldn't shake hands with a teddy bear."

Everybody has the capability to give another person a hug, be it a casual hug, a bear hug, an intimate hug, or just a friendly ole' squeeze.

And it doesn't seem to matter who you are giving a hug to, or getting one from. Friends, athletes, acquaintances or, sometimes, even total strangers have been known to give each other hugs at Whitworth.

"Hugs can communicate a lot," said Kern. "They can communicate happiness, love, concern, care, openness, and most of all, a trust between both parties that no other form of greeting can come close to."

That's a lot of information for one hug.

More important than the information they convey, hugs have inherent value. Although people have probably tried, this value has no price tag.

"No one has ever used a hug for capitalistic means," laughed Kern. "Hugs are always given for free."

Hugs are great for providing two-way communication, regardless of language or social barriers, and this means that everybody should probably give everybody else more of them. After all, there is no such thing as too many!

Freshman Keith Blodgett agreed with these sentiments. "Hugs are jammin'."

Dating on a budget creating original fun

by Jim MaGee
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth dating experience may be seen as an eternal quest for the cheap date. The limited economic resources of Whitworth students have led to the adoption of many romantic, unique, if not bizarre, but inexpensive dating activities.

The imagination and five dollars were the only limitations placed on some Whitworth students when asked what they would do on a date given those limitations.

"I would go to a nearby park and watch the leaves fall, then play hide-and-go-seek in a large department store topping off the evening by sneaking into the Quality Inn for a little hot tubbing and a few refreshments," said Junior Trevor Francis.

Junior Scott Downs said, "You could get her to get all dressed up, and go down to Ankeny's, order a cup of coffee and leave a big tip." Many romantic date ideas were fielded by other Whitworth students.

Junior Lynn Franz said, "I would go by a McDonald's and get some food and we would sit out watching the Spokane River and drinking a bottle of wine."

Sophomore Iliad Choe, on his five dollar date, suggested, "You could play cards, but it might not impress her too much. Or you could drive to the South Hill and walk through the residential areas."

Aside from the "normal" inexpensive activities of Monday night movies and ASWC weekend movies, suggestions varied from day hikes, trips to Manito Park and the Japanese Rose Gardens to picnics in the Loop and Riverfront Park.

The many suggestions and scenarios suggested about what people would do on a five dollar date demonstrated the creativity that comes out of poverty. The recurring message was that there is not a direct relationship between money spent and level of enjoyment.

Junior Tonni Fenner explained what she would do on a fun, inexpensive date, "I would go and buy day-old bread, go down to Riverfront Park, and walk around and feed the ducks," she said. "Then I would go up to Manito Park, swing and talk, and then on the way back go to Dick's."

While not exactly decorous, the ultimate expression of thriftiness was made by Sophomore Bruce Lewis who said, "I would take the five dollars to buy gas and then drive her to her bank to get money for the date."

Others expressed their contentedness with never having to confront this problem. Sophomore Sean Barrett spoke to his dilemma, "If I had five dollars, and a date, I wouldn't know what to do."

Nevertheless, the majority were able to come up with some concept of an enjoyable date costing no more than five dollars.

Sure enough, dinner at Patsy Clarke's followed by the symphony is wonderfully amusing. Yet, does this $75 evening bring greater enjoyment than an afternoon of winter sledding at Holmberg Park? Is it that much more fun than a picnic at Manito Park?

Whitworth students have refined the cheap dating experience to the level of discount art. No longer is "budget" dating limited to Dick's, Whammy's and Monday night movies. A realm of thrifty expression exists, and it starts at about $3.42.

With the completion of Cowles Memorial Auditorium in 1956, Chapel (required three times a week) was moved from Graves Gym.

Looking back: Whitworth 1956 academics, resident life, faculty

by Jennifer Seyler
of The Whitworthian

Guder dining hall? Sanford Science Center? Mounce Residence Hall? This could be the Whitworth of the future.

Halls such as the Warrens, Arend and Dixon are named after administrative figures that made an impact on Whitworth in the 1950's. The present Whitworth staff could make just as outstanding an impression.

"Those people had a vision for Whitworth and a hope for its Christian ministry," said Ann Rowland, a sophomore Biology major. "I see faculty and staff on-campus now that have just as much impact on the future of Whitworth as those back then."

According to Alfred Gray, author of "Not By Might: The Story of Whitworth College, 1890/1965," the Whitworth ideal is the "education of both heart and mind." This philosophy may remain the same, but the surrounding circumstances have changed.

One area that has gone through transition over the years is Whitworth's general academic requirements. The '56 graduates were required to take two years of foreign language rather than the present one year minimum. Additional social science, English and biblical literature courses were mandatory as well.

"The requirements (in 1956) were good and make for a well rounded individuals," commented Nan Marie Durst, a sophomore Sociology and Spanish double major. "Corporations nowadays are looking for people that have a broader education. They are willing to train you for the specifics of the job.

There were other requirements that weren't looked at quite as favorably, like mandatory attendance three times a week at Chapel. Durst feels that required attendance at Chapel is restrictive and unfair to those who have other beliefs.

Residence life, especially for women, has made a drastic turn around.

According to the 1956-57 Whitworth college catalog, freshman women could not stay out overnight without written permission from her parents on each occasion. Written parental consent was even required for Whitworth women under 21 years of age to travel by car out of Washington and N. Idaho.

Jennifer McKenna, a sophomore Elementary Education major commented on the situation. "That's not very good to do," she said, "It sounds like they think women are less responsible than guys and that's not true.

"It works both ways. To separate the two (men and women) is awful."

Even off-campus residences were regulated. The catalog said that students must be 21 to live off-campus and they must be approved, supervised residences.

Of course these rules no longer exist, but if they did, McKenna would not be pleased with them. She said, "You lack any of your own decision making because of the little freedom they allow you."

As the '56 Whitworthians dealt with resident life, they saw other changes which included many structural additions.

In 1956, the campus was without the Chapel, fieldhouse, Stewart, Baldwin-Jenkins and Arend Halls. SAGA (the Leavitt Dining Hall to the class of '56) was much smaller. Thirty-three buildings now stand where only twenty once were.

"Whitworth would be like a wilderness without all these buildings," said Amy Niblock, a sophomore Math and Biology double major. "There would be nothing here."

Another absent structure in 1956 was the Hardwick Union Building (HUB), a central meeting place for students.

"Without the HUB," said Niblock, "students wouldn't have a place to get away to and call their own."

Two major additions of the year 1956 were the campanile tower, a gift by E.W. Molander, and the Cowles Memorial Auditorium, a long time dream of then-President Frank Warren.

In Gray's account of Dr. Warren's reaction to the new auditorium he wrote, "It becomes the center of much of the cultural and spiritual exercises of the college...It will be the center of worship as faculty and students gather for chapel three times a week."

An increase in faculty size also marked the passing years. In 1956, 52 full and part-time professors, with 42 percent of those holding doctorate degrees, taught at Whitworth. There are about 90 in 1986, with 68 percent holding doctorates.

Brian Allen, a freshman Journalism major realizes the importance of the increase of the percentage of faculty members holding doctorate degrees.

"The education is going to be stronger. You'll get more out of the classes because the professors will have a better perspective on the subject," said Allen.

The most recent Whitworth Possibilities brochure states that "since 1890, Whitworth College has dedicated itself to a singular blend of educational components: rigorous academics, teaching by gifted scholars, deep Christian roots, significant residential life, open pursuit of truth, and a global perspective."

Whitworth College has undergone many changes, structurally as well as in tradition.

In Gray's account of Dr. Frank Warren's 1940 inaugural speech he quotes, "Knowledge with Christian character is the eternal hope of today and the radiant glory of our tomorrows."

"Peggy Sue Got Married"

Kathleen Turner gives flic power

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

"Knowing what you know now, what would you do differently? Peggy Sue is going back with the chance to change her destiny."

The preceding excerpt from the movie poster advertising Francis Ford Coppola's "Peggy Sue Got Married" is intriguing enough; I mean I want to know if she's going to change her destiny, don't you?

Peggy Sue Bodell (Kathleen 'Prizzi's Honor' Turner) is a 43-year-old mother headed for a divorce from her high-school sweetheart/husband Charlie (Nicolas Cage). Encouraged by her daughter, she reluctantly attends the 25th reunion of her Buchanan High graduating class of 1960.

Painful memories abound as 25 years earlier Charlie and Peggy Sue had been elected Prom King and Queen. Her friends are 'still the same' and the stage is set for a total de ja vu experience. When she is re-elected class queen the feelings are just too much and Peggy Sue blacks out — to awake from a blood drive faint dateline 1960. She is still just 17 to her friends at school (days from her fateful 18th birthday), but Peggy Sue has retained the memory and life experiences of her 43-year-old self. She also knows that her steady boyfriend, Charlie, will be unfaithful and leave her 25 years in the future.

Fine, so it sounds a little bit like "Back to the Future" and "It's a Wonderful Life," (remember Jimmy Stewart, last year on campus?) But it's different too.

The characters are humorous (Mom's sex advice is classic) and almost real enough that we might remember them from our high school, but not quite. The best of the supporting roles is Barry Miller's portrayal of the intellectual nerd who, thanks to Peggy Sue's description of the microchip, will be a rich and famous computer magnate by the 25th reunion.

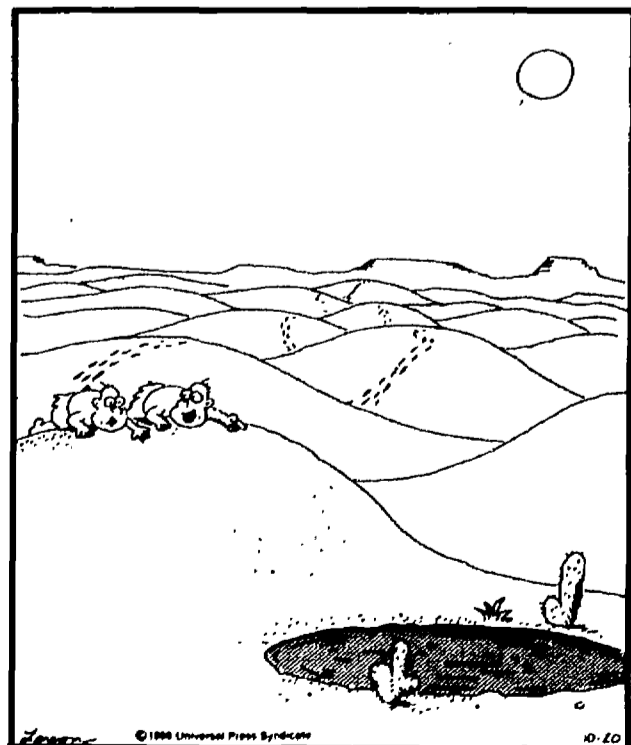

The real power of this motion picture, however, is Kathleen Turner. We can see that Peggy Sue, once thrust into this awkward situation, isn't just a sniveling, sentimental divorcee-to-be, but a strong woman with a handle on her life. It's fun, real, and even sad to watch her deal with reopening and rebuilding relationships that had otherwise ended years before. (Her grandparents are terrific.)

So does she marry him again? Like a good book or movie, life, too, can reveal some startlingly wonderful information the second time around. The movie's ending is abrupt and open-ended, but it retains the feeling of happiness without being sappy and 'perfect,' because life isn't perfect, even when you can change your destiny by traveling through time.

If you need another reason to see this movie, ask Sharon Bailey, Bethany Calsy or Cheryl Sloat (it was filmed at their high school in Santa Rosa, Calif.) Walk down to Newport and check it out. "Peggy Sue got Married" ***

V-Ball victorious...again

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth ladies' volleyball team outlasted Whitman Tuesday night to continue their reign as Whitworth's most successful team. The victory in Walla Walla marked the 24th win of the season for the Lady Bucs.

Whitman put up a good fight and the match extended to the full five games. The games were relatively even with scores of 15-3, 8-15, 15-8, 8-15, 15-8.

Whitworth's triumphant outcome can be attributed to an outstanding team effort and a tremendous balance between offense and defense.

Lei-Ann Akau had 11 kills and 13 digs, Colleen Schlonga 10 kills, Julie Cordes 11 blocks, Erin Mackay 18 assists, and Michelle Rohrback 4 service aces.

Thursday night Whitworth stopped at Willamette to warm up for their weekend tournament at Western Oregon State College. The Pirates raided Willamette in 3 games, 15-8, 15-10, 15-3.

The ladies team gave up their images as a third-place team at the tourney; they took second.

The Bucs were beaten by University of Puget Sound for the championship trophy Saturday, but only after turning back Southern Oregon State, Warner Pacific, Alask Pacific, Columbia Christian and Western Oregon State College.

Whitworth had to overcome difficulties at the tournament, however.

Senior Julie Cordes had to be left behind due to illness.

Freshman Kim Gray, who had little experience coming into the weekend, replaced Cordes as middle blocker, "filling big shoes," as Shelton put it.

But the troubles were not yet over. In the heat of the championship match against rival UPS, starting Senior Burkhart sprained her ankle. The powerful UPS team took advantage of the situation and defeated the Bucs.

Senior Akau was named to the All-Tournament team and the Lady Bucs' NAIA record was lifted to 28-7. For scores of each game, see the scoreboard on page 7.

Burch takes first in NIC Invitational, injuries plague men

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

Last weekend marked the first time the men and women's cross country teams split apart and headed their own separate ways. The men traveled to Leavenworth to compete in the Art Hutton Invitational. The ladies journeyed to the NIC Invitational at the Avondale Golf Course in Coeur d'Alene.

For the ladies it was a re-run of a week ago. Kelli Burch, a sophomore, once again came out on the top of the pack with a time of 18:58 for the 5K course. Burch started off the race running with another girl just ahead of the pack. After the one-mile mark, Burch broke away from the rest of the pack, like Saturday night dinner at SAGA—burnt and barely breathing. She finished some 18 seconds ahead of the 2nd place finisher, Audrey Caren from NIC.

Jan Aubrey was the next Lady Buc finisher with an overall placing of fifth and time of 19:42. Overall, as a team, the women placed third in Saturday's competition. "It was a good team effort by everyone," commented Burch.

While the women were cruising in Coeur d'Alene, the men were being lashed in Leavenworth. The Pirates coming back from a week off due to injuries placed fifth in the six team competition. The Buc's were still without their top two runners; Alan Bracken who is out with a pulled Achilles tendon, and Rod Holman. Jeff Mullaney summed up the team's efforts this weekend, "We ran well considering we ran without two of our best runners."

Scott Hink was the top Whitworth finisher with a placing of 17th and a time of 29:35 for the 8K course. Hink, who has sat out for most of the season due to injuries, turned in a strong showing for being out so long. Peat Sutherland was the next Pirate finisher with a placing of 21st and a time of 30:01. Right behind Sutherland like a pack of rabid dalmations after a three-legged cat was Mullaney who finished three seconds off Sutherland. Guy Duryee was the final finisher for the Pirates with a time of 30:29.

Next on the calendar for both the men and women is the Community College of Spokane Invitational at Wandermere Golf Course. This is the last regular season meet before the District Championships.

5 years later — JV basketball returns

by Terrance J. Walsh
Special to The Whitworthian

For the first time in 5 years the Whitworth Athletic Department has organized a Men's Junior Varsity Basketball program. Men's Varsity Head Coach, Warren Friedrichs, who is responsible for initiating the program, explained the junior varsity program is being implemented to provide an opportunity for underclassmen to adjust to college level basketball.

Lack of experience at the college level makes it difficult for underclassmen to compete with veteran players so they seldom get an opportunity to compete in practice or game situations. Friedrichs said, "The junior varsity program is going to provide an ample opportunity for freshman and sophomore players to actively participate in practice sessions, and provide them with a chance to get valuable game experience. An opportunity they may not have had otherwise."

The junior varsity program is also providing an opportunity for two aspiring young coaches, Mark Bradley and Darryl Dickson. Bradley, the head coach and a graduate of Whitworth, is stepping into his first college coaching experience, as is Dickson, the assistant coach and one of the stars of last years varsity team.

Although they lack college coaching experience, both are optimistic and enthusiastic, and want to channel their energy into preparing the younger players for the varsity program. Bradley said, "We want to stimulate as much as possible a varsity experience." Dickson added, "We want it to be intense, but at the same time fun."

The junior varsity began practice Monday, Oct. 13 and will play their first controlled game Oct. 29 against the varsity. The remainder of the team's 18 games will be played prior to the varsity contests against Spokane Men's Recreation League, junior colleges, and universities with junior varsity programs.

Intramural competition close

Stewart men set their defense against the Warren Zoo in Saturday's intramural action.

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

This past weekend saw it's share of intramural football action, as teams tackled the gridiron Saturday and Sunday.

The lone women's game was played Saturday morning in which the No Names blanked Jenkins, 20-0. The No Names got things rolling early as Tammy Smith ran for six points. In the second half Donna Rodenhurst connected with Sheila Farren for a touchdown and extra point to put the No Names ahead 14-0. Rodenhurst completed the scoring with her own touchdown run. The No Names will go to the championship game next Sunday, unbeaten at 2-0, and unscored upon.

Turning to men's action, the two Carlson teams sparred in their dorm rivalry. The Duckmen jumped out early on Darrin Schmidt's safety for a 2-0 lead. The Birddogs then retaliated as Steve Flugel threw to Tom Gerkin for a touchdown. The extra point attempt was void and the Birddogs lead at halftime 6-2. In the second half both teams continued to change possessions until Gerkin hit John Young for the Birddogs second score. The extra point conversion failed, but that was all the Birddogs needed as they held on for a 12-2 win.

The 12 o'clock game featured a thriller as the Stewart Men clashed with the Warren Zoo's. All of the games scoring occurred in the first half. Ken Sugarman lead Stewart with two touchdown passes, as Steve Mercer and Ian Limm hauled in the scoring receptions. Warren managed one touchdown and a safety, but Stewart held on for a close 12-9 victory.

Saturday's finale pitted Mac Hall against the Off-Campus Mexicans. Off Campus scored on it's first possession as they marched seventy yards, capped by Brad Larkin's TD toss to Chris Barnhart. Off Campus led 6-0 at the half. Mac was the third opponent unable to score against the Mexicans. The Mexi's secured their third win as Scott Wetzel hauled in a Larkin howitzer for a 12-0 shutout.

The Carlson Duckmen and Warren opened Sunday's matches in the one o'clock contest. The Duckmen proved to be no quacks as they whipped the Zoo-men 23-0. Carlson was led by a balanced attack, as six Duckmen got in-

Pirates torched by Clansmen

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

Rumor has it Simon Fraser runningback Orville Lee plays under an alias. After the way he flew through the Pirate defense, Orville Wright would be more appropriate. The playing field at Swanguard Stadium resembled the Kityhawk runway. The Pirates simply watched Orville fly by.

The elusive junior broke a school and league record rushing for 308 yards on 25 carries. He scored four rushing touchdowns and added a 37-yard touchdown reception.

Lee's four rushing touchdowns came in the second half as Simon Fraser blew open a close 27-20 halftime lead. He scored on runs of 91 and 80 yards in the fourth quarter.

Whitworth countered the attack with quarterback Rick Bolen leading the way. Bolen kept the Pirates close in the first half throwing for one touchdown and running for two more. But a rib injury late in the second quarter prevented him from returning effectively. Bolen led the quarterback staff completing 19 of 30 passes for 245 yards. He connected with Wayne Ralph for a three yard touchdown in the first quarter.

For the day, Pirate quarterbacks were intercepted seven times while competing 26 of 53 passes for 393 yards. Gary Dawson led the receivers with 10 receptions for 163 yards, Ralph added eight catches for 111 yards and one touchdown.

Simon Fraser took advantage of the opportunity to add to its stats. The Clan rolled up 651 yards of offense, 367 on the ground and 284 in the air. They ran 52 plays averaging 12.52 yards per play.

In support of Lee, Simon Fraser quarterback, Darryn Trainor completed 12 of 15 passes for 184 yards with four touchdowns and one interception. Doug Correa caught four passes for 178 yards and three touchdowns.

Lewis and Clark will come to town to take on the Pirates Saturday the 25th, for Whitworth's Homecoming game.

The second game saw Stewart win it's third straight in an 18-6 thumping over the Carlson Birddogs. Sugarman led Stewart with three touchdown passes. Stewart's victory secured them a playoff berth, and knocked the Birddogs out of contention.

Stewart finished second in the Big 4 behind the Off Campus Mexicans which routed Baldwin I, 37-0. The Mexi's showed no mercy on it's smaller foe as they put together six scoring drives. Wide Receiver Wetzel had a big day as he hauled in two touchdowns, and returned a fumble recovery 30 yards for his third score. Larkin also figured in the assault with four touchdown passes, and one touchdown run. Lineman Dave Jansens, was a recipient of one of Larkin's touchdown tosses, along with Barnhart, Boo Boatman and Jeff Gardiner.

The Mexican's finished the season as the only undefeated team at 4-0, and have yet to give up a point. Jansens noted that, "We seem to be peaking now, and hope to keep things rolling as we enter post-season play."

Much credit should be given to Pete Jones and the officials, as they did an excellent job in organizing and officiating the '86 season. The playoffs begin next Sunday, kicked off by the Women's Championship game at 1 p.m. The No Names, 2-0, will host Jenkins, 1-1. In men's play, the Warren Zoos, 2-2, take on the 4-0 Big 4 Champs, Off Campus Mexicans in the two o'clock match. The final game features Stewart, 3-1, against the 3-1 Pac 4 winners, Carlson Duckmen. The two winners will play for the title the following Sunday.

It means that it is absurd to think that God does not exist and that he is not all-powerful and all-loving.

God allows evil to occur for now (there is coming a time when he will make all things new and do away with evil forever).

God allows evil to exist for the sake of humanity's freedom (man has a free will). Besides, if God decides to allow evil for any reason who can object, since he is all-powerful, etc...His decisions are right.

Humanity unfortunately chooses wrong more often and more naturally than it chooses rightly. This is too true.

Why is there starvation? It's not as if there wasn't enough food in the world - this by now is an old wives tale.

The same is true for the problem of poverty. Who could believe that there is not enough money to go around?

If starvation and poverty could be ended, why aren't they?

Humanity won't do it because of selfishness and greed - humanity is by nature wrong - bad.

People may be fat on food and rich in money but starving and poor in doing right or good.

What's the answer then?

Doing things God's ways. God does not take pleasure in all the evil man causes. No. Rather, he wishes that all would believe and follow him, doing things, with his help, his way - the good and right way.

"Why do bad things happen to good people?"

Why not also ask, "Why do good things happen to bad people?"

Oh, by the way, if you don't believe in an all-powerful and all-loving God, or that he exists, please by all means forget all this; but please tell me why, if man is so good and powerful, why does he allow evil to exist in his world?

Can't we stop blaming it on all this God stuff and do something about it?

Music 90" was a marketing decision only. It told the audience what we were, "new music", and where we were on the dial, 90 FM. Rock 106 can use "alternative" all it wants and it doesn't need KWRS's permission, because it's just a word not a slogan. It's just like KWRS using the words rock and roll. Also, since we made the change it has been very favorable with our audience and the staff of KWRS.

were atoms, for they also have life, but much in a different way than you would expect. For atoms at one time were never in need and they moved about in perpetual motion. But now atoms are in need and motion is no longer perpetual. Some may try to laugh this off, but there are many who can say with confidence that the physicalness of our universe became frustrated after the fall.

Suffering is an experiential knowledge that we must understand as humans. Suffering is one of the illustrations humanity needs to experience in order to understand the ultimate suffering of all existence. If humanity was not flawed, there would be no suffering and no need of a savior. Yet the opposite is true, that is our Lord suffered and died for all mankind. Without the meaning of suffering, the full meaning of the cross would be limited.

As far as the music is concerned we haven't changed a bit, and if you want to compare it to college radio across the U.S., we are right on target with the rest of college radio. We still play R.E.M., U2, The Talking Heads and we are the only station in Spokane to play more than just the single. Tell me another station in Spokane that plays The Dead Milkman or The Escape Club.

Concerning the children who 3 weeks ago commandeered the station and were scratching records and were cussing on the air. I would one like to apologize to the entire student body. The student was suspended and the other one goes to school in Seattle now. If that's what you like ghost, then don't listen to the station, because that's not what you're going to hear. You might also like to know that they were very drunk that night and stole nearly 40 KWRS image artists albums. With more disc jockeys like that, we will start having to play Wham and I'm sure the ghost wouldn't like that.

To the rest of you KWRS listeners, don't worry we haven't changed, I just don't like lies printed about KWRS and myself in print, and that is exactly what the so-called ghost stated last week. But then again, only ghost would write those things with no facts to back them up and not have the guts to sign their own name. KWRS is still the same and will always be as long as I am Program Director.

"Musicals take a lot more work and more well-rounded talent," Colyar said. "Usually you have to sing and dance as well as act."

Despite the tremendous amount of time the cast spends together, there is a special closeness.

"There's a lot of reasons why we shouldn't be getting along," Hornor said. "But you get a real sense of family, a real teamwork."

Trustees fall meeting

Centennial Campaign activated

by Bob Coleman
& Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

A Centennial campaign, the resident chaplain program and the presidential search were among the issues discussed in last week's Whitworth Board of Trustees meetings.

By a unanimous vote the board passed a recommendation from the Institutional Advancement committee that a Centennial Campaign be activated.

The campaign's goal is to raise over $10 million by 1990, at which time Whitworth will celebrate its 100th birthday.

$6.5 million will go toward a new library facility that will help Whitworth gain its accreditation.

The remainder of the money will go to the remodeling of McEachran Hall and Dixon Hall, an all-weather track, Fieldhouse additions and to programmatic endowment funds.

"We need to double our library space which is not surprising when you realize that the current library was built in 1958," said Darrell Guder, academic vice president.

"I think we would be falling down on our duties if we didn't support this," said Trustee Davis Weyerhouser.

Trustee Bruce McCullough, chairman of the Institutional advancement committee, emphasized the magnitude of the centennial campaign.

"We have not had a funding campaign in the kinds of dollars we're taking about, ever," McCullough said.

The issue of divestment which was on many students minds last year was totally past by. Due to the unavailability of students over the summer and the busy schedules of trustees, there was not time for the people on that committee to meet according to Trustee Jack Bills, Chairman of the Finance Committee.

The Christian Life Committee recommended that the board look into more funding of the Resident Chaplain Program.

"This college is about a lot of things above all else it is about life in Christ," said Gary Demarest, Chairman of the CLC.

The Board passed a should have.

24-hour policy change?

Students stage sit-in claim no representation

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Some Whitworth students feel that they are not being heard when the 24-hour visitation is discussed.

In order to make themselves heard approximately 50 students staged a sit-in at the HUB Blue Lounge Thursday, Oct. 23, at 10:30 p.m. to protest the issue.

There were a number of students who spoke out during the event.

"We don't have student representation," said Senior Mike Eaton. "Students' feelings need to be considered."

"This action was not directed against Julie Anderton, or even at the 24-hour visitation issue, as much as at the lack of student representation in the decision making process," said Beth Ann Lindell, organizer of the sit-in.

ASWC President J.B. Meade said that the student body is now in the process of writing a position paper on the issue.

"There are so many factors to consider in the whole deal," said Meade. "Nothing can be done until we have all the dialogue."

All dialogue has been informal up to this point and discussion is continuing, according to Julie Anderton, Vice President of Student Life.

Not all students think that position papers and meetings will bring the situation to an end.

"What good do papers and letters do? We have to show our bodies," said one student.

Cabinet members President Mounce, Vice Presidents Joe Black, Mike Goins, Darrell Guder and Julie Anderton are in the process of writing a position paper which will present their ideas and recommendations on the issue.

What could happen if 24-hour visitation is banned?

"I know at least 30 people or more who will not live on campus if the change with 24-hour visitation is changed," said Heiser.

Vandalism: costly phenomena

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

"Hey. Throw the ball over here!" Crash...There goes another window and the responsible parties are probably long gone.

An act of vandalism might occur just like that and the senerio could happen anywhere, even on the Whitworth campus. It may not be as obvious as a broken door or window, but it does happen.

What is vandalism?

According to Don Holden, Director of the Physical Plant, vandalism is "damage done by a person/persons unknown for no apparent reason."

The oddity of vandalism is that there is no apparent reason for the destruction.

According to Holden, we must differentiate between vandalism and malicious destruction.

"Vandalism is a phenomena — people do not recognize what they're doing and do not think of the consequences," said Holden. "Malicious destruction is when the people know exactly what they're doing and fully intend to destroy property and they know there will be consequences but will go ahead and do it anyway."

Every year Whitworth spends thousands of dollars to replace, repair and refurbish vandalized equipment here on campus.

Where does the money come from? Holden said that the Physical Plant does not budget for vandalism.

"If the vandal isn't caught, the monies come out of the maintenance fund for that building. That means for every lock or door knob fixed, another piece of equipment will have to go unrepaired because we just don't have the funds."

Vandalism is a crime, and will be punished as one. Glendi Reddekopp, the director of housing said the dorms play the role of policemen on campus.

"The dorms set their own vandalism policies at the beginning of the year. The punishment varies from dorm to dorm. The bottom line remains the same though; if the perpetrator isn't caught, the dorm residents will end up paying." Ultimately, the cost will flow down to the whole Whitworth community and students will end up paying higher tuition fees.

The average cost per year for vandalism is about the tuition of one full time student. "The worst year I've had in my eight and a half years as the Physical Plant director was 1982-83," said Holden. "That year $8000.66 worth of vandalism damage was done on campus."

According to Holden, this year has been quiet, but watch out in December.

"Mid-terms, the end of the term in December, and the end of the term in May are the times when vandalism occurs more frequently.

Vandalism doesn't happen only to the buildings here on campus — the grounds suffer as well.

People will drive across the grass or break a couple of tree limbs. These are acts of vandalism.

Janet Wright has been the head grounds keeper for four years at Whitworth. She is puzzled by students who vandalize the grounds.

"We don't understand why students go out of their way to vandalize the campus," said Wright. "We try really hard to keep the grounds in good shape. We could use a little more pride in our campus."

Input merely token...

Students lack influence

by Tim Boggess
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

"Anderton!" (right arms shoot up in salute, sunglasses faces brazen). "Anderton!" These were the words chanted by Presidente Oppression (alias Kurt Liebert) and his entourage (Mac men) during the float procession preceding Saturday's homecoming game. Kurt — a military dictator from the "State of Turmoil" — in a speech translated by his "wife" (Mikal Kartvedt), spoke of the joy he had in seeing Whitworth becoming, like his country, a place where individuality and self-expression have been annihilated. In this stinging satire on Julie Anderton's proposal to curtail 24-hour visitation, Liebert and associates have brought up a good point: is Student Life merely shaping our values or is it taking away our choices?

I understand the reasons for wanting to abolish 24-hour visitation and the reasons for wanting to keep it. Both arguments are valid and I won't attempt to come up with "the" answer — it's not that easy. My concern is with the process of the change. As it now stands, the majority has no true voice in the minority administration (deja vu, South Africa?).

In a communique dated Oct. 24 that was circulated through campus mail concerning the 24-hour issue, Anderton posed the question: "Do students really have a voice?" She answers herself, "Yes. We continue to value student perspectives and want to include students in the process of any policy change." That's great, but illusory. Question five on the same communique concerning the process of changing policy says, "Ultimately, however, the decision and the responsibility rest with the administration." By the administration, she is referring to the "Cabinet" members: President Mounce and Vice Presidents Joe Black, Mike Goins, Darrell Guder and herself. No students, no representation, no vote, and no apologies. Are we really supposed to believe that our opinions are valued? In a country where we have the right to choose our president and representatives in government, it seems paradoxical that our voices are mute concerning the issue of whether we can or can't visit a friend at 3 o'clock in the morning. Let's talk about real "community-building."

That's like giving a child a $5 bill, locking him in a toystore, and telling him not to buy anything. It just doesn't work all the time.

It is not surprising to see the administration concerned about the consistency of 24-hour visitation with Christian values; I have often thought about it myself. It is a very ambiguous policy: on the one hand you are allowed to visit someone any time of the day or night, yet on the other, you are not allowed to spend the night.

Though the MacMillan demonstration could have been a little more subtle, perhaps it outwardly personifies the frustration many students now feel. What we need is compromise in order to arrive at a more amicable solution between both parties. I don't think Julie Anderton broods all day on how to make our lives more miserable: she cares about the college and the values it projects to the student body. In the same way I don't think that all students are militant when it comes to amending the policy. Yet students still feel castrated. Would it be too much to ask having an elected student representative as a member of the Cabinet?

Perhaps in that way we can feel some kind of ownership to the policy change instead of just sitting on the sidelines and watching. Only in that way can we become a true "commune-ity," a society of equals.

Student stress unnecessary Weekend Overscheduled

To the editor,

Last week was ridiculous. I am writing to propose Homecoming Week, The Trustees Visit, Parents Weekend, The Fall Musical, and Midterms are never all scheduled in same week again.

This is my fourth year at Whitworth, and I've never seen the community so stressed out over one week, including finals week. As an RA and a student not having to be involved in any of the above five big activities, I instead dealt with and observed many severely stressed, crying and confused students. Most students could not begin to decide how to divide their time. One sophomore commented, "There's so much stuff to do that I can't decide whether to get involved with Homecoming or study, so I'm doing nothing."

I have extra sympathy for Joe Freshman and any freshman trying to survive at this point of adjustment. Joe, along with about 75 other students involved in "Damn Yankees," had play practices and rehearsals every night last week plus three performances this weekend. Joe's parents were visiting, and he was ner-

RC positive force

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

It has been said about Whitworth students that they are apathetic. While this may be true, it is not necessary to continually point fingers at the students who close their eyes to the world about them. Besides, apathy is a worn out subject.

The need does exist to accentuate the positive. Positive actions must be encouraged. There is a group of students on Whitworth's campus who represent a positively dynamic force within the lives of students — the resident chaplains.

Resident chaplains provide spiritual and relational counseling and emotional support to the residents of their dorms.

Through Covenant group activities the resident chaplains challenge students to put static theologies into action through the medium of dorm ministries. The chaplains also support the Covenant group members through Bible study, prayer and simple personal contact.

The program's achilles heel is a false stereotype of the chaplains as spiritual zealots. You probably know the type they mean — Jimmy Swaggart clones who beat you over the head with a Bible and then tenderly scream out the Good News of God's saving grace from hell.

Unfortunately, some Whitworth residents are convinced that his is the attitude they can expect from resident chaplains.

Fortunately, chaplains are not this way. In fact, resident chaplains portray a useful method of ministry — they show they care by combining the need to assert human

RC program questioned

by Lance Weeda
of The Whitworthian

Four years ago, I was asked to be an "official unofficial" resident chaplain for the dorm I lived in. It was a challenge in that I was "just a freshman" and the dorm I lived in was comprised of mostly upperclassmen. Also, I was at the same time trying to adapt to college. Further, I had a roommate (required), and the whole resident chaplain program was unorganized. Lastly, I was not paid for the position.

The point is this; that to be a resident chaplain was a challenge — not just spiritually, but time-wise, socially, etc.

Now the program is official and funded.

I am sure that this has created some benefits, the students are paid for their time now and have a good support system. Beyond these...?

Now a resident chaplain doesn't mind the time commitment since he or she is getting "reimbursed" for it and they are told what amount of time is required of them. (I wonder how many of them would do it if they weren't being paid).

It's okay to be a resident chaplain now — every dorm is expected to have one and each one will probably not be that offensive or unusual since they all go through a hiring process.

If you have a problem, feel free to talk with your resident chaplain — he/she will understand, and, what's more won't "condemn" you or even challenge you. Resident chaplains are here to comfort the afflicted but not to afflict the comfortable.

And even if you don't believe in God, don't worry, your resident chaplain will go out of his/her way to find some common ground with you and would never tell you that you were going to hell.

Just because they have the title "Resident Chaplain" don't let that intimidate you — they shouldn't be expected to be held any more accountable than you or I.

If you want, you can be ministered to by the resident chaplain but, you have to join in with his/her covenant group first — where you can expect the usual Bible studies and prayer meetings.

Lastly, in their attempt to become a valid unit, the resident chaplains have become a rather exclusive, elite spiritual clique.

Things are different than they were four years ago.

H-coming meets goals

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

Homecoming '86 was different. It wasn't a week with two or three activities ending with a football game and dance, but a week-long event geared to having fun, giving new meaning to Homecoming, and hopefully starting new traditions.

These goals were met, according to Eric Roecks, ASWC cultural and special events coordinator. "With having so many more traditions, so many people involved, and so many activities, it went very, very well," he said. "The enthusiasm and support were there."

Many students agree with Roecks. "There seemed to be a lot more participation and enthusiasm," said Junior Cathy Crompton.

"It was neat to see more people getting involved and having more spirit this year than in the past," said Darrin Schmidt, sophomore. "It's something I think could stay at Whitworth for a while."

"There were things that could have been improved, but there was a lot of good spirit," said Les Ozment, junior.

The scope of Homecoming '86 was broader than in past years. The idea of having a central theme of Oktoberfest all week centered the activities. Not only did the activities focus on dorm competitions but also on class competitions.

Each class earned points through the week's events. Final tallies Saturday afternoon showed that the sophomore class had earned the most points.

These points were just what the sophomore Homecoming court candidates, James Owens and Cindy Nobriga, needed to become Homecoming King and Queen.

At the end of all class competitions, the freshman class was behind the sophomores by one quarter of a point. Senior and juniors placed third and fourth, respectively.

These competitions were sponsored by a different class each day.

"Everyone has been involved instead of one group of people putting everything on for everybody else," said Roecks.

The week started slow, but by the end of the week, people really got enthusiastic about getting points for their class.

Freshman Chris Jones, a member of the Homecoming committee, suggested that,

"Class competitions went well, but they need to involve more people."

Class competitions included the rootbeer chug, won by Junior Brad Taylor; Volkswagen stuff, won by the freshmen; pie eating contest, won by the freshman class; iron man competition with Sophomore Darrin Schmidt in first place.

The freshman class received the most points in the talent show finals. These were talent shows held in SAGA during dinner every evening. The audience was supportive of the talent show and grew larger as the week progressed.

With such a large crowd there's a possibility of holding the talent show somewhere else next year, according to Roecks.

Stewart Hall received first place in the float competition. The Village took second, Warren's placed third and Baldwin-Jenkins received honorable mention.

The pep rally exemplified the new trends started by Homecoming '86. The event was held at the Aquatic Center, and included a slide show, food, 'Dunk the execs' competition (won by the sophomore class), cheers, and speeches by members of various teams.

Pep rallies in the past have not been a big hit. Over 150 people attended this year. "It was a different idea," said Roecks. "I think they had fun."

Homecoming coronations took place at the dance Saturday night. The dance was held at Cavanaugh's Inn at the Park and over 300 people attended.

"I don't think this would have worked without the help of faculty, administration, alumni, students and especially the Homecoming committee. They were very instrumental in helping bring together activities and having them go off as well as they did," Roecks said.

Ministry group takes action

Also on the agenda was a recommendation to promote Richard Horner, Instructor in Theatre Arts, to the rank of Assistant Professor.

The recommendation was passed meaning that Horner will now be eligible for tenure.

"It would be great to have a class sponsored by a professor," said Marc Nord, program director. "Developing a curriculum where we are taught and also receive practical experience would be very beneficial."

The senior citizens program takes place Sundays from 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Meetings include direct contact between senior citizens and Urban Ministry members.

"Street talk" takes place Friday nights at 9:00 in the Baldwin-Jenkins Lounge. This program is a seminar concerning the counseling of street kids and runaways.

"Cross walk" is a program developed around ministry to Spokane's youth. The program requires direct contact with street kids and the attempt to develop the means to help the young people of society to create a better way of life.

Recently Whitworth's Board of Trustees addressed these issues and expressed "new and exciting ideas" for the future of the organization.

I know only what I'm told

What am I?
I know only what I'm told.
I fear what I am told to fear.
And love only what I'm taught.
My powers are great.
I have great strength and great agility.
I have great love. I have great wickedness.

What can you show me that I don't already know?
Have I not been shown the world — the splendors and the wonders?
I stay with you by choice.
I have no needs.
The world for me provides all food,
And its adoration clothes me.

Don't you see my nakedness — the gauntness of my brow?
Do you take my idle talk and count it with the old?
I am a child.
I know only what I'm told.

S. Warren hosts masquerade ball

by Michele Morn
of The Whitworthian

If you've ever fantasized about a romantic dance with a mysterious stranger, then set aside Saturday night, November 1, on your calendar when South Warren will present the First Annual Halloween Masquerade Ball.

The event materialized when Lisa Otto, ASWC Activities Coordinator, asked South Warren's President, Wendi Barram, if she wanted a particular date to hold a dance.

"We chose Halloween because it's a festive holiday, and we're hoping for a lot of student involvement," explained Barram. "South Warren sponsors a spring boat cruise in Coeur d'Alene each year, and we hope, if this dance is successful, to start a new fall tradition."

According to Barram, South Warren opted for Saturday night instead of Friday so that the dance wouldn't interfere with other numerous Halloween activities.

"We plan to make this dance a first-class event and hope to generate excitement among the student body about Whitworth activities," she said.

The dance will be held in Graves Gym from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. The cost is $3.00 for singles, and $5.00 for couples.

"Food and refreshments will be served, and there are games and other surprises planned," added Barram. "Senior Lei Ann Akau will serve as barmaid concocting a variety of mixed drinks and other beverages."

Tickets go on sale Monday, October 20, during dinner at SAGA. Tickets will also be available at the door.

According to Barram, costumes are required upon entrance to the dance, and South Warren has provided a solution for those students unable to decide on a costume. When purchasing tickets, students have the option of choosing their costume from a list of 60 or so famous couples, e.g. Fred and Wilma Flintstone.

At the dance, masks will be provided for everyone, and for the final dance of the evening, people will attempt to find their match. The unveiling of the masks will occur following the last dance.

Barram explained that there will also be a contest for the best costume and the best costumed couple, to be judged on originality, quality and overall appearance by a panel of five from South Warren.

"The dorm is pulling together to make this dance a memorable experience, and we look forward to an overwhelming response from the Whitworth community," said Barram.

Students step into different shoes, learn true values of the homeless

by Jennifer Seyler
of The Whitworthian

The next time you see someone sleeping on a bench in the park, thinking of them as sub-humans, you probably should think again.

In an attempt to understand what kind of lives the homeless people lead, Nan Marie Durst, a sophomore Sociology major, and myself, a sophomore English major, spent a night at Ogden Hall, a hostel for homeless women in Spokane.

We became bums in dress, actions and history. For the occasion, we had decided to say we had left home in our teens and had been living on the streets ever since.

Upon our arrival, we were met at the door by the night girl on duty.

"This is a branch of the Union Gospel Mission," she explained. "There is no drugs or alcohol allowed and Bible studies are mandatory twice a day."

The rules were read to us and we signed a card agreeing to comply with them. Mainly they consisted of the no drugs or alcohol rule, no profanity, rock music, card playing and some restrictions were placed on the way we could dress.

We went to the kitchen for a short time and listened to the residents comment on the rules.

"I don't mind when they tell us Bible stories," said Beth, a 24-year-old who left her husband in Wisconsin, "but I can't stand for it when they start shoving their religion down my throat."

Once we had settled into our room, I went to the smoking area, a seven-by-three foot area with a window. A thick cloud of smoke lingered above the heads of six people talking in whispers. It was after 10 p.m. and everyone was to be in bed by now.

After short introductions I was asked to explain why I was there, and I became a part of their discussion.

Brenda, a 26-year-old who is from Anchorage, Ala. and had been living with her mom in a car for a couple of months, explained how the system at Ogden works.

"They don't expect anything from you — just for you to earn your stay by doing chores and to try to make something out of your life," she said.

Not everyone at Ogden is from the streets. Martha, mother of seven, is staying while her daughter is receiving treatment at Shriner's Hospital. She offered encouragement for the future.

"Finding an identity with yourself is where it starts," she explained. "Once you know what kind of person you want to be — you can do it."

The street people may not have money, but Brenda made me realize there is something more important.

"Your values are what it's all about," she said. "You may not have any money or anywhere to live, but you've got yourself. That's enough to live on."

Values are extremely important to a lot of these people. Their views on family life differ in some points, but they agree on what a family should be based on.

Brenda summed it up for me and explained that a person's marriage must be based on love and understanding, and it takes a hell of a lot more of it than most people think.

I went to Ogden with the assumption that these people would have no self-worth and would be constantly down on themselves, but I was proven wrong.

When asked why anyone would want to help people like us, Brenda answered, "People care in this world. They want to help you, not wanting anything in return. They just want you to have a good life and to give something back to the world."

Energetic musical numbers excite crowds over weekend

by Michele Morn
of The Whitworthian

"Lots and lots of heart," sang the "Damn Yankees" cast, but even more dramatic and musical talent was on parade this weekend as the fall production of "Damn Yankees" highlighted the numerous activities of Homecoming/Parents Weekend 1986.

The performances played Friday, Saturday, and Sunday evenings in Cowles Auditorium, to very enthusiastic audiences.

Director Rick Horner felt extremely positive after the final dress rehearsal last Thursday.

"I've worked with a very professional cast, and their efforts should be commended this weekend," he said. "We've been rehearsing five hours a day, five days a week since September and the cast is very excited about performing for the public."

"Damn Yankees," which starred Jim Bennett, Liz Zirkle and John Sowers in the leading roles, reflected an age old theme: the consequences of bartering one's soul to the devil in exchange for worldly success.

Outstanding acting ability, as well as several energetic musical numbers made the play a delight for all ages.

As baseball phenomenon Joe Hardy, Jim Bennett said, "I've had a blast being part of this fantastic cast. I knew when I auditioned that a lot of work would be involved, but it's all been worth it!"

Liz Zirkle, who portrayed Lola, shared similar sentiments. "We've put in a lot of long, hard hours, but I wouldn't trade this experience for anything. The cast has been extremely supportive of one another."

Giving the devil his due, and more, John Sowers dominated many scenes in his charismatic portrayal of the dastardly Applegate.

"I had a lot of fun with this character," said Sowers. "Applegate is this kind of guy everyone loves to hate."

The Washington Senators, which consisted of Todd Bloomquist, C. Stephen Murray, Mike LeRoy, Thom Sichelsteel, Dan Engelhardt and James Holworth, hit a home run with the audience. Such song and dance numbers as "Heart," "Shoeless Joe from Hannibal Mo." and "The Game" left the crowd cheering for more.

"Most of us already knew each other from choir," said Bloomquist. "But we've grown much closer since working together several hours each day. A lot of energy has been expelled on this stage."

Engelhardt added a special thanks to choreographer Ken Urie for all his hard work and extreme patience. "He's a very talented man," he said.

"We can't adequately express our appreciation toward Rick Horner," noted Sichelsteel. "He relates so well to people, and he's very open to suggestions and comments from cast members."

If the talent and enthusiasm of this past weekend bear any reflection on future performances, then it would be well worth the price to attend the Spring

Balancing career, personal life even faculty have to work at it

Whitworth families: Part I Husbands, Wives

Heather Harwell

Linda and Jim Hunt, of the English and History/Political Departments respectively, are balancing their time between work and each other.

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

What's it like working and going to school with members of your family?

This is the first of a three-part series exploring this question. This week will be focused on two husband-and-wife teams here at Whitworth.

Thirteen years ago, Jim and Linda Hunt moved their family to Spokane.

Jim worked part-time at Whitworth in the administration office and in the History department. The next year, he replaced a colleague who was on sabbatical, and due to impending retirements, was hired full-time.

As a history professor, and the chair for the History/Political Studies department, he is devoted to his work.

"I'm focused on my responsibilities when I'm at school," Jim commented. "I'm in tune with my work and with my colleagues."

Sometimes this focus presents some problems in spending time with his wife.

"We don't really see each other that much," said Jim. "We do have lunch together occasionally."

Linda works part-time as the coordinator of the Freshman Writing Program.

"In some ways, it doesn't really seem like we are working together," she noted. "But I like it that he's there."

Is there ever a problem separating work from personal life?

"More of the social life of husband and wife is relegated to the evenings and weekends," said Jim.

"It's sometimes hard to draw the line between personal support of each other, or having the conversation (at home) turn into a staff meeting."

Linda highlighted other aspects of this line which needs to be drawn.

"I think it's hard for any two-career couple to balance between work and personal," she said. "You have to work very intentionally at it."

Additionally, there are events in Spokane that require their time.

"There are so many extra Whitworth events that involve the faculty, that we need to make an effort to stay involved with the Spokane community," Linda continued.

The Hunts have tried to integrate all areas of their lives — school, three teenaged children, money, and spiritual realms. They feel that Whitworth gives them the opportunity to do this.

While the Hunts work in different departments, Quinn and Nancy Fox work in the same area. Both work part-time as Associate Chaplains.

They have been married for six and a half years, and came to Whitworth from Colorado Springs, Colorado in August of 1984.

"Working together means that there's more of the marriage," said Nancy. "More of the stress, more of the difficulty, more of the joy."

"But we don't work together as closely as you might think," she added.

Because Quinn and Nancy do work in the same area, there are some frustrating situations.

"People will leave messages for Quinn with me," noted Nancy.

Quinn agreed, "We're not the same person."

Both admitted that they've had to "train" the people they work with, so that people realize the different responsibilities they have.

"It's a lot of fun to bounce ideas off each other," said Nancy. "We do have different perspectives on things. We balance each other out."

"We don't usually work side by side," added Quinn. "But the times we do have to work together have been enjoyable and challenging."

Both husband and wife teams felt that students had a romanticized and perhaps oversimplified view of the relationships.

"It's different at school than it is at home," noted Jim.

Linda added, "A few students know our children, and so they see us as a family."

Nancy expanded on this idea.

"Quinn and I live in a fishbowl," she said. "Not because of working together, but because of the kind of work we do — chaplaincy."

"There is a tendency to try to live up to student's expectations about our marriage. That can be very difficult and painful."

"It's sometimes hard to draw the line between personal support of each other, or having the conversation (at home) turn into a staff meeting," she continued.

Both the Hunts and the Foxes have learned that working in the same profession at the same school is at times difficult, but also rewarding.

"It's nice, because we can share the vision," commented Linda. "One of the real pluses of working in the same profession is that our calendar schedule is the same, so we can travel together."

Perhaps the best thing to say to them all is "BRAVO!"

Reel Views "The Color of Money"

Sequel cruises to new heights

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

The color of money is something we can take for granted (at least with the US Treasury Department); it's always green. In Martin Scorsese's "The Color of Money" the hue of the dollar bill is about the only thing we can be sure of. In a world of hustlers and hustled, only the money is real.

This movie is a sequel to "The Hustler," which starred Paul Newman as Fast Eddie Felson, a young pool player. For those of you that saw the original, a distinct movie filmed in black-and-white, it is interesting to compare Newman's older-and-wiser character of 1961 with his 1961 oscar-nominated performance. However, "The Color of Money" can stand on its own.

Fast Eddie is a traveling liquor salesman, not wholly legitimate, but respected by his customers nonetheless. He is a gypsy, moving lightly from stop to stop in a very large, very white Cadillac. He isn't a has-been yet, but he has a very distinct past: His money seemingly flows freely, but not without precise investment calculation.

He plays Vincent Lauria, a "flake" in Fast Eddie's all-knowing terminology, but a flake with a gift for nine-ball (the gambling man's billiard game). A comic with a nasty attitude problem, Lauria would rather be playing video games if he could be getting paid for it.

Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio's performance as Carmen, naive Lauria's smarter and more worldly girlfriend, is a surprise highlight of the film. The product of a tough childhood, Carmen is a survivor with a beautiful body and a dream of making it to the big time. Lauria is her ticket out, and she knows how to use him.

The story follows Fast Eddie as he takes Lauria and Carmen under his wing — teaching them not how to win all the time, but how to make lots of money by losing occasionally.

Eddie's words of wisdom sum up this point. "You know when to say 'Yes,' when to say 'No,' and everybody goes home in a limousine."

A satisfying plot twist in the middle of the film leads us to a very different ending than we might have expected; but one that works for me all the better. Times have changed, and even Fast Eddie stands to learn a few things before the film's conclusion.

The characters are well-developed and acted by the three stars of this film. Newman is one of the absolute best. But my favorite aspect of this well-crafted movie is the cinematography.

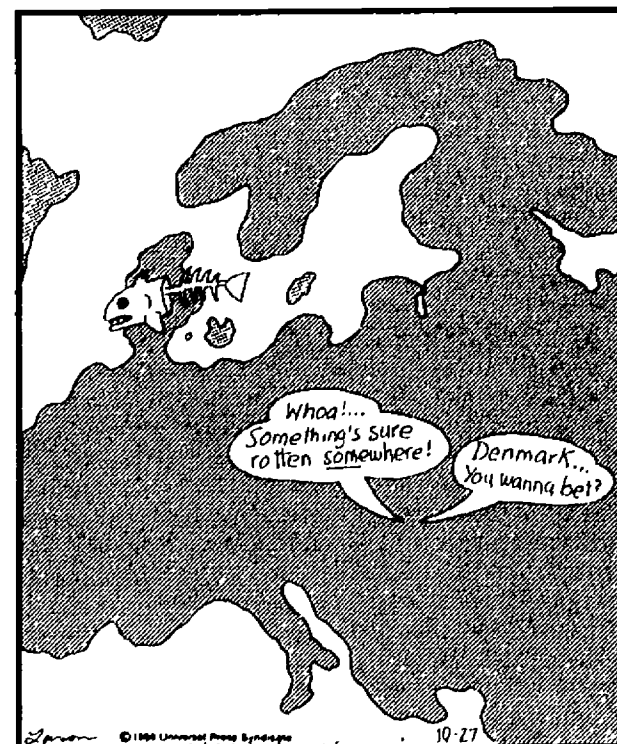

From the opening title-sequence to the classic balance of the film's climactic stand-off, photographer Michael Ballhaus does wonders with filming the physics of a pool-ball's flight and also the feeling of the people behind the cue-stick.

You will laugh at this movie, even cry, or just appreciate it, but don't you dare be disappointed.

Soccer wins two, reaches .500 mark

by John Kessel
of The Whitworthian

With Whitworth's combined victories on Wednesday and Homecoming, the Pirates soccer team pushed through one more barrier, marking this team as "real winners."

This year the Bucs have won the most matches in a single season since soccer began at Whitworth five years ago. The Bucs have shown style and execution of skill during games, and most recently, they have broken the .500 win/loss percentage. Although the team wants to finish the season with a win against Whitman next Saturday, either way they will be happy with their season.

In Wednesday's game against Gonzaga, the Bucs scored twice, while the Bulldogs were denied any points. The first goal was scored by Jeff Frykholm, who headed a cross-pass from Randy Hartman, to put Whitworth on the scoreboard at fifteen minutes.

At the half both teams had six shots at the goal, and it still looked like anyone might win the game.

The match was never over for Gonzaga, but it was put further out of reach by a goal at 60 minutes by Hartman. Hartman took the ball to the goal after a pass from Marc Eilers. This gave Whitworth a 2-0 lead, which the defense, who played extremely well all week, was content to hold on to.

In the Homecoming day game against Evergreen State College, Whitworth won 1-0. Fans saw a highly competitive match, with the only goal near the end of the final half. Chad Stoddard scored with a powerful shot, which started as a pass by Paul Markillie.

The win against the Geoducks was good for team spirits, as it pushed them over the .500 mark for the season.

In Sunday's game in the Pine Bowl, Whitworth was not so strong, losing to the University of Puget Sound for the third time this season. The score at the final whistle was 3-1.

At halftime things looked good for the Bucs. The score was 1-1, and a win or tie was highly possible.

Hartman scored the Buc's only goal on a long drive. The game could have been tied at anytime since UPS's third goal was scored with 10 seconds left in the game.

The Bucs will see action again next Sunday in Walla Walla against Whitman College.

Forward Joel Hunter concentrates on driving the ball up the field.

No Names capture women's football title

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

The No Names led by Donna Rodenhurst captured the women's flag football title Sunday with a 20-6 victory over Jenkins. The No Names finished the season, 3-0, winning all three games decisively.

The women champs got things rolling early as Rodenhurst ran five yards for the first touchdown. Later in the first half Rodenhurst intercepted a pass and ran for a touchdown for the No Names second score. On the extra point, Rodenhurst threw to Sandi Harris for a 14-0 lead at halftime.

In the second half Jenkins got on the scoreboard on Wendy Heardt's touchdown toss to Kim Devilleheuve. With the score 14-6, Rodenhurst hooked up once more with Sheila Farren who made a spectacular diving catch in the corner of the end zone to secure the No Names 20-6 win. Many of the No Names players noted that Jenkins played an excellent game, but that there was no way they were going to be denied a championship.

In men's action, the Off Campus Mexicans hosted the Warren Zoo in the first semifinal matchup. Both teams came out fired up hoping to win a berth in next week's championship game. The Warren offense opened early with its version of "ground Dobbs." Warren's moved the ball well early, but Off Campus tightened up the middle and forced the Zoo's to the air.

Yet, it was the Mexican air game that put the first points on the board. Quarterback Brad Larkin rolled right and found Chris Barnhart open in the corner for six points. The Mexi's lead 6-0 at the half.

The Second half saw Off Campus open things up as Larkin continued to go to the air finding Scott Wetzel and Jeff Gardiner for three more touchdowns and running away with a 25-0 win. The Mexi's stingy defense produced its fifth straight shut out. Off Campus has outscored their opponents 116-0.

The second semi-final game was a true thriller as Stewart tackled Carlson in the three o'clock match up. This undoubtedly was the best all-around game of the year. Both teams were tied in a dog fight until Stewart's Ken Sugarmen completed a 43 yard touchdown bomb to Steve Mercer. The extra point failed, and Stewart lead 6-0 with eight Andy Borrevik gets into position to kick the ball away from the Evergreen State College minutes remaining.

With two minutes left, Stewart had the ball on its own 22-yard line. Instead of running the ball and killing the clock, Stewart went to the air one to many times. On third down Sugarmen's pass attempt was picked off in the flat by Steve Mathias who then scampered 20 yards to tie the game. As the crowd rose to its feet, Carlson attempted the dramatic extra point. Carlson quarterback, John Wall dropped back in the pocket and fired a rope into the middle of the end zone, but the pass was deflected and the game headed for overtime.

In the overtime Carlson kept its' momentum alive. Each team was awarded four downs to gain as much yardage possible. The team who gained the most yardage would earn the victory.

It was John Wall's bomb to Steve Mathias that capped Carlson's four play drive. On the fourth play Mark Coble hauled in Wall's pass for a touchdown. Stewart tried to rally behind Sugarmen on its four downs but was unable to out gain Carlson.

Carlson earned the right to meet the Off Campus Mexicans for the championship game next Sunday. Game time is 1:30 in the Pine Bowl.

Pirates Whitewash Pioneers

Bruce Eckley

Sam Weber raises his hands in victory after Todd White completed the Whitworth scoring with a 5-yard run.

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

How could the situation appear any worse? Three starters have been lost for the season. Two more were sidelined for the Pirates homecoming contest with Lewis and Clark. The last two games were lopsided defeats featuring fourteen turn-overs. The Pirates put aside all adversity and put together an impressive 45-13 victory over the visiting Pioneers.

The three starters were lost all resulting from knee injuries. Sophomore offensive lineman Pete Christensen, Senior runningback Dan Pilcher, and Senior wide receiver Steve Turbin were all forced to hang up the cleats. Lost for the game Saturday were free safety Tom Shanholtzer (back injury) and projected starting quarterback Rick Bolen (ribs).

The biggest surprise came in the form of the starting quarterback. Junior Todd White was called on to make his first collegiate start. White led the Pirates to two quick scores in the first quarter which gave the team the confidence and emotional lift they needed to register a win.

The Pirates dominated nearly every aspect of the game. The defense collected seven turnovers, six were interceptions. The Pioneers were held to 23 yards rushing and added 275-yard passing. The Pirate attack rolled up 454 yards of offense, 287 in the air along with 167 yards of rushing.

Leading 12-7 at halftime, the Pirates scored five touchdowns in the second half to blow open the game. Interestingly enough, the offense scored three times while defense added the other two touchdowns.

Whitworth scored on their first possession in the first quarter. White completed the drive with a perfectly executed pass to Wayne Ralph in the far corner of the endzone from six yards out. Five minutes later White connected with Mark Houk for a 56-yard touchdown. On the day, White hit 9 of 16 passes for 169 yards and two touchdowns.

White also took part in the rushing attack. He gained 24 yards on six carries and added a 5 yard TD run at the end of the game. The big ground gainer for the day was Jeff Miller. He gained 90 yards on 17 carries. Miller, a runningback last season, had been starting at outside linebacker. He was switched back to offense when Pilcher was forced out of action. Senior runningback Eddie Davis added 33 yards on 11 carries. The rushing output was by far the best of the season. The Pirate backs gained 167 yards on 41 carries.

The second half scoring was led by a great reserve performance from Blaine Bennett. With 10:18 remaining in the third quarter Bennett hit Ralph for a 13-yard touchdown. Near the end of the third quarter Bennett found receiver Larry Kelly for a 20 yard touchdown pass. In reserve Bennett was 10 for 17 gaining 118 yards and two touchdowns. Wayne Ralph caught seven passes for 73 yards and two touchdowns. Mark Houk had six receptions for 140 yards and one touchdown. Larry Kelly added four catches for 41 yards and a touchdown.

Interestingly, the Pirate passing attack switched from a quantitative approach to a qualitative surge. After averaging 67 pass attempts in the first five games the Pirate passers attempted only 33 passes.

Defensively, the Pirates performed to masterpiece proportions. Scott Ralph led the secondary by picking off three Pioneer passes, returning one 36 yards for a touchdown. Free safety Brad Spears also intercepted a pass and ran it back 60 yards for a touchdown. Spears added eleven tackles to lead the defense in that category. Bill Oliveros and Scott Sadler each picked off a pass also. Sadler added eight tackles and a quarterback sack. Defensive lineman David Campbell contributed seven tackles and two quarterback sacks. Freshman Tracy Flugel, making his first start at outside linebacker, contributed nine tackles.

Volleyball readies for District tourney log many miles in the process

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

"On the road again" could be a very appropriate theme song for the Whitworth volleyball team. Last week they journeyed to Lewis-Clark State, across town to Gonzaga, and across the border to Burnaby, British Columbia.

Mileage seems to have little effect on the ladies' record, however. The Bucs will go into the NAIA District I tournament Nov. 7 ranked second, with an overall record of 36-13.

Tuesday night the Pirates were upset by L.C. State in 3 games, 13-15, 10-15, 6-15. Shelton described the fiasco, "Nothing was working in Lewiston. Our defense was slow and our offense wasn't there."

The defeat wasn't about to keep the Lady Bucs down, though. In fact, Shelton thought the loss motivated them for Wednesday's game, "It was the biggest key in our beating Gonzaga. The team wanted to redeem themselves."

Whitworth didn't just beat Gonzaga - they crushed them in 3 games, 15-10, 15-10, 15-13. While both teams committed countless mental errors, the Bucs maintained the upper hand throughout the match. Whitworth's defense shut down the Bulldogs powerful hitters led by Jennifer Fuller, Linda Bushinski, and Erika Sylvester.

The Lady Bucs spent Homecoming weekend in sunny Canada at Simon Fraser University playing in the Crossover Tournament. This tournament pits the East against the West and determines ranking for the District I Tournament.

Shelton was pleased with her team's performance.

Whitworth cruised past PLU, 15-13, 15-4, 15-9 and Simon Fraser, 15-7, 15-12, 15-3.

But the University of Puget Sound foiled Whitworth's sweep of the tourney. UPS slammed Whitworth in three, 15-10, 15-3, 15-11. Shelton logically sees UPS as the team to beat at districts. The Pirates are going to work on a defense which will be more effective against the powerhouse UPS led by Junior Cathy Flick.

The Bucs will host their first home game this month as they take on Whitman College, Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Foreign student reunited with bride

by Jim MaGee
of The Whitworthian

"That's when I became myself," said Maseko Nxumalo about the moment he married his wife, Mokashane. Then, after only eight hours of marriage, he left Bothswana to come to the United States to attend Whitworth, leaving his bride behind. Joining him nearly one year later, they now both reside in the Spokane area.

Born and raised in Soweto, South Africa, Nxumalo left the country for political reasons in 1976, at the age of 17. Describing himself as one of many exiles resulting from the 1976 Soweto uprisings, he said, "I would love to go back, but I can't. Unless the system is dismantled, I will remain a citizen of the world."

His flight from South Africa led him to Bothswana, where he finished his secondary education, met and married his wife, attended a technical institute, and was later employed as an accountant.

"She was very quiet and hard to approach," Nxumalo said of his wife. "I left to get my diploma in Accounting and Business Practices and after about six months she came to the same school to do a course in secretarial skills, completely by chance."

Nxumalo found himself torn between love and opportunity when he learned that his application to Whitworth, which he thought had been rejected, had been approved. "We had dated for four years and had planned to get married," he said.

"I was an exile, she was everything that I needed. To bear all the agonies of being away from my parents and all the friends I grew up with was very difficult," Nxumalo confessed. "She helped me to direct my mind from my frustrations."

"Because of all these things I didn't hesitate to marry her," stated Nxumalo. "That was something I was proud of, I had accomplished something in my life."

Regarding their new home in Spokane, Nxumalo said, "I fell in love with the environment, it is so beautiful here. The people are nice and have been very helpful. I managed to make so many friends."

Yet he conceded, "When I came here I had to make a lot of adjustments."

He said that Makashane feels that it is a nice place, but is kind of bored because she doesn't have a lot of friends in Spokane.

"She is not going to school, because she doesn't have a sponsor, and hasn't been able to find a job yet," explained Nxumalo.

The Nxumalos believe the future holds great things for them. "We have an assignment to go back home and share whatever we learned here," said Maseko. "Africa is home, home sweet home, there is no place like home, even if home is a very poor place."

"Sometimes when you just sit, you hear voices of all those things that you grew up with," said Nxumalo. "It is very hard to swallow."

He said he hopes that perhaps soon he and his wife will be able to return to Bothswana, and that maybe in his lifetime he will be able to return to his home, Soweto, South Africa.

Despite being very far from home, in a very different culture, the Nxumalos are making it. "The fundamental thing, though," Maseko asserted, "is that we are together."

worth and dignity with the need to proclaim God's Word. Within this style of ministry there is confrontation without condemnation.

There are people at Whitworth who will criticize the resident chaplain program. They are the people who will assert that resident chaplains do not challenge or confront the way Jesus would expect them to, or who will argue that resident chaplains should not receive payment for their work in ministry.

It may be true that the resident chaplain program would suffer a personal loss if salary funding was cut; but, should students be expected to donate large amounts of their time without receiving some kind of payment?

Jesus received help through donations of food, housing and whatever else he needed throughout the duration of his ministry. What is so unusual about Resident Chaplains receiving monetary support in order to continue ministering affectively?

As far as being challenging and confronting is concerned, Resident Chaplains could choose to adopt an offensive Bible beating style of ministry; yet, is this the form of ministry the world needs to experience? No. In a world of terrorism, rape, murder, and government oppression, on a campus full of daily stress and fatigue, the last thing students need is further negative input.

How comforting it is to know that there is a group of people on campus who work at developing positive and dynamic methods of ministering to the needs of students. How comforting it is to know the Resident Chaplain group exists.

his sweetheart to the Homecoming dance. Joe struggled between finding time to spend with his parents and time to study for his Brit Lit midterm on Friday and Bruner midterm on Monday night.

Joe's case may be a hypothetical example but all too true of many students' experiences last week. Freshmen are not living in the caring community I thought Whitworth was all about. I also believed Whitworth was a highly acclaimed school academically. When students have to choose between studying for midterms and spending time involved in the main activities of the term, I become confused.

Don't get me wrong. I want the trustees to visit. I want them to view a realistic picture of campus happenings, not a stress mess. But I also think it is important students have time to spend with them.

I also want parents to visit but on a weekend when it's more conceivable for a student to take time out of studying. I thought the purpose of Parent's Weekend was for parents to have time to spend with their son or daughter. What do students with only one parent visiting do with their parent during the dance? I've seen this dilemma several times and don't find it fair for students to have to choose between their parent and their date.

Don't force students to choose between studying for midterms and being involved in campus events. Whitworth is too great of a place to flunk out or miss out.

Supreme Court Justice O'Connor calls for Dialogue, Devotion

by Sally Ann Sadler
of The Whitworthian

In a week of official visits, Spokane welcomed U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

The bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution brought the Justice to Gonzaga University last Tuesday evening, Oct. 28.

"Our Constitution is not, and could never be, defended only by a group of judges," said O'Connor, who calls all people to take responsibility for upholding the Constitution, even to the point of protest.

The relationship between the court and the nation is one of dialogue rather than a "series of commands," she said.

The 1973 decision of Roe vs. Wade, legalizing abortion, is an issue that has "large numbers of people regularly taking to the streets to demonstrate either their opposition to that decision or their support of it. Abortion is still hotly debated in all political arenas," said O'Connor.

While abortion is still an issue, many controversial court rulings are now accepted. O'Connor used Brown vs. the Board of Education as an example. "Today, the fundamental injustice of racially segregated public schools is beyond the mainstream political debate," O'Connor said.

O'Connor cited Gideon, a story known to most Political Studies majors at Whitworth.

Gideon, a poor man in Florida, was tried without counsel. After writing a letter to the court, he was able to have the question re-asked to the court. Is it the constitutional right of an individual to have legal counsel? The court answered "yes."

It is the people's "devotion to law," said O'Connor, "that brings liberty."

Reagan visits lilac city campaigning for Gorton

by Sally Ann Sadler
of The Whitworthian

President Reagan spoke to a crowd of over 5,000 people at the Coliseum Friday morning. Reagan is on a campaign tour of western states.

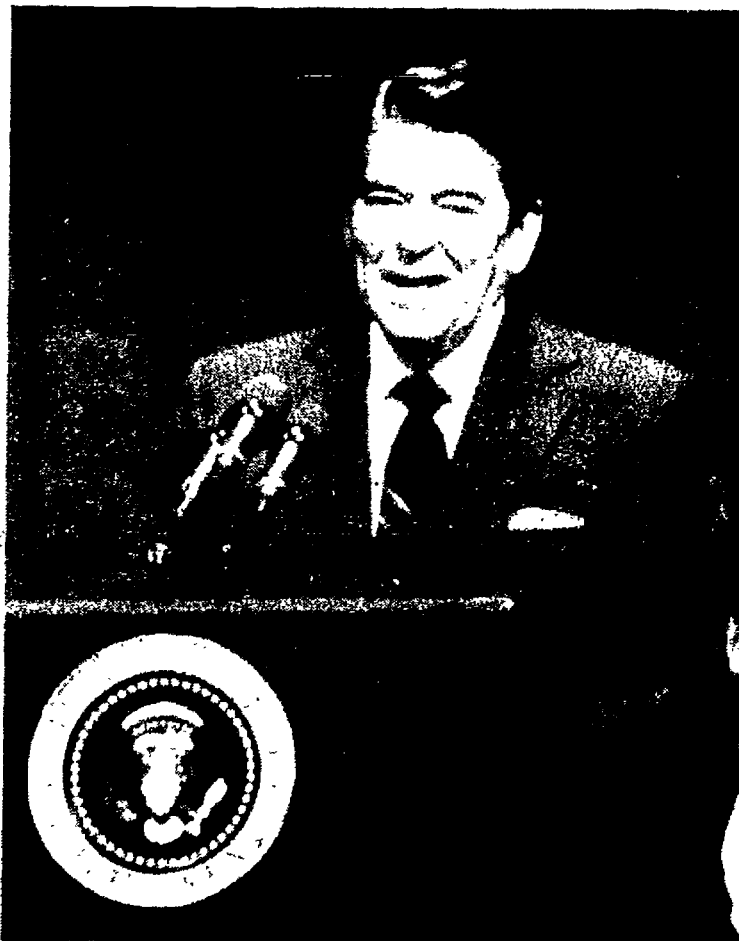

His stop in Spokane was to promote Slade Gorton in a close senatorial race with Brock Adams. Reagan told the crowd to, "Win one for Slade Gorton, win one for America, and I can't resist saying it, win one for the Gipper."

Reagan addressed the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) or Star Wars. He accused Brock Adams of being "dead set against it." Reagan continued, "We're dead set against a weaker America."

According to Reagan the SDI could lead to the elimination of all offensive nuclear weapons, and could stop the Hilters and Khadafis in the world, as well as protect us from the Soviet Union.

Reagan promised he would personally assure us that the

Reagan signs bill, cuts GSL's Whitworth affected little

by Khris Vogel
of The Whitworthian

President Reagan recently signed into law a bill that cuts funds available for Guaranteed Student Loans. The bill will have little effect on Whitworth students, according to Bill Rusk, director of financial aid.

"Only 30-40 students will be affected here," Rusk said of the Higher Education Re-authorization Bill, "but it will affect about 25 percent of the students at public institutions."

Federal regulations are different for private schools, like Whitworth, than they are for public schools.

"Families with incomes of $50,000 to $60,000 at private institutions are in danger of losing some or all of their GSL's, while families that make as little as $35,000 to $40,000 could get zapped at public institutions," said Rusk.

Rusk plans to reserve all Whitworth loan funds for the previously mentioned 30-40 students, rather than accommodating them with scholarship fund money as previously reported.

As to the reason for the $100 million cut in GSL's, Rusk said that an amendment attached to the bill specifies that funds are to go toward federal drug treatment programs for youths. "Exactly how this is going to be done hasn't been spelled out yet," Rusk said.

Rusk stated, however, that he has a "feeling" that the main reason for GSL cuts is to fund drug enforcement.

"Everyone is against dope," said Rusk. "And every single political candidate is against it, which is fine, but the way they're pursuing it is ludicrous."

"Why spend $100 million to hire more people when we have them all over the world anyway?"

Rusk was referring to the American armed forces who he believes could be utilized to shut down the drug trafficking.

Besides decreasing the funds available for GSL's, the rules governing GSL's are now different.

Freshmen and sophomores will be eligible for up to $2,625 while juniors and seniors will be eligible for up to $4,000. The previous limit on GSL's was $2,500 per year.

"The real donnybrook will start when we have to decide on who's a junior and who's a sophomore," Rusk said. Many students may find themselves a "course or two short," he added.

The final decisions on class standing for financial aid purposes will probably be based on rules handed down by the Registrar's office. Currently, students must have 18 credits to qualify for a junior class standing.

"I don't have all the details yet. It could come down to if you're in, you're in, and if you're out, you're out," said Rusk.

Another change in financial aid due to the new law will be larger Pell Grants for students.

Congress has approved $2,300 as being the maximum amount a student can qualify for on a Pell grant, up $200 from $2,100. Congress has also voted a $200 per year Pell Grant increase until the 1991-92 school year.

Rusk cautioned that while the law has been signed, Congress must authorize this increase every year with the passing of the federal budget.

Another change is that students can qualify for Pell Grants for only five years, while students could previously qualify indefinitely while still enrolled in college.

Rusk, however, is optimistic for future federal education funding.

"My own judgment is that the majority of Congress will increase taxes before there are any further cuts in financial aid," he said. "Everyone realizes that it's an investment and that we're funding our future with educational spending."

Students cause messy campus

To the editor,

The lead article in the Oct. 6 issue of The Whitworthian concerning the Whitworth landfill strikes me as a bit hypocritical coming from the pen of a Whitworth student. It also strikes me as trivial and insincere because the writer offered no viable and cost-effective alternative to his complaint. I say this as a student and also as one who works at the Physical Plant when not academically involved. I wonder too about the negative comments from students quoted in the article.

I have these reservations because of my awareness of students who seem to have no problem throwing trash down just anywhere; of students who "borrow" dorm trash cans for their personal use thereby leaving their dorm-mates with no place to dispose of trash; of students who tamper with outdoor lighting circuits thereby rendering them inoperative; of students who step over trash rather than pick it up on the notion that it is not their responsibility; and of students who use the HUB walk lights for target practice with a variety of missiles. I wonder if any of those raising indignant voices about the landfill fall into any of the situations I have described.

The article alludes to the need for a student watch-dog organization to protect the environment. I submit that the student body would do well to clean its own kettle first. That alone would improve the environment to say nothing of bringing the college costs down.

In the two seasons I have been privileged to work at the Physical Plant, I have observed that those who work there are caring professionals and that they are acutely sensitive to any issue which involves the health, safety and welfare of the Whitworth Student Body.

Guder responds

Majorities not always feasible

To the editor,

I am writing in response to Tim Boggess' excellent opinion article, "Students lack influence" (10/27/86). I think I understand why such feelings of frustration can arise. But I must question whether an academic institution can, in fact, ever be the kind of democracy Tim envisions. Academic goals, standards of achievement, commitment to excellence, grades, research and scholarship, and an approach to liberal learning which is Christian are not issues upon which it is possible or realistic to vote in a town hall meeting. Values, truth and knowledge cannot always be subjected to the tyranny of popularity and majority decisions.

But in spite of that basic fact about education, I believe that every part of this community has considerable influence on its decision-making. Our Board of Trustees possesses ultimate authority and responsibility for the college, but we try to develop a broad consensus on any issue before going to the Board for a vote. Where the issues concern students, then the voice(s) of students must be heard and taken seriously. That can happen in a variety of ways, ranging from the informal discussions such as last Monday evening in the HUB, to student representatives on a broad range of governance committees, to resolutions of the ASWC, to student delegates on board committees, and much more. Every administrator welcomes concerned students who want to raise questions or challenge positions with which they disagree. We are delighted to respond to student initiatives which help air the issues.

I am personally persuaded that we must always take enough time to work through the discussion process so that, if at the end of it we still disagree, we can all say that we honestly understand the points of view with which we differ. And that is part of the task of an academic institution like Whitworth: to learn how to disagree reasonably, helpfully and Christianly. Perhaps we can alleviate the very real frustration Tim feels by finding more ways, more platforms to explore these important issues — and while doing so, respect each other. I welcome Tim's statement of concern and the spirit in which he writes. It is extremely important to know these views. Help us find creative ways to move from frustration to productive discussion and then, who knows, to surprising compromise!

Stress, pressure, anxiety Pure enjoyment a possible cure

by Sandy Wark
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

Oh, blessed simplicity, that seizes swiftly what cleverness, tired out in the service of vanity, may grasp but slowly.

Soren Kierkegaard

This campus is aging quickly. White hairs are sprouting faster than the new patches of grass on which everyone has been walking. Faces are creased with anxiety. Dark circles underline bloodshot eyes. And it seems natural — "we are students-faculty are we not?"

A child throws her head back and laughs — a sweet, melodious sound, a sound which cuts to the heart of those who could not throw their heads back and laugh. Their necks are too stiff, and laughter — who has the time?

Stress is a sickness shared by many on this campus. It would seem that unless one is over-burdened with tests, papers, meetings and miscellaneous other commitments, they really aren't doing their job correctly.

True there is much to be stressed about. The number of activities planned for Homecoming/trustees'/parents'/ Fall musical/midterm week; they were enough to put anyone behind for the rest of the semester. However, much of the stress that one suffers is indeed self-inflicted torture.

What power does a deadline, or test have in and of itself? None. And yet some people are considering suicide because they missed a deadline or flunked a test. Others, while not contemplating suicide, are living in misery.

Stop. Think about it. Is this rational behavior? The answer is not, however, to throw test books out the window and cancel all appointments. Nor is it to lock oneself in one's room until every last paper is written and test studied for.

Somewhere between the two extremes there is room for a walk through fallen leaves with a friend or an hour listening to good music. An hour or two of pure enjoyment is no sin. Anxiety and guilt take more energy than a run through the park.

Kierkegaard's comment is profound. It is but a vain delusion to take life so seriously that the ease of simplicity is forever lost.

St. Marie goes professional Interplayers offer cut prices

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth students can now enjoy live, professional theater productions at movie prices. An arrangement between local businesses and the Spokane Interplayers Ensemble provides a limited number of student vouchers exchangeable for half-price admissions to Tuesday and Wednesday performances.

Full-time students can obtain the vouchers from Sally Thompson, Theater Arts secretary in Cowles Auditorium, and Terry Mitchell, English secretary in Westminster Hall. Student ID is required.

Box office prices are $7 and $9. The voucher program makes these seats available for $3.50 and $4.50. "Professional theater at these prices is terrific!" said Rick Hornor, Associate Professor of Theater Arts.

Spokane Interplayers Ensemble was founded in 1980 by Bob and Joan Welch. It is an associate member of Theater Communications Group, a network of nearly 200 resident professional theaters all over the country. More than 150 professional actors auditioned for the performing company this season. Most of these auditions took place in Seattle.

Senior Todd St. Marie, Theater Arts major, is the first local talent to appear with Interplayers. He will perform in their production of "Arsenic and Old Lace," Nov. 21-Dec. 13.

Rehearsals started last Tuesday and St. Marie said, "I'm at a working level of excitement now. In any theater production, actors and actresses must become their characters. In college we take this seriously, but the depth of these actors is something more.

Located at 174 S. Howard, Interplayers opened the season with "Brighton Beach Memoirs," written by Neil Simon. It is an autobiographical play, with a mixture of comedy and drama, dealing with the author's life in New York during the Depression. The play closes Nov. 8.

The rest of the 1986-87 season includes several comedies, and will continue until June 13.

Unique actors play Cowles

by Dan Thomson
of The Whitworthian

The Tony Award-winning National Theatre of the Deaf will be performing in Cowles Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 8.

The group, founded 19 years ago, is currently based in Chester, Conn. They have become internationally celebrated after crisscrossing the world. Their performances are rooted in mime but address the hearing.

Through sign language and physical motion, actors convey their performance.

"To imply that the performance and its songs will be a mere translation of spoken words, or that the performance should be limited to the hearing-impaired, would be a major injustice to the expressive powers in the performance," said one reporter.

The 10 member company will be performing Carson MacCuller's "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter," set in a small town during the 1930's.

In this production, several of the characters look for someone who "speaks their language." They are drawn to a fellow loner who is deaf. Ironically all of these people choose to pour out their hearts to the one person who cannot

Department of Energy (DOE) would "follow the law to the letter" on the choice of the nation's nuclear waste dump

It has been proposed that Hanford, located in south, central Washington be designated as the nation's nuclear waste dump.

Hanford is a key issue in both Adam's and Gorton's campaign. Both have accused the DOE of breaking the law in choosing Hanford as a finalist.

Reagan addressed the Democrats of Spokane, challenging them to find the party with principle.

"Some change principle for a party, some change party on principle," Reagan said.

He accused the Democratic Party of lacking leadership, comparing the party to a marching band going the wrong way.

The scene at the Coliseum included The Wave of red, white and blue signs through the stands and high school and college marching bands.

Not everyone was as pleased to see the President in Spokane. Some 250 protestors lined the street protesting Reagan's policy on Central America, on Women's issues, S.D.I., the Department of Energy and the Hanford issue.

Reagan's presence brought national coverage to Spokane and Slade Gorton's campaign. His eighteen hour visit ended with a private reception.

He'll spend the weekend in California at his ranch in Santa Barbara.

Diakonia students share experiences

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Answering the call of Christ to be both ministers and servants several Whitworth students became involved in the Diakonia program last summer.

"Diakonia" is a greek word used in the New Testament which translated means "service" or "ministry".

Participation in the service group means that students must help raise funds needed to send them to various parts of the country and the world for a summer of practical service ministries.

"They grow and learn from the Diakonia process. It's shocking for the students to work with poor kids and have their whole lifestyle questioned, and then come back and try and live the same kind of lifestyle that they did before," said Nancy Fox, coordinator for the Diakonia program.

In Forum on Friday, Nov. 7, the students who participated last summer will relate some of their experiences and personal reflections.

Among the students involved were Kelly Henrickson, Karen Mabeus and Lisa Davis.

Kelly Henrickson went to Northern Ireland. "Coming to Northern Ireland was the absolute best thing that I could hear. Despite his deafness, they find a person who listens with his eyes and heart.

Organizers of the event and students in general are convinced that the acting troupe will be a positively unique form of entertainment.

"Students have been complaining that there is nothing to do but go to movies and dances," said Glenn Smith, director of student activities. "This will be a great opportunity for students to enjoy something completely different and entertaining.

"It's great that Whitworth is expressing concern for people who have disabilities," said Jay Patterson, Math major, "I've been legally blind since I was 13, and it's very pleasing to her that Whitworth is acting instead of talking.

"Movies and dances have the tendency to get old quick durhave done this summer," she wrote.

Karen Mabeus went to West Germany and assisted people in a rest home.

"It was not glamorous or fun but it has created in me a capacity to empathize with and recognize the suffering in others," Mabeus wrote.

Lisa Davis worked at a place for troubled adolescents in Colo. called Dale House.

"I cannot write all of the joy I feel and see as staff and kids experience the hope of knowing and experiencing our Lord Jesus Christ. Dale House not only provides shelter and food, but a hope and evidence in Christ's healing as well," Davis wrote.

ing the school year," said Lisa Breeding, Computer Science major. "I'm glad that Whitworth is getting involved with the arts."

The performance at Cowles Auditorium is being sponsored by the Associated Students of Whitworth College and the Spokane Service Center & Hard of Hearing. Further support will come from the Western Arts Foundation, the Washington State Arts Commission, and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Tickets will be available at M & M Ticket outlets and the Student Store. Prices are $7.50 for the general public and $3.25 for Whitworth students.

Juggler's expertise makes it look easy

by Jennifer Seyler
of The Whitworthian

If you've always wanted to learn to juggle but were too intimidated by its complexity then Matt Howard is the man to talk with.

Howard is a sophomore English and Education double-major and a master juggler. He has impressed many with his juggling on the streets as well as in talent shows. His beginnings, however, were not quite as glorious.

"I was working on a work crew at Malibu Young Life Camp and saw a guy there," said Howard. "From then on I always wanted to learn to juggle."

It wasn't until he was working in a restaurant in Odessa, Washington that he actually learned the sport.

"I grabbed some oranges," remembered Howard, "and proceeded to make orange juice with them."

"From then on it's been pretty much on my own except for a Shields and Yarnell video every now and then," he explained.

He watches the video to get better at his juggling and said that their talent humbles him a great deal.

The excitement of juggling doesn't end when a person masters the three-ball pattern and Howard has gone on to learn other tactics.

Howard has juggled rings, rubber balls, pool balls, and even gallon cans of peaches.

"I almost broke my foot when I messed up on those," he said.

He is presently working on juggling four balls and said once he has learned he'll be on his way to six.

"It will be easier to skip five and go on to six. I can conceptually see them moving, now I've just got to coordinate that

International Club harmonizing diversity

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Are you interested in discovering the diversity and traditions of other cultures, but are unable to afford the high cost of foreign travel? If so, take some time and investigate Whitworth's International Club.

The club consists of about 100 members and contains a fairly equal ratio of American and foreign students.

President Phillippe Coulon, originally from Belgium, stressed that the ultimate goal of the club is "an integration of American and foreign students in an atmosphere which is fun, so that they communicate openly, and learn about each other's cultures."

"People often avoid close contact with others from backgrounds different from their own because they don't understand each other. Through the International Club we hope to break down cultural barriers and promote an appreciation for all ethnic backgrounds."

Coulon related a story of an American and an Oriental student eating together at SAGA for the first time. "In Oriental cultures, silence is considered a virtue," said Coulon. "On the other hand, Americans enjoy social contact and a conversation during meals. Initially, the Oriental student wonders why the American talks without saying something important, and the American doesn't understand the reticence of the Oriental student." Coulon explained that through the International Club students learn to recognize traditional differences and develop friendships based on mutual understanding and respect.

Many activities have been planned this year in an effort to involve as many students as possible in the club. In mid-November the club is sponsoring a week-end ski trip to Canada.

"The trip is open to all students and registration forms are available in the Student Life office at a cost of $30.00. The trip will be fun and relaxing, and we're hoping for a lot of student involvement," said Coulon.

"We're also planning to celebrate New Year's in the Oriental tradition this year, and we'll finish off the year with an International banquet in April with lots of food and entertainment," said Coulon.

The club holds regular meetings and sponsors movies on Monday nights. The next meeting for the club will be Thursday, Nov. 6, in the West Sunset Room at SAGA. "It's open to everyone," said Coulon. "We usually spend the first part of the meetings introducing new people, and then we have open discussions and plan future activities."

Freshman Luca Sambrotta, from Italy, summed up his feelings about the organization.

"I feel that the International Club has in the past, and is continuing to do an excellent job in integrating us foreign students into American society," he said. "We learn to understand and cooperate with others without feeling isolated. We all want to be an active part of Whitworth and share our opinions and customs based on our various backgrounds."

thought with my hands," said Howard.

There is an instructional book for potential jugglers ("Juggling for the Complete Klutz" by John Cassidy), but Howard thinks it's a waste of time.

"The book complicates the process of juggling," he said. "It's just a matter of throwing a ball from one hand to the other and making sure that the catching hand is empty."

According to Howard, the best way to learn to juggle is with another person by watching and trying it yourself.

Self-satisfaction and entertainment are only a couple of reasons that makes juggling useful.

"I like to use it as an illustration or to make a point," explained Howard.

He demonstrated the likeness of politics and juggling with his weighted tennis balls.

"Politics and juggling are the same," Howard explained. "You have to be at the right place at the right time, take what's coming at you, and get rid of it quick."

Juggling can also serve as a release from stress, but that does have its drawbacks.

"If I'm just mentally fatigued then it works out well, but if I'm physically fatigued as well, it backfires because I get really frustrated," he said.

Despite the ups and downs of juggling, Howard feels that juggling is a positive experience.

"I may be a failed street juggler, but it's a lot of fun and if you know how to do it, it's simple and looks great!"

Foreign films in Spokane explore other cultures

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

Believe it or not, there is a film-world outside the United States. In fact, many modern foreign films are better than American movies.

Now, thanks to some wise financial management and arts-conscious decision-making, Spokane moviegoers can see some of these wonderful foreign (and classic American) films on the big screen.

First-run films are expensive to obtain and difficult to turn a profit with. At large theaters, like the eight-screen Newport Cinemas, it takes major capital to keep those screens full, so less-expensive recent foreign and classic movies are now being shown in addition to the blockbusters. These are some wonderful opportunities for expanding your cultural horizons.

Presently playing at Newport Cinemas in this category are "Ran" and "Twist and Shout".

"Ran" is a Japanese-made samurai version of King Lear. A three-hour epic drama and adventure, it is the story of a 16th century warlord and his three sons.

Brilliantly filmed with Mount Fuji as the backdrop, "Ran" contains the most awe-inspiring battle scene I have ever witnessed.

"Twist and Shout" is a great Danish film about two boys growing up in 1964, the Beatles era. It deals with more than music and parties, however, as this movie gives some very poignant insights while still telling a good story.

The title is more than just a song's command; twisting and shouting is the symbolic way these boys must break out of childhood. It is a film which lingers in the mind.

Coming soon to Newport are "A Great Wall" and "Belizaire the Cajun," taken on several authorities to be two terrific pictures.

"A Great Wall" is the story of a computer scientist who returns to China after 30 years with his thoroughly American wife and son. In China, his sister and her family are fascinated by their guests, who might as well have dropped in from another planet.

"Belizaire the Cajun" is set in 19th century Louisiana bayou country. The titular hero is a roguish folk healer accused of murder in a vigilante's plot to drive away the Cajuns and grab their land. The film plays comedy against dark suspense and succeeds.

Another theater with a diverse format is Riverpark Square Cinemas, located downtown beside the parking garage on Post.

This theater is showing "A Festival of Great Films" on its two screens, which change weekly. These cover all categories; from the 30's to the present, all countries, color and black-and-white.

Showing now are "The Lady Eve," a comedy starring Henry Fonda and Barbara Stanwyck, and Jean-Luc Goddard's "Weekend", the ultimate 'end-of-civilization-as-we-know-it' apocalyptic vision film.

Opening on Nov. 7 is the 1967 Academy Awards sweeper "Bonnie and Clyde" with Warren Beatty and Faye Dunaway, and an Indian film, "Days and Nights in the Forest", a rich but simple masterpiece about four men on a trip.

The quality extends through the 'end of the year, highlighted in December by 'Great Musicals' and 'Great Comedies' beginning on the 12th.

The only way that theaters will continue to show these movies is if people will go see them (common sense, right?). But people aren't going, and they should be.

It's easy to get trapped in today's highly-commercial Americanism, ignoring possibilities to get to know other cultures and even our own history through film.

Don't miss out on what these films have to offer all of us.

Brothers, sisters at Whitworth more like friends than family

Whitworth families: Part II Siblings

by Jill Noël
of The Whitworthian

How well do you get along with your brothers and sisters?

Part two of a three-part series on families at Whitworth deals with the relationships between brothers and sisters on campus.

Valerie (Buch) Eckley and Susan Buch are sisters. Valerie was married last summer, so this is an interesting relationship.

"I was excited that Susan was coming here," commented Valerie. "It's just fine — we've always gotten along well."

Susan shared these thoughts. "It's not like going to school with her, because she's my friend."

From Ritzville, Wash., Valerie and Susan are both Biology majors. Valerie is a senior who plans to go to Medical School after graduation. Susan is a sophomore this year, and not quite sure what she wants to do with her major.

"Sometimes it's hard, because I put pressure on myself to be like Val," noted Susan. "But I really do have my own identity — I'm not classified as 'Val's little sister'."

"Valerie is my TA (teaching assistant) for Zoology," continued Susan. "I'm really proud of her, to be able to say my sister is the TA."

Although Valerie and Susan see quite a bit of each other, they both try to make time to go to each other's rooms and spend time together.

"A lot of times Bruce (Valerie's husband) and Susan and I will do things together, and sometimes it's just the two of us," added Valerie. "She likes having a brother, since she hasn't had one before."

How do their parents feel about having both children at the same school?

"They thought it was great, because they think Whitworth is a good school," said Valerie. "It's also easier for them to come up and see us both."

Paul and Cathy Lee, from Anaheim, Calif., are in a different situation, since they're so far away from home.

"I like it on the whole, because it's nice to have someone here from home," said Paul, a junior Communications major.

"We're so different, that I thought it might be conflict if we went to the same school," added Cathy, a freshman Education major. "But I think it's fun."

Cathy had visited Whitworth before, and liked the campus and the faculty, which was part of the reason she decided to attend.

"I liked showing her around, and helping with classes and stuff," said Paul.

Cathy agreed and said Paul was a big help during orientation.

They tend to check up on each other occasionally.

"He checks on me to see if I'm studying," laughed Cathy.

"She checks my mailbox to see if I've gotten any mail," noted Paul.

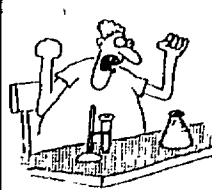

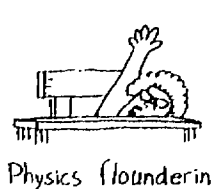

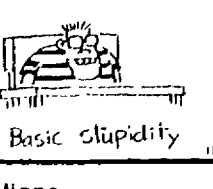

"The hardest thing right now is that I'm in upper division classes, and she doesn't understand how much I have to do," commented Paul. "When she tells me to 'lighten up', it's hard to explain. But she'll be there someday too."

Paul and Cathy join each other for breakfast every Wednesday morning, and occasionally have lunch together.

"It's nice having her here, because it's always somebody to go to when things get tough," added Paul. "We get along and so far we're having fun."

It seems that the Buch/Eckleys and the Lees enjoy having family ties while here at Whitworth. It might be challenging at times, but it certainly is rewarding, as all of them would agree.

Lutes 64, Bucs 34

Pirates lose out in scoring battle

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

Give me a fire hydrant, Rodney Dangerfield, and the Pirate football team and I can prove the existence of respect.

Pacific Lutheran University came to Spokane ranked number six in the nation in the NAIA Division II poll. They sported a five win and one loss record. Their only loss coming at the hands of the number one team in the nation, Linfield.

PLU head coach, Frosty Westering, was not taking the game quite so lightly. In a pregame release, Westering was cautious saying, "They (Whitworth) can play with anybody in any given game." With this in mind the Lutes calmed their coaches apprehension by beating the Pirates 64-34.

It looked as if the Pirates were going to pull out an upset midway through the third quarter. PLU had scored twice in the third quarter to lead 36-14. The Pirates tightened the score on a 1-yard run by Rich Merrill with 4:29 left in the third. Two minutes later quarterback Blaine Bennett hit Mark Houk with a 12-yard touchdown pass. At that point PLU lead 36-28.

That is all the closer the Lutes would allow the Pirates to get. In the last 15:27 of the game PLU outscored Whitworth 28-6. All of this drew post game praise from Westering. Both teams gathered in the end zone at the end of the game sharing a common sportsman-like gesture. Westering commented on the tenacity the Pirates had exhibited in the game and offered words of praise and respect in providing one of the toughest games PLU had played this season.

Westering added to his concern of the potent Pirate attack, "Two touchdowns were not a comfortable lead," making reference to the 50-34 lead his team had with 12:11 remaining in the game.

Obviously, the score indicated it was an offensive battle. The Lutes got a big day out of their leading receiver Steve Welch and running back Tom Napier. Welch caught seven passes from quarterback Jeff Yarnell for 124 yards and three touchdowns. Napier collected 209 yards rushing on eleven carries. He had touchdown runs of 52 and 71 yards. Yarnell finished the day completing 11 of 23 passes for 200 yards with three touchdowns and two interceptions. This added up to an overwhelming offensive output that buried the Pirates.

The blowout did not actually occur until late in the game. PLU put 10 points on the board in the first quarter on a Yarnell to Welch pass and a 33-yard fieldgoal. The Pirate offense sputtered in the first quarter but got on track in the second. The Lutes opened the second quarter scoring on a 6-yard run to give them a 16-0 lead. The Pirates then answered with a 15-yard touchdown pass from Bennett to Gary Dawson. PLU added one more first-half score on a 70-yard run by Pat Dorsey. Dorsey finished the day with 85 yards on four carries. Neither offense would score again in the first half, yet Whitworth put eight more points on the board. With 1:15 remaining until halftime Tom Shanholtzer picked off a Yarnell pass and took it 97 yards for a touchdown. Bennett added the two point conversion on a 3-yard run to bring Whitworth within eight points, trailing 22-14 at the half.

In the third quarter PLU picked up two quick scores on a Welch TD reception and Napier's 52-yard run, to lead 36-14. The Pirates would not say die even at this point. With Merrill's 1-yard run and Houk's 12-yard TD pass from Bennett the Bucs trimmed the lead to 36-28.

With 2:29 remaining in the third quarter Westering knew his team was facing a big test. When the grades were given out the Lutes received an "A." In the next six-and-a-half minutes PLU scored four touchdowns to add 28 points, bringing their grand total to 64.

The final Pirate score was sandwiched between the four PLU scores. With 12:11 remaining in the game Rick Bolen found Dawson for a 39-yard TD pass completion.

Although the defense was somewhat overwhelmed a few stars shined. Scott Sadler had 11 tackles to lend the defense adding a quarterback sack. Shanholtzer had eleven tackles along with two interceptions. Tracy Flugel added eight tackles and a quarterback sack.

On the other side of the ball the Pirate attack rolled up 380 yards of offense. PLU had 596 yards with 396 on the ground and 200 in the air. Whitworth collected 385 in the air and minus five on the ground. There were two Pirate rushers with plus yardage. Merrill collected 16 yards of five carries and Bolen added 39 on three carries. In the air Bennett led the quarterback trio completing 27 of 47 passes for 272 yards and two touchdowns along with three interceptions. Bolen hit on 4 of 10 for 72

Mexicans slaughter Duckmen; grasp intramural championship

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

Some things never change. No one said it was going to be easy, but there was a pregame feeling that maybe the consecutive shutout streak of Off Campus would be broken in Sunday's championship game.

Some things never change, and the Off Campus Mexicans sent the Duckmen of Carlson waddling home after a 31-0 thumping in the Intramural Flag Football Championship.

Sunday's game may have been the hardest hitting game of the season. If not, it was the longest. Officials inserted a regular stopping clock instead of the running time used in the regular season games. Despite the lopsided score Carlson played well against the bigger Mexican squad.

The Mexicans' first score came on Brad Larkin's bomb to Scott Wetzel. The extra point attempt failed and Off Campus led 6-0.

Carlson, which did not enter Mexican territory until late in the second half, punted after their first possession. The Off Campus offense came out soaring under the helm of Larkin. This time it was Kurt Rector going deep down the sideline and hauling in Larkin's pass for the second score.

The Mexican's final score of the first half came on Boo Boatman's sliding grab just inside the end zone line. Larkin rolled right because of the heavy Carlson rush, and hit Boatman back across the field in the middle of the end zone. Off Campus lead 18-0 at the end of the first half.

In the second half, the Carlson offense regrouped and was a little more effective in moving the ball but Carlson was still unable to put the ball in the end zone. In fact, it was the Mexican defense that scored as Dave Jansens picked up a Carlson fumble and rambled 35 yards for a touchdown.

The score remained 24-0 throughout most of the second half until Larkin ended a Carlson drive by picking off John Wall's pass and returning it 40 yards for the Mexican's final score. Chris Barnhart scored the extra point to give the Mexicans their 31-0 win.

The shutout was an appropriate victory for Off Campus, who capped an excellent season at 7-0. The Duckmen finished at 4-2. The officials, players and fans should all be commended in making it an outstanding football season.

Intramural volleyball is entering its second week of competition. Campus Mix is leading the recreational league with a record of 2-0. The competitive league is being led by Upper Volta, also 2-0.

Volleyball heads to Districts

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Winding down the season before District Tournaments this weekend, the Whitworth women's volleyball team breezed past Whitman College and Central Washington University last week.

The week marked the first and only home game the Lady Bucs had the month of October, and the first weekend in six weeks that they weren't on the road.

Both of these elements spurred the volleyballers on to energetic play.

Wednesday night, Whitworth raked Whitman over the coals before a good-sized crowd in the Fieldhouse.

Whitworth started out slow in the first game of the match. Missed serves and mis-judgments plagued the home team. Senior Debbie Burkhart brought back intensity for the Bucs with her aggressiveness at the net.

Colleen 'Red' Schlonga, also a senior, acted as Whitworth's defensive weapon, foiling many attempts by Whitman to score. Whitworth triumphed 15-6.

The Pirates appeared duggish at the beginning of the second match again. Coach Shelton called for a time-out as her team slipped behind Whitman, 3-7. Whitman continued to prey upon the Pirates' lack of motivation, and their lead grew, 12-3.

The Bucs were obviously down, but not out. Substitutions became a key element in the second game as Freshman Kim Gray, Sophomore Kim Newman, and Junior Laura Black entered the court and generated enthusiasm for the team.

Gray used her vertical jump to overcome her lack of height to surprise the Whitman team with her powerful hits. Black kept the Bucs alive with her consistent serving.

This new energy combined with the expertise of Schlonga, Burkhart and Lei Ann Akau dashed Whitman's hope of stealing a victory, as the Pirates pulled it off, 16-14.

The third game of the match was primarily defensive and rallies were long and wild. A fan remarked, "Whitman came up with some good saves."

The Lady Bucs made up their minds late in the game to take charge as they took the lead 11-10. There was no looking back from that point on, and rallying behind Schlonga's serves, Whitworth captured the match with a third game score of 15-10.

Gray commented after the game, "We pulled it off by working on the basics." She noted, however, that, "There was no reason for them to get that close to us. We need to come off strong."

Whitman's head coach, Stacy Shank was clearly discouraged after the match. "It's been a rough season. I have a short team and we're inconsistent," she said, shrugging. Shank praised the Bucs, "Whitworth has Lei Ann and Deb, what more can I say?"

Thursday night, the Bucs made the trip to Ellensburg to pay a visit to the Central Wildcats. In their new style, Whitworth dropped CWU in three, 15-10, 15-8, 15-9.

Burkhart contributed 11 kills and 9 digs to lead the Bucs, who raised their record to 37-13 overall and 34-9, NAIA.

Tonight the Bucs host their last home game of the season as they take on Eastern Washington University at 7:30 p.m. in the Fieldhouse.

First year runner goes to Nationals

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

Sophomore Kelli Burch, a first-year runner on the women's cross country team, will be the lone Whitworth representative at the NAIA Nationals in Kenosha, Wis. Nov. 15.

Burch placed fifth overall with a time of 18:24 at last weekend's NAIA District tournament. The top three teams, and top five finishers not on the winning teams qualify for Nationals.

Burch was four seconds off of the fourth place finisher, Molly Ostlund, of UPS. The Lady Bucs finished fifth overall. Results for the individuals were: Jan Aubry — 16th and a time of 19:04, Mary Adams — 27th, 20:07, Melissa Johnson — 28th, 20:11, Laura Parker — 36th, 21:46, Lynnae Stevens — 37th, 21:48, and Bobbi Mischler — 39th, 23:12.

Heading into the weekend's competition, Coach Hal Werner was optimistic about the women's chances, particularly Burch's. "It's a dogfight, all the chips are on the table, and anything can happen: Kelli is physically ready for this, although she's still inexperienced."

Burch's inexperience didn't hamper her ability this weekend, on her performance she commented, "I was nervous before the race, but once it started I just ran."

The men didn't fare as well as the women did, they finished a very distant fifth. Those representing the Pirates were: Alan Bracken, Guy Duryee, Scott Hink, Rod Holman, Peter Houston, Jeff Mullaney, and Peat Sutherland.

The men's poor finish was attributed to injuries. The team has been plagued by injuries since day one. Alan Bracken, the mens number one runner was the latest casualty. "Alan is still hindered because of his inability to train (on account of his injury)," commented Werner. Guy Duryee, a freshman runner said on the weekend's performance, "The team ran flat this weekend, we weren't physically prepared." Individual results were unavailable for the men at printing time.

For both the men and the women, except Burch, the 1986 season is over. It was a combination of victories, defeats, injuries, and a lot of improving.

opponent's 18-yard line and shoot.

The players had their share of goofs and triumphs, such as kicking the ball into their own net and scoring a goal on a throw-in that barely touched the goalies hands.

The Bucs had to play some exceptionally good teams, and those games are remembered in the words of Coach Einar Thorarinnsson, "The team did well and played hard."

The high point of the season came Homecoming weekend when the Bucs won their pre-match against Evergreen State College, reaching the .500 mark, a pre-season goal. Two more goals were to play hard soccer and to have fun doing that. Both goals were accomplished.

Freshman Steve Price sums up his feelings of the season,

"There was team unity this year. We all are happy with the outcome of the year, with winning 13 games and with the team spirit. The players were a team on and off the field. We worked hard together."

Jeff Frykholm, a sophomore team captain, said, "One of the high points for me was shutting out Warner Pacific (9/27, 0-0). Our new coach is good and knowledgeable about the game of soccer."

This season, the Bucs soccer team had two weeks of pre-season training and then eight weeks of season play. They played 26 games.

Players and fans alike are looking forward to next year's season, and with the young team this year, they can expect to do as well, if not better next year.

Whitworth's "Judo Kid" to fight Olympic athletes

by Debbie Saparto
of The Whitworthian

It is true that you can't judge a book by its cover.

At first glance, Sophomore Greg Gillam appears to be a quiet, typical Whitworth student. But this man possesses a talent that could be the making of a champion.

Judo is Gillam's claim to fame and his aptitude for the sport has earned him a black belt, as well as respect and prestige nationwide.

Stephen Meigs

Recently, Gillam has accepted an invitation to compete in the 1986 US Open Judo Championships, Nov. 19-22, at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Gillam said he will be fighting against the best the world of judo has to offer. His opponents will come from as close as the US to as far away as Japan.

"Every country's Olympic team has been invited to this Open," said Gillam. "All the world class judo athletes will be there."

Last year, when he fought in this same tournament, Gillam progressed up the ladder until he was finally eliminated by Korean Jung-og Hwang. This isn't so bad when you realize that Hwang had already won the Silver medal for judo in the 1984 Olympic Games.

But before he even steps onto the mat, Gillam will have gone through countless hours of training and practice.

Gillam explained what is involved in his preparation for the Championships.

He said he usually starts training about four weeks prior to any competition. In addition to his turnouts at the gym, Gillam runs about 30 miles a week and diets to reach his competing weight of 132 pounds. He also emphasized his need for sleep during his training.

"I need eight hours a night - 12 hours if I can get it," he said.

Gillam actually practices judo four nights a week, three hours a night. He said this time is set aside for conditioning and perfecting old and new techniques.

Before these turnouts, he makes it a point to watch judo films. Gillam explained that he watches them not only to watch what other people are doing with their different throws and moves, but he also watches the films to get the quickness of judo in his mind.

"The real world moves in a totally slow mode compared to judo," he said. "I have to watch the quickness all the time to stay used to it."

Gillam explained that judo is a form of the martial arts. It involves trips, throws, chokes, arm locks and wrestling. The idea of judo is to accumulate points by knocking the opponents off their feet.

"The better the move, based on how the move is done and how hard he falls, the better chance you have of winning a match," he said.

Gillam said that his father first interested him in judo when he was 10 years old.

"He just kept taking me with him to practice," said Gillam. "After two years one of my coaches worked with me on a technique, I became good at it and started winning with that move."

As he won more and more, Gillam said his interest got higher. He started competing in tournaments all over the Northwest, and at 14 fought in his first national championships. Since then he has fought in countless tournaments, including six national championships. He has claimed the championship title of 10 Northwest tournaments and four Big Sky tournaments.

Then, last summer, after a knee injury, Gillam decided to retire after 15 years of competition.

"After my knee got healthy and I was invited back to OTC (Olympic Training Center), I came out of retirement and started training again," he said.

However, before he goes to Colorado he has another tour-ament to contend with. On Nov. 8 Gillam will compete in the Las Vegas Open Judo Championships in Las Vegas, Nevada. Anyone from North America, including the U.S. Canada and Mexico, is eligible to compete.

Gillam foresees some tough competition. He explained that he will face one competitor that won the national championships in high school. "He's always tough," said Gillam.

Two years ago, Gillam made the finals in this tournament and lost. This time, despite what may be a tough road ahead, Gillam vowed, "I'm gonna be fighting. I think I can take it."

Whatever is ahead for Gillam, a trophy in Las Vegas or a spot on the 1988 Olympic Judo team, he deserves the recognition of being one of the most talented judo fighters in the United States.

yards and one touchdown with three interceptions. Todd White was 2 for 3 for 41 yards with no touchdowns or interceptions.

Wayne Ralph, continuing his quest for another 100 catch season, caught 12 passes for 148 yards. Ralph entered the game with 64 receptions. He needs to average twelve receptions in his last two games to reach 100. Houk caught ten passes for 100 yards with one touchdown. Dawson added seven receptions for 112 yards and two touchdowns. Larry Kelly was the only other Pirate receiver to contribute. Kelly had four catches for 25 yards.

The Pirates travel to LaGrande, Ore. to take on Eastern Oregon State College next Saturday. They return home Nov. 15 for the final game of the season hosting the University of Puget Sound.

Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Visiting speakers begin week's stay on campus

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

Laurence G. O'Donnell, associate editor, "The Wall Street Journal," and Joan C. O'Donnell, coordinator, refugee resettlement, Catholic community services, will be visiting Fellows at Whitworth College Nov. 16-22.

The O'Donnells are a part of the Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellows program which is a national effort to help relate a liberal education to the professional world.

Visiting Fellows have brought about a better understanding between the academic and non-academic worlds for more than a decade, according to the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation.

Through a variety of scheduled events and activities the visiting Fellows hope to answer questions students might be asking and to communicate their ideas fully.

During this next week, both O'Donnells will speak in classrooms, on panels or public platforms, and informal encounters at meals. A special table will be reserved at SAGA for meals with the Fellows.

File Photo

The O'Donnells will also spend time with students in clubs, dormitories, individual conferences and at social functions.

Laurence G. O'Donnell joined "The Wall Street Journal" in 1958 in the bond department in New York City. He held different positions on the paper and was later named managing editor in 1977. Today, O'Donnell is conducting a study for a possible future Latin America edition of the Journal, and is directing a new minority hiring program for new reporters at the Journal and other Dow Jones publications.

Whitworth College was selected several years ago to become a part of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation after receiving national recognition as a liberal arts college.

According to Jim Hunt, professor and chair of the History/Political Science department, it is really something that people of national recognition, especially from the eastern United States, visit Whitworth College. Being a member of the Foundation is a valuable means of introducing students to upper echelon business men and women who possess a liberal arts background.

At the end of this year Whitworth will be deciding if it will continue to be supportive of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation. Currently, the Whitworth Foundation funds the visiting Fellows with approximately $2,000 to $2,500 each year. The money is used to bring the Fellows to the college.

Second time is sweeter; Ralph sets NAIA record

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

Records are made to be broken...So believes Wayne Ralph.

The senior receiver for the Whitworth football team broke his own NAIA national receiving record in the Pine Bowl Saturday.

Ralph caught 16 passes upping his season total to 105. The old record set by Ralph in 1985 was 101 receptions.

Ralph sees the record as a group effort.

"Everyone who played on the team is part of it," he said. "It's more of a Whitworth Pirate record."

Breaking the record for the second time was even better than the first for the Whitworth senior.

"It means more," said Ralph, "No one thought I could catch that many balls again."

Quarterback Rick Bolen saw the record as a chance for Ralph to show just how good he was.

"This year he proved it was no fluke and he proved he was a high caliber receiver," Bolen said.

Ralph was the key player the Pirates went to in difficult situations according to Bolen. "If you have a critical play, he's going to find the spot, get open and catch the ball," Bolen said.

Offensive lineman Steve Leifer knew he could count on Ralph.

Bruce Eckley

Senior Wayne Ralph (20) heads upfield after catching his record-breaking 102 reception of the '86 season. Senior Eddie Davis (34) leads blocking on the play.

Ralph's Receiving Records

Single season	105	NAIA First
Career	248	NAIA Third
Season per game	11.7	NAIA First
Career per game	8	NAIA First
Single season yardage	1,204	NAIA First

"I felt confident knowing every time I looked up after a block we were going to move down field," Leifer said.

Offensive coordinator Arnie Tyler also counted on Ralph on crucial plays.

"When it was a tough situation we could go to him,"

Tyler said. "Anytime we needed a key play there was a confidence there."

Mark Houk, Gary Dawson and Larry Kelly also hauled in several passes; 64, 60 and 21 respectively. Houk and Dawson will also rank near the top of the nation's receivers.

Experienced Christian musicians mix rock, pop in upcoming show

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

"I've been quoted as saying that I hate rock 'n' roll. That is obviously ridiculous," said rocker Phil Keaggy, instrumentalist and contemporary Christian performer who along with Bryan Duncan, will perform on Saturday, Nov. 22 at 7:30 p.m. in Cowles Auditorium.

"Keaggy's music sounds as if he's been keeping an ear open to new musical trends and incorporating them into his unique style," said one critic.

Originally Keaggy was the lead guitarist for the band, Glass Harp, and shared billings with Chicago, Iron Butterfly, and Yes at the age of 17. In his three years with the band, he recorded three albums with them. "With Glass Harp," "Synergy," and "It Makes Me Glad,"— and his first Christian album, "What A Day." He now has 10 Christian albums to his credit.

Keaggy was raised in the church but he hasn't always applied his religious knowledge to his own life. That changed when his mother died in an automobile acci-

What we don't know just might hurt us

by John Sowers
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

When a child does something wrong, do you reward them by giving them candy? And if you do would you be surprised if the child did the wrong thing again? If you answer a) yes, and b) yes again, then perhaps you have a career in the Reagan Administration ahead of you.

Simply put, you don't negotiate with terrorists. All it does is promote the same reprehensible behaviors again.

This is not the first time you've heard that you don't negotiate with terrorists. Reagan has been telling us that since before he came to the White House and he's been preaching that to our allies as well. That's why the secret negotiations with Iran come as such a shock. Sheriff Ron has backed down to the demands of the Black Barts of Tehran. It looks like the sun has set on the "High Noon" President.

Reagan's justification for the arms negotiations with Iran revolves around reopening ties with the moderate wing of the Tehran government. With an aged and ailing Khomeini the White House hopes to get its foot in the door with this prized geopolitical country. There is certainly nothing wrong with this goal, but the means to this end certainly has to be questioned.

One: Reagan denies that the arms sales were tied into the release of our hostages held by Islamic Jihad groups. To be frank, no one believes that.

Two: it is illegal for the United States to sell arms to countries placed on our official terrorist list. The Reagan Administration placed Iran on that list a few years back. Again Reagan denies any wrong doing.

Three: the hypocrisy of our don't do as I do but as I say policy with our allies. When Secretary of State George Shultz is busy telling France and England to stay away from Iran and then conversely former National Security Advisor Robert MacFarlane is handing over spare parts to F-14s, it's bound to produce egg on the face of Reagan that may quickly eat through the Teflon coating and stick. Indicative of Allied displeasure with our deception is the tight-lipped silence of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Reagan's fondest supporter.

There is no denying the precarious position of the President. When you are the leader of one of the strongest nations in the world and some of your citizens are being held by terrorists who don't play by the rules you get frustrated. But no matter what the clamor is you don't negotiate. The hard cruel reality is you don't jeopardize the foreign policy of a nation of 250 million for the freedom of a handful of hostages.

Freedom is not neutral

To the editor,

The dialogue between administration and students regarding the 24-hour visitation policy reveals that we are all political philosophers because the dialogue is part of a much wider debate in political theory, namely the debate between freedom and authority. It is a debate which will continue long after graduation.

The dialogue also reveals that we, as Americans, have mixed feelings regarding freedom and authority, in part because we define freedom in various ways. Is freedom the right to do what we want? Or, is it the right to live in such a way that we will contribute to the good of the community?

Darrell Guder's statement that some values should not be up for a vote recalls the observations a 19th century Frenchman made about democracy in America. Alexis de Tocqueville insisted that democracy must be guided. Rather than assuming that freedom means the right to do as one wants, he talked about the "art of being free." In other words, one could be free in "a good" or "bad" sense. Freedom was not neutral. Perhaps one of his most puzzling statements for Americans is that "liberty cannot be established without morality, nor morality without faith." In America, we often define freedom as the absence of moral restraints. For de Tocqueville, Democracy could not survive unless moral restraints existed.

We will always discuss the parameters of liberty and authority. We will always be involved in what de Tocqueville called, "the apprenticeship of liberty." To be an apprentice is to learn how to do something well. Is liberty something in which we need lessons? De Tocqueville would answer no. We must learn to "do" liberty well.

Students should be admired

To the editor,

Being one from ASWC who was directly in the center of the activity of Homecoming, I admit it was the busiest time I have yet experienced during my time at Whitworth. It takes a lot to put together Homecoming Week. You have to see it and feel it day by day.

The word I use to describe what I did see is "PROUD." Admittedly, there was stress at all levels, but the students, many, many of them who created, organized and followed through are to be admired! They were striving for perfection for the enjoyment of the Whitworth community. There were hours upon hours given to make an activity or project the best possible.

Once again, I use the word "PROUD," for that is what I am to have been associated with all the students who made this year's Homecoming one of the best.

Smokeout Nov. 20

November 20, 1986 marks the 10th Anniversary of the Great American Smokeout, and we'd like you to help us celebrate.

Participation in last year's Smokeout topped all previous records. An estimated 23 million Americans — more than 4 out of 10 cigarette smokers — tried to kick their habit for a day, according to the official survey conducted for the American Cancer Society by the Gallup Organization.

Despite the success of last year's event, 54 million Americans continue to smoke year after year, and 320,000 people will die this year because of it.

perience of his love, and the knowledge that my mother had always prayed for my salvation, I came to a new relationship with the Lord, one I had been searching for all my life."

Following Keaggy's conversion, he made a decision to leave the Glass Harp band and spend his life "performing for Jesus."

"Whatever kind of music it takes to reach those people who need God, that's the kind of music I'm going to play," said Keaggy.

"That someone can be this sweet yet play such a mean guitar can only be explained as a divine paradox," said one critic.

Receiving equal billing for the evening's performance is Bryan Duncan.

Duncan, a keyboard player and vocalist who once played with the Sweet Comfort Band, combines gospel sounds and crisp pop in his live performances.

His previous records include "Have Yourself Committed" and "Holy Rollin'."

In these last two solo albums, Duncan seems to take on a more radical pose than in his years as the clean-cut valley boy vocalist with the Sweet Comfort Band.

"It's still Duncan's unmistakable tenor voice that dominates in this progressive pop mix," said one critic.

In his own words, Duncan says his last album is "another light-hearted approach to the very serious matter of total commitment to Jesus Christ."

Both Duncan and Keaggy are high energy performers that superimpose a hopeful message on the skills and talents they possess.

"It makes you just wanna get up and jump all over!" said Duncan. "To me it's fun, energetic, joyous and people need to see that this is very much a part of having an abundant life."

Keaggy and Duncan are being brought to Whitworth by the A.S.W.C.

Tickets are available at the Whitworth Bookstore and all Evangel Bookstores. Whitworth students can buy tickets for $4. General admission is $8, with a discount rate of $7 for groups of 10 or more.

Counseling needs increase; new staff member hired

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

Stress is something everyone has to deal with, including the counseling program of Whitworth.

The hourly demands for students to meet with counselors has greatly exceeded the numbers of hours the counselors could offer so far this year.

The problem has not gone unnoticed.

"The administration in response to student needs has committed additional funding from the contingency fund to provide more counseling hours," said Julie Anderton, vice president of Student Life.

The funding will provide another 15 hours of counseling per week making 39 available.

An additional counselor has also been added to the staff.

Ann Weiss, who has been working in the Health Center as a clinic assistant will now serve as a counselor.

Weiss, a Whitworth graduate, has a M.A. in guidance and counseling and has had special training in drug and alcohol counseling.

Weiss joins current counselors Kyle Storm and Devon Greyerbiehl.

Storm alone has seen 46 different students this year. At this rate he will have met with over 10 percent of the Whitworth student body by the year's end. If trends continue, the counselors could see over 30 percent of the students.

If 10 percent of the students use the counseling facilities at an average college it is considered good, according to Storm.

The counseling staff sees the students' use of the counseling center as a good sign.

"Sometimes it's the healthiest thing to do," said Storm. "It's a healthy sign."

"It's great to see that students are taking advantage of it," Weiss said, "there doesn't seem to be a stigma about going to see a counselor."

It's a good sign of wanting to be healthy."

Rhonda Koele, the Health Center director believes the time of year has a lot to do with the need for counseling.

"From mid-term on the demand gets larger, stress is at a high level from then on," Koele said. "It was a problem last spring, it's not new but it is starting earlier than last year."

We are having a big demand, we are very hopeful we will be able to see students sooner."

What is a sign that you may need help?

"When you have something you don't want to talk to with your friends because you think they won't understand or if a friend sees that they can't help," said Weiss. "It may be a good time to seek professional help."

"Sometimes it's just nice to have someone to talk to and know it's confidential too," Weiss said.

Altering stereotypes is the challenge for ASWC P.R. Rep

by Kim Riemland
of The Whitworthian

The ASWC, in an effort to make itself more visible, has hired a public relations representative to its staff.

The position was created to show students that ASWC is more than just a legislative body.

"Most people's perception of ASWC is that it's student government and that's all," said Glenn Smith, director of student activities.

Most students have no idea how many clubs, activities, and events ASWC offers according to Smith.

This new P.R. position intends to change that by showing what ASWC offers for them. Beyond that, it's up to the students.

"Students will not have a benefit unless they take advantage of it," Smith said.

Senior Kathy Hoadley has been hired for the position. Hoadley was student activities coordinator last year.

activities coordinator last year.

By far the biggest project Hoadley will be tackling is organizing Whitworth's spring festival.

A major goal for "Spring Fest 87" is to get the Spokane community involved and more aware of the college.

"Whitworth is not very well known in the town of Spokane," said Smith, "we're going to try to showcase Whitworth as much as possible."

The event is still in the brainstorming stage and anyone with ideas should contact Hoadley through ASWC.

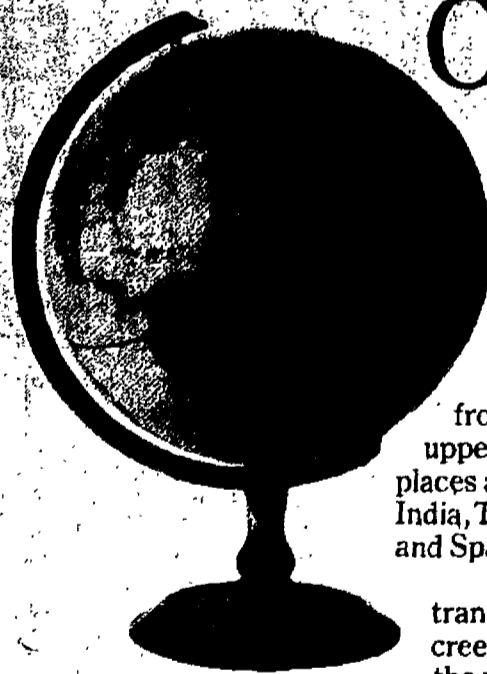

Hoadley has a lot of work ahead of her, but she's optimistic about the future.

"It's a challenge, but I'm confident that the new position will make a difference," Hoadley said.

Each full-time Whitworth student pays $100 in activity fees per year.

"I plan to inform students what ASWC has to offer, where their money is going and how they're getting it back," said Hoadley.

Unaware it catches the world

What mystery does such

As the sunset captures the

What mystery do you hold?

A look at Whitworth's 1986-87 budget; what is happening with college dollars

by Jim MaGee
of The Whitworthian

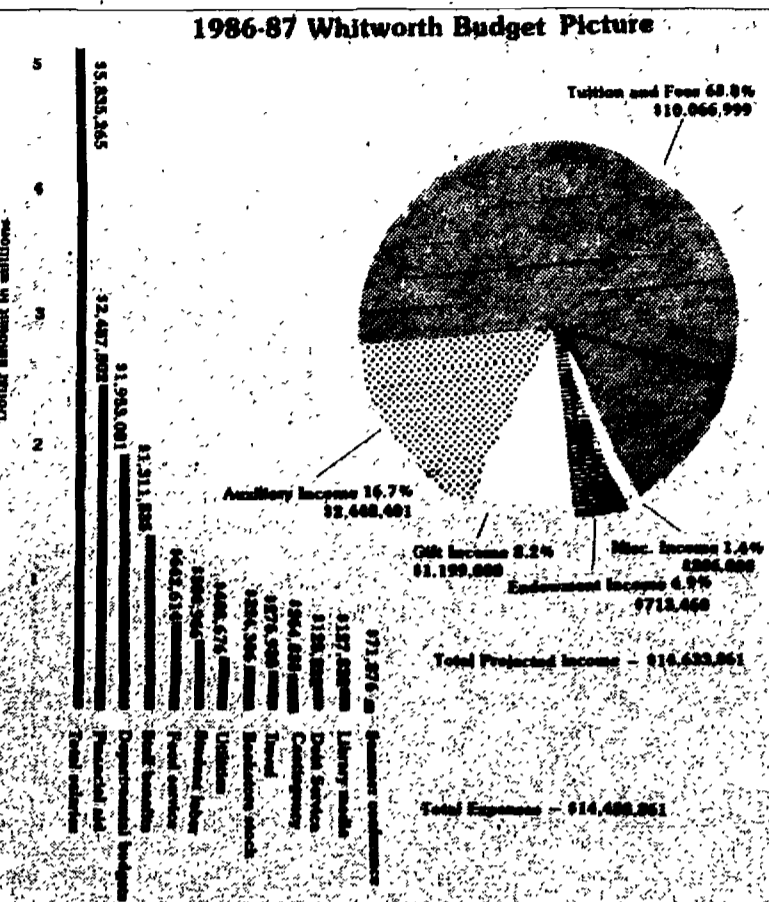

Through the use of specialized computer programs, past experience, and a stronger, more accurate accounting program, Whitworth College will budget over $14.6 million to its various employees, departments, facilities, debts and programs this year.

"We have a responsibility to pay as we go and not run a deficit," said G. Michael Goins, Vice President for Business Affairs. "Enrollment is critical," he explained. "We are a heavily tuition dependent institution, and the many trends that influence enrollment are uncertain and hard to predict."

He explained that the goal of the Whitworth budgeting process is to equate expenditures and expenses with income. If expenditures are greater than income, then an operating deficit is incurred.

Whitworth income may be classified into five categories, consisting of tuition and fees, miscellaneous income, endowment income, gift income and auxiliary income, with 1986-87 school year projections of $10,066,999; $206,000; $713,460; $1,199,000 and $2,448,401, respectively. This will make for a projected total income of $14,633,861.

Goins further explained the various income sources.

Miscellaneous income consists of things such as interest on student accounts, money provided by the government for the administration of special programs and grants, and facility rental. Endowment income is the proceeds from various restricted investments, in which the interest or proceeds, but not the principle, may be spent. Gift income is contributions coming from a variety of individual, corporate, foundational, estate and church sources. Auxiliary income consists of room and board, and other sources such as book store income.

He also explained each individual projected expense, which in sum total, equal $14,488,861 for the 1986-87 year.

Total salaries is the largest expense, at $5,835,265, followed by financial aid at $2,487,802; departmental budgets $1,953,081; staff benefits $1,311,835; food service $642,614; student labor $584,966; utilities $408,676; bookstore stock $324,306; travel $276,938; debt service $264,835; contingency $128,828; library media $127,838; and summer conference $71,876.

Goins explained contingency expense as money set aside for fixed equipment, new projects arising during the year which require funding, or problems that may come up during the year.

The 1986-87 figures show that projected income will exceed expenses and he explained that the $145,000 projected surplus is to go toward retiring a debt that Whitworth had incurred in the 1970's as a result of several years of operating deficits.

Goins is enthusiastic about the financial future of Whitworth.

"I'm the most encouraged that I've been in the 14 years that I've been here," he said. "There is a lot of momentum at Whitworth right now with the Centennial coming up. We are retiring debt, upgrading facilities, and increasing faculty."

Although Goins said that he believes this is a somewhat "normal" financial year, he stated, "I believe a lot of our recent success is the hand of the Lord on our endeavors. If we are going in the Lord's direction he will provide, but we still have the responsibility to use good judgment."

Whitworth music professor exhibits flair; composing combines inspiration, dedication

by Jennifer Seyler
of The Whitworthian

Composing music requires a lot more effort than most people probably think, but Mike Young, Associate Professor of Music, doesn't mind.

"I believe creative work is a combination of divine inspiration and good hard perspiration," said Young.

Young is currently teaching music courses for his 11th year at Whitworth College and is in his 29th year of composing.

Among the 60 pieces he has composed, Young has written many to be performed by Whitworth students.

"I regard myself as a community composer," said Young. "It's a way of paying tribute to the members."

"Jerusalem Bejeweled" is one such composition reflecting his talent. It is an instrumental and vocal piece he wrote last summer. It was performed Friday, Nov. 14 by Whitworth's Concert Choir.

The piece is based on the 12 stones of the crown of the New Jerusalem, the 12 apostles, and the 12 tribes of Israel.

"The poetry is not crystal clear," commented Young and he noted that this allows those listening to use their imagination to find meaning in the piece for themselves.

Young's biggest frustration is that he has limited time to compose. However, an upcoming sabbatical should give him the time he needs to work on some pieces.

Young's goal is to compose a piece for a full orchestra which will be about 20 to 30 minutes in length.

"It will be a challenge to get it finished," said Young and added, "That's my goal and kind of dream at this point."

Young finds that each day brings fresher things and new ideas.

"Each composition takes many different settings; I don't write in a day."

Once he is finished with a piece he asks himself, "Is this the best I can do?" If the answer is no, Young continues to strive to make it better.

Through the creation of his works, Young finds himself changing as well.

"It's really neat to be saying that I'm still growing and learning," he said.

Young does not credit his inspiration to himself, but to "God's wonderful creation in nature."

Young said his music reflects on and responds to various moods of nature, particularly mountains.

"The mountains are a part of renewing in me," said Young. "Working with the students is a renewal as well."

Young uses a great deal of imagination when writing music. It is necessary, he said, because he cannot readily hear the whole piece.

"With each piece I've developed greater imagination and skill in writing," said Young. "But a happy note is that the actual sound is a lot better than I ever expected."

For those who are interested in hearing Young's music in motion, a piece he wrote for Dick Evans will be performed by the Whitworth Band Nov. 18 at 7:30 p.m. at Whitworth Presbyterian Church.

New addition to Language dept. helps students find int'l niche

Heather Harwell

Kathy Cook is expanding Whitworth's international programs.

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

It is sometimes surprising the road a college degree can take you on.

Kathy Cook, Whitworth's Modern Language Department's new administrative secretary, first saw her French master's degree being used in a foosball (table soccer) manufacturing company.

Cook, a native of Kellogg, Idaho, earned her B.A. in French at the University of Idaho, then went on to receive her M.A. in French at the University of Oregon. She worked as a French teacher at various community colleges in Oregon for a short time, but found the work unchallenging.

"I became obsessed with the game of foosball during college and got caught up in the excitement. So when I discovered a position open as a receptionist of a foosball company, I decided to try my luck in the business world," said Cook. She started at the bottom, and worked her way up to the Director of Promotions for that company.

"My job entailed organizing national and international tournaments and promoting the game. I learned a great deal about marketing and business during that time. The world of French studies and literature is fairly idealistic, and the business world is very tough and competitive. Promotions taught me self-confidence and assertive behavior," explained Cook.

Unfortunately, the video boom nearly killed the foosball craze, and Cook found herself searching for steady work. She moved to Spokane and did both French teaching and promotions. She then met her future husband, and they married in June last year.

"I wanted to find a local job that wouldn't require constant travel, so I gladly accepted the position at Whitworth this September," said Cook.

She enjoys working at Whitworth having contact with both faculty and students.

"The professors are fascinating people with so much information and experiences to share with others," she said. "During my venture into the business world, I really missed contact with students, and it's a pleasure to work with caring and concerned people."

A large part of Cook's job involves organizing Jan Term and other international programs, which include Whitworth sponsored study tours and exchange programs. Students interested in foreign studies should contact Cook so that she can assist them in choosing the best program to fit their needs.

"We give students the option of participating in programs offered by Whitworth, or if they desire something we don't have, we'll connect them with a school that offers the program they want," she explained.

Up until now, our exchange programs have been fairly limited, but we're now waiting for acceptance into an organization which would make Whitworth a partner school to over 150 institutions in 25 countries," she said. "That's very exciting because that will open many doors, and enable more students to participate in international programs."

Now settled into her new job, Cook expressed no desire to return to the business world.

"That way of life is often very superficial and depends too much on luck and timing," she said.

"I am content at Whitworth, and I look forward to meeting more students this year, and getting more people involved in international programs."

Reel Views "Something Wild" ★★★ 1/2

The action never stops

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

"Something Wild" is an appropriate title for this wild something.

Yes, it's a movie, but what else besides that is almost beyond me — a rollercoaster thrill-ride comes to mind.

This is a frightening comedy, romantic thriller, and road adventure, all boiled together by Producer/Director Jonathan Demme.

The film stars Jeff Daniels as a straight-laced New York business executive, newly promoted to vice-president of the firm. His idea of taking a chance and living dangerously is skipping out on a three-dollar lunch tab or stealing a candy bar.

His lust interest (love is too strong a word here) and the second member of our non-traditional love triangle is Melanie Griffith. She plays Lulu, an unpredictable wild thing and temptress.

Lulu offers Daniels' character a "ride"; he assumes, back to work, but she has other plans. They have a wonderfully enlightening scene in a motel room involving handcuffs and a phone call to Daniels' boss. Once she pulls him across the fence he seems to find the grass much greener.

At this point I was predicting another "Blue Velvet" or "Men's Club," but I was pleasantly surprised. Dressed in new used clothes of Lulu's choosing, Daniels is brought home, pretending they are married, to meet Lulu's mother, Peaches. This woman is wise to her daughter's games and peculiarities and warns Daniels in a wonderful scene.

Until now we've all been enjoying this fun little weekend romp, but when Lulu ends up taking her 'husband' (Daniels) to her 10th high school reunion all heck begins to break loose. Enter cog No. 3 in this machine of love, Lulu's ex-con husband (Ray Liotta).

To tell anything more would be terrible, but suffice it to say that not all is what it seems. By this time it is easy to see that Daniels' character is in this thing willingly and is even enjoying walking a tightrope between truth and exciting deception. We can also see that Liotta is high-strung and potentially dangerous.

The movie is barely half over and now the scary part of the rollercoaster ride begins. This is not the kind of film you would expect to have a happy ending, but even thrill rides brake to a halt and everyone gets out safely and staggers away, right? Usually.

The film is boosted by one of the best soundtracks of the year including songs by Oingo Boingo, UB40, Fine Young Cannibals, Jimmy Cliff, David Byrne, and my favorite, a remake of "Wild Thing" by Sister Carol. The music is definitely different and definitely hot, just like the film. Go into it open-minded and buckle your seatbelt.

Other new or limited run films which should be of some interest include:

"Godfather II" — one-week only; Francis Ford Coppola's sequel to the 1972 original smash. Al Pacino stars.

"The Name of the Rose" — murder mystery set in a 14th century monastery. Starring Sean Connery and F. Murray Abraham ("Amadeus")

"Three Men and a Cradle" — French comedy about three confirmed bachelors who find love when a baby girl is left on their doorstep.

Students relatively taught

Whitworth families: Part III Faculty, Students

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

Hypothetical situation. Would you feel uncomfortable if your dad taught at the school you attended?

Be honest. Now think about how your dad would feel if you went to the school he taught at.

This particular situation is examined in the final story of a three-part series about families at Whitworth.

Probably most people would rather avoid this set of circumstances, but some students have chosen to attend school where relatives teach.

"It's fun," said Dave Hicks, professor of Biology. "I get to see them more."

"But, I've also had children going to school here for the past ten years."

Cheryl Kimball, his daughter who was married this past summer, agreed.

"It's never bothered me to be at the same school," she said. "I think most people like him. The only ones that don't probably failed one of his classes."

The most interesting thing about the Hicks/Kimball family is that they are all involved in Biology.

Kimball is a junior in the nursing program, and her husband, Chip, is a Biology major. Even her older sister and brother, alumni of Whitworth, were in the Biology program.

So, at some point, each of Hicks' three children have taken a class from him.

"In fact, my wife has taken a class from me," he laughed.

He continued, "Teaching is a private affair, so it's sometimes a little sticky to have them in class."

Hicks did not seem to have any difficulty in class, although he admitted that the situation was often humorous.

"We both have on our public face," he said. "They think it's very funny, because professionally I may make more moderate statements than I would privately."

Kimball took a class from her father in 1981, and liked it.

"It was fun," she admitted. "Lots of people didn't know. Sometimes I would tease the people that did know about 'paying him to get an A.' But no one took me seriously."

"He's always given me a lot of support, and he's always available," she said.

On the other hand, the many miles that had separated uncle, Dan Sanford (from Spokane), and niece, Laurel Sanford (from Boulder, Colo.), made being together at Whitworth that much more special.

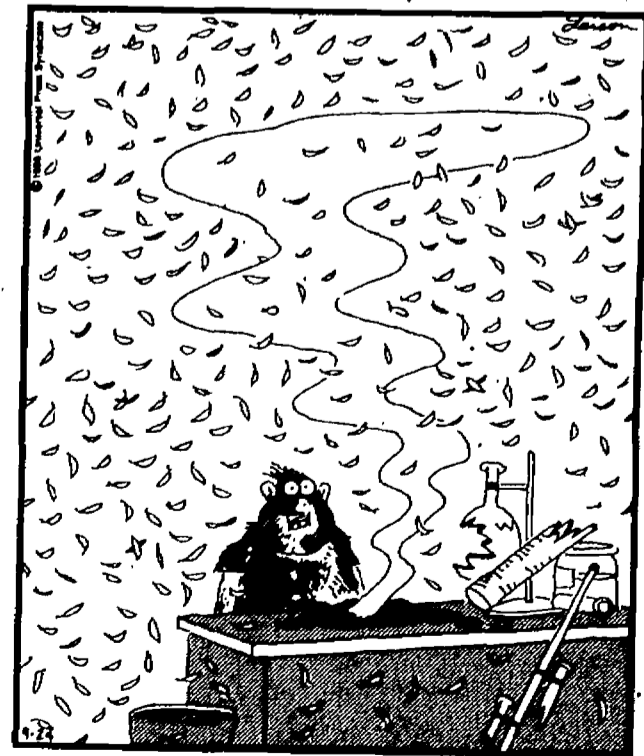

"This is like a reunion for us," said Dan, Associate Dean of Academic Affairs and professor of International Studies.

"Since I've lived in Spokane, I haven't had a relative that was close to town," he continued.

Volleyball ends with mixed emotions for seniors

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

"I'm still numb." Lei-Ann Akau stated, summing up her feelings about the end of the volleyball season. Debbie Burkhard, Julie Cordes, Dana Paulson and Colleen Schl longa nodded in agreement. For these seniors, volleyball is really over.

The players expressed an overwhelming sense of relief at their new found freedom. "I have so much time now!" Cordes, an Accounting/Business Major from Spokane sang out. She explained, "We played such a hard schedule. We've never gone on that many road trips, ever."

"I don't miss practice at all," Akau emphasized as she stretched across her bed during the time slot when the team usually practiced. Burkhard added, "There was always a lot of pressure — part of my body was always sore."

The five women were part of the Whitworth team for their entire four years. Coach Pat Shelton describes them as "the leaders of our team."

"They were definitely a big part of our success. (Whitworth placed second in NAIA District I) We're going to miss each and every one."

The ladies have found their

Shelton voted coach of the year

by Shauna Winner
Special to The Whitworthian

The Women's Volleyball team did not capture the NAIA District I title, but they did bring home a trophy.

Second-year Women's Volleyball Coach Patricia Shelton was named 1986 NAIA District Coach of the Year at the district tournament.

Shelton was selected by other District I volleyball coaches. According to Sports Information Director Paul Merkel, the award is based on the team's record and their progress from last year. The Lady Bucs finished 2nd in the district with a 39-16 record, 36-11 against NAIA teams. Their 1985 record was 26-15.

"I think it's an outstanding accomplishment for her second year as coach," said Merkel.

Shelton came to Whitworth last year after two-and-a-half years of teaching and coaching in Northport, Wash. She competed for four years in three varsity sports while attending Pacific Lutheran University.

Senior and tri-captain Colleen Schl longa said, "Pat came in last year as a first-year coach and did a great job of taking Joann's (Atwell-Scrivner) spot. She's expanded our offense by running different plays and adjusted our defense for picking up tips."

Shelton said she was surprised and honored by the award, but at the same time she would have traded it for beating University of Puget Sound (the district champions) and a chance at the regionals. "The team success and accomplishments mean more to me than anything I'd be singled out for," said Shelton.

All season District I coaches and other people made comments on the team's ability to work together and enjoy the game, according to Shelton. She said she sees the award as a way of complimenting her players.

Her players think differently. "She really does care for everyone on the court and outside in their lives. That's really special. I've never experienced it before on a team," said Sophomore Kim Newman.

Sophomore Erin MacKay said, "She pushed us not only physically but mentally and emotionally, and that built a lot of character on the team."

"Even if we didn't like it so much, she was hard on us in practice. We respect her for that," added Newman.

The team found ways to cope with being away so often. Synchronized swimming, skinny dipping, and converting hotel beds into trampolines were especially good sources of entertainment. The group spent one night playing Truth or Dare in their van (don't call it a bus!) when they got caught in a blizzard near Ellensburg last year.

The seniors, with their wisdom and experience, reflected on what being part of Whitworth volleyball meant. Paulson stressed, "You play to have fun." Akau added, "Yeah, you have to play for the love of the sport." "Enjoying your teammates," Schl longa decided. Burkhard commented, "Now that it's over, I see how important every day was."

As they look toward the future, those philosophies are still real. Schl longa vowed, "My job has to be flexible enough to allow room for my friends."

Will the friendship and unity last? In the words of Akau, "They'd just better!" Schl longa, Cordes, Burkhard, and Paulson plan to visit Akau this summer in Hawaii.

The group talked excitedly about forming an alumni team.

The five pillars of Pirate volleyball have not been seen for the last time.

Loggers topple Pirates

Larry Kelly turns to avoid oncoming defenders in Saturday's game in the Pine Bowl.

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

Walter Payton was asked how he would play defense against Walter Payton. The running back of the Chicago Bears replied, "Well the night before the game, I'd kidnap Walter Payton." Had the Pirates taken this advice from Walter, and applied it to Mike Oliphant of the University of Puget Sound Loggers, the season finale would have turned out differently.

Oliphant led the Loggers to a 40-25 victory over the Pirates. He dominated the UPS offensive attack, scoring five of the six Logger touchdowns. For the day he had 224 yards rushing on 22 carries and scored four times. He also caught three passes for 84 yards adding another touchdown. The Logger rushing attack amassed 390 yards while the passing attack gained 103 yards. Oliphant scored on runs covering 21, 22, 39, and 70 yards. UPS gained 493 yards on offense.

The Pirate offense again put together equally impressive statistics on offense. Blaine Bennett had his best game as a Pirate passer. Bennett completed 43 of 61 passes for 410 yards with three touchdowns and one interception. Three Pirate receivers caught ten or more passes. Mark Houk caught 10 passes for 98 yards and one touchdown. Gary Dawson hauled in 13 catches for 134 yards and a touchdown. Wayne Ralph led the receivers with 16 catches for 147 yards and one touchdown.

All eyes were on Ralph Saturday. The senior receiver surpassed 100 catches for the second consecutive time in his career. With 16 against UPS, Ralph finished the year with 105 receptions.

The first half ended in a rare fashion for the Bucs. Place-kicker Bob Coleman broke the shutout with a 37-yard fieldgoal as time expired. Coleman also began the second half scoring in the third quarter connecting on a 46-yard attempt.

Swimmers lack depth

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

Only in its second year of existence, the Whitworth swim team is in a building stage according to Head Coach Jon Buzzard.

"We have a chance to win a dual meet once in a while and let them know that Whitworth has a swim team."

Whitworth is in one of the toughest districts in the nation. Central Washington University captured the men and women's title nationally last year, and are looking equally strong this year.

"The Northwest is the toughest small league in the nation," commented Buzzard.

Aside from local competition Buzzard is optimistic about the teams' chances nationally.

"We can be competitive nationally in the top ten," he said.

Returning sophomore John Wickman echoed his coach's optimism, "We should do real well."

Wickman is one of five returning men to this year's squad. Bob Blazek, an NAIA All-American last season. Steve Flegel, Tom Lachermeir, and Paul Joirman round out the men's veterans. The vets boast three National qualifiers from last year, Wickman, Lachermeir and Blazek.

Two newcomers will be adding depth and experience to the team, Paul Sibley, and Garvin Morlan. Morlan, a transfer from CWU, and an NAIA All American, should really help the men out this year.

"Garvin is a very talented swimmer," said Buzzard.

The women are also bringing back three National qualifiers, Margaret Lee, Lena Lemahai and Cordelia Small Junior Wendy Wu also returns from last year's squad. Kris Burns, Diana Jenkins, Chris McInerney, Lori McKenzie, Kim Moore and Janet Sauter are the rookies making up the rest of the team.

Of McInerney Buzzard said, "She's a non-swimmer with phenomenal improvement."

Already two meets into their season, the Bucs are looking fairly strong, but still they lack the real depth that is essential for competition in the Northwest.

"If we got some honchos and depth, we could compete with almost anyone in the Northwest, except maybe Central," commented Buzzard.

The Pirates traveled to Walla Walla to take on Whitman in a dual meet Saturday. They will then take two weeks off before competing in the PLU Invitational Dec. 5-6 in Tacoma. For results of the Whitman meet see the scoreboard.

College career ends at 34 with memorable experience

by Colleen Schlonga
of The Whitworthian

Some say college is a time for experiencing new things, taking advantage of new opportunities. For Harvey Westford, this new venture was football.

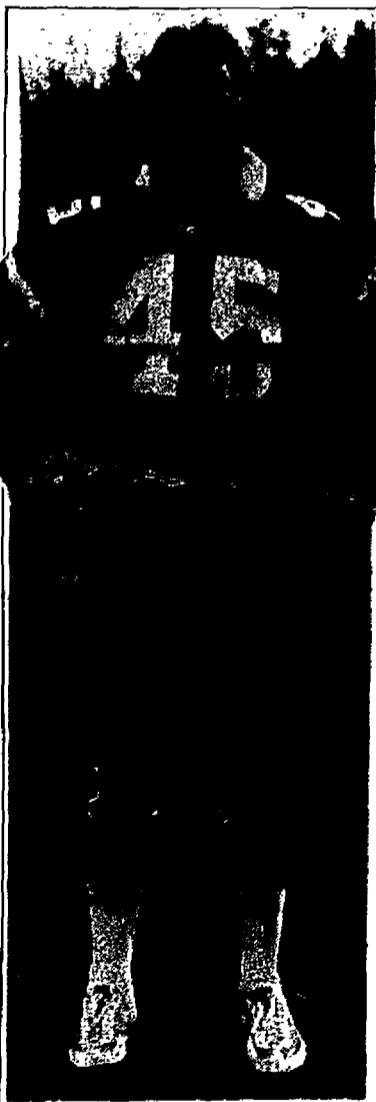

It's one thing for a man to start playing college football when he's never played on a high school or college team before. But then add on 12 additional years - that's digging deep for a new experience.

Westford, 34, was approached with the idea of playing football by Football Coach Bruce Grambo in a softball class last spring. After sprinting to first base, Grambo pulled him over and asked, "Hey, how old are you?" That was the start of Westford's first and only season as a Buc.

Westford jumped at Grambo's offer to try out for the Buc football team. "I always kind of regretted not playing (football) in school," he said.

Pre-season training camp, complete with demanding two-a-days (two practices each day), came on quickly. "I'd planned on working out a lot more during the summer, but I didn't," Westford said. "It was pretty rough at first -- the first four or five days of two-a-days I was in pretty miserable shape.

"I was really trying to do the best I could to make the team," he said, adding that the other players were supportive of him. "It was a really nice experience to be a part of that team." Finishing with a Communications degree in December, Westford came to Whitworth last year after spending the previous eight years in Denver. Three of those years were spent at the University of Colorado studying journalism.

Both Westford and his wife Janet grew up in Spokane, and they decided to move back here, bringing with them their two daughters, ages 2 and 4. Westford said Janet was "all for it" when he came home with the idea of playing football. "She's an avid sports fan," he said.

Although Westford stressed that his position was mainly "primary bench warmer," when he did enter the game he only played about two to three minutes, at the end of the games, but this provided him with one memory in particular. "Once when I got sent in, near the end of the game, I lined up across from one guy. He looked at me from across the line and said, 'Hey, they put in the old guy.'" Westford said he wasn't hurt in any way, playing against the younger players, in that the team's full-contact, inner-squad scrimmage was the most tackling he was involved in. "I haven't been damaged," he said, adding that this is the best physical shape he's been in for some time. "I've been out of shape for about 10 years," he said. Those 10 years, Westford said, are what he'd like to repeat. "When I got out to practice, I realized I was a step-and-a-half behind everyone. I'd like to have gone back 10 years and started over as a freshman. I think I could have been more competitive."

Laurel, a sophomore Math major, agreed that it was nice to have her uncle nearby.

"I go over to dinner at their house every now and then," she said. "But I've seen him on campus only a very few times in the past two years."

Since their fields are unrelated, Laurel has not had the opportunity to take classes that her uncle teaches.

"If I had to, I think it would be awkward, because I think of him as my uncle before I think of him as my professor," Laurel said.

Dan said that she probably wouldn't take one of his classes, but that there wouldn't be any special impact if she did.

"It's always easier to work with someone you know," he explained. "I expect more from good students, and that's how I would view Laurel, because she is a good student."

These students and faculty are living proof that family members can feel comfortable at the same school. They can enjoy having family there making a potentially difficult situation a fun and enjoyable time together.

The Pirate defense was led by Byron Bokma who registered 14 tackles and added a quarterback sack and a fumble recovery. Jason Claw and Tom Shanholtzer added 14 and 13 tackles respectively. David Campbell also contributed 12 tackles in his final game.

The Pirates ended the season with a 2-6-1 record. Head Coach Bruce Grambo wrapped up his remarks by saying the season was "disappointing." The Pirates will not lose an abundance of talent position players. The senior class this season was considerably smaller than previous years.

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR GRANDPARENTS?

- Five minutes into "The Lawrence Welk Show"
- About a week before your birthday.
- When you just want to tell them you miss them, and that you ate the last of Grandma's chocolate-chip cookies this morning.

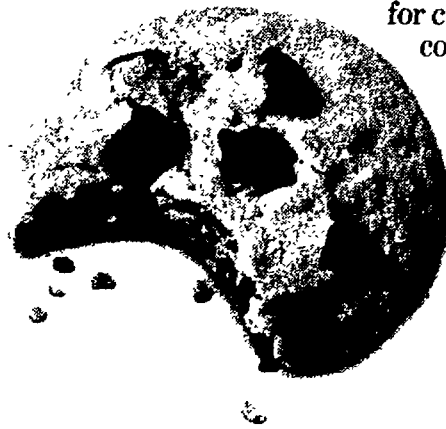

There's nothing grandparents like better than a call from a grandchild in college. But if you do accidentally happen to interrupt Lawrence, you ought to have something worth telling them.

For example, you could mention that you called using AT&T Long Distance Service because you can depend on AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

And then you can tell them that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number.

And that you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections.

Finally, of course, you should quickly reassure them that you're eating enough, then let them hurry back to the TV to catch the rest of the Lennon Sisters' Blue Oyster Cult medley.

Donated ONB stock helps college budget

by Khris Vogel
of The Whitworthian

A descendant of an eastern Washington pioneer earlier this year donated almost 3,000 shares of Old National Bank stocks to the Whitworth Foundation.

The stock shares, with a value near $91,000, were donated by Marketta and Waldo Buckler.

Marketta Buckler is the granddaughter of Mark Whitlow, a miner, farmer, banker and state representative from the Pullman area.

"Marketta agrees with the mission of the college in its goal of Christian higher education," said Stephen Trefts, Executive Vice President of the Whitworth Foundation. "She never had the higher education that she wanted, so she decided to leave a legacy in this manner because she truly likes students. She had a very high charitable interest."

Trefts said the Bucklers have been donors to Whitworth "for many, many years." He added that the Bucklers first took interest in Whitworth after hearing about the school from the pastor of their church.

In return for the donation of the ONB stock, the Bucklers received shares of equal market value of the Foundation's Pooled Income Fund. The fund is very similar to a money market mutual fund that pays a relatively high yield explained Trefts.

It was a very good time for the Bucklers to act as they did. "ONB was the subject of a

Apartheid: Last year's issue; New concerns take spotlight

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

"Eastman's withdrawal no halfway measure" was the headline in The Spokane Chronicle's Nov. 20 edition. "Eastman Kodak, citing a weak economy made worse by apartheid, said Wednesday it will withdraw from South Africa..." the story continued. Apartheid is among the big issues of the 1980s.

The United States congress has recently passed a bill supporting sanctions against South Africa. Since then, seven major United States firms have divested from the country. These have been the first major actions against South African apartheid.

Apartheid is not a new issue on Whitworth's campus either. Last year, one week was dedicated to increasing the awareness of apartheid. The week's highlight was a simulation of apartheid in reverse having the minority students on campus become the majority.

One year later, what has happened to the apartheid issue at Whitworth?

"Issues come and go," said Glenn Smith, ASWC director. "Students don't keep up to date and they move on to other issues in time."

But the apartheid issue has not gone from the minds of the students. There is still talk of the divestment of Whitworth from South Africa. A committee was formed last spring to look into the South African investments of the college.

The committee consists of two faculty members, two college officials, two students and two trustees. They have not met yet, but the committee is working at setting a date for the meeting. The main purpose of the meeting will be to discuss, in general, the investment policies of Whitworth. Although there has been much talk about divestment and the apartheid issues, the college has not expressed an official position.

"The college has no official position on the divestment of Whitworth College from South Africa," said Smith. Apartheid has become a nation wide moral issue. The Presbyterian Church has asked its members and institutions to think about the morality of their investments. Whitworth is no exception. Dr. John Yoder, professor of African Studies and International Relations at Whitworth echos this statement.

"In Whitworth's investments, we should not only ask what is the safest investment, but are our investments compatible with our values."

"We make a statement with how we manage our money," said Chaplain Ron Frase. "Whitworth does have a moral responsibility with its investments."

The United States government, the Presbyterian Church and Whitworth College appear to be considering some changes concerning apartheid, but what changes, if any has the South African government activated relating to apartheid? According to Yoder, almost none.

"So far there have been no real changes in the state of apartheid in South Africa. There have been surface changes which have not really benefited the victims of apartheid."

The exchange of the ONB stock for the shares in the Pooled Income Fund immediately converted the Buckler's investment from a low yield one to one paying much higher yield, according to Trefts.

In the last three years, the fund has paid between 10.3 percent and 13.9 percent on return, despite the recent years' drop in interest rates.

Upon their deaths, the Bucklers have directed that their shares in the Fund be transferred to the college's Endowment Fund and ministry and music student scholarship funds.

"I appreciate Whitworth College and want to encourage students who are training for the ministry and also those who major in music," said Buckler.

The issue of apartheid hits close to home here on campus. Currently four students attending Whitworth are from South Africa and neighboring Namibia, which is under South African control.

Peter Maphumulo, a sophomore, is one of those students. He has seen the apartheid issue go from being a topic of conversation to a sideline issue.

Maphumulo strongly supports the divestment of South Africa and believes it is the last peaceful means of action to be taken against apartheid.

According to Maphumulo, the victims of apartheid know that divestment will mean fewer jobs and less income for them — "but the oppressed of South Africa are prepared to suffer economically with the withdrawal of investment and jobs in the country if there is a chance of gaining freedom in the end."

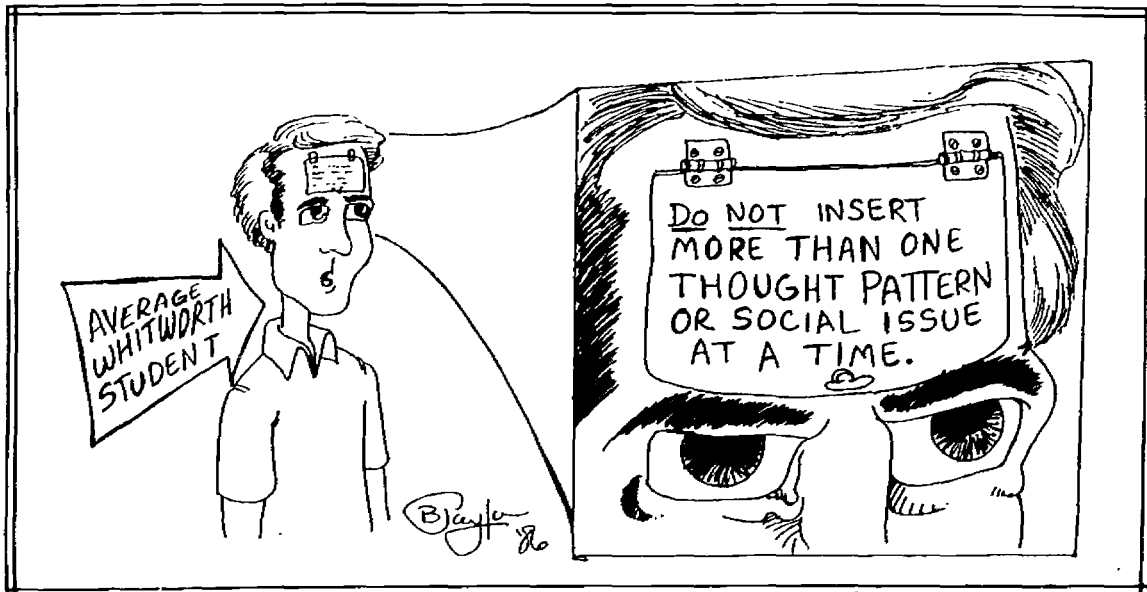

"We are not saying it is the answer to end apartheid, but the message it sends will tell the government its actions are not accepted by the rest of the world," said Maphumulo.

Maphumulo is concerned that in keeping the investments Whitworth has in South Africa, the college is not living up to its moral position.

"This is a Christian college and the morals it has are not being shown in the investments Whitworth makes with companies that deal with South Africa."

When asked how Maphumulo responds to the changes the South African government has made regarding apartheid, he said, "What changes? The moves the government has made have not improved the lives of blacks in South Africa in any way."

OPINION

Students deserve more input Being "listened to" not enough

To the editor,

As the debate over the changing of the 24-hour visitation policy goes into its 15th week, one realizes that many things have evolved during the process. Tempers have flared, rhetoric has passed, and the opposite ends of the scale have filled with individuals claiming that their side is right without even bothering to understand the real issue at hand. The real issue is not whether or not the true values of Whitworth College are being portrayed, but rather whether or not the inherent rights and desires of the associated students of Whitworth College are being adhered to by the administration.

Last year the newly-elected ASWC president, J.B. Meade, promised that with his administration sweeping changes would be made in the way of the relationship between Student Life and the ASWC. Meade promised that he would do his best to insure that Student Life dealt with the real concerns of the ASWC in regards to a better student life at Whitworth. Meade emphatically called for a tearing down of the Pine Cone curtain, and urged the administrators of Whitworth bring Whitworth College into the modern day 20th Century. Meade's campaign speech used Robert Kennedy's quote, "Some men dream a dream and ask, 'Why?' I dream a dream and ask, 'Why not?'" Meade dreamed of the possibility that Student Life and the rest of the administrators might treat the students of Whitworth with fairness and respect and in turn bridge the gap between them. Obviously many of Whitworth's students agreed with Meade's philosophy as he was elected president by an astounding 70 percent.

However instead of adhering to the requests of Meade and the ASWC, the administrators have taken it upon themselves to analyze the option, that dorms have held since 1971, of a 24-hour visitation policy. The administrators claim that the policy flies directly in the face of the no-cohabitation policy held by the college, and does not portray the values that Whitworth College stands for.

The administrators told us, the students, that they would meet and decide whether or not to drop the option of 24-hour visitation. They said that they would listen carefully to our views and ideas, however the final decision rested with them.

Because student tuitions and fees represent roughly 68.8 percent of the Whitworth budget it seems to this student that we deserve a little more than a "listening to" in this matter. In fact we deserve the right to vote on it. After all isn't it we who pay the salaries of the administrators?

In an earlier letter to The Whitworthian Vice President of Academics Darrell Guder wrote that the key to the issue of 24-hour visitation is a compromise between the two sides. Compromise? How can we compromise on a policy that we won't even get the chance of deciding? Also, what if the ASWC decided that a compromise was needed on the alcohol policy at Whitworth in that we wanted to be allowed to have alcohol on campus during the weekends? The obvious answer from an administrator would be, "I'm sorry but there is no compromise on that issue!" In this same vein we should say to the administrators of Whitworth, "I'm sorry but there is no compromise on our option of 24-hour visitation!"

Another aspect of this argument over a compromise is the fact that a compromise has already been made. The students of Whitworth College agree that they will abide by the rules and regulations, in particular the "Big Three," set forth by the administration. The students also agree to accept and be responsible for the consequences of their actions if they are caught violating the rules. In return the Whitworth administrators,

of The Whitworthian

"When one chooses to act for a cause let him act in self-sacrifice first and self-service last."

-Martin Luther King

Learning, of the heart, soul and mind often proves to be the most complete and convicting kind of learning. Intellectual understanding of the harsh situation in South Africa is trivial at best without compassion for the people. Crying at Forum with Linn Yan shows that compassion, but tears alone do nothing to change the world that once caused her so much pain. We need to incorporate our souls into this process of learning. God calls us to respond in Zechariah 7:9: "You must see that justice is done and show kindness and mercy to one another."

Last spring during trustee week, white crosses stood in effigy to represent the people killed in the fight against apartheid in South Africa. Whitworth students waged their own battle against apartheid: a battle of conscience. Nearly 20 students urged the trustees to divest from corporations doing business in South Africa. Although very little progress has been made in the Whitworth divestment movement, this action proved that at least a few students had convictions that they cared to act upon.

Most recently we have seen the campus upended over the policy review of 24-hour visitation. Nearly 75 students recently rallied in the HUB to express their adamant concerns in a protest that made news in the Seattle Times. This is a personal and controversial issue for the entire Whitworth community, and one can be sure that there are more than 75 students upset with it.

"You must see that justice is done and show kindness and mercy to one another."

Zechariah 7:9

In comparison to the divestment issue, this recent upheaval seems to indicate that students are much more likely to act out of self-interest in personal freedoms than out of some decision of conscience. The freshman dorm was another recent issue facing the student body, and again protest seems to be motivated by self-interest. This is not to say that reaction out of self-interest is wrong; that too is a reality that all face, but we must ask ourselves which motive is more important.

Even the board of trustees should be criticized for moving so slowly and irresponsibly in formulating an investment policy. In comparison to South Africa, administrators seem eager to resolve the 24-hour visitation issue. Expending energy on the 24-hour visitation controversy seems so trivial when we put our campus in perspective with other significant world problems.

Many in the Whitworth community claim to be concerned with social injustices like hunger, torture, prisoners of conscience and apartheid yet most never make the time to work in whatever small way to solve these problems. One can participate in the Hunger Task Force, donate a can or two of food for the food drive, or take 20 minutes out of a Thursday evening to write a letter with Amnesty International to protest torture and violence. The Whitworth community should ask itself if God is more concerned with the justice of 24-hour visitation or social responsibility? What is more important to you?

in the past, have agreed to give the students their trust that the students would try to uphold the rules. In this case that trust can be found in the form of the 24-hour visitation option. By dropping the option of 24-hour visitation that trust that exists between the administration and the students is being taken away. For me it has been a great experience to go to a college where the administrators have enough trust in me that I have enough responsibility to accept the consequences of my actions.

The debate over 24-hour visitation is not over how to best represent the values of Whitworth College, but rather how to best represent the ideas and desires of the students of Whitworth College. It is high time that the administrators stop viewing themselves as shepherds guiding lost sheep, and start viewing the ASWC as an equal partner at Whitworth College.

Math testing helpful; shows need for review

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

As this year's Freshman class knows, it is necessary to take a math placement test before registration — 47 percent of this year's incoming freshmen received low scores.

Heather Harwell

Martha Nelson, math instructor

Students receiving 70 percent or less on the arithmetic section were advised to take an arithmetic review course to bring their skills up to what would be required of them in higher college courses.

Those students receiving 55 percent or less on the algebra section were advised to take a beginning algebra course.

Freshmen who took the test came away with one of two general impressions.

"It helped me because I haven't taken math for a couple years," said Wendi Reed. "It made me realize if I wanted to get anywhere in college I would need help or some review."

"It kind of evaluated myself, although I already knew basically where I stood," said Debbie Arico. "I'm glad I took it."

But others disagreed. "I think they're worthless. They test you on what you remember rather than on your ability," said Mark Springer.

Russ Sturgeon agreed. "A lot of the times I couldn't remember how to work (the problems) out, although I recognized them from high school."

The reason for the tests is that professors in different areas discovered that some students weren't able to handle the math required for their courses.

New truck gift from trustee

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Due to a donation from trustee Chuck Boppel, Whitworth now has become the owner of a new 1987 red Toyota truck which has an estimated value of $8,000.

Boppel graduated from Whitworth in 1965 and is now the owner of Ventura Toyota in Ventura, Calif.

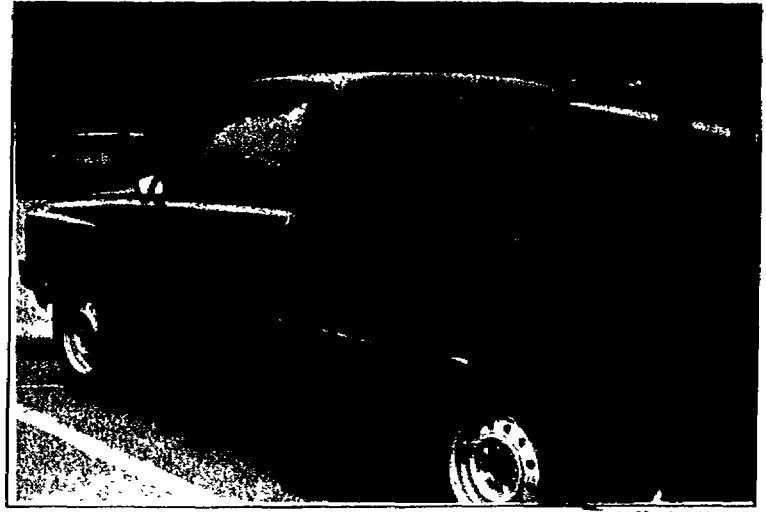

"This is his (Boppel's) way of making a gift to the school that will pay for itself for a long time," said Ron Detrick, director of alumni relations.

According to Detrick, having the new truck is advantageous because it will allow the college to save money on vehicle costs.

Vehicles which Whitworth buys cost 22 cents a mile to operate — Because the Toyota freshmen, 242 took the tests. 27 percent of these were advised to take both arithmetic and algebra courses. Eight percent received less than adequate scores in algebra and 12 percent received low scores in arithmetic.

"Given that Whitworth is not a math and science type of

According to Detrick, the money saved will be used to make improvements on the truck itself. First on the list of improvements will be a new school, the results were consistent with other colleges like it," stated Martha Nelson, instructor in the Math and Computer Science department.

According to Nelson, there were a surprisingly high number of students that did well in algebra, but poorly in arithmetic.

Out of the 120 people that were advised to take the lower level courses, 66 are now enrolled. Next year, students will be required to take these courses if their test scores indicate a need to review math skills.

Semester winds down; Visitation top issue

by Dan Thomson
of The Whitworthian

The semester is rapidly coming to an end and as a result the ASWC organizations are "winding down" in their activities, according to ASWC Public Relations Representative Kathy Hoadley.

The most pertinent activity is the meeting of Whitworth's House of Representatives and Senate on Nov. 24. Both the House and the Senate have been working on a student letter that will reflect the ideas of the student body regarding the 24 hour visitation controversy. The House and Senate will take the letter's final draft and compare it to the opinions of Whitworth's administration.

In January, the ASWC's administrative body's project will be to complete the bi-laws of Whitworth's students new constitution. Financial, executive, and administrative procedures will be evaluated and a determination of revision will be considered.

Other activities associated with the ASWC and its organizations will be a "Christmas week" which will include a basketball game between the Whitworth Pirates and the Gonzaga Bulldogs. The game will be held at Gonzaga on December 6th and tickets for the game will be available at the student store for $2.

Flames dance in a teasing rhythm and snap when I adjust the log.
 Moving closer to the heat I sip intently from my mug, while searching through our past encouraging the flame to once again warm my now cold heart. The crackle echoes while I sit back into the overstuffed chair.
 I recall my pain and insecurities knowing now I learned to accomodate them because of you.
 The frost begins to cover the window distorting the outside world as you always did. Closing my eyes I think of the years that were invested, seeing this relationship through seasons. Again the seasons have gone through changes just like you and I always seem to do. The seasons will never end: It is different with you and I.
 With every leaf that fell I followed its pattern only to be blown away and chilled by your change of heart. Your lies showered me in the spring and the reality stung even harder than the largest drop that fell.
 Your promises once shined like the summer sun yet they could not weather your lack of resolution.
 And now as a new opportunity begins for a new change I make a promise to myself that my life like the seasons will go on without you.
 Looking back — I am sorry I ever loved you.

Keaggy, Duncan fuse styles performances rock Cowles

Concert Review

by Jill Noel
 of The Whitworthian

It was loud. It was uplifting. It was good. In fact, it was really good.

Phil Keaggy and Bryan Duncan were together in concert as part of their "Electric Tour" 1986. The pair arrived Saturday, Nov. 22, at Cowles Memorial Auditorium at Whitworth College.

Duncan was asked about his past in the Christian music scene.

"When I started playing, there was no such thing as Christian music," laughed Duncan. "At that time it was called 'Gospel Rock' and nobody really liked it. The industry kind of grew up around me."

The different styles of the performers made for a well-rounded performance. While Duncan continually made jokes and was very boisterous, Keaggy was laid-back and quiet.

Keaggy, well-known for his ability to play the guitar, commented on his start.

"I first started playing the guitar when I was 10," he smiled. "That was 25 years ago."

The lights dimmed at about 7:40, a mere 10 minutes late, and the show began.

The concert was billed as Contemporary Christian Music.

The rafters shook with the sound. Duncan started the concert, playing to an almost full-house of standing, cheering fans. He played a few songs, bouncing all over the stage, before he joined the audience.

He began telling about his own terminal illness, and how many other people were affected by the same disease.

Just at the point the audience began to be concerned, he blurted out, "I have a terminal illness — SHORT-NESS!"

The audience breathed a sigh of relief and roared as he sang about God's love for everyone.

His favorite short person, his 4-year-old son, Brandon, received the dedication of the next song.

It took Duncan a couple of tries to get started, but once he regained his composure, he sang the first mellow song of the evening. Most likely, "A Child's Love" brought tears to a few eyes.

Throughout, he interspersed comments about his faith and Christian beliefs, concluding with "Jesus Christ is the son of God and has a plan for you, so... 'Have Yourself Committed!'"

This final song got the entire audience "jammin'!" Everybody loved it enough to bring him back for an encore of "Holy Rollin'" — the title track of his most recent album.

After a 10-minute intermission, Keaggy took the stage.

After the first acoustical song, each band member played a solo set during "Passport," and Keaggy introduced them.

On guitar, Tony Sena; Bass, Steve Wilkenson; Drums, Doug Matthews; and the only woman, Starr Parodi-Fair on Keyboards.

Keaggy then went into an acoustical set, where he played guitar for almost 25 minutes, playing some familiar tunes ("Jesus Loves Me"), as well as some of his own work.

The audience thoroughly enjoyed it, and gave Keaggy a standing ovation.

After the set he played "Olivia" for his daughter, and his stage crew said that this was the first time it had been played on this tour, and possibly ever.

Keaggy talked a bit about Jesus, asserting that "You can accept no substitutes."

He also commented about touring with Duncan.

"When we're checked in the same room together, I don't turn on the TV. I just watch Bryan," laughed Keaggy. "But really, we're very complementary. He compliments me and I compliment him!"

In reality, the artists are very different in personality and style, making an outstanding concert.

"I liked Bryan Duncan's style and his enthusiasm in concert," said Joy Van Eaton, a freshman at Whitworth. "And I thought Phil Keaggy had a phenomenal amount of talent. He's probably the best guitarist anyone at Whitworth will ever see. His variation in style is incredible."

P.S. After the show, both them and the band said Whitworth was a great audience to play for.

Soc. club discusses unusual; field studies probe other cultures

by Jennifer Seyler
 of The Whitworthian

The Sociology club is not just a group of academic dweebs who sit around on Friday nights discussing the concepts of Social Reality 120.

According to Dr. Don Liebert, Professor of Sociology and the Sociology club's advisor, "It (Sociology Club) is a place in which we can discuss things we don't usually see, and that we want to fight about a little."

Membership to this ASWC chartered club is open to anyone and Sociology Club President Leanne Reuter, a senior Sociology major, encouraged all who are interested to join.

"You don't have to be a Sociology major to belong," said Reuter. "It's open to the entire campus and community."

Both Liebert and Reuter invite students to submit issues they are interested in, and the club will try to bring someone in to discuss it.

The club was not active last year, but is now being taken advantage of as a vehicle to explore different ideas and issues.

"The Sociology club is always here if someone wants to do something and needs an excuse," said Liebert.

The club has already held two seminars and plans many more events this year. One of these meetings was a presentation of Christianity, as seen through the eyes of the Native American Indians, by Hunter Keen.

Heather Harwell

Advisor Don Liebert and President Leanne Reuter, the leadership of Sociology club.

"Part of the excitement," explained Liebert, "is that we have the Nez Perce Indians living three-and-a-half hours from here and we can hopefully plan a weekend field trip out there sometime in the future."

Field studies play a major role in the club's future plans and Liebert and Reuter already have ideas for these trips.

A field trip out to a Hutterite community, a group of communal-living Germans, is being discussed by the club.

Reuter is excited about the idea and said, "It's interesting to me to see what it's like and see a group of people that are different from our society."

Another aspect of the club is on a more practical side which explores possible careers for sociologists.

"There is a real focus on careers in sociology; what opportunities there are and how to get there," commented Liebert.

Those who are interested in becoming active in the Sociology club should watch for information regarding their future activities. A meeting with Beulha Lund, the Deer Park woman who decided to become a bag lady, just for the experience, is presently being planned.

The enthusiasm and desire to establish a tradition of service and fun led to the founding of the Whitworth "C" club last year and are expected to carry the club into a bright future.

Terri Sanders, faculty advisor of the "C" club and Assistant Nutrition professor, explained that the purpose of the club is "getting to know other people within the context of commitment to Christ and service to the campus and outside community."

She said that she believed an all girls service and social Christian club was lacking from the current campus club scene. So she accepted the position of advisor when approached by now current president, Nancy Buhner, and several other women students about the formation of the "C" club.

According to Buhner, the

"C" club is named in honor of the late Ana J. Carrol, long-time Whitworth Music professor, to provide a memorial to her Christian fellowship and service.

"Members take work projects that serve the college or community," stated vice-president Denise Smith.

Past projects, according to project director Lori Mantuffel, include assisting with the fall campus blood drive and working together with the "W" club, the male counterpart of the "C" club, to put on the Pirates Ball in Graves Gym.

The future appears to be bright for the "C" club, as it now has about 20 regular members, and is looking forward to many future projects including selling mistletoe at Christmas, working with the Urban Ministries club in their senior citizen program, and Christmas carolling around the community, especially at Hawthorne Manor Presbyterian Retirement Center. ## Reel Views "The Gospel According to Vic" Touching, humorous movie investigates reality of miracles

of The Whitworthian

Do you believe in miracles? Edith Semple did. As a little old lady in 1915 Scotland, she healed a blind girl. 70 years later, the people of Blessed Edith Semple Parish in Glasgow want the Vatican to make her a saint, which requires documented proof.

Where and how they find their proof is the story of "The Gospel According to Vic," a film produced by Mike Relph and directed by Charles Gormley.

The first key plot factor is Vic Matthews (played by veteran Scottish actor Tom Conti), a teacher of remedial learners at the Blessed Edith School; he is also a non-believer.

When a young girl student is "miraculously" cured and can walk again, the school chaplain attributes it to weekly assemblies praying to the school's namesake. But Matthews remains skeptical.

A plot twist comes when one day, after a dentist's appointment, Matthews passes out. The hospital diagnoses a brain tumor so far advanced that the doctor on duty doesn't even tell Matthews of its seriousness.

A second key plot factor is Stevie Deans — a remedial student of the most remedial kind. In fact, child guidance counselors and the headmaster have already decided to send him to a special school, without consulting Matthews.

The boy is making progress, and when Deans speaks out in class, performing mental arithmetic, Matthews gets upset with the system. "Blessed Edith. They want miracles. Little Alice McKenzie can walk, but a kid opens up and no one cares."

Then, Matthews falls from a 40-foot-high roof, trying to rescue a student, and walks away unharmed. He attempts to think nothing of it.

However, the hospital, while performing accident follow-up tests, discovers that his tumor is gone. Trying to keep "faith-healing" from stealing patients, the hospital administrator orders the evidence destroyed and the news suppressed.

The church, in the meantime, is also trying to suppress the news of Matthews' death-defying fall because he isn't Catholic.

However, the media has made Matthews a hero and is even saying that he miraculously "makes the slow-witted quick and the dull sharp." He is no longer just a good teacher, he's a miracle worker. Even Matthews' students are involved now, some jealous because they haven't been made "special" enough to be on television.

At this point, the hospital hadn't counted on a conscientious Roman Catholic nurse, who takes the rescued X-rays to the school's priest. She displays the evidence and asks, "Do you understand?"

The priest knows she will lose her job if the X-rays are released, so after reaffirming his faith in miracles, he burns the X-rays replying, "No (I don't understand), but more important, I believe...I needed a sign."

When Matthews corners the doctor who originally diagnosed his tumor and asks if it was true that his tumor was gone, the doctor's reply is a wonderful piece of advice.

"Who knows? Be grateful you're well, find a nice girl, settle down, have some kids and get yourself some ordinary problems."

There are many touching and humorous moments in this movie, and whether Matthews is a miracle man or not is neither proven nor important. This film is a light-hearted "Agnes of God," merely causing us to be thoughtful and reflect on God's endless possibilities.

Filmed primarily in Glasgow, Scotland, it is an entertaining picture with a nice message. It leaves a lingering good feeling with you and you won't soon forget it.

New cheer pumped for b-ball

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

As students eagerly await the 1986 basketball season, the new basketball cheerleading squad brings both experience and enthusiasm with them in an effort to make this the most successful season ever for the Bucs.

This season's squad will add something new to their routines. Not only will male cheerleaders be a part of the squad, but a Junior Varsity cheer unit has been introduced for the first time at Whitworth.

The Varsity squad consists of two sophomores: Lisa Hepper and Cindy Nobriga, and four freshmen: Andrea Durall, Susie Brown, Janice Klesch and Tauni Boppell. All the girls have had at least one year of experience cheering on a line, with a few having as much as four years.

"We're very excited about the season," said Brown, who cheered three years in high school. "We're aiming for a lot of school spirit and student involvement. We want the team to know that we're there for them."

Durall, who cheered for football this year, decided to try out again, "because I had a great time during football, and I love basketball. Cheering is a good way to get involved."

The girls tried out last week, and were judged on personality, articulation, style, skill, as well as an interview. They were picked by the four football cheerleaders, Susan Blair, Coach Crabb, and Mike Peters.

For Peters, who's also in charge of the male cheerleaders, this year will mark his fourth year working on the basketball squad.

"A friend of mine talked me into cheering my freshman year, and I had so much fun, I wanted to continue," he said.

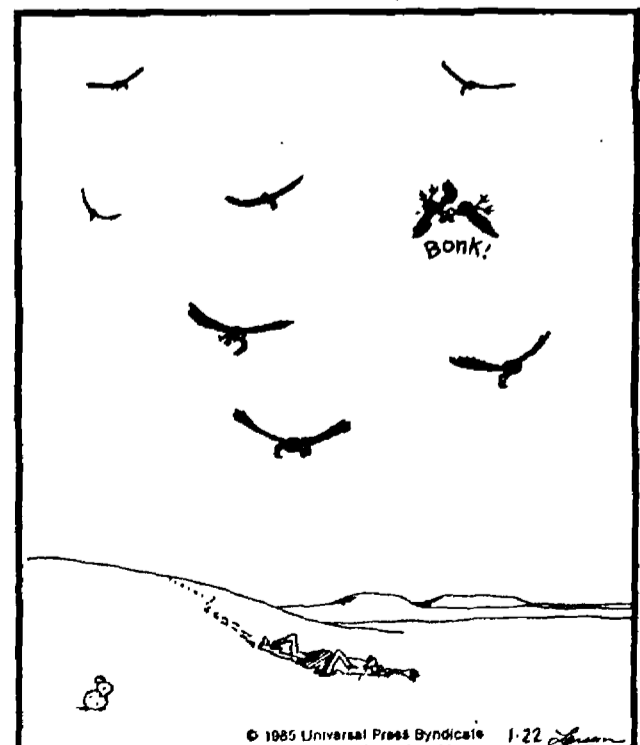

"It's very difficult to have cheerleading tryouts for guys, because it is ultimately the girls' decision," he explained. "It is essential that the girls trust and feel comfortable with the guys they'll be performing with. So far we've tentatively chosen three males for the line, and hopefully there will be more."

"My role is that of an advisor as well as a participant," said Peters. "I serve on the House of Representatives and the Finance Committee, and I hope my associations with those organizations may benefit the squad if they need assistance."

6 Bucs in double figures

Pirates slaughter Eagles in 106-52 rout

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth men's basketball season got off to a quick start Thursday night in the Fieldhouse. The visiting Northwest College Eagles showed why they are on the endangered list. Within the allotted forty minute span of competition the Pirates all but exterminated the Eagles 106-52. The Eagles seemed like the type of guys that would even have problems handling a bowl of jello.

Though the score was a bit lopsided, Pirate Head Coach Warren Friedrichs mentioned that they were not that bad of a team. "We had a good team performance." Friedrichs pointed out. He also attributed the wide margin to the few turnovers (10) committed by the Pirates and excellent shot selection. "Nearly every player shot over fifty percent," Friedrichs added.

Senior Brian Meyers led the Pirate scoring with 19 points. Junior Scott Strom began the season in fine fashion along with his teammates. Strom added 14 points and led the team with seven steals and six assists. Six Pirates reached double figure scoring while all 11 players saw action and scored. "Our strength is depth," said Friedrichs, "all 11 players will contribute."

Assistant Coach Ray Peters points to character as another strength of the team. "The guys are all from winning teams, they know what it takes to win," added Peters.

The Pirates return to action tonight hosting Eastern Oregon State. Coach Friedrichs stated the district competition this season stacks up quite well. Eastern Oregon hit the junior colleges hard in their recruiting. Lewis and Clark State also has a strong lineup. The big test will be

Central Washington University. The Wildcats didn't lose anyone from last year's squad that made the NAIA Final Four. The NAIA preseason poll has CWU ranked number nine in the nation. Sports Illustrated ranked Central number five in the nation among NAIA schools.

During Thanksgiving break the Pirates will travel to Edmonton to play in the University of Edmonton Tournament. It will be an eight team tourney with the Pirates being the lone American representative.

Stride across campus leads to All-American title

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

On Nov. 15 in Kenosha, Wisconsin, Kelli Burch, a sophomore in only her first year of cross country running stood at the starting line of the NAIA National Cross Country Championships.

"It was really cold, and I was nervous," commented Burch. Her coach Hal Werner echoed her comments, "It was about 37° and the ground was frozen."

Burch went on to place 22nd in the race and claim All-American honors. "That is an amazing feat for a first-year runner. Also, she is the first female cross country runner from Whitworth to become All-American," said Werner.

Burch's odyssey into the world of cross country began last spring while she was out for the tennis team. "I saw Kelli running across campus and I told her she had a nice stride. I got together with her and worked out a training program for her during the summer," said Werner.

"It (running) was something I wanted to do, so I ran over the summer. I didn't even know if I could make the team," commented Burch.

And make the team she did.

Her times got increasingly better as the season wore on. Werner recognized Burch's talent fairly early in the season. "After our third race, I thought to myself, 'Hey this girl may have something,'" said Werner.

Werner forecasted a National appearance for Burch as early as the meet at Fairway Oct. 11, in which she placed second.

As for Burch, she didn't look towards Nationals at all. "I didn't even think about going (to Nationals) until Districts."

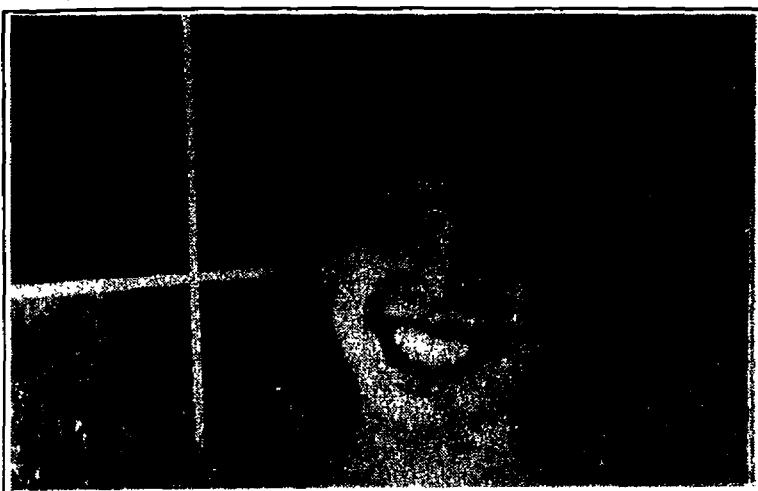

Being a first-year runner Burch had to learn the ins and outs of cross country running. "Kelli knew nothing about the strategies of running when she first turned out," said Werner. She received help from the team, especially Jan Aubry and Melissa Johnson who both Werner and Burch cited as helping her out. "Jan was a stable influence on Kelli," commented Werner.

When Burch was asked about any extra help she had received, she commented, "The whole team helped me, I didn't know anything when I first came out. Missy (Melissa Johnson) and Jan helped me a lot because they had so much more experience, but the whole team really helped a lot."

The attitude of the whole team helping her out, and Burch giving credit to the team reflects her attitude towards running. "Kelli is an unselfish runner, she felt almost embarrassed at finishing so high (at Nationals). She told me after the race, that next year she wants the whole team to go," said Werner.

What will happen next year or this spring is a question that has Burch and Werner up in the air. This spring Burch will have to decide between track and tennis.

Werner, who is also the track coach, is chomping at the bit to get Burch out for track. "She can do really well

Lady Bucs win 57-50, despite poor shooting

Melanie Noel

Janine Hoffman defends the passer, as Kathy Brauff steps in to steal the pass in Saturday's game against SFCC.

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

The first game of the 86-87 season started on a positive note for the Whitworth women's basketball team Saturday evening as they defeated Spokane Falls Community College 57-50 in the Fieldhouse.

The more experienced Pirate team struggled to beat the Spokane Falls team, who, however, were chosen by coaches in a preseason poll to take the Eastern Region of the Northwest Athletic Association of Community Colleges title.

Paula Nunnally, who made her debut as head coach for the Bucs Saturday, said of the game, "Choke city. You could see the first-game jitters, especially in the first half. Not just one girl, but all five."

Falls led at the end of the half, 29-22. SFCC made almost 48 percent of their shots, while Whitworth sank a sickly 25 percent for the first half, a statistic that explains Whitworth's disadvantage quite clearly. "We were very nervous, real up-tight," Nunnally admitted.

The Pirates came into the second half more aggressively which gave them the edge in the game. Nunnally saw the first 10 minutes of the second half as a "fair indication of the kind of team we can be this year." Their utilization of a half-court press forced several SFCC turnovers and opened the way for Whitworth's fast break, an aspect of the women's game which could prove to be their strong point this season.

An important element in that fast break is Senior Guard Lisa Vallem from Juliaetta, Idaho. Vallem finished the game with 17 points, 8 rebounds and only one turnover, an uncommon feat in Saturday's 'blunderful' game (Falls had 17 turnovers and 23 fouls to Whitworth's 16 and 21).

With 10 minutes left in the game Whitworth had taken charge 45-34. Those last 10 minutes were not exactly explosive for either team as more fouls and turnovers were committed than shots taken. "There was no patience with the offense," Nunnally attributed to the problem.

The Lady Bucs were also playing with the handicap of the absence of two veteran players: Mary Allard, a 6'1" junior from Deer Park who was named to the All-District team last year, and Yvette Reeves, a 5'9" junior forward. Allard was attending her sister's wedding and Reeves was in a car accident and will not play until Jan. 3.

Coaches, players and fans all look upon the first game with optimism. The bugs are being worked out of the system and the Lady Bucs have conquered their first challengers.

The team will be hosting Lewis-Clark State College Tuesday night, Nov. 25, at 7:30 p.m. Thanksgiving vacation for the Lady Bucs will consist of two games against Alaska Pacific University in Anchorage on Nov. 28 and 29.

Intramurals

2 V-Ball teams remain undefeated

by John Kessel
of The Whitworthian

Intramurals are a part of college life; Whitworth College is no exception. Currently two leagues of co-ed volleyball, competitive and recreational, have 13 teams competing for intramural championships.

There are seven competitive teams and six recreational teams. Intramural Co-ed Volleyball Coordinator Pete Jones, said, "It is good to have two leagues, so that more people at different skill levels can participate." This is Jones' first year as intramural coordinator at Whitworth.

A drop in the number of teams since last year has had little effect on the performance of this year's intramural teams.

Three teams are pushing for a place in the recreational play-offs. The number one spot has already been filled by the undefeated Campus Mix team. The Loco Pussycats and the BJ Bullfrogs are competing for the second place standing.

Tuesday's games were held at the Fieldhouse, with 10 out of the 13 teams playing.

The BJ Bullfrogs defeated the Warren Zoo Rec by a forfeit. Also playing at 7 p.m. in the competitive league, were the Mud Sharks, defeating the Crunch Berries in three sets; 15-11, 10-15, 15-3. This victory put the Mud Sharks in a tie for second place, and one game behind undefeated Upper Volta.

At 8 p.m. on court one, Upper Volta won in two sets against Warren Zoo Two, 15-4, 15-5. Upper Volta remains the top team in the competitive league. On court two, Student Life won in two sets against Schiban, 15-4, 15-12.

At 9 p.m., the Flying Earmuffs defeated Donald Duck; 15-13, 15-2. Their win keeps them in the number two spot in the competitive league.

Next Tuesday, Dec. 2, intramural volleyball plays its last season games. The 7 p.m. game on court one is the game to watch; Upper Volta challenging the Mud Sharks. If the Mud Sharks win, there will be a three-way tie for place in the competitive league between Upper Volta, the Mud Sharks, and the Flying Earmuffs.

The semi-finals will be held Dec. 4, and the championships on the 9th. The champions from each league will receive long-sleeved T-shirts that have the intramural logo and a volleyball printed on them.

ment Community. The club also plans to get involved in assisting with the upcoming ASWC Spring Fair.

"We want to establish ties with Alumni and try to get back some traditions that have faded," said Smith. "When I look back through old records I see that during the 50's Whitworth had many more clubs and organizations than it does now."

Sanders said that the members share a real friendship and enthusiasm for tradition and service.

"I'm excited because it isn't a group of people that all know each other or were a clique that are involved in the club," she said. "It's nice to see the diversity in ages, backgrounds and goals of the various girls in the club, very few of them were friends or really knew each other before they joined."

"We want to have lots of friends, lots of fun, and lots of activities," stated Buhner. "We are not trying to compete with other clubs, but to support and help them and the community."

"I hope to come back and 20 years and find the 'C' club still intact and strong," said Smith. "I think it is a really neat idea."

Cheer - from page 5

This is the first year Whitworth has had a Junior Varsity squad. Four freshmen were chosen: Cathy Lee, Noelle Griffin, Dairne Miller, and Mary Ann Leroy.

"We specifically wanted to cheer for J.V. because we're friends with many of the players and want to show them our support," said Griffin.

Although the two squads are completely separate, they will probably host joint fundraisers. Several activities are being planned, one of which included the dance held November 21.

Brown concluded, "Our ultimate goal is to encourage the team to play their best by letting them know we're behind them 100 percent."

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR BOYFRIEND?

- When the president of Phi Gamma Delta asks you to Saturday night's Fiji Formal.
- After raquetball class, to tell him that the instructor with the Australian accent and those blue eyes did wonders for your serve.
- When you just feel like telling him you miss him after all.

Maybe you shouldn't tell him everything that's going on. But if you still care about him, why not call and whisper some sweet things he'll never forget?

Like why you call using AT&T Long Distance Service, and why you trust AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

When you tell him that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number, he won't be able to get you out of his mind.

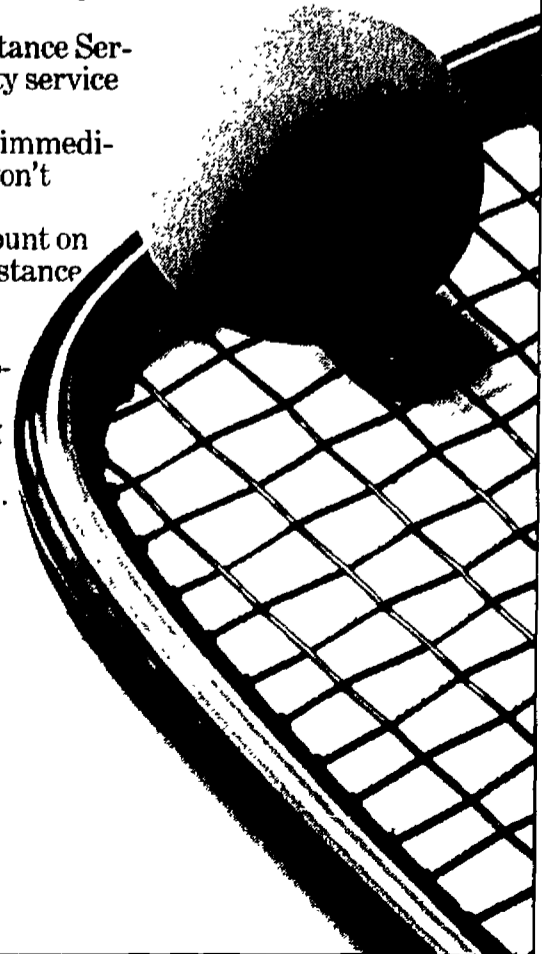

And telling him you can count on AT&T for clear, long distance connections will drive him crazy.

All of which will probably inspire him to drive out for the weekend, giving you an excuse to blow off that silly frat party after all.

The views of the joint session were compared to those of the President's Cabinet consisting of vice President of Student Life, Julie Anderton; Academic Vice President, Darrell Guder; Vice President of Business Affairs Michael Goins; Vice President of Institutional Advancement, Joe Black; and President Robert Mounce.

Big 3 revisal proposed Violence policy added

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

The Big Three policies that are drilled into the minds of students from their first steps on the Whitworth campus to their steps across the graduation platform are expected to undergo some changes by the start of school next year.

The Big Three are being revised by the president's cabinet. Two major changes will be made to the policies. First, the policies on drug and alcohol use will be combined and second, a policy addressing the problems of violent behavior will be added.

Joining the drug and alcohol regulations is an attempt to make students realize that alcohol is a drug and it should be viewed as being potentially dangerous according to Greg Hamann, Director of Student Life.

The violence addition will give resident assistants a means to cope with students behaving in such a way that they violate another person's, or the community's, basic need of security, safety and peace of mind.

"Now we have direct means to deal with violent behavior whereas before we didn't have a way to," said Jenkins first floor RA Stephanie Halton. "It is a problem. I've seen some examples of it, not necessarily violent behavior, but more out of control students."

The revisions are an attempt to connect the policies to the values of Whitworth and not in response to anything terrible going on, according to Hamann.

The changes have been presented to both the students and the faculty. ASWC President J.B. Meade has mixed emotions toward the revisions.

"The policy is a good one," he said, "if it sticks to its main intentions, that is protecting against violence."

The problem Meade sees is that the wording is unclear. The phrase "disruption of community life," concerns Meade.

"It's too vague in that it can be construed to mean anything from gossip to coming in at three in the morning," he said.

The revised policy will go to the trustees who will then decide if it will be implemented or not.

Head football coach Bruce Grambo will no longer be serving as athletic director, the college announced Friday.

Grambo, who has been athletic director since 1984, will remain in the athletic department as the head football coach.

"I have come to appreciate Bruce as a man of integrity and energy," said Guder. The college will begin a national search to fill Grambo's position next month.

Jan term registration priority altered; Soph and frosh lumped together

by Kim Riemland
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth administration changed the way it conducted Jan Term registration.

In the past, students would go to the various departments and sign up for their classes on a first come, first serve basis.

This year students submitted forms to the Registrar's office listing their first choice and an alternate.

The method used to determine who does and doesn't get into a class gave seniors top priority followed by juniors, then foreign students and department majors, and finally sophomores and freshmen were grouped together and given equal standing, according to Registrar Paul Olsen.

Freshmen and sophomores were put into the same category because first-year students are more limited to what classes they can take.

"There were fewer courses available for freshmen than there are for sophomores," said Olsen.

Not all students find this prioritization process fair.

"I think sophomores should have more of a priority of getting into a class than freshmen do," said Sophomore Business major Vicki Baroch.

A special problem is created when a student is just a few credits short of junior status and is considered to have sophomore standing.

Sophomore Lissa Marshall fits into this category.

"Since I don't plan on being here more than two more years, I needed to get into the class for a graduation requirement," said Marshall. "I didn't appreciate being treated as a freshman when I'd been here three years."

"I will certainly take some heat," said Olsen, "for treating second semester sophomores the same as freshmen."

Olsen recognizes the frustration some students might have.

"We've created a mini-crisis for about 50 or 60 students," he said.

Nearly 200 students were denied their first choice, and 50 to 60 were turned away from their first and second choices.

Associate Dean for Academic Affairs Dan Sanford pointed out that every year some students don't get the classes they want, the only difference now is that the decision of priority was made by the Registrar's office and students get frustrated because

Chances of fourth year graduation less than one in three at Whitworth

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

Students entering Whitworth as freshmen have less than a one in three chance of graduating in four years.

An average of 28.7 percent of Whitworth students complete graduation requirements by their fourth year according to a report put out by the Registrar's office.

Many factors contribute to extend students' stays at Whitworth.

A survey made by Penn State University stated that nearly 23 percent of freshmen questioned knew little or nothing about the major they chose. This lack of knowledge about their field of study might be why some students end up changing majors.

"There really is plenty of time," said Registrar Paul Olsen. "If students change their majors in their junior or senior year they may find themselves staying another year."

Study tours, which Whitworth encourages its students to take, may cause students to stay an extra year.

"They squander their money on the Student Abroad Program. It's good for them to participate in that program, but I'm sorry if it postpones their graduation."

The Education department sees many of its students study at Whitworth for five years. Three of four students receiving teaching certificates stay that fifth year. These students make up 15 percent of the Whitworth graduates according to Education department Chair Tammy Reid.

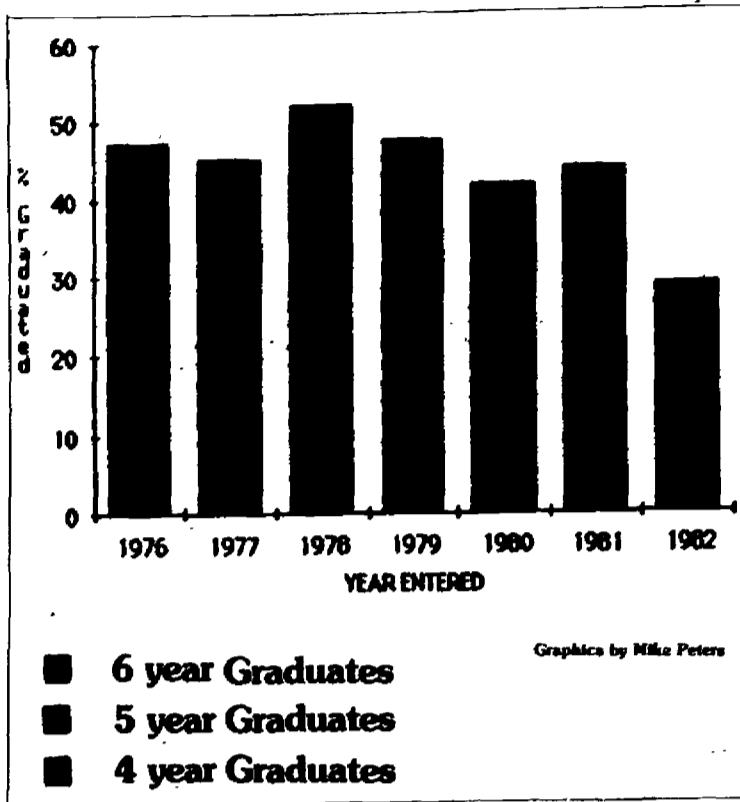

The fact that to receive a teaching certificate it takes 10 to 12 courses in addition to the general graduation requirements and that of a major is largely the cause of these students needing an extra year according to Reid.

A late commitment to teaching, taking double majors or minors, additional electives and the requirement for special education majors to take two student teaching terms are also factors contributing to the length of time education students spend at Whitworth.

Involvement in extracurricular activities causes some students to remain at Whitworth for an extended stay.

"I red-shirted a year in basketball, said fifth-year Senior Brian Meyers, "I took light because I knew I was going to stay an extra year."

Circle K International President Delaine Swenson is in a similar situation.

"I had three credits to finish," Swenson said, "I could have finished them during the four years but I took lighter loads because of my extracurricular activities."

Associate Dean of Academic Affairs Dan Sanford is concerned that students entering Whitworth may be receiving inaccurate reports from some alumni.

"Alums don't realize how hard the school has become," he said.

"Reports of uneducated graduates have prodded colleges to be more accountable," Sanford said. "The concept of rigor has become an educational goal."

Another dilemma facing Whitworth is maintaining the liberal arts education and at the same time meeting the demanding national standards placed on some majors.

"There is a lot of tension there. I think we should fight for our cause," Sanford said.

There is a tendency to add more courses to majors but a resistance to keep electives free, he said.

Accounting, Education and the pre-professional programs are the main areas that face these national standards according to Vice President of Academic Affairs, Darrell Guder.

A commitment to better advising may help make students more aware of their class standing and their progress toward graduation.

An advising program outlined by Sanford would maximize advising time, add a freshman advising program, balance advising loads and reinstate advisor evaluations.

A total of 37 credits are needed to graduate from Whitworth. In order to complete these requirements in four years a student would have to take 9.25 credits a year.

According to the registrar's study, 43.6 percent of Whitworth students graduate within five years and 47 percent within six. Olsen estimates that 70 percent of students that enter Whitworth graduate, this figure includes those who transfer out.

Olsen believes an extra year at Whitworth is beneficial.

"I don't see it as necessarily negative," he said. "It allows students to have a broader experience."

guidelines in order to benefit the community environment.

The Cabinet's recommendation suggests that visitation in the dorms not be permitted from 1 a.m. to 7 a.m. Sunday through Thursday nights, and from 2 a.m. to 7 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights.

The basis for the cabinet's arguments tie 24-hour visitation to "the College's commitment to marriage as the divinely ordained setting for sexual intercourse."

The Cabinet further clarified their proposal by suggesting that "individual visitation" be considered further. Under this consideration, restrictions could be loosened for study and social purposes when prior arrangements are made with a resident assistant.

Anderton, who has not had the opportunity to read the ASWC proposal thoroughly, was hopeful that positive results would arise out of the dialogue concerning the two proposals.

"I'm looking forward to some further discussion," said Anderton. "J.B. (Meade) and I are hopeful that some alternative ways to a better living environment, other than imposing hour restrictions, are developed."

The House and the Senate representatives further defined their position by advocating a "stronger enforcement of 'quiet hours' and a stronger emphasis on human rights."

The House and Senate also proposed that "programs on human sexuality and roommate relationships be implemented by the Student Life department in conjunction with the ASWC."

"If a change in the visitation policy is to be made I believe this is a hot enough issue to consult the trustees," said Meade. "In fact, all the trustees will receive a copy of the administration's (Cabinet's) opinion and ours."

Some of the Cabinet's and ASWC's proposals concurred with each other.

Both parties agreed on renovating the residence halls and considered telephone installation in every room. They also agreed on providing "comfortable lounges and equipped study areas, open 24 hours."

The outcome on the 24-hour policy issue will be made by the Cabinet after further review of student arguments and after considering further the implications surrounding the possible restriction of human rights and community welfare.

The final decision is hoped to be given by the end of the Spring semester.

See pages 6 and 7 for both the Cabinet and ASWC proposals.

The administration was surprised by the popularity of certain courses.

"We didn't anticipate there would be so many enormously over-filled courses," said Sanford.

Those over-filled courses were First Corinthians, Biology of Women, Is Love Enough?, and Lettering.

First Corinthians was the most overloaded with 70 spaces available and 160 students signing up.

Many students listed religion classes for their first and second choices, wanting to fulfill the biblical requirement for graduation and had to be turned away, according to Olsen.

"People who wanted a religion requirement got hurt," said Olsen, "we were caught in the horns of a dilemma."

Students registered for Spring and Jan terms at the same time. The Spring term class priority list is the same as Jan term's meaning sophomores and freshmen will again be given equal priority.

Olsen doesn't expect problems in the spring like there were for Jan Term since there are more courses available in the spring.

"I don't think there will be anything that will cause many students much discomfort," Olsen said.

Since it was the first time registration has been run in this manner, the department chairs, Dean and Registrar have made an assessment of what went well and what didn't.

The idea of registering for Spring term at the same time as Jan term should prove to be advantageous, according to Sanford.

the early registration will allow students to know their spring courses earlier than in the past and there will be time for additional class sections to be added to the curriculum if necessary.

If the administration decides to use this year's registration process in the future, some changes may be made.

Priority decisions would probably take into account credits earned rather than a student's class standing. This would insure a student who is a few credits short of the next higher class status of getting priority over someone who is in their same class, but considerably behind them.

Students would probably be asked to list more alternatives, and they would be advised to steer clear of courses that tend to fill up the most heavily.

"It would be wise to caution heavy courses," said Sanford.

Christmas week begins

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

Only 16 shoplifting days remain between today and the Christmas eve but at Whitworth College the celebration has already begun.

The week's activities actually began last Saturday, Dec. 6 when the traditional Loop lighting ceremony was held.

Bruce Eckley

Laurie Dunlap, Heidi Franz, and Annie Boulet join in the celebration around the Whitworth Christmas Tree

At that time the Whitworth Christmas tree was lit and those in attendance were able to view a new nativity scene which was built and donated by the Carpenter Shop of the Physical Plant.

The Loop lighting was followed by one of three Whitworth Choir concerts performed throughout the weekend at Whitworth Presbyterian Church.

Events continued Sunday at 9 p.m. with a wassail party and coffeehouse. The party was intended as a study break and featured hot cider and popcorn.

Students may take time out from busy Christmas shopping Tuesday at 8 p.m. and meet at the Baldwin-Jenkins lounge for the caroling party sponsored by the residents of Stewart and Jenkins. The party will tour the campus ringing out songs of Christmas cheer for the hopeful enjoyment of the campus residents.

Wednesday, Dec. 10, at 11:15 a.m. Ed Olson will speak in Midweek worship.

Also on Wednesday, students are invited to a cookie party in the HUB at 3 p.m.

Also expected to attend the party is the jolly gentleman known to most as Santa Claus. This will be the first of two guest appearances he will make during the week.

Coming only 13 shopping days before Christmas, the Whitworth Auxiliary will be helping out with those last minute Christmas gift ideas with a mini-bazaar Thursday, Dec. 11, at 10 a.m. in the HUB.

Later Thursday evening from 4:30 to 6:15 the entire campus is invited to a Christmas feast. The meal will be progressive style beginning in the Dining Hall for appetizers and the main course and then moving to the HUB for dessert. Off-campus students, must pay $4, on-campus students must show meal cards.

Off-campus students, faculty, and staff who would like to purchase tickets for the feast must contact Fielding by today in order to allow for planning.

Friday morning at 11:15 Fine Arts will present its annual Christmas Forum in Cowles Auditorium.

On Saturday 13, weather permitting, an interclass snow carving contest will be held in the Loop at 3 p.m. Judging will follow.

Saturday at 8 p.m. Whitworth Presbyterian Church will host the Christmas Candlelight Ballet Service. The theme of the performance will be a special celebration of the Good News.

Following the Ballet, Ballard Hall is sponsoring a Christmas dance in the HUB at 9. Old Kris Kringle is expected to make his second appearance of the Christmas week during the dance.

Because Kringle is an authority on Christmas giving he could be a valuable resource for gift ideas and may be available for you at this time. He is not expected to suggest a partridge in a pine tree.

The week long celebration will conclude Sunday 14, at 7 p.m. when the entire campus is invited to the Candlelight Creche service in the Chapel.

A Creche service is the telling of the Christmas story where candles are lit for each Inspiring campus unity reason for Dating Game

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth Dating Game, inspired by a silly and semi-romantic Hollywood game show, is coming to Whitworth through the efforts of the students in a Small Group Communication class. Their intent is to bring the campus together.

Thirty candidates out of 100 have been chosen as possible finalists for the show. The game will take place in the HUB at 6 p.m. on Dec. 8.

The group's version of the show will imitate the Hollywood production.

"We'll put them (the participants) in different places in the HUB so they don't scope out each other," said Scott Longacre, a junior Communications major.

The Dating Game in Hollywood has a guy or gal on member of the Nativity scene as the story unfolds.

There are many events during the week and Fielding suggests that all students choose carefully the ones they wish to attend.

The celebration comes just one week before final exams. Students are being encouraged not to overextend themselves in the celebration.

One of the goals of the celebration is to afford the chance for some students to one side of a wall asking three date-starved men or women silly or "romantic" questions.

When the group was planning what sort of event to put on the Newlywed Game was proposed.

"You could almost do the Newlywed Game," said Longacre. He was referring to the number of students who get married at Whitworth.

Jokes were also made about the prizes which they were planning to award. "I was thinking about a trip to the Eiffle Tower in Paris," said Junior Public Relations major Jon Boston.

Laurie Ross, a junior Public Relations major said that the prizes were to be a surprise.

Paula Williams, a senior Speech Communications major, has contacted KREM TV. According to Williams, KREM expressed a real interest in the event and they will attend.

enjoy the Christmas holiday at school because some do not have a supportive home life, according to Fielding.

When Monday morning arrives and many students are using reading day — with only nine shopping days left — for a trip to The Bon or Nordstroms, the organizers of the Christmas celebration will be hoping that they have made the Christmas holiday a bit more pleasant for the Whitworth community.

Bicameral: good, bad news

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

The ASWC's decision to convert to a bicameral system of student government, as outlined by a new Constitution, appears to be fulfilling expectations with a minimum of problems.

Under the old system, the Presidents' Council made up of the dorm presidents, five off-campus representatives, and the three executive officers, made all the decisions.

The bicameral system splits power between two houses — the House of Representatives and the Senate.

The House of Representatives, made up of the dorm presidents and five off campus representatives, deals with all dorm/interdorm and commuter student concerns, expenditures over $200, and the subsidiary organizations of ASWC.

The senators, two from each class and two senators-at-large, deal with issues and long-range planning of ASWC and specifically work toward unifying their respective classes.

These changes reflect the new constitution written last spring.

"When we wrote up the new constitution, it wasn't meant to be a cure-all," said J.B. Meade, ASWC executive president. "I always knew it would have flaws but at least we have a good base to start from. You learn a lot in the first few months."

Meade expects the system will run smoother next semester.

Most ASWC members agree that after this year, many of the bugs will be worked out.

"It'll take time for people to understand what we're trying to do," said Wendy Barram, president of South Warren. "We've picked up a pretty good pace."

Two of the main goals the new constitution aimed towards was taking pressure off the dorm presidents and increasing class representation.

"I had a tremendous amount of responsibility," said Trish Morita, sophomore representative who served as a dorm president last year. "I felt I was constantly being pulled left and right."

Although the work load of dorm presidents hasn't decreased, they are dealing more with issues that directly affect students, according to Steve Broughton, executive vice president.

Other ASWC representatives echo Broughton's enthusiasm.

"We're able to touch on issues we never would have touched before because we're sharing the responsibilities," said Barram.

Delaine Swenson, senator-at-large, agrees that because of last year's time limits, they never could have looked at all the issues they deal with now.

The ASWC is now planning a spring festival to be held at Riverfront Park that might not have been considered under the old Presidents' Council system and its time restraints.

One of the roles of dorm presidents is to involve the residents in their halls in the campus activities and to keep them in touch with what's happening in ASWC.

Dorms are also planning their own community activities. For example, Jenkins and Stewart are now working in cooperation with the Christmas Week sponsoring the campus caroling party.

Although a large time commitment is still involved, the time presidents do spend seems to be more productive, according to Morita. Last year, "I remember long, long meeting," she said.

Homecoming is evidence that the system is working.

According to ASWC sources, last year's Presidents council would not have had time to work on the event and also work on other important issues.

Although the House and Senate work separately most of the time, joint sessions are held when big issues come up. For example, several joint meetings have been held over the 24-hour visitation policy.

Still, a better means of communication between the houses is needed. Joint sessions were not in the original plans when the constitution was written, according to Swenson.

As of yet, the senators' roles are very grey.

"Everything we have to do is unwritten," said Morita. "Once the bylaws are written we'll have something more concrete to go from."

There should be a drastic improvement in the definition of senatorial roles after the bylaws are written during Jan term, according to Swenson.

The at-large senators have a unique problem because the whole campus is their constituency. They find groups of students that don't fall easily into a certain class, such as fifth year seniors, commuter and older students and represent the needs special to these groups. In a way, explained Swenson, they serve as an extra representative for each student.

For Meade, Senate Chair, it's often difficult to decide under whose jurisdiction certain issues fall. Only a few issues are clear cut as to whether they will go to the House or the Senate.

This added responsibility of setting up the agenda has added to the workload of the executives which takes away from the time they spend working with the subsidiary programs.

A speaker for the House and a speaker for the Senate are tentatively being considered to possibly combat this.

The ASWC is also considering adding a fourth executive officer, an administrative vice president, because of the increased workload on the executives, according to Broughton.

The Senate is also investigating several programs to see how they can better meet student needs. A possible club council is being considered which would try to strengthen Whitworth's clubs by bringing them into ASWC.

Presidency plagued problems run deep

by Tim Boggess
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

Americans are shocked and appalled at the recent events unfolding around the covert Iranian arms deal and the supposed transference of $30 million in profits to Contra rebels stationed in Honduras. High-level officials are packing up and pleading the Fifth while government and independent intelligence committees are seizing documents (headed for the shredder or manure pile) and filing subpoenas. The legitimacy of the Reagan presidency is in question and may suffer irreparable damage.

Yet, should we really be so surprised that something like this finally happened? Bad policy, like sickness, doesn't just spontaneously emerge. There are usually a number of causes for one being sick, and then visible symptoms which allow a diagnosis of and direct treatment for the ailment. A cancer has been spreading in the Reagan presidency for six years, but the symptoms have been ignored. Is it too late for a cure?

Reagan's cancer is called "delegation of power" and, like saccharin, it can be harmful if taken in mega-doses. It looks as if Reagan has overdosed.

From the beginning of his first term Reagan has given his aides a lot of latitude in policy making, only asking to be briefed once in a while on their developments. Actually, this is an admirable idea in theory — leaving the decisions up to experts — but in practice the results have been far from ideal. Lack of communication between departments (and the White House) and frequent powerplays within the administration are commonplace. The covert operation carried on by Lt. Col. Oliver North of the NSC (National Security Council) and Reagan's denial of knowing anything about it are indicative of the breakdown in communication and misuse of power to achieve personal ends that have riddled the administration. It is not the first symptom.

Take, for example, former Secretary of the Interior James Watt. This is the man who compared environmentalists to the forces that created Nazism in Germany, distinguished Democrats and Republicans as "liberals and Americans," and, to pride himself on being an unbiased individual, appointed a special commission that consisted of "every kind of mix you can have. I have a black, I have a woman, two Jews and a cripple."

Former Secretary of State Al "go-ahead-make-my-day" Haig was famous for throwing tantrums in departmental meetings when he didn't get his way.

Chief of Staff Donald Regan is attracted to controversy like a fish to water. Being recognized as one of the foremost male chauvinists in the nation will be his most enduring legacy.

Michael Deaver, former White House deputy chief of staff, has been accused of using his privileged position illegally to his own advantage. Deaver, now a lucrative lobbyist in Washington, is under investigation for representing private clients (i.e. the governments of Canada and South Korea) on matters he dealt with as an administration official. Some loyalty.

Speaking of loyalty, David Stockman (Reagan's ex-budget wizard and right-hand man) has recently published a book of memoirs entitled "The Triumph of Politics: Why the Reagan Revolution Failed," where he just stops short of calling Reagan an incompetent chowderhead. With friends like these...

Considering these few samplings, the recent developments of the past few weeks don't seem so cataclysmic. In fact, it is nothing short of a miracle that Reagan has come out smelling like a rose for so long. His victory in 1984 was one of the largest landslides in history. He may go down in history books as one of the most popular presidents of all time. He made America proud again. He re-established the "institution" of the presidency. How did he do it?

No matter what the investigations uncover about Reagan's involvement in the Iran-Nicaragua deal, he is defeated. If he knew about the secret dealings with Nicaraguan rebels, it would destroy the legitimacy of Reagan's most important administration victory, namely, aid to the contras. If he didn't know about it, this would be a sure sign of how far the office of the president has degenerated to a "back-seat driver" position. He has already dug his grave by sending arms to Iran — whether or not they were used for the release of American hostages — and the Nicaragua connection is just nails on the coffin. This cancer seems to be of the malignant type.

Choir in tune with success

by Jim McGee
of The Whitworthian

Hard work, talent, dedication and a close family-like atmosphere have been blended well together to form the Whitworth choir into one of the most well-known concert choir groups in the area, said Randi Ellefson, Director of both Choral Activities and the Whitworth choir.

"The music tradition at Whitworth is very strong, and it has a good reputation in the Northwest," said Ellefson. "We are trying to grow and assume a position of choral leadership in the Northwest."

"Whitworth has always had a good choir," explained Ellefson. "But I feel like last year was the beginning of the students themselves realizing how important a choir can be to a school like Whitworth."

He said that he believes that because the 68-member group is rather large for a group of its type, it has a very strong presence when performing both because of the large number of people, and the volume it is able to achieve.

"When we go to the congregations to perform, they get blown away by the size and power of the group," said Ellefson.

"The choir can be a real direct arm of the college in keeping in contact with its constituencies," explained Ellefson. "When so much of the material we perform is spiritual, the group is very well suited to the many performances we give in churches when we tour. We indirectly do a lot of PR for the college."

"We are investigating many more opportunities for the choir to travel abroad. Among many others, Asia is one of the areas we are investigating," said Ellefson.

The choir will spend the Jan terms of odd numbered years on campus, and then will go on tour immediately after Jan term, he explained. On even numbered years, they will not be required to remain on campus during Jan term, but will tour during spring break.

This year, following Jan term, the tour will travel to Portland to perform. Earlier this year, the choir performed in St. Johns Cathedral in south Spokane, as part of their Cathedral in the Arts Program. This past weekend they performed their Christmas Celebration at Whitworth Presbyterian Church.

"On Friday, March 20th, we will perform the Verdi Requiem, a large 19th century work. We will be singing together with Spokane Chorale, the WSU choir, the EWU choir, the Spokane Falls choir, and the Spokane Symphony," explained Ellefson. "It will really provide a wonderful educational opportunity to perform with an orchestra."

Many of the choir members share Ellefson's enthusiasm for the choir.

Junior Kurt Liebert stated, "I believe the choir has definitely been evolving in a positive direction."

Sophomore David Jewett looks forward to more tours. "I'd like to go back East or to Colorado, just to get out and expose everybody else to Whitworth," he said.

According to Ellefson, the future is very bright for the Whitworth choir. He believes the variety of music, the dedication of its members, and family-like closeness of everyone involved is instrumental in its success.

"The choir speaks for itself," he said. "I hope the students feel like it is a part of their life as a student."

"Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home" ★★★ 1/2

With simplicity, effects film takes crew home

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

It's here, it's a hit, and it's another sequel to Gene Roddenberry's successfully re-running television series, "Star Trek."

"Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home" is not much of a space movie. In fact, over half of the film takes place in modern San Francisco, employing the recently successful and nearly overused genre of time travel ("Back to the Future," "Peggy Sue Got Married")

Trekkies will be pleased, as the movie contains several touching inferences and reunions that can only be fully appreciated by those with a working knowledge of the 23rd century. However, the precious few Trekkies that haven't already seen this movie for the second time soon will, so I'm speaking to the rest of you.

This movie's success is built on its simplicity. While terrific, the special effects are secondary to the story, a solid but basically easy-going adventure. Leonard Nimoy, who plays Chief Science Officer Spock, is back as director of his second "Star Trek" film.

In a nutshell, the Enterprise crew (now of the 'H.M.S. Bounty,' a Klingon 'Bird of Prey') is stopped from returning to Earth by a distress signal. To save the planet, the crew must deliver hump-backed whales (extinct in the 23rd century) to communicate with a powerful alien probe.

The search leads them to late 20th century Earth, and herein lies the rest of the story. Granted, it's not very serious, but it's not as hokey as it sounds either.

A Paramount release, the opening date for "Star Trek IV" was moved up two weeks, hoping the film would break out for the entire holiday season. The plan seems to have worked. Given that this is going to be a less-than-average Christmas movie season due to several studio shake-ups, "Star Trek IV" may very well run away with the box office.

There are other new films coming out for the holiday season. The following are just a few of the better-looking possibilities.

"Heartbreak Ridge"—Clint Eastwood directs and stars as a highly decorated but maverick combat veteran whose acts of bravery are as legendary as his barroom brawls and who turns a fouled-up platoon into a razor-sharp fighting unit.

"The Golden Child"—A fantasy action-adventure starring Eddie Murphy as a private detective trying to rescue a child capable of saving the world from evil.

"The Three Amigos"—Comedy stars Chevy Chase, Steve Martin and Martin Short as silent film stars who accidentally get viewed as hero-saviors by a Mexican village.

"The Mosquito Coast"—Harrison Ford stars as an eccentric father who takes to escape the "social ills" of the United States.

"No Mercy"—A romantic thriller starring Richard Gere as a tough Chicago cop hunting down his partner's murderer, and Kim Basinger as the Cajun woman he falls in love with.

Stage crew: there are no substitutes

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

Who are all of those people in black shirts who give and take your forum slips?

This is the Whitworth stage crew of Cowles Memorial Auditorium and they do a lot more than most people realize.

Dances, Mac Hall in Concert, the luau, ballets, movies, junior and senior recitals, concerts, and forums are all included in the list of stage crew responsibilities.

"The hours really vary, depending on how many campus activities there are," said Debbie Hansen, a freshman Political Studies/Theatre Arts double major on the crew.

During November, there were two big concerts in addition to the regular activities. Many members of the stage crew worked more than 50 hours last month.

However, Jan Term will not be nearly as hectic, because there are less things going on.

"They only have a couple of movies and dances, so it won't be so busy," noted Hansen.

But what exactly do they do that takes so long?

Christine Knudson, a senior Literature major in her third year working for the stage crew, commented on the work involved in a concert. (Eg. Bryan Duncan/Phil Keaggy).

"We have to be there when the van gets there and help them unload," she said. "They usually ask if there's any more guys, since there's so many girls. The equipment is heavy and expensive, but we can do the lifting."

Knudson explained that after the boxes have been transported to the stage, the crew helps set up the light show and the follow spot if the group wants one.

During the actual concert, she said another group of people are responsible for house management. This sometimes entails standing next to 10-foot speaker stacks to prevent anyone from going up on to the stage.

Finally, after the concert is over, the crew must pack and reload all of the equipment.

"When we tear down, it seems like we have to wind up miles of cords," said Knudson. "Then they direct us as to which box goes in where in the van."

"For the RussTaff/Sheila Walsh/Mylon Lefevre concert we worked from 10 a.m. until three the next morning before we were done," said Hansen.

Off-campus events, like the Christmas choir concert, require that the light trees and sound system are moved from the auditorium to the church.

That sounds like a lot of work for any one group of people. The crew only numbers 10-15 people.

But generally, there are no complaints about how much has to be done.

"We have to work a lot, but we have a lot of fun," laughed Hansen. "There is a big variety of people. We don't have that much in common, but we work together well."

A statement on campus policies for community life

By the President's Cabinet

THE BASIC ASSUMPTIONS

The residential life of Whitworth College is a central and essential part of the college's educational experience. In the statement of our mission, we affirm that there are three major ways in which we will "glorify God by providing (our) students... an educational experience distinguished by excellence, oriented by a world view shaped by Scripture, and designed to prepare graduates for effective life, work, and service throughout the world." These ways are (1) a faculty of scholars committed to Jesus Christ, (2) an atmosphere of open dialogue, and (3) a residential environment that enhances and complements the academic experience.

The statement of educational goals further develops this definition of the importance of the residential environment, when we state that it is a goal of the college "to promote the personal growth of students in the context of a close-knit residential campus." To do this, we seek to help students to

1. gain a better understanding of themselves;
2. establish a healthy way of life;
3. form enduring friendships; and
4. exhibit respect for their neighbors in this or any community.

When we move from goals to their implementation, we must become specific. What will we do on campus to translate our mission and goals into the actual experience of community life? The ultimate expression of this process will be concrete things like the design and maintenance of dormitories, the Student Life department's program and staffing, and the policies which govern residential life.

Before we present the administration's thinking about residential policies, there are several important themes which should be addressed briefly.

1. Education for Freedom

We agree that individual freedom is an important component of our civilization's ethic. In fact, we see our Western emphasis upon individual freedoms as an outgrowth of the Judeo-Christian tradition, summarized in the idea of divinely ordained inalienable rights. We envision the Whitworth graduate as a person who is able to make mature and responsible decisions, that is, who can use one's freedom constructively and with accountability. While studying at Whitworth, a student should receive ample opportunity to explore one's freedoms, to make choices and learn their consequences, and to examine critically one's values through confrontations with the community's values. Part of "establishing a healthy way of life," and gaining a "better understanding of oneself" is learning how to exercise freedom.

It is therefore important that every part of our educational process support students in the development of a responsible approach to their own freedom. Where we, as a Christian college, differ from much of our society is in our emphasis upon the relationship between individual freedom and responsibility within the community. We understand that humans are placed within a community which creates opportunities and responsibilities for everyone. This expresses itself in every area of life: politics, society, friendship, marriage, parenting, and the church. Thus, our freedom is not an end in itself. It is focussed upon the individual's development of his or her talents and interests together with the individual's contribution to the welfare of the entire community. From the specifically Christian perspective, human freedom is understood as the way God enables us to serve his good purposes in the world, which means leading a life according to God's design. But we understand that God's design for our lives is the best possible way to live; it is good, practical, reasonable, and functional. Would we not all want to live in a society where everyone respected life, each other's property, marriages, reputations, honor, and possessions (see the last six of the Ten Commandments)? Therefore, our freedom should be focussed upon the accomplishment of what is good, as defined by the God who created and preserves life, both for individuals and for the community.

2. Why Have Rules?

When we have defined our basic commitments and policies, something still has to happen for those statements to have any practical impact upon our lives. They are to be translated into the structures and processes of our academic and community life. Although this happens in many ways, one of the most obvious is through the formulation of rules for the life of the community. Rules become necessary because the members of a community do not automatically and always behave in ways which are in the best interests of everyone. When we design rules, we seek to abide by these guidelines:

- Our community rules should express our basic values and conviction.
- They should seek to respect the valid interests of all members of the community.
- Our rules should be as few and obvious as possible, so that the greatest amount of educational development can occur (we know that there is more educational value in making good decisions than in merely following the directives of others).

There are a few other basic understandings about rules which should be remembered in this discussion. Rules are not divine laws or moral absolutes. They are occasional decisions of a community, which may change from time to time, and which may be different from one society to another.

To summarize, then: We have rules for two basic reasons. They are to protect a society from behaviors which are damaging either to the whole or the various members. And they are to promote an environment and behavior which is beneficial for a community and all of its members.

3. The Character of Compromise

Since we live in an imperfect world made up of imperfect people, we will never design perfect societies or perfect rules. The decision-making process within a community will often require creative compromise. Good rules result from a constructive process of hearing carefully all the interests and concerns within a community, identifying the values which are at issue, and finding the creative compromise which will both protect from problems and promote a better community life. (As an example of this process, we point to the "Council of Jerusalem," Acts 15, where the early Christian community found a creative compromise to resolve the tension between Jewish and Gentile Christians.)

TOWARDS AN ENHANCED COMMUNITY LIFE

We regard Whitworth's community life as a very positive and important part of the total educational experience of the College. The fact that we have a residential requirement as part of our graduation requirements documents this. It is further underlined by the college's current plan to devote several millions of dollars in the next several years to the renovation of all the residences.

We recognize that Whitworth's approach to residential living is unique among Christian colleges. We have maintained a high degree of individual freedom and recognized the importance of this freedom for students' healthiest development. Therefore, we have not fostered a highly restrictive approach to community living.

Two-thirds of a student's time is spent in residential living, not in classrooms. This fact alone demonstrates the educational importance of the residential environment as it influences a student's development. For all of these reasons, the administration of the college is obligated to reassess the structures and policies of our community life to see if they do, in fact, express the mission and goals of the college. This same process is going on in the academic area and is leading to various improvements in the curriculum.

In this context, the issues of visitation in residences has arisen. We are asking ourselves if there might be ways to regulate visitation so as to improve the quality of residential life. There are several questions which concern us, all of which have come out of our observations of the last years of experience in our residences.

We are concerned about the way in which the living atmosphere in our residences supports the educational goals of the college. Can students live and study in their rooms in ways which support their accomplishment of their academic goals? Is there a need to address issues like privacy, study atmosphere, rest and sleep, and noise? Could we arrange a visitation order which would promote students' individual freedoms while protecting from these and other problems which are contrary to the educational goals of the college?

An important part of the students' gaining "a better understanding of themselves" and "establishing a healthy way of life" must address the development of intimacy and its appropriate sexual expression. In an institution whose educational experience is "oriented by a world view shaped by Scripture," this developmental task is carried out within the context of the college's clear commitment to marriage as the divinely ordained setting for sexual intercourse. Is it, then, supportive of students' development in this area to allow twenty-four hour visitation? Without assuming that all students visiting rooms late at night have "only one thing in mind," nor that sexual activity only occurs at certain hours, is the present order educationally sound and conducive to "establishing a healthy way of life?" Is this not a very good example of the tension which arises between an individual's personal freedoms, and the needs and concerns of the whole community? Is it perhaps also an example of the need for rules because of the behavior of some, but not all, members of a community? Would another visitation order establish a structure which would give students a better opportunity to examine their values and make more constructive decisions?

A revised visitation rule could, in our view, provide many benefits for the community which now often are lacking. It could guarantee privacy and a protected study atmosphere. It could make living situations with roommates more positive. It could clarify the college's commitment regarding sexual intercourse. However, it is clearly a place where compromise is called for, and where the entire community can be creative in its decision-making. The students' community may see in this issue an opportunity to develop its own sense of accountability and respect for each other's views and needs. There may be forms of student interaction, as well as other ways to respond formally to behavioral problems, which are educationally more constructive, but which we have not discovered yet. To work out together such policies and rules will enable the college to fulfill its mission and goals more effectively within residence life.

SOME PROPOSALS

Here are some ideas which we would like to place in consideration in the current discussion:

1. We propose that visitation in the dorms be permitted from 7 a.m. to 1 a.m. on Sunday to Thursday nights, and from 7 a.m. to 2 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights.
2. We propose that we investigate the feasibility of some form of permitted "individual visitation" for study or social purposes, which would extend the hours with a clearly defined process, entailing advance interaction with the resident assistants.
3. We propose that, in the process of renovating all residences, serious consideration be given to installing telephones in all rooms.
4. We propose that comfortable lounges and equipped study areas, open twenty-four hours, be made available on campus.
5. We propose that, during final exams, the library remain open twenty-four hours.
6. We propose that the students investigate ways to increase their ownership of the college's values and standards and accept greater responsibility for the quality of life in the residences, and that their proposals be considered for inclusion in the college's formal policies and rules for residence life.

ISSUE

24-hour visitation

The issue addressed by the ASWC

Recognizing the importance that the 24-hour visitation issue has become for the Whitworth community, The Whitworthian has printed the position papers from the ASWC and the President's Cabinet. The papers have been printed in their entirety to insure retention of their ideas. The paper submitted by the ASWC does include rebuttal remarks to the Cabinet's position, whereas the Cabinet does not rebut to the ASWC.

"Community," "Freedom of choice," "openly committed but committed to being open," "student ownership;" these are a few phrases which have attracted students to Whitworth College. They represent the community atmosphere which is fundamental to the value development process. As a preface to the "Behavioral Expectations" the Student Handbook provides the following statement; "value development comes from making choices based on sound information, and value choices occur when you select from among options and the consequences which accompany them. For this reason the college is constantly striving to provide adequate freedom for students to critically examine their faith, values, and life styles in relation to those of our culture and those of Jesus Christ." In recognition of this statement, we the Associated Students of Whitworth College (hereafter referred to as ASWC), seek to make known our opposition to Student Life's proposal establishing mandatory dorm visitation hours.

Our opposition to the proposal begins with Whitworth's distinctive nature. When a student is introduced to their dormitory at the beginning of the year, the college's behavioral expectations are introduced and the rationale behind them discussed. These rules provide positive parameters for students to develop a value framework. In essence, they articulate the values of the institution. The rules are congruent with the value development process in that the rules inform students that consequences accompany certain actions. The rules and consequences are unambiguous. There is to be no possession or consumption of alcohol on campus; there is to be no possession or consumption of illegal drugs on campus, and there is to be no cohabitation on campus. We understand the term cohabitation to include genital sexual involvement outside marriage, and/or the spending of the night together by two persons of the opposite sex." These rules provide an adequate amount of freedom to make value assessments and their reasoning is frightfully obvious. Whitworth's distinctive character is derived from the ability to provide its students with an "educational experience distinguished by excellence oriented by a world view shaped by Scripture, and designed to prepare graduates for effective life, work, and service throughout the world." The clarity of this institution's rules and mission statement make Whitworth College unique.

Whitworth's emphasis on individual growth further illustrates this distinctiveness. Individual growth "comes from making choices based on sound information, and value choices occur when" the individual "selects from among options and the consequences which accompany them." (Student Handbook) Therefore, behavioral expectations of the college relate to the individual as a member of a committed student community. The committed community is derived from the behavioral expectations placed on the individual. These rules "protect our society" from individual "behaviors which are damaging either to the whole or to various members. And they promote an environment and behavior which benefits the community and all of its members." (A Statement on Campus Policies for Community Life, p. 3)

The ASWC affirms the college's commitment to individual growth. We believe it characterizes clarity and is based upon sound, justifiable reasoning. We oppose mandatory restrictions on dorm visitation based on the fact that it runs contrary to the above stated precedent.

Mandatory visitation restrictions are broad and sweeping. They affect the entire community and are not supported by the sound reasoning of "individual growth" or "value development." Following are the administration's premises behind visitation restrictions.

1. "It could guarantee privacy and a protected study atmosphere.
2. "It could make living situations with roommates more positive.
3. "It could clarify the college's commitment regarding sexual intercourse." (A Statement on Campus Policies for Community Life, p. 4-5.)

Guaranteeing a protected study atmosphere and a more positive living situation between roommates is clearly not within the purview of visitation restrictions. We consider premises numbers one and two to be faulty reasoning in that an overwhelming majority of disturbances are created by groups of students of the same sex on their respective floors or dormitories — and not by groups of males and females which is the discriminating basis of the proposal. Visitation restrictions are designed to place off limits, visitation between individual members of the opposite sex. Although this design "could" speak to a protected study atmosphere or improved roommate relations, there are proactive responses that facilitate growth in a more productive manner (e.g. Residence Life Programming, see point 2 "Proposal").

With regard to clarifying the college's commitment to sexual intercourse we again cite behavioral expectation number three; "There is to be no cohabitation on campus. We understand the term cohabitation to include genital sexual involvement outside marriage and/or spending of a night together by two persons of the opposite sex who are not married to each other. Although spending of the night together by two persons of the opposite sex does not necessarily imply sexual involvement, it is seen as a circumstance which encourages such activity and therefore is not permissible." (Student Handbook) We believe adding clarity to explicit clarity is beyond necessity. Furthermore a rule on visitation provides individuals a shield of defense from the cohabitation rule. Therefore rendering individual confrontation on sexuality, impotent. Whitworth College possesses an established and respected structure of community within the parameters of "the big three."

Ownership of this institution's behavioral rules is the responsibility of each individual student. We believe they are the distinctive which makes our community and our institution unique. Students must examine their values and maintain an active role in this evaluation process. The ASWC encourages dormitories to consider visitation hours on the basis of privacy and individual student experience. The process of deciding hours of visitation for dormitories provides students an avenue to "critically examine their faith, values, and life styles in relation to those of our culture and those of Jesus Christ." (Student Handbook) We desire to maintain the option for dorms to establish visitation hours and believe this is the essence of "student ownership."

As an integral aspect of our student ownership we feel strongly that the possible benefits suggested by the administration from a visitation policy would in fact lead to losses of community far greater than those which would be gained. In fact, we feel based on our experiences at Whitworth, that this policy would have a very negative effect on the essential qualities which make Whitworth a community; experiences such as co-ed dormitories, late night educational dialogues, and relationship development. In addition this policy will have a grave impact on Whitworth by creating artificial barriers between sexes, and encouraging community members to leave; both which lead to the destruction of this community. The benefits that could be attained from this change are made negligible by the losses this community would suffer.

We are concerned that no research has been conducted to indicate the negative consequences of such a policy change. Many questions concerning the negative consequences of this change remain unanswered. What effect would a revised visitation policy have on our co-ed dorms? Would co-ed dorms be changed significantly? How could they develop a sense of community if restricted in mutual access? Would this important educational tool be lost? In addition what would become of the late night educational dialogues that greatly enhance our collegiate experience? Would they continue in the artificial atmosphere of a lounge or library? Are these hard to measure yet invaluable experiences going to suffer due to this policy?

Even more severe questions beg to be addressed. Would artificial barriers on visitation also lead to barriers between sexes at Whitworth? How would male/female relationships be affected by a rule intimating there is something "wrong" about males in female rooms and vice versa, no matter what the hour? Equally important are questions about the community effected by students leaving. Would a forced visitation policy lead to a mass exodus of students at 12:50 a.m.? How can students be positively affected by their residential environment if they are forced out of it, and into "local establishments" where rules do not apply? What effects will this exodus have not only on the Whitworth community but the Spokane community as well?

In short will this policy lead to the great benefits that the administration claims; renewed privacy, no noise, a deep relationship with one's roommate, a study atmosphere, sleep, sexual morality, and a sense of Christian direction? Or will it lead to disillusionment among students, the endangerment of a total education, a destruction of Christian community, and the loss of a complete 'Whitworth experience'?

Webster's defines change as "to lay aside, abandon, or leave for another." This definition of change presupposes that change is accompanied by sound reasoning and a system superior to that which is being abandoned. To abandon the 24 hour visitation option, sound reasons and outcomes must be established which are not negated by serious community concerns and unanswered questions. We are convinced that this change will have significant negative effects on Whitworth, and until sound reason and answers to our questions have been offered we stand resolutely opposed to the elimination of this option.

PROPOSALS

The following are proposals that we place into discussion for the Whitworth community.

1. We propose that the visitation policy remain the same with individual members of the dormitory using their concerns, experience, and personal needs to decide visitation hours.
2. We propose a stronger enforcement of 'quiet hours' and a stronger emphasis on individual rights during those hours be considered.
3. We propose that programs on human sexuality and roommate relationships be implemented by the Student Life department in conjunction with ASWC.
4. We propose that, in the process of renovating all residences, phones be installed in all rooms.
5. We propose that comfortable lounges and equipped study areas, open twenty-four hours, be made available on campus.
6. We propose that, during final exams, the library remain open twenty-four hours.
7. We propose that the administration encourage the open participation of students in the decision making of the community by a clearly defined and effective process.

This paper was approved as ASWC's official position on Whitworth College's visitation policy by a unanimous vote on the House and Senate on Nov. 24, 1986, and presented to the Whitworth community for discussion on December 2, 1986.

Celebrate! Celebrate!
 Our King soon to arrive...
 Safe and secure
 In His mother's womb...
 A Son born to die.
 Though an angel came
 And warned you...
 You had no idea
 You'd see...
 Your Son looking down at you
 Hanging on a cross...
 Oh, how I weep for you,
 Mary.
 For I know where He's going..
 And the suffering
 He will have to endure...
 The love of God
 To be shown through Him...
 A sacrifice
 Precious and pure.
 Never has a birth
 Been worth
 More in a man...
 I say this to ease your pain —
 To cleanse the world
 From all it's sin
 The power of His spirit
 Will remain.
 Blessed are you among women!
 For the Son inside of you,
 Shall die to live in me —
 Oh mother of my Lord and

 He slumbers.
 So small to be a King

Looking for the Light

by Karl-Heinz Evers
 special to The Whitworthian

Searching for the German Christmas songs, I came upon a few poems which my predecessor had left in the file cabinet. Oh, a poem of Christmas! Cherish memories of an old-fashioned, simple Christmas in the "Old Country" ascended once more as I approach this Holy Season celebration. Reminiscence...

Yes, reciting a Christmas poem from memory, knowing by heart the words of a well-known author, and singing lovely carols like "O Tannenbaum..." and "Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht..." was a tradition in our home on the Holy Evening before the Holy Nights or Weihnachten.

And there was the Christmas tree, Weihnachtsbaum, in one corner of the living room, shining with gold and silver ornaments and its bright candles. Under it the gifts, wrapped tenderly and ready to be given in love.

Christmas is for children, and we are all His children. We all look for the light, the warmth and wonder, the spirit of Christmas. And not all the time do we capture it.

I'd love to be a kid again, if only for a few moments, as my thoughts go back, recapturing the real spirit of Christmas with its Light in the Holy Nights.

Like in 1943 on a farm somewhere in Schleswig-Holstein with so much darkness around me on Christmas. No toys, no cakes or cookies, no new clothing, and very little heat. My joy was the light of that one candle saved for the freshly cut tree, our Tannenbaum or Christbaum.

The smell of the tree sap and needles and candlelight, I can still bring it back from the dark days of yesterday. "O du frohliche, O du selige..." Oh happy time of having a light, of being alive, having love, or even an apple or Apfelsine (orange), a special gift on the quarterly ration card. A gift and a light in the darkness...

The simple great joy of being with my family, the love and joy of jubilation in Christ's birth, the preparation for the coming celebration of an old-fashioned, old-country Christmas — that precious gift of mine again after seventeen years in 1983.

A jumbo jet 747 brought me and my wife Jan from Minneapolis, where it was bitter cold, to a green and wet Hamburg with a balmy 51 degrees. What a gift of warmth and wonder!

Together with my sister and her family, we brought back the traditions of our childhood. All the lovely rituals like setting up and trimming the tree on Christmas Eve, even with a few real candles on it, and a pail of water near by, just in case we should need it. And the Christmas songs, and bells ringing, and a midnight candlelight service in an old plain and beautiful church named Schonkirchen where my mother had been baptized and confirmed, and where my sister and Harald were married.

Oh, how I fed my soul and spirit with songs and prayers! And there were lights!

Getting ready for another Holy Season celebration, I am looking forward to the manger, looking for the light. As my thoughts go up my head bows in thanks and adoration. With acts of love I give what was first given to us. I look for the light, I search, and I shall find it again.

Yes, I remember: Christmas celebration starts in Germany on St. Nikolaus Day, Dec. 6. So clean your shoes and put them on the window sill that night. You will receive a gift from Him, the Light of the World. Without the manger there would be no cross. And there is a light in the night!

Book Review

Church mission, evangelism explored in book by Guder

by Jennifer Seyler
 of The Whitworthian

Whitworth faculty and staff involve themselves in more than just teaching classes at Whitworth. Be My Witnesses, a book by Darrell Guder, Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of Faculty, is an excellent example of such an outside accomplishment.

Be My Witnesses explores the church's mission, message and messengers and defines each one's place within the body of Christ.

Guder discusses the church's mandate to be witnesses and explains how this mission has become distorted.

In the book, we see the institutionalism of the church questioned. Guder wrote, "If we are going to be realistic about the church as Christ's incarnational witness in the world, we must deal with the sobering challenge of the institution."

Be My Witnesses is being used in many schools as a textbook on the theology of the church, but Guder did not write it exclusively with the scholarly readers in mind.

In the book's preface, Guder wrote that "responsible theology must be written for use in the church at large." He aimed his book toward "the educated laity," but that "should not render it uninteresting to the members of the theological guild."

Guder explained that throughout his ministry he was either working in the church or equipping people to go about the task of evangelism, and this all came together in his book.

"My interest was to write a book which drew all that experience together," explained Guder. "My concern to stress the mission of the church essentially is to be focused on the evangelistic task of the church."

Be My Witnesses developed out of a tremendous outpouring of concern and thinking by Guder and he described it as "a kind of bubbling over."

"When I really sat down and started putting down all the things I have been churning over, talking about, thinking about, discussing and reading over 20 years, I found to my own surprise, I really had a lot to say," Guder said.

Through the course of writing his book, Guder discovered new issues and found other ideas coming into focus.

"I discovered the whole issue of distortion of the church's mission," said Guder. He explained that this is seen in the arguments of temple vs. tabernacle and priesthood vs. laity.

Guder went on to say that he "now understands how one appropriately deals with the institutional aspect of the church. That's an issue I really had to struggle with a lot."

Activities on Whitworth's campus the working mind behind the scenes

by Michele Morin
 of The Whitworthian

If you think your schedule is hectic, meet Lisa Otto. A full time student and the ASWC activities coordinator, Otto redefines the term "busy."

Otto, a sophomore, began her year with a course overload, as well as being a Young Life leader and activities coordinator.

"My two studio art classes consume a great deal of my time, and my job requires at least 10 hours a week, so I have to cut back on my schedule," said Otto.

The Seattle native plans to major in art and elementary education, and she chose Whitworth because of its strength in those fields.

"My high school activities coordinator, Al Kovats, a Whitworth graduate, influenced me a great deal toward choosing Whitworth," said Otto. "I also wanted to attend a small, Christian College."

As ASWC activities coordinator, Otto is in charge of organizing movies, dances, concerts, study breaks, coffeehouses, and all other special school events. She also chairs the volunteer Activities Board, which consists of 12 members.

"We're a task force which facilitates creative ideas and publicity for school. I also work with the dorm presidents on planning dances," said Otto.

She applied for the position last spring because she felt her past experiences would benefit her in organization skills needed to plan school activities.

"I served as ASB vice president in high school, and I was dorm president in West Warrens last year, so I'd had a lot of experience in planning and organizing activities. I also worked on the Rules and Special Projects committee last year, which involved me in ASWC events," said Otto.

According to Otto, ASWC has many exciting events planned during each week of Jan Term.

"We're hosting a New Year's dance, showing the films 'Splash' and 'Fletch,' West Warrens will have a special theme dance, and there will be all school study breaks each Tuesday and Thursday nights which will include 'Moonlighting,' 'Cosby,' 'Family Ties,' and lots of food," she explained.

In the future Otto plans to return to Seattle and teach after graduation. She also hopes to pursue her involvement with Young Life as well as her interests in music.

Domino's delivery: an inside look

by Ted Wilson
Special to The Whitworthian

"Thank you for ordering Domino's," said Whitworth Sophomore Stuart Woods. He had just taken an order of the Five Mile store's four telephones. The order is for a Canadian bacon pizza, well-done.

Woods is a Business Management major by day, but at night he becomes the store's most prolific pizza deliveryman. "I sold $567 worth of pizza one night in September," Woods said. That set a record.

The record he broke was his own. Woods has worked for Domino's since January of this year. Only fellow Domino's deliveryman Dave Boucher has delivered pizzas in 30 minutes or less for a longer period of time, 1½ years. "A person will usually stay two or three months," said Woods.

Senior Sandy Wastradowski is a Whitworth Elementary Education major and a six month veteran at delivering pizza at Domino's downtown store. She has delivered to some strange and exciting places during that time, including adult book store arcades, a motel front desk, and a shop in the skywalk system. "It was embarrassing walking through the skywalk in my uniform," she said.

"I delivered a pizza to one of the president's men when he (the president) was here," Wastradowski said. "That was exciting."

She has also delivered pizza to patients in hospitals, and to the helicopter pad of Sacred Heart Hospital. Once when she made a delivery in a bad part of town, a man suggested that she could make more money at an older profession. "I told him I was happy with the job I have."

Strange things have also happened to Woods while he has been a delivery person. "One time I took six Price Destroyers and a case of Coke to the Big 'Y' Drive-in and nobody was there (to claim it)," he said as he waited for a pizza to come out the oven. "So there I was, walking around trying to sell them."

Woods didn't have time to finish the story because the well-done, Canadian bacon pizza is ready. He jumped into his yellow Volkswagen Bug and drove off toward the address written on the box.

"When I started out here," he said, "the snow was bad, and I didn't know Spokane. I kept wiping off the windshield and trying to find the signs with my flashlight." He still has to use his flashlight to read the numbers on people's houses when they forget to leave their porch lights on.

All Domino's delivery persons are required to have their own cars. Both Wastradowski and Woods remember times when their cars have broken down on a delivery. Wastradowski's car has broken down once, and she has suffered a flat tire.

"Yeah, I've put some serious mileage on this baby," Woods said as he hits another pothole. He's had to replace the car's engine since he began working at Domino's.

Woods pulls into his customer's driveway. On the door hangs a sign that reads: "This house guarded by a shotgun three nights a week. You guess which three." The man who opens the door stands about 6 feet 3 inches, wears an uncombed beard, and has a tattoo on his arm. The transaction is completed quickly.

"You have to be polite to the customers," Woods said as he gets into his car, "because you never know when you'll be back."

At the store Woods waits for the next "pie," as they call it in the business. He flipped his nametag up, saying, "Any time you can lift up my tag." The back of the tag says "I take tips."

There are some places where Woods has delivered and received large tips. Once a lady at an apartment gave him $15 for a $8.95 pizza, and told him to keep the change. "You remember those places," he said. He'll make about $800 a month when working 20-30 hours a week during the school year. "I worked until 2 a.m. closing last night. I fell asleep in math today."

He said that Whitworth deliveries make up only 5-20 percent of his store's deliveries. During a two hour period this night only one of his eight deliveries goes to Whitworth. This one is for someone in Arend Hall.

"When you get a call for a 12-inch cheese pizza," said Natalie Stirn, a manager in training at the Five Mile store, "you know it's from Whitworth." Woods thinks students order cheese pizzas because that is all they can afford.

Woods finally makes a delivery to Whitworth. He knocks on the door, then puts his finger over the peep-hole. The door opens to show two women and one man who ordered the pizza. The man gives Woods the money for the pizza, then gives him a dollar bill. "This is a tip," the student said, "there's a phone number written on it."

"Is this for a good time?" Woods asked. The women laugh and the man closes the door. Woods walks down the hall as the laughter continued behind him. "Listen to that," he said, "they're still giggling."

Wastradowski said that she gets a kick from working with an order form its initial call to the actual delivery. "It's real fun to go all the way through. To throw it, to pull it from the oven, to deliver it to the person and be able to say, "I did that."

Pirates ice cold

by Mark Westley
of The Whitworthian

It was a cold weekend for the Buc hoopsters. Poor shooting resulted in two lopsided losses to the University of Alaska-Juneau and Gonzaga. Entering the weekend contests the Pirates were shooting a very respectable 58 percent from the field in their first five games. It gradually cooled off.

Friday night the Pirates hosted the University of Alaska-Juneau. The shooting slide began as the Pirates hit a fair 49 percent from the field. Good enough to be in a position to win a game except when the opponents convert 62 percent of their attempts. With this advantage the U of A took a 116-96 victory from the Pirates. Sophomores Damon Lowery and Steve Coleman led the University of Alaska-Juneau with 30 and 29 points.

For the Pirates Jeff Todd and Steve Street, both juniors, led the way with 20 points each. Todd also had nine rebounds added seven assists. Senior Brian Meyers added 16 points. Junior Scott Strom dished out seven assists and contributed 15 points.

Saturday night at GU things got quite a bit cooler. The opponents, the Gonzaga Bulldogs, shot 56 percent from the field. Whitworth slid further into the freezer connecting on only 39 percent from the field.

The Bulldogs were led by the 18 points of Jim McPhee and Paul Walker. Dale Haaland added 13 points and collected nine rebounds.

Although the Pirate shooting is heading back into the ice age, Junior Steve Street continues to heat up.

Street answered his Friday night, 20-point performance, with 28 against the Bulldogs.

Street came into the weekend averaging 15 points per game. He has it boosted up to 17.6 after two consistent performances. The Pirates record fell to 3-4 overall, 3-3 in NAIA district play.

The Pirates next home action will be Friday and Saturday, Dec. 12 and 13, when they host the Whitworth Invitational Christmas Tournament. Joining the Pirates on the court will be Concordia College, Northwest Nazarene, and Central Washington University.

Senior guard impressive; sharp outside shooting

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

At twenty-two feet out he flares off the pick from the left wing, takes one dribble right, stops on a dime, hangs in midair, the ball releases and glides toward the hoop. Bingo. Nothing but net. The P.A. announcer, Scott McQuilkin, echoes the familiar name, "Brian Meyers with the bucket."

It has almost become automatic. Like a well-oiled machine. Yes, it's true, "Downtown" Freddie Brown has retired. The ex-Supersonic had his number retired last month in Seattle. But take note Spokane, Whitworth College has its own version of Freddie Brown.

Ever since grade school Senior Brian Meyers has been tabbed as a pure shooter. Meyers graduated from Ballard High School in Seattle, where he led the conference in scoring his senior year. Meyers then joined his older brother Brad at Whitworth where he began seeing playing time as a freshman.

In addition to basketball Meyers also played baseball during his first two years at Whitworth. But Meyers said he found the load too heavy and decided to stick with basketball. After red-shirting his sophomore year, Meyers came back last year to lead the Pirates in scoring under the direction of first year coach Warren Friedrichs.

Stephen Meyer

Guard Brian Meyers

"Coach has really worked me in looking for good shots," said Meyers. "At first I was really anxious, but now I've learned how to be patient and more relaxed. I know I can shoot and Coach has really given me confidence in what he does best, shoot.

looking for my shots."

This year Meyers will also be looking to improve his defense and passing game as well. "Everyone knows I'm a good shooter and I like that, but I want to be a complete player, a good defensive player, a good passer, and a good shooter. With a lot of concentration I think I can do all three well."

Many people may know of Meyer's older brother, Brad, who started at Whitworth in the early 80's. Meyers said Brad was always there for him. "He's given me good advice and was a factor in my coming to Whitworth. He really motivated me because he was such a hard worker and achieved so much."

Meyers seems to be picking up where Brad left off. Last week he pumped in 35 points in a win at Alaska, and is shooting almost 60 percent from the field. His shooting is a definite threat for any team as he can hurt you from anywhere on the court.

Meyers will graduate with a major in Sociology and a minor in graphic art. However, Meyers said, "If after graduation an opportunity arises to play ball somewhere I'd definitely consider it, maybe some AAU or European ball." Right now though, he is just keeping his eye on the hoop and doing what he does best, shoot.

Aussies win fast-pace contest

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

A group of 15 Australians between the ages of 14 and 30 came to visit Whitworth on Wednesday. They were not here to visit the college's international program, however, but to take on the Whitworth women's basketball team as part of a 35-day tour of the western United States.

Despite the rather long trip and a full schedule which has included Oregon State, University of Oregon, Washington State, and Western Washington to name a few, the Sydney Supersonics managed to defeat the home team 90-81.

Whitworth held the lead narrowly in the first half of the fast-paced game. Both teams operated smoothly, and Whitworth appeared to have conquered the errors that embarrassed them in the last home game against Spokane Falls Community College. Australia scored as the buzzer sounded to give them 34 points to Whitworth's 39 at halftime.

Seventeen-year-old Annie Burgess, a 5'8" guard for Sydney set the pace of the second half of the game. She helped make the Supersonics' full court press and fast break successful. Despite Whitworth's patient offense and accurate shooting, the Aussies' quickness began to take its toll on the Lady Bucs.

With 11 minutes left in the half, the Sydney team finally led 56-55. The Pirates remained persistent and never let their opponents run away with the game. Whitworth got into trouble, however, with 4:30 left on the clock when Junior Mary Allard, an asset under the basket for the team, fouled out. But 6' Senior Kaylene Krug came in for her to maintain the pace of the game.

The last minute of the game had the crowd on the edge of their seats. With 12 seconds left Senior Lisa Vallem scored to give Whitworth 81 to the Supersonics' 83. It could have been anyone's game, but with a final burst of energy, the Supersonics claimed the game and never looked back.

The Australians were very pleased after the game. Glen Roberts, the oldest member of the team at 30, expressed, "This was a very good game of basketball. I thought that despite our rough schedule, we played very well." Roberts, who also acts as junior coach for the team, explained that sports in Australia are played entirely on a city, state, or national level (colleges and high schools don't sponsor teams). This system allows players like Roberts to play for as long as their skills allow, rather than having to quit upon graduation. The 5'10" forward is now on leave from her job as a detective on the Sydney police force until the tour is over.

Annie Burgess, a player who Roberts described as "one of the most promising young players in Sydney," confided some of her aspirations after the game. "I am hoping to get the chance to try out for the Australian National Team." Of her first visit to the U.S. Burgess was enthusiastic, "I love it! The people are very friendly. It's been great for my basketball."

Angela Hewlett led the Australian team with 21 points, Burgess followed closely with 20, Tina Christie had 19, and Dand Fish 16.

Scoring for the Pirates were Lisa Vallem with a game-high of 28 points, Cathy Brauff 21, Mary Allard 14, Kaylene Krug 6, Donna Rodenhurst 5, Janine Hoffman 3, Annette Helling 2 and Kris Collyer 2.

The Pirates shot 54 percent from the floor and 50 percent from the free throw line, while Sydney shot 45 percent from the floor and an impressive 71 percent from the line.

Over the weekend, the Pirates journeyed to Lewiston for the Lewiston-Clark State Tournament, where they eventually placed 3rd of 4 teams.

Friday night they lost to Carroll College 65-57. "We were let down," Coach Paula Nunnally confessed. "We just didn't play well. We weren't ready to play and we lost to a team that wasn't better than us."

The next night, the Bucs were, in Nunnally's words, "determined that they were going to win." And that they did. They crushed Eastern Oregon 96-64. Six Whitworth players reached double figures: Lisa Vallem 18, Annette Helling 16, Mary Allard 14, Cathy Brauff 12, Donna Rodenhurst 12, and Janine Hoffman 11. Nunnally emphasized, "Everyone on the team played, and played well."

She pointed out that the season is still early and added, "We've narrowed down the problems."

The Lady Bucs are on the road this weekend. Friday they play St. Martin's College and Saturday they tackle CWU in Ellensburg, a team judged to be the Bucs stiffest competition of the season.

New women's B-ball coach

Nunnally takes coaching post in stride

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

Sometimes it takes awhile to break in your shoes when you take over a new position. But not for Paula Nunnally, the new Whitworth women's basketball coach.

As an assistant to ex-coach Marv Ainsworth for the last two years, Nunnally has taken her new post in stride. Nunnally's familiarity with Whitworth's program has helped in easing her transition into the head coaching position.

In addition to her two year stint as assistant coach, Nunnally also played basketball at Whitworth from 1976-1980. Nunnally graduated in 1980 with a degree in Physical Education and an emphasis in Elementary Education.

After graduating, Nunnally substituted for two years for grades K-12 before taking a job as an aid at West Valley High School. Nunnally took a year off from education when she and her husband, Ed, had their first child, Brandie.

It was the following year, 1984, that Nunnally was contacted by Ainsworth about the assistant coaching position. Nunnally took the job and is now in her third year of coaching at Whitworth. She Once you enter her office you instantly get a feel for Nunnally's openness and quiet enthusiasm. There is no doubt that Nunnally could be described as a "players" coach who corrects mistakes at practice and not during the game. "I don't believe in ranting and raving on the sidelines and humiliating my players. If there are adjustments to be made, I'll point them out, but my players know when they've made a mistake. They're very hard workers who expect a lot from themselves.

"I know if you were to ask any of the upper-classmen they would tell you they're having the most fun they've had since playing here."

Currently, the Pirates are off to a 4-3 start and Nunnally expects Whitworth to finish in the top of the pack.

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR BOYFRIEND?

- When the president of Phi Gamma Delta asks you to Saturday night's Fiji Formal.
- After raquetball class, to tell him that the instructor with the Australian accent and those blue eyes did wonders for your serve.
- When you just feel like telling him you miss him after all.

Maybe you shouldn't tell him everything that's going on. But if you still care about him, why not call and whisper some sweet things he'll never forget?

Like why you call using AT&T Long Distance Service, and why you trust AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

When you tell him that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number, he won't be able to get you out of his mind.

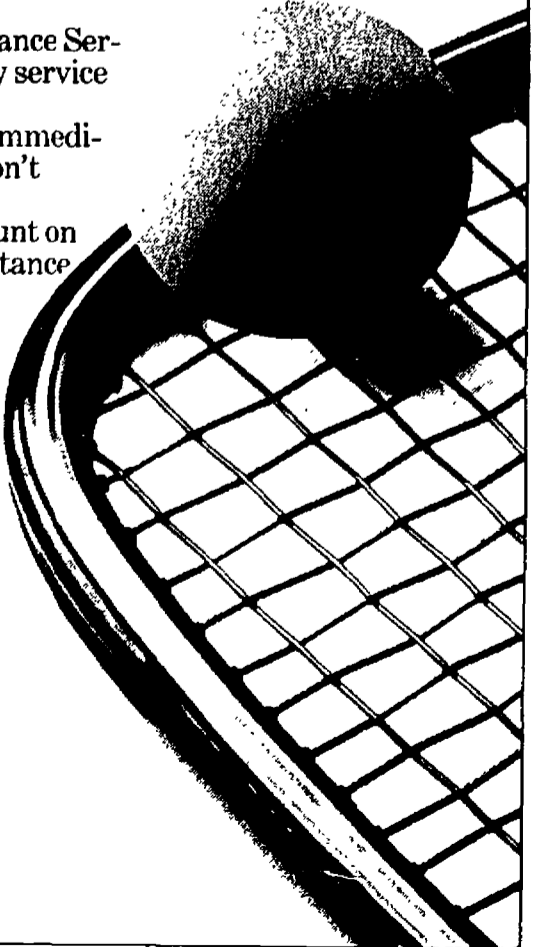

And telling him you can count on AT&T for clear, long distance connections will drive him crazy.

All of which will probably inspire him to drive out for the weekend, giving you an excuse to blow off that silly frat party after all.

Career week starts; designed to improve job search skills

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

The end of the year will be here soon. For some that means graduation, for others it's just one semester closer to the end.

It's time to ask, what comes after graduation? Will you be ready for it?

If you went to Forum yesterday, or saw the handouts, you know that Career Week has begun on campus.

Gail Berg, director of Career/Advising, along with two staff members, Diane Thomas and Jim Swink, have planned a week of presentations and workshops.

The week began with three alumni speaking in Forum. Amy Neil, Sten Carlson and Dick Anderson spoke on what life has been like for them past graduation.

Throughout the week there will be speakers discussing their businesses, giving resume writing workshops and conducting seminars for undeclared majors. In addition, employers will give tips on interviewing skills, as well as presentations on job search strategies.

to get people jobs, but to train people with the skills needed to present themselves in a professional way.

According to Berg, the informal presentations will be given by business persons discussing their fields.

The resume writing seminars will be helpful for putting your resume together. Students Susan Elledge and Tim Henson will help with this.

Wednesday, a job search strategies program will be held in the Warrens lounge beginning at 8 p.m. It's intended to help students build skills and learn strategies that will benefit them when they begin the search for a job.

Feb. 20 there will be mock interviews. Students can sign up for these at the front desk in the Student Life building. These will be video-taped interviews for the student to watch and to use to help themselves.

Berg stressed the point that during the week, if students would give up even as little time as two hours, it would cut their search time in the future. "It's such a little bit to give for such big results."

"One-third of the students say they wish they had used our services earlier than they did."

The week is designed to help each person, from freshman to seniors to faculty.

Diane Thomas, a career counselor, encourages faculty to attend some of the presentations and seminars. "Sometimes the professors get out of touch with the real world and what it's like," said Thomas.

Last fall a representative from the Wall Street Journal visited Whitworth. According to Berg he was impressed by Whitworth students but was afraid they would not present themselves well when entering the career world. Career week is not designed

Each year a follow-up survey is given to graduated seniors on the use of the Career Center services. Berg said, "One-third of the students say they wish they had used our services earlier than they did."

There are programs going on throughout the year.

"We're here to help the students, it is in their best interest to use us," Thomas said.

Many students become anxious towards the end of their four or five years. It is at that time Berg encourages students to go to a career counselor. "It's no time to panic—just go to the Career Center," Berg said.

Human rights issue raised over N. Idaho racist group

by Kim Riemland
of The Whitworthian

The human rights violations by the South African apartheid government on the other side of the world has been protested by Whitworth students, but the human rights violations by the Aryan Nations less than 40 miles away have been all but ignored.

File Photo
Father Bill Wassmuth

The Aryan Nations is a group in Hayden Lake, Idaho that advocates white supremacy.

Father Bill Wassmuth, chair of the Kootenai County Task Force on Human Relations in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, spoke at last Monday's Forum to help raise Whitworth's awareness on the human rights issue. Wassmuth strongly believes in grassroots response to prejudice.

"All of us can do our thing to actively promote human rights in our community," he said during Forum.

Later in an interview

Wassmuth said, "Every one person can make a difference, I believe that very much."

The task force has made a difference. It recently held a celebration in honor of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday that was attended by about 1,200 people, making it one of the largest celebrations in the Northwest. This type of support and concern has helped the Coeur d'Alene community become nationally recognized and win the Raul Wallenburg Civic Award.

The reality of the Aryan Nations has not been felt by most Whitworth students, but a few are affected by their racial neighbors.

Whitworth Sophomore Joyea, 33, is an example. Joyea is her birthname, but not what she goes by on campus. She did not want to give her full name in fear that the Aryans might harm her or her family.

Joyea considers herself a Christian but is married to a Muslim man of Arabian descent; thus, she must abide by certain religious practices. These practices occasionally include wearing a Hyjob, a dress-like garment that covers the entire body except for the hands and face. The Hyjob is worn to send a message that she is the property of her husband; it also sends a message to the Aryans that she is a minority.

Joyea has several close friends in the Hayden Lake area whom she frequently visits. The days of carefree trips are a thing of the past for Joyea. Every visit is carefully considered.

"I've almost quit going there," she said. "I always make sure I'm home by light hours."

She has been confronted by the Aryans more than once. The vocal harassment is frightening, but the possibility that it could go beyond words frightens her even more.

"There's no doubt in my mind they'd hurt me or whoever was with me," she said. "Something tells me the guns they carry are loaded. I've never been scared like that never."

Minority Affairs Director Rose Howell is convinced that Whitworth should become involved.

"We need to make a statement about where we are on this issue," she said.

Howell said she does not want to undermine the attention given to the apartheid issue, but she thinks Whitworth should not overlook a problem so important and dangerous in its own area.

"I do tend to think we can be somewhat of an infidel if we don't take care of our own house," she said. "It seems easier to embrace something far away from us, than something near to us."

Wassmuth made some suggestions of how Whitworth could clean up its own house and deal with human rights issues that face the Inland Empire.

"Think — be critical of this issue of human rights," he said. "Be critical of the issue of how we are to treat each other. Don't just accept what somebody else says, be critical...think it through."

Scholarship support

Sears makes $1,450 contribution

Ken Boardman, manager of the Sears store in Northtown Mall, delivered a $1,450 check last week to Whitworth College as a gift from the Sears-Roebuck Foundation.

The contribution will be used for scholarship support of students from the Inland Northwest, according to Jon Flora, director of corporate relations at Whitworth, who accepted the check on behalf of the college.

"This is the 25th year that Sears has contributed to the college," Flora said. "Whitworth has received over $30,000 from the foundation since the program began in 1962."

Sears has the largest unrestricted grants program in the United States in support of private higher education.

Let there be light

And there was light ...but not enough

by John Sowers
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

The Physical Plant creed is: "Creating an environment in which the educational process can take place." With the lack of proper outdoor lighting perhaps a safe environment ought to be the primary consideration. It is not safe for students or staff to walk across this campus. There are parking lots and other peripheral areas on this campus which simply have no illumination at all. Even more disturbing is that the loop, the center of campus, has only slightly better lighting.

Some of the lights that are spaced around the campus are broken and others give off very little light. On top of their practical inadequacies their looks leave much to be desired. There are three different lampposts on campus in three very distinctive styles, which don't come close to matching.

The subject of campus beauty is secondary to the issue of safety. Spokane is an urban area and with a large population base comes a large crime base. The physical security of Whitworth students must not be ignored. If you have ever been to the U of W at night, then you know that their campus is lit up like daylight 24-hours a day.

The issue is of special concern to the women of this campus. Many of them will relate the fear of walking from the library to their dorms unattended. From the library to their dorms? What a shame that walking a distance shorter than a football field has to be a traumatic experience.

It would be impossible to believe the Physical Plant and Administration have allowed this situation to come about deliberately or with malicious intent. That goes without saying.

But what also goes without saying is that the situation does exist and that the Christian, decent thing to do is improve the lighting and attend to the problem.

We can take care of it now, or we can wait for the tragedy to occur and then address the problem. Let's not shame ourselves, let's do it now.

Dance with me...Please

To the most esteemed editor, staff and readers of The Whitworthian:

Who's lonelier than a wet polecat in the spring? A lone female at a Whitworth dance is. Even a soggy skunk can find a partner sometimes!

It's not that I'm light on my toes, or all that eager to twinkle the light fantastic, but I would like a waltz around the park once in awhile. But then, there's the problem, a song loses its tune without someone to share it with!

I've been studying the phenomenon of Whitworth dances for a while now, and I've come up with several factors that lead to my discontent, and that of others. 1) Many people who like to dance no longer attend Whitworth dances. 2) An empty dance floor is a scary thing. 3) Whitworth men believe that asking a woman to dance is a relational commitment. 4) Whitworth women believe that asking a man to dance is a relational commitment. 5) Whitworth men and women are afraid of commitment.

Problems 3), 4), and 5) seem to be self-explanatory. They also seem to be solely Whitworth phobias. In all other spheres of life dancing does not mean commitment or relationships. Dancing means getting down on the floor and enjoying yourself. An unnamed female Whitworth student recently confided to me that she liked Gonzaga's dances better. Why? Because the men asked her to dance! Imagine, they don't even know her! She was further amazed to learn that was all they wanted. Just...to dance! Wow! What a concept!

As for problems 1) and 2) they are very easily solved. How many disparaging remarks have you heard or made yourself, about Whitworth dances? If all the people who are discouraged or disappointed in Whitworth dances started attending, and dancing, we wouldn't need to make disparaging remarks. Dances would be fun! In fact I would be more than willing to be the first person on that empty dance floor. Now, if I could only find a partner...

Yours Sincerely,
Caran-marie Weston

"Koats 4 Kids" a big success

Dear Whitworth:

Since it is impossible to know or individually thank all of the Whitworth College employees who responded to the KXLY and Scollard's Cleaners "KOATS 4 KIDS" drive, I hope we can find a way to express our gratitude.

The campaign, which officially ended on Wed., Jan. 14, produced nearly 3,400 coats for Spokane's less fortunate children. Scollard's cleaned the coats, which were then distributed by the Northeast, East and West Central Community Centers.

The unqualified success of this effort is a tribute to the many people in organizations like yours who responded so generously.

We are looking forward to making this an annual event.

Sincerely,

Dean Moorehouse
Public Affairs Director

24-hour visitation decision by spring

Dear editor:

Many of you have probably been wondering just what is currently happening in the 24-hour visitation policy discussion. To recap, discussion was initiated by my office sometime last spring as to whether we do our best at addressing questions of privacy, effective community, and sexual decision-making. Central to these issues is the question of visitation hours and their relationship to the quality of campus life. Late in the fall semester The Whitworthian (Dec. 8, 1986) published position papers from the administration and the student body.

As an administration, we believe the discussion process has run its course and now it is time to move toward practical changes in regards to these areas of concern. I'm pleased to share with you that we are now establishing a task force with an equal representation: one-half will be a combination of administration, faculty, and trustees, and one-half will be students, selected by ASWC, to address the issues of these two papers--student privacy in residence, development and maintenance of community, and establishment of greater accountability for our sexual decisions.

The mandate of this task force is to formulate recommendations related to these issues and to submit them to the administration for consideration. It is our intention to complete this process and have a conclusive report by the Board of Trustees meeting in the spring.

I appreciate your patience as we work through this matter. It is my hope that from this task force will come positive, alternative ways to enhance the distinctives of Whitworth that we all value.

Sincerely,

Julie M. Anderton, Ph.D.
Vice President for Student Life

Chem. dept. gets gift

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

"Congratulations Syd, you are the proud owner of a Perkin-Elmer Diode Array Spectrophotometer," read a banner taped to Assistant Chemistry Professor, Dr. Sydney Peterson-Kennedy's door last November.

The Chemistry department received the $35,000 spectrophotometer from the Perkin-Elmer Corporation as a gift to the school.

Whitworth was chosen to receive the gift because of Peterson-Kennedy's nationally recognized research in blood chemistry.

The machine allows Peterson-Kennedy to study the electronic characteristics of hemoglobin molecules. (Hemoglobin molecules are the oxygen particles in red blood cells.)

Peterson-Kennedy's studies may help to provide answers on how hemoglobin molecules bond together.

According to Peterson-Kennedy, it is important to understand the bonding in order that doctors might learn how to reverse the effect of blood poisoning, while shedding some light on other health concerns.

Robin Worrell operates the new $35,000 spectrophotometer to the Chemistry department.

The spectrophotometer makes it possible to view the bonding that is invisible to the naked eye.

The machine "sees" by shooting a beam of light through hemoglobin molecules which measures the amount of color and ultra-violet light absorbed. The information is printed out onto a graph for the researcher's use. In addition to researching blood chemistry, Peterson-Kennedy will instruct students in the operation of the machine. The machine will be used by organic chemistry and pre-med students who may begin using it as early as their sophomore year.

"We want to expose all our students to the most modern equipment," Peterson-Kennedy said. As soon as the software arrives, the students may begin using the machine.

Three Ed. students given scholarships

by Shauna Winner
of The Whitworthian

Three senior education students were awarded $5,000 Congressional Teacher Scholarships based on academic merit and interest in teaching.

Melanie Jones, Daniel Kamerer and Sharon Lebret received three of 35 awards distributed in Washington state. At least one Congressional Teacher Scholarship is awarded to a student at each of the 17 state colleges and universities that prepare educators.

The scholarship program, which is in its first year, is sponsored by the U.S. Congress to encourage students with high academic records to become teachers.

To be eligible, students must have graduated in the top 10 percent of their high school class.

Recipients must be full-time students, have a 3.0 cumulative GPA and be pursuing certification at the pre-school, elementary or secondary teaching level.

Another consideration is that applicants are going into a field where teachers are needed. Jones is seeking certification in elementary education with a concentration in music. Kamerer is preparing to teach mathematics at the secondary level. Lebret is earning certification in elementary education with a concentration in English. Applicants wrote a short essay on their commitment to education.

Jones said she wanted to be a teacher as a little girl. "I'm going into teaching because I really love kids and value education."

Kamerer said he was influenced by a high school teacher. He enjoys working with kids and wants to coach.

Lebret said some of the most important people in her life are teachers. She has already been teaching and likes it.

Scholarships are available to recipients for four years, as long as the student is working toward certification. Recipients are required to teach in a public school for two years for each year of scholarship assistance they receive.

Forum

Black concerns, culture discussed

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

In an effort to show diversity of black concerns and culture, two very different types of Forums have been scheduled during February, officially Black History month.

Dr. Maulana Karenga, currently the executive director of the Institute of Pan-African studies in Los Angeles, will be speaking on "The African American and the Constitution: Colonial times to the present," on Friday, Feb. 20.

File Photo

Dr. Maulana Karenga

Karenga will also speak at the sixth annual conference for the National Council for Black Studies being held at Cavanaugh's this weekend.

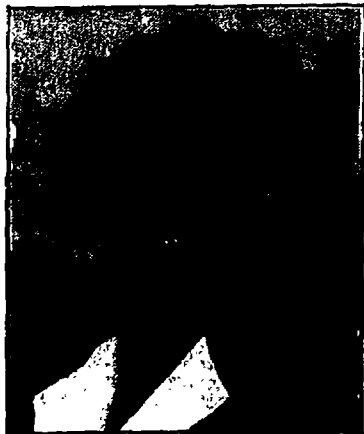

On Monday, Feb. 23, the Forum mood will be less serious and a little more joyful, according to Rose Howell, director of minority affairs.

Gospel Celebration in Song will bring together several performers, each with a different type of music. Before each performance, some background facts about the music will be presented to understand why each particular type of music exists.

Pat Wright, a contemporary gospel recording artist from Seattle will perform during Monday's Forum. Wright works primarily with young adults, and is a member of the Prince of Peace Baptist church in Seattle, Seattle.

Also performing is local artist and evangelist Ruby Hickson. In contrast to Wright's contemporary songs dealing with personal freedom and walking with Christ, Hickson's spirituals stem from the period of slavery, where they were sung to uplift the people's spirits.

Hickson will also speak in the Midweek Worship and Core 150 class next week.

Members of the Spokane Triumph Community Choir will also perform contemporary gospel on Monday, giving Whitworth a taste of a black gospel choir.

His Hands

Strong... yet so gentle.
Firm... yet so soft.

They are able to give away the most loving touches, or... the most violent reactions.

But now they are slowly... gently... pulling the bark off that small, tender, young branch.

Will I ever experience the feeling... of such gentleness... that they can give?

Or will I experience an opposite reaction?

For now... I do not know.

But looking at them so patient so kind with that young twig my heart reaches out to them...

But the thought is never spoken, and the moment, like a drop, falls into the sea of time.

Family ties, educational choices bring Italian students to Whitworth

by Michele Morin of The Whitworthian

Gli Italiani sono i migliori amanti!

Italians may make better lovers, but as the Sambrotta family has proven, the American conception of fast-living Italians and a carefree lifestyle can often be misleading. The Sambrottas have shown their strength and determination by overcoming the obstacles and fears associated with adapting to a foreign culture.

Marco, Elisabetta, and Luca Sambrotta were born in Rome, Italy. Marco and Elisabetta, both juniors, came to the U.S. for the first time in the fall of 1985, and Freshman Luca joined them this year.

"I felt both nervous and excited at the thought of coming to America and going to school," said Elisabetta, "I knew I'd really miss my family."

When asked why they chose

Whitworth, Elisabetta replied, "We have relatives in Spokane, so our main choices were between the University of Washington, Gonzaga, and Whitworth. Whitworth was the most friendly and helpful through the mail."

"Many people don't know this, but we have both Italian and American citizenship, because our mother is American," said Luca.

"Another reason we wanted to come to the states," Elisabetta added, "was to perfect our English and learn more about our mother's culture. Our mother was born in Tacoma, and her family moved to Spokane while she was in Europe for the summer. She was to return to Spokane after her trip. Her last stop was in Rome, and it was there that she met my father. They met at the famous Trevi Fountain, for which a movie was made. It's a very special place where coins are thrown into the fountain to make dreams come true. The day before she was to return to America, she wrote a letter to her family and told them that she was getting married. She spoke no Italian and was not familiar with the culture."

According to Luca, there is quite a contrast between Italian and American cities. "Italy is so huge, and the cities are very diverse, American cities are so similar to each other." He also found Americans to be less emotional and often more reserved. "Italians really go out of their way to help one another, but a lot of this may be due to the strong sense of family."

"Family is very important in Italy, and families don't spread apart as they do in America," explained Elisabetta. "People may go away to travel or study, but they almost always return home. Almost all of our relatives live only about 20 minutes apart."

Luca was also surprised at the rate of young marriages and divorces in America.

"In Italy, engagements are usually quite long, and divorce isn't considered acceptable. People usually marry after age 25," said Luca.

One of the biggest differences the Sambrottas found between American and Italian culture is in the educational system.

According to Elisabetta, the Italian school system "is very different and stressful. Most of the emphasis is placed on studying rather than learning. There isn't much opportunity for sports or social activities."

Luca prefers the freedom of choice in American schools. "In Italy courses are chosen for you," he said. "If you fail a course you must repeat all of them, not just the failed course."

Elisabetta added, "Marco is a music major and very involved in the Whitworth Choir, and it was crucial for him to study in America, because degrees in music aren't offered in Italian universities."

Overall, the Sambrottas feel quite comfortable with American culture and at Whitworth.

"People have been so friendly and supportive toward us, and we've learned so much," said Elisabetta.

Others have learned from them too. Freshman Wendi Reed commented, "Elisabetta is my roommate, and I've spent a lot of time with her family, and I've seen so much growth in them. They've adapted very well to American culture. They're so open and loving towards others."

As for their future plans, they all intend to finish their studies at Whitworth, and will eventually return to Italy.

"Rome is our home, and our family is there," asserted Luca, "but we are certainly enjoying our time in America."

Visiting Scottish prof feels culture shock

by Philippe Coulon of The Whitworthian

Margaret Masson is working to integrate culture. Masson, a visiting English professor from Scotland, hopes to learn a lot about America in addition to teaching Americans about her native land.

"I am looking forward to learning from the strength of the American educational system and letting people know about the strength of the British system," said Masson.

Masson first heard that Whitworth was looking for an English professor at St. John's College where she tutored. Vice President for Academic Affairs Darrell Guder came in contact with St. John's because he knows a professor who teaches there. Masson said after she went through the application process Guder invited her to teach for a semester at Whitworth.

Masson was born in Zambia, Africa and then moved to Scotland at age 14. She graduated from Aberdeen University, Scotland with honors in English and Religious Studies. She then went on to get her Ph.D. in English at Durham University.

In addition to her strong academic background, Masson also enjoys spending a great part of her time in various cultural and physical activities. "Squash is my favorite sport," she said. She also enjoys filling her time swimming, walking, listening to music, and going to films and the theater.

Masson said before coming to Whitworth she already had some contact with the United States through American friends, television, and a trip she won to the East Coast eight years ago in a debate competition.

But, she attested that she still had a culture shock when she came to the United States. The geography was her biggest adjustment.

"Geographically it is very different," she said. "Britain is much more compact and even within a town very often you tend to get around by walking or cycling. Whereas here, I soon realized that without a car it is very difficult."

She also noted the cultural differences in the educational system of the two countries. "British education tends to encourage more specialization, whereas in America it tends to be more broadly based," she explained.

"In Britain we tend to have on one hand big lectures and on the other hand very small tutorials (seminars). Here, in the United States, we tend to have the two mixed together," she said.

Masson said she is very happy for the opportunity to be here in spite of the differences.

"It is really interesting to be inside another educational system and to live and work in another country's culture," she said.

Impact of Belize tour extends beyond biology

by Jill Noel
of The Whitworthian

After over a year of planning, the trip to Belize, Central America finally occurred for the Biology department this January.

"It was a good chance to experience another culture, and the diversity of the biology was great," said Gary Bristow, a junior working on his second degree.

The country is located just south of the Yucatan Peninsula of Mexico, and just east of Guatemala on the Caribbean Sea. About the size of Massachusetts, this small country is the home of many rich and diverse areas, where one can study, teach or remain a tourist.

The students went down to Belize to study two main types of biology: the ecology of a barrier reef (Belize has the longest in this hemisphere) and the systems of a tropical rain forest.

To start the study tour, students stayed for nine days at South Water Caye, pronounced 'key.' Chip Kimball, a senior on the trip said, "It was a paradise island. It was isolated, primitive and incredible."

Biology Professor Dave Hicks, the faculty member in charge, lectured for an hour each morning about understanding the complexity of tropical systems. The rest of the day was free for students to fill.

Many people went snorkeling or scuba diving, others would lie in the sun, read, write, take photographs, or a combination of several activities.

"The best parts of the island were the incredibly warm, clear water and the awesome abundance of marine life," said Senior Mike Sardinia.

"The diving was difficult to leave but we were getting stir-crazy on the island because it was so small," said Kimball. "By the time the nine days were over, I was ready to move on."

After leaving South Water Caye, the students took a five-day "vacation" to Tikal, Guatemala.

It turned out to be quite an experience. A few miles down the road after the passports had been stamped, the Guatemalan Army stopped the bus and asked to see everyone's passport.

"There was a lot of fear of the unknown (when they stopped us) — it was a little scary," said Bristow.

Kimball said that many people found the worst part of the crossing was that the army was composed of young boys, probably about 16 or 17 years old. Although the show of force was present, the immaturity of perhaps trigger-happy teenagers was more frightening.

The group spent a day at the Mayan Ruins of Tikal, and another day at Flores and Santa Elena shopping.

The shopping in the open markets was a different experience for most of the group.

"Open markets are incredible — the business style, the smells, the attitudes toward us," said Kimball. "I felt it was hard to buy because we are Americans, and are singled out as having money."

After another five-hour bus ride on bumpy dirt roads, another encounter with the army, and the final border crossing, everyone felt that they were "returning home" to Belize.

A day-and-a-half later, the group set off for Blue Creek Village, ready for the final leg of the journey — the tropical rain forest.

At the field station, everybody began exploring, for there was a tremendous diversity of organisms everywhere.

Several people enjoyed capturing birds during the day, some enjoyed netting bats at night. Spelunking in a nearby cave was an activity of choice to several. A few of the group were fascinated by the nearby people, and spent time getting to know them. Since it is the "dry" season in Belize during January, many discovered the surrounding flora and fauna.

Most enjoyed the forest, although some felt the reef was "more fun."

"I was more geared up for marine biology, and consequently, I liked it better," said Sardinia. "But the forest was fun, too."

Kimball's experience came out to be most different, however.

"The best part of the entire experience was the poverty," he said. "Driving through town, seeing the stick houses with dirt floors, where probably eight people live, made you re-evaluate the way we live as very rich Americans."

"Mike Sardinia gave a small boy an unopened bottle of Orange Crush, and asked if he (the boy) had a can-opener for the bottle. The child brightly replied, 'No, I'm going to sell it and buy a pencil so I can go to school.' Wow!"

Upon returning home, Kimball noted that many are experiencing some form of re-entry shock, whether it be the cold weather, or a changed attitude about the way this country chooses to use its resources.

"There is no way I could live with myself if I don't do anything to help these people," said Kimball.

The verdict is in — film lacks appeal

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

"Getting to the top means working like a dog."

This seems to be a very contradictory ad-campaign catchphrase for a film whose main character supposedly went to only three lectures while attending Yale School of Law and proceeded to pull an elaborate scam to get his first case. The yuppie-lawyer, in From The Hip, is Robin "Stormy" Weathers, portrayed by Judd "Brat-Pack" Nelson, and we're supposed to like him. I'm sorry, but Americans are tired of Yuppies and they've never liked lawyers.

Weathers is bored, so he finagles himself a "pimple" of a case — small and unimportant. But then, "Stormy" Weathers kicks into action. Enter the courtroom and the guy goes nuts. In arguing the permissibility of a slightly obscene word because he claims it's the only word that's accurate, Weathers turns it into a separate hearing in itself. Much time is invested in the joke, but it gets old quickly.

Somehow, despite all of his courtroom antics, Weathers wins his unwinnable assault case.

At this point, the audience is supposed to find Weathers brilliant and funny. He is now a star, his girlfriend (frivolously played by Elizabeth Perkins) loves him, and the senior partners in his law firm want him out because he's embarrassing them.

Next, he's given a difficult unwinnable murder case, also known as a plot complication, and the film's producers drop us into the second half of this film.

Now, Weathers gets ethical. His defendant Douglas Benoy, played by John Hurt, is a "...cross between Charles Manson and William F. Buckley" and "a superior, obnoxious, elitist snob who makes you want to throw up."

The great moral question is, "Might this man really be guilty of murdering a 22-year-old prostitute?" Weathers is in over his head. "Stormy" comes back a few more times, tries to make us laugh a little more, but gets buried in Robin's contemplativeness and unease of spirit.

The crisis is his, not ours, and Weathers hasn't been real enough for us to care what happens by the time it's resolved.

Director Bob Clark calls From The Hip "a comedy with a lot on its mind," but it gave me little to think about. The advertisement copy also reads, "The way he (Weathers) practices law should be a crime." It is. In the course of the movie, the character earns more than five contempt charges and 10 days in jail. Definite hero-material.

This film is more fun than riding the Spokane Transit bus to Cheney, but the bus ride is cheaper.

Set Point Wanted: Athletic Director — must work cheap

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

When Bruce Grambo stepped down as the athletic director for Whitworth, he left a gaping hole that has many wondering who will fill it. Wonder no more! I have put together a list of people able to fill the A.D. position. Along with their qualification, I have listed some weaknesses they have.

Lee Iacocca — Chairman of the board of Chrysler Motors.
Lee could be a great asset to the Whitworth staff, just look at what he did for Chrysler, and his qualifications are excellent for the job. The only problem that I can foresee is his five-year/50,000 policy. This would probably mean freshmen redshirting their first year, thus being eligible for their fifth year and spending $50,000 to get there in the meantime.

Oral Roberts — Television Evangelist.
I think Oral could bring a whole new dimension to the role of a small college athletic director. I have no doubt that he would be able to obtain all the money necessary to send every team we have at Whitworth to Oklahoma for the Great Awakening held every spring. But as with Iacocca, Roberts does have his problems. The biggest one that I see is Roberts being struck down by God if the football team doesn't break 500. That would make one hell of a season ender though, wouldn't it? The final gun goes off, the Pirates walk slowly to the locker room with their heads hung low, and ol' Oral comes running past them all with a lightning bolt right behind him. It would put Whitworth on the map.

Marc Wilson — Quarterback, L.A. Raiders.
Marc might as well try and coordinate a small college's athletics, he sure can't coordinate an offense in L.A.

Mick Vukota — Right Wing Spokane Chiefs.
Vukota is a fighter, no secret about that. He'll fight for the needs of individual teams and that's what Whitworth needs. The only problem that could come up would be multiple abrasions, contusions, and breakings of the bone to the players and coaches who didn't measure up to his satisfaction.

Pat Sajak — Host of Wheel of Fortune game show.
It's time for Pat to step out of the shadow of Vanna White, begin his own road to fame and fortune, and the position of athletic director may be just the springboard he needs to the big time. Pat's a well-liked guy, and he would be an asset because of that, and his expanded vocabulary. The main problem with Pat is that he might get a little carried away and try to give a football player a "free pass" and that would be the end of Pat.

John Jay — New singer of Blue Jay.
I've missed John for last because I think he has the most potential. Anyone that can swing by the seat of his pants out over a crowd of screaming people while playing a guitar has got my vote for A.D. anytime, maybe even president.

I will try to contact these people sometime in the next month, but in the unlikely event that they all turn the job down, we will go to a more conventional method of hiring — the classifieds.

Three losses bump Bucs from playoffs

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth Pirates men's basketball team played their final home game last Tuesday, hosting the Warriors of Lewis-Clark State College. Unfortunately, the Pirates would like to forget their home finale, as the Warriors broke away from a 36-34 halftime lead and coasted to an 86-63 thumping.

"That's the worst game we've played all year," said Pirate Coach Warren Friedrichs. "We've never even resembled that in practice."

Many of the Pirates' 25 turnovers were made under little or no pressure. Whitworth turned the ball over 14 times in the second half — five more times than the Warriors did all night.

"I couldn't believe some of those passes," said Friedrichs.

However, the Warriors didn't look so hot themselves in the first half, trailing most of the way. Pirate forward Jon Eekhoff created a lot of room inside, snagging four offensive rebounds, giving the Bucs numerous second shots.

Eekhoff finished strong, pumping in 16 points and snaring 12 rebounds.

But, with four minutes remaining in the first half the momentum changed when the Warriors went into a half court 1-2-2 zone press. The Pirates responded with sloppy ball control and L.C. State grabbed the lead for good at the 1:01 mark on Pat Sobotta's jumper.

In the second half the Warriors picked up where they left off, staying in their zone press and forcing Whitworth out of their offense. Center Matt Greg lead the Warrior assault scoring all 16 of his points and hauling in eight rebounds in the second half. Greg echoed Friedrich's words saying, "It was a down night for them. They were all pretty much off."

The win improved L.C. State's record to 12-15 overall and 5-9 in NAJA District I play.

Brian Meyers playing in his last home game shot 6-11 from the field; scoring 13 for the game. Whitworth's lead scorer Steve Street, tied Eekhoff for scoring honors with 16.

On Friday, the Pirates

bounced back with a 86-74 win over Northwest College in Kirkland, Wash. Whitworth led 44-42 at halftime, ignited by Steve Street's 17 points. The Pirates got stingy in the second half with the lineup of Todd Martin, Barry Holley, Mark McVay, Eekhoff and Street. All five starters scored in double figures.

The following night however, the Bucs saw their playoff hopes fade as they were beaten by Seattle University, 90-80. Whitworth trailed by eight at halftime and was never able to overcome the deficit. Seattle University's transition game worked well as they shot 54 percent from the field. Whitworth closed the gap to six points with two minutes to play but couldn't convert three offensive rebound opportunities. The Pirates were led by Randy Turner's 18 points, and Meyers chipped in 15. Holley, who had been out with a broken tooth, scored 12 points, and Eekhoff continued to play well, grabbing 11 rebounds and tossing in 14 points.

Whitworth takes on Central Washington University Wednesday in Ellensburg.

"PLAY BALL"

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

It's a fly ball hit to deep centerfield. The outfielder goes back to the warning track, to the wall, bye-bye baseball.

Baseball season is beginning, and with last year's second-place team losing only six players on a 20-person squad, the Pirates hope to be a force to reckon with this year.

"We have a very talented team this year," said Coach Scott McQuilkin. "We have a good chemistry between players, and with good senior leadership we will be a contender this year."

Three players that will be relied on this year for senior leadership are Ryan Clements, Troy Anderson, and Scott Barkley.

Clements broke Whitworth's RBI record last season with 52. He was also selected to the All-District first team "It is a matter of hard work and dedication, but I can improve on last year's statistics," said Clements. As for the team, Clements said, "I am expecting everyone to have set goals for themselves. Fulfilling team goals helps everyone to fulfill personal goals."

"It will take a total team effort in order for us to be a contender this year," said Anderson, a first-team All-District player last season. "Team unity must be visible not only from the nine out on the field, but the others on the bench as well."

"Everyone has to realize their own roles, and play up to their expectations. We have to

Vallem tops 1,000 points

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

On Jan. 17, Lisa Vallem released another deadly accurate jump shot to score against the University of Puget Sound Loggers. The ball dropping through the net signified not only 2 points for the Lady Bucs but pushed Vallem to the 1,000 point mark for her four-year career at Whitworth.

Vallem calmly commented on her accomplishment, "I knew I was close and I was excited when the basket finally went in." Perhaps the non-chalance of the 5'7" guard is due to the fact that as a high schooler in Juliaetta, Idaho, Vallem accumulated over 1500 points.

Coach Paula Nunnally sees the achievement as natural coming from Vallem. "She's the best all-around player I've ever seen," the first-year coach declared firmly. "Lisa's a pleasure to have on the team."

To anyone who might dispute that, Nunnally pointed out, "She leads the district in assists and steals (last count 123 and 81, respectively). A selfish ball-player doesn't lead the district in assists."

Senior Vallem, the only girl on this year's team to play with the Pirates for four years, takes control on the court. Her form is precise as a ball-handler, her passes crisp and direct, and Vallem has an outside shot that should be patented. Nunnally said, "She's a very smooth ball-player, and she's total hustle. Lisa gives 110 percent."

One might expect such a proficient athlete to be domineering, as conspicuous off the court as she is on. Vallem doesn't fit this mold. "I guess because I have more experience (she's been playing basketball since she was a third-grader), I've been forced to be more of a leader. But basically, I'm quiet."

The blue-eyed brunette seems to take everything in stride. As a freshman, Vallem didn't see much playing time. "After starting for four years in high school, it was hard to sit the bench. But I understood that that was my role," she emphasized.

The change in the coaching staff (Nunnally succeeded Marv Ainsworth as head coach this year) didn't fluster the veteran guard either. Vallem performs regardless of who is at the helm of the team and points out positively, "With a woman coach we do have more communication."

Her goals for this season are to play in the District I play-offs (the Lady Bucs can still grab a berth) and to be named to the All-District team. Nunnally stated without a doubt, "I'm positive she'll make the team."

After she's unlaced her high tops for the last time, Vallem looks forward to graduating this spring as a recreation major. "I'm planning on working with the elderly; hopefully as an activities director for a retirement home."

The radical difference between fast-breaking on the basketball court and organizing recreation for senior citizens might be too much for some to cope with. But Vallem's quiet determination has led her to success as a player and lingers off the court, as well.

As the 86-87 season nears its end and future plans loom ahead for Vallem, she shrugs and smiles, "I just do the best that I can."

Women's tennis team returns, future season looks bright

by Peter Christensen
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth women's tennis team is expecting to have a very good season. "We have a lot of steady, base line players, and an incredible amount of depth, said Coach Jo Wagstaff. "We'll be solid all the way down the ladder."

Tryouts for positions on the team began Monday, Feb. 9, and will last until the middle of this week. Eleven players have turned out. Six compete in a match, and eight travel with the varsity squad. Those who turned out include five veterans and six new players. The returning players are: Ann Benzel, a senior; Krista Price, Allison Heiser and Toni Fenner, juniors; and Michelle Conner, a sophomore. The new players are: Sally Reed and Anne Gallagher, both juniors; Teri Fenner, a sophomore; and Beth Bangs, Sue Miller and Kari Strand, freshmen.

Wagstaff believes that the toughest regional competition will come from schools like Whitman College, Washington State University, Seattle University and Seattle Pacific University. In addition to those teams are five teams from northern California that the team will play during spring break. "We don't know what to expect down there," said Wagstaff.

The team is working to improve upon aggressiveness at the net and mental toughness. Physical conditioning has consisted of daily challenge matches, along with circuit training, jump rope, pushups, and running drills. Outside of practice several players do long-distance running and Nautilus workouts to improve their game.

One problem expressed by the players was the need for year-round access to courts. Currently the team has been practicing at North Park Racquet Club. But, because the players are not members, they

The Pirates will be challenged early in the season, facing some of their toughest competition in their first eight games. The Pirates open their season against Gonzaga University, last year's Pac 10 second-place team. They will also be facing Washington State University, Portland State, and Lewis-Clark State College. LCSC has won the NAIA National Championship twice in the past four years and has placed second the other two years.

The Pirates' challenge will begin March 4 at 2 p.m. at Gonzaga University.

KWRS program director resigns

by Mike Rough
 of The Whitworthian

On February 2, 1987, Tom Hancock handed in his resignation as Program Director of KWRS, for reasons of conflicting interest.

"I am currently employed at KEZE and was promoted to air status," Hancock said. "I had too many things going and not enough time to do the job I wanted to do. I think the station can go further without me than ever before."

Hancock's position was filled by Miriam Cox, the former Music Director. "One of the major changes in production is the two-hour block shows being extended to three hours of air time per slot another move is to raise the ratio of which the New Music is played, compared to the classic tunes," Cox said.

On quality and standards KWRS General Manager Tonia Bendickson said, "We're looking towards building the morale of the staff, and to maintain the consistency and broadcasting style that had been prevalent in the past."

"We want KWRS to be a presence on campus, and that can't be done without dedication," Cox said, "We want the student reaction to the station to be positive, with their support, in place of negative reaction."

"Tom was an asset to the station, and now that he's gone we won't have his guidance," Bendickson said. "We'll miss him but it'll open up new creative opportunities."

Illegally parked, operated cars face citations, expensive fines

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

"What's this on my windshield? Oh no, it's a parking ticket! Not again!" This is an all too familiar scene for many Whitworth students. They come out of class only to find a white piece of paper flapping on their windshield.

"Most likely the student was late," said Don Holden, director of the Physical Plant. "The student comes up late to time for class and parks where ever there is space. It's a conscious decision on their part to break the rules if they park where they're not supposed to because they want to get to class on time."

Now that the student is standing with the ticket in hand, how long is it until it's time to pay up?

Students have 14 days to pay the ticket. If no action is taken by the student in that time, a fine is issued on the ticket and sent to the business office for them to put on the students bill.

This is bad news for the student who has their bill sent home to their parents every month.

With so many rules and regulations to remember, where can students turn for help?

"It's all spelled out in the Vehicle Operations Policy booklet that was given to the students when they registered their vehicle," said Holden.

"If students took just three minutes to read that booklet, it would alleviate a lot of problems."

In one instance however, the handbook was not clear to one student. Freshman Perry Gridley drove his car while a friend rode on the back, on the outside of the car, Perry was stopped for reckless driving and given a warning.

"I didn't think it was reckless driving. I thought it was just having fun. I read the rules booklet but I didn't think it was reckless driving."

Once the money is collected on the citations it goes into a general fund for the school. The money may be used for parking, maintenance but the money will go where it is needed.

There are 781 registered student cars and about 200 registered faculty cars on campus. Are there enough parking spaces?

"The ratio of the total amount of parking spaces on campus to the total number of registered cars on campus is about one-to-one," said Holden. "However, there aren't enough spaces for everybody to park at each building."

One issue that is a thorn in the sides of Whitworth students is the Warrens parking lot. Freshman Louise Ehrgott who must leave right after a class in Dixon for work, must take her car and park in the Warrens parking lot.

"There just aren't enough parking spaces over there," said Louise. "Students are almost forced to park in non-designated parking areas."

"The Warrens parking lot is the way it is because we must comply with the Uniform Fire Code," said Holden. "It says we must provide enough space for fire vehicles to turn around in. The layout of the parking lot the way it is marked is in compliance with that code."

Relief may come for this parking dilemma sometime next year. Approximately $400,000 of the bond issue money will be spent on improving the parking areas in 1988-89.

Hepatitis type A Transmitted to Belize travelers

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

While students who stayed on campus during Jan Term may have gotten sick of school, members of the Belize study tour have literally become sick from school.

Five members of the study tour, among them David Hicks, biology professor, have been confirmed to have Hepatitis type A. A diagnosis on a sixth is still pending.

According to Health Center Director Rhonda Koele, none of those with the disease are considered an extreme case. An extreme case could cause liver damage or death.

Recovery from this particular strain of Hepatitis is different in each case. It can take as short as two weeks or linger on as long as 13.

"We're hoping to see these folks on the lower end of this," said Koele. "It is my expectation that they will be recovering soon."

Because the disease is not highly contagious, the patients are not off-limits to visitors.

"The students are not in quarantine," said Koele. "I think that word went out with 'groovy,' we call it isolation."

Visitors are welcome but there can be no hand touching, and hand washing is advised after leaving. Because the patients tire easily guests are being limited.

The real danger seems to have passed, but certain precautions should still be taken.

All people on campus should observe careful hand washing after using the restroom and/or before meals. Secondly, eating utensils and food should not be shared with anyone.

The transmission of Hepatitis type A is called "fecal-oral," meaning it must pass from the digestive track via the stool, then contaminate something that enters another person's mouth.

Because sanitation and hygiene are generally good in our community, it is not likely that transmission will occur, according to Koele.

If transmission does occur, the symptoms will include: extreme loss of appetite, nausea and vomiting, extreme fatigue, dark-colored urine, headache, fever, yellowish skin or eyes, and itching skin.

The number of cases of

Aggressive plan needed for minority recruitment

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

"Of course there should be more minority students here. In my classes, I look around and I'm the only one most of the time," said Junior Asian-American Jeanee Quan.

According to Rose Howell, director of student minority affairs, there are approximately 70 minority students at Whitworth.

Minority student refers to African-Americans, Asian-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, and Native-Americans, not international students.

John Reed, director of admissions agrees with Quan that there should be more minority students here.

"We are not aggressive enough — we've got to go and get them," Reed said.

Minority fairs take place all over Washington state in the high schools each year to encourage interest. At these fairs a representative goes to a high school, then area high schools bus students in to hear about the colleges.

This year 52 minority seniors showed interest in Whitworth at the fairs, but according to Reed, "I bet we won't get five applications out

Retention consultant visits Whit.

by Barb Visser
of The Whitworthian

In order to assess the educational experience a student encounters at Whitworth College, Randi Levitz, professional retention consultant, visited and observed Whitworth.

Levitz is the executive vice-president for Noel/Levitz Centers for Institutional Effectiveness and Innovation. Their consultation, research and publications look at student success and retention.

"We're always looking at how we can do a better job," said Julie Anderton, vice president for Student Life. "We want to constantly evaluate what the educational experience is here."

For this reason, the college, through Anderton and the Enrollment Management Task Force, asked Levitz to come and make an evaluation.

Students stay at Whitworth as long as they're learning, whether that be in the classroom, in the residence halls, or elsewhere, according to Anderton. When the environment becomes less interesting, and less stimulating, retention decreases; the result is that students leave.

According to Anderton, retention has increased over

Human Sexuality Week celebration through faith

Dear editor,

In a world where it often seems as if our sexual options are limited to either the self-indulgence which reduces others (and ourselves) to being merely sex objects, or the avoidance of our sexuality altogether since it is a part of the dark, earthy side of our nature, it is our desire to present a third, more healthy option. This option, which is the liberation and the celebration of our sexuality through a new understanding of our Christian faith, is the focus of Human Sexuality Week. It is with this in mind that we have established the following goals:

1. That Whitworth be established as a safe place for honesty and openness about sexuality.
2. That we acknowledge our sexuality as being a gift from God, and as a part of our being in the image of God.

3. That we understand the ways in which our bodies, emotions, values, and faith can work together in forming a base for responsible sexual decision making.

4. That we have adequate knowledge of the issues and resources related to our sexuality.

It is with sincere desire to see these goals accomplished in our lives that we present Human Sexuality Week.

Even under democracy Guatemalans live in fear

by Michael K. LeRoy
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

"I cry for Guatemala with a corpse at every gate."
—Bruce Cockburn

After 32 years of military sponsored dictators, elected civilian Vinencio Cerezo has successfully completed one year of his precarious Guatemalan presidency. Jan. 15 marked the first year of "new democratic freedom," but few citizens applauded this apparent triumph; to most it was just another day of scraping to make a living. The Super Bowl caused more excitement than the celebration of the eradication of military regimes.

Why was this land of the eternal fiesta so complacent over this heralded government event? The answer was found in The Prensa Libre, Guatemala's newspaper. Above the large green government-sponsored ad for this national festivity, the headlines depicted still another "disappearance" of a school teacher who was abducted by "unidentified, heavily armed men." Her body later appeared, raped and mutilated, on the side of the road, as most of the "disappeared" do in this country. Another answer was found at the celebration of democracy in the capital. While the elected officials praised this new golden age of democracy, relatives of the "disappeared" held a somber demonstration to remind all that freedom from fear was not yet over.

"The unidentified, heavily armed men" appear in the paper daily here as abductors or assassins, but never has one been caught. People of all ideologies — the U.S. embassy, the new civilian president, and even military officials acknowledge that in most cases the army and the murderers are one in the same.

In the past ten years here 38,000 people have disappeared without a trace. 100,000 have been killed in civil war, and the military openly admits to the annihilation of 440 villages. The civil war violence has "died down" for the time, but according to three human rights groups (Grupo de Apoyo Mutero, the Peace Brigade, and Americas Watch) the military-sponsored disappearances continue at 110 per month.

The army is confident its methods have prevailed to eradicate "subversives" in their Gestapo style. One army colonel taunted a journalist in an interview in The New Republic, "Do you think we've left any evidence? In Argentina there are witnesses, there are books, there are films, there is evidence. Here in Guatemala there is none of that. There are no survivors."

The possibility of Cerezo confronting the military-sponsored terrorism only increases the probability of another coup. The president himself confesses he only has 30 percent of the power. The United States continues to support torture states that only feed the fires of revolutionaries everywhere; $2.5 million in arms will be allotted to the Guatemalan generals this year. Meanwhile, students, professors, peasants, and human rights leaders continue to appear dismembered on the roadside...and Cerezo's civilian government continues to mask the death that prowls unchecked in Guatemala.

the last five years. "Yet we know we can do better," she added.

The results of Levitz' consultation will be presented in a formal report and the information used to try to further improve retention at Whitworth.

According to Anderton, Levitz not only gained new information, she also confirmed several things that the Task Force and others have already seen as areas in need of improvement.

In some areas, such as the freshman theme dorm and orientation course, Levitz observed that Whitworth is far ahead of other colleges. Other aspects, however, need to be improved. An example of this is freshman advising, which could be more focused. Programs like Forum were looked at to determine if they are operating effectively as is or if changes need to be made.

Throughout the week, Levitz met with faculty, student life, students, support staff, and departments such as Admissions, Financial Aid, Registrar, and Public Relations.

A student survey by the ACT program is being considered as a way to compare Whitworth students' satisfaction with other colleges' students across the country.

Also, an instrument to assess skills other than content knowledge, such as problem solving, which are learned in a liberal arts school, is being considered.

Pregnancies 'widespread;' Students turning to abortion

by Sandy Wark
of The Whitworthian

Pregnancy is "widespread" on campus, according to Health Center director, Rhonda Koele.

Koele would not release statistics on the number of women who tested positive for pregnancy last year at Whitworth. She said, however, "It affects Christians, non-Christians, freshmen, seniors, on and off-campus students."

According to Koele most of the women are younger, freshmen and sophomores.

In response to the number of unplanned pregnancies on campus, the Whitworth Health Center has moved to better assist students in dealing with pregnancy, according to Koele.

The health center provides free confidential pregnancy testing, counseling, and referral services.

Koele cites peer pressure, pressure from men, and romantic media images of sex as some possible factors leading to pregnancy.

"You never see a couple in a movie stop and put on a condom," Koele commented.

The Christian atmosphere at Whitworth may also keep people from using contraception devices. "People view the issue (sex) black and white. They think if it happens to me, I was carried away in the moment. (They think) it is a sin if you plan," Koele said.

The Health Center does not distribute "the pill" but will issue prescriptions that can be filled elsewhere.

Students who are tested positive for pregnancy receive a packet of information containing listings and brochures of on and off campus confidential pregnancy counseling services.

At the bottom of the packet's cover sheet is infor-courage them to take time and weigh their decision carefully.

"The goal of the Health Center is to make other options viable," said Koele who believes abortion to be a "hurtful thing."

Associate Dean of Students, Greg Hamann, echoed many of Koele's comments concerning pregnancy on campus.

Hamann said he seeks to provide a supportive environment for pregnant students.

"It's hard for me to think of pregnancy as a problem," Hamann commented, "No matter what the context, the gift of life is just that, a gift and a good thing." He said most women get an abortion as a "quick fix" and not necessarily because they think it's best. "They are worried about community expectations."

Christian focus goal of Human Sexuality Week

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth's second Human Sexuality week began on Monday, Mar. 2 and will last through the week to Friday, Mar. 6.

Programs are planned throughout the week. There will be discussions encouraging interaction, as well as informational sessions for learning.

All the talks during the week will be in different places, and led by different people.

Members of the faculty, counselors, resident directors, people from Student Life, and a few people from off-campus will be the speakers and leaders of the discussions, according to Rhonda Koele, director of the Health Center.

The week began with a full schedule on Monday.

Dr. Richard Mouw spoke in Forum of a Christian perspective on the sexual revolution.

There were discussions on people's appearances and its relationship with intimacy. Homosexuality was the topic of another meeting. The results to a survey done at Whitworth on unplanned pregnancy were brought up and discussed at another meeting. Three men discussed what it's like growing up male in today's culture. The night ended with the topic of date rape and sexual violence.

On Tuesday, the presentations will begin at 4 p.m.

In the Chapel commons Nancy Fox, Dale Bruner and Carol Cook will discuss biblical perspectives on sexuality.

At 6 p.m. Devon Greyerbiehl will talk about infatuation vs. real love. Her discussion is titled, "Things my parents didn't tell me." This will be in Baldwin/Jenkins' lounge.

In the Warren's lounge at 7 p.m., Kyle Storm and Tracy Riddle will discuss healthy and harmful patterns of masturbation.

Only women can attend the meeting at 8 p.m. Jan McLaren and Carol Schmidt will talk about growing up female in today's culture. This will be in Ballard's lounge.

Janelle and Ken Thayer, with Jim and Becky Swink will end Tuesday's presentations at 9 p.m. by discussing the struggles of the dating couple.

Wednesday night each residence hall will have its own discussion beginning at 10 p.m. in their individual lounges.

Greg Hamann and Rhonda Koele will talk about individuals deciding how to take charge of their sexuality. This will be at 4 p.m. in the HUB chambers on Thursday.

"What are they really saying when they say they want sex?" Greg Hamann and Tracy Riddle talk about insecurities at 6 p.m. in Stewart's lounge.

Howard Stein will talk about "Managing the Urge to Merge," raising the question of biological tendencies, and can they be controlled? He will speak at 7 p.m. in the Arend lounge.

Coordinator hired for non-traditional students

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

For students feeling the frustration of returning to college after an extended time away, help is now here.

Student Life, feeling the need to service the growing number of non-traditional students at Whitworth, has hired a non-traditional students coordinator.

Between 150-200 non-traditional students now attend Whitworth.

"I think that will increase more and more in time," said Director of Career/Life Advising Gail Berg.

Betty Kube, a non-traditional student herself, has been hired as coordinator. She hopes to inform non-traditional students of all the services available to them. She has already taken the first step by establishing office hours to meet with students.

"I'm here for students to come tell me their problems and come tell me their needs," said Kube.

"A lot of them don't feel that much a part of Whitworth," Kube said. "The campus as a whole needs to reach out."

Communication is of major importance to Kube.

"The college needs to speak my language or at least understand it," she said. "I've learned the college's language, but it was hard."

It's not only the administration that Kube is talking about. Traditional students need to communicate too.

"In the work force they'll be working together so they'd better start now," she said.

The new coordinator will be a facilitator for the non-traditional students.

"I don't see myself doing a lot of these things as much as organizing and making them available, and letting the right people know what they need," Kube said.

The ultimate goal for the newly hired coordinator includes having non-traditional students involved with the entire Whitworth community.

"I would like for their college experience to feel as good

"A well-rounded education is not just from books, it includes getting to know students from all age groups as well as the international students."

Betty Kube

One goal for Kube is organizing services to meet the schedules of non-traditional students. Mixing work life, family life, and school life poses an especially difficult problem for non-traditional students according to Kube.

Making them feel at home at Whitworth is another of her goals.

and rewarding as mine," Kube said. "A well-rounded education is not just from books, it includes getting to know students from all age groups as well as the international students."

In a couple of years they'll probably have a staff appointed. Berg said, "This is a nice stepping stone."

Bookstore service comes first

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Auxiliary means to give assistance or support. In the student handbook, Whitworth's bookstore is classified as an auxiliary service. Are Whitworth students satisfied with this definition?

Some students question the assistance of the bookstore. Some feel that it's charging too much for textbooks.

According to Junior Tim Jacobson, he paid between $160 to $200 for textbooks at the Whitworth bookstore instead of the $80 to $100 he spent at Spokane Community College.

Jacobson noted that he had the same course load at SCC as he has at Whitworth.

Is the bookstore trying to make a profit?

"It seems that many students think that the bookstore is designed to make a profit," said Senior Don Latimer, bookstore employee. "Actually, that isn't their primary function. It's there more for a service to the students."

According to Bookstore Manager Diane Anderson the textbook prices are based on their net cost. Anderson is responsible for ordering textbooks, dealing with vendors, and professors.

"If we lose money on textbooks we make it up on the sales of cards and clothes," Anderson said. "If there are any profits, they're used to the school's discretion."

According to Anderson, the bookstore comes out just about even, referring to its $385,000 budget which is used for merchandise, salaries, and utilities.

For the bookstore, making money is not a major concern — service is.

For example, there have been some complaints that the bookstore is not open long enough on Saturdays.

"I'd be open to being open on Saturdays," Anderson said in reference to being open longer hours. She added that another full-time employee would be needed.

First undergraduates from China arrive

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Three students arrived at Whitworth Jan. 19, from a different and faraway place. The arrival marked the first time that Whitworth has had undergraduate students from Mainland China.

Guanjie Yang, Yue He, and Zi Zi Zhang have come from Nanjing University in Nanjing China.

All three juniors went through a very competitive selection process which consisted of exams and interviews.

Their exchange program was arranged by Dr. Daniel Sanford, director of the International Studies program.

The plan for their program includes surveying America.

When these students surveyed America what did they find? What did they learn about us? Both Zhang and Yue He commented on American classes, careers, religion, culture, and food.

Yue He said that the classes at Whitworth are taught differently than those at Nanjing University.

"You think about something but you don't say it," said Yue He, referring to the limited amount of expression that they have in their classes at Nanjing.

Both Yue He and Zhang said that they are able to express themselves more freely at Whitworth because the "professors are more liberal."

Zhang is taking classes in English, Anthropology, and Education. Yue He is taking classes in English, Anthropology, and French.

According to Yue He, Nanjing University wants her to become a teacher, but she expresses little interest in that field. She would rather become an interpreter instead.

Zhang, on the other hand, wants to be a teacher.

She also came here to learn about religion.

"I go to church every Sunday morning," said Zhang. She added that she has not had very much exposure to Christianity.

While here, the visiting students will immerse themselves in American culture.

Yue He watches some television in her spare time. She adds that it allows her to improve her use of English.

Yue He enjoys shopping in America. She says that in China all the goods are behind a counter and that you ask for what you want.

Popular indoor tanning, spring break prerequisite

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Only three weeks left until spring break. Because Whitworth students will head for warmer climates, now is the time to prepare your skin, before you hit the beach.

The popularity of indoor tanning salons has greatly increased over the past few years. Some people enjoy the look of a tan, and others tan for medical reasons. But the main reason people choose to tan indoors, rather than outside, is that indoor tanning allows the look of a healthy tan without the risks of skin damage caused by too much sun exposure.

Marsh O'Neill, owner of Total Tan on N. Division, shared some reasons why she advocates indoor tanning.

"I lived in San Diego for 23 years, and many of those years were spent in the sun without any kind of protection," she said. "When I moved to Spokane I discovered that my skin was severely damaged.

After a few years in Spokane, out of the sun, the condition of my skin greatly improved. I really enjoy the look of a tan, so I began to investigate indoor tanning."

What O'Neill discovered was the role of the dual-wave ultraviolet light in the tanning process. The shorter waves are responsible for skin aging, sunburn, and damage. Some of this light is necessary to produce melanin, which triggers the tanning process. The longer waves tan the skin as the melanin is raised to the surface. A sunburn occurs when the shorter rays produce melanin faster than the longer rays can tan the skin.

O'Neill explained that modern indoor tanning beds limit the amount of UVB (shorter wave length) light, and the rest of the lamp is a concentration of UVA (longer wave length) light. One half-hour in a tanning bed is equal to approximately 2½ hours in the sun at 84 degrees.

An important factor consumers should consider is that all tanning beds are not the same. There are a wide variety of systems available on the market, and each one is different. Those interested in attaining a safe tan should use much caution and ask questions.

For those planning on a tropical or sunny climate for their vacation, tanning ahead of time offers good skin protection. A good base tan gives the equivalent of a SPF 2, which allows twice as much sun exposure as without any protection.

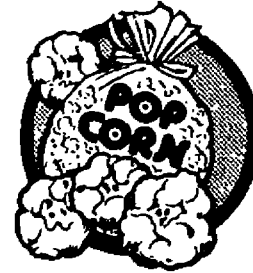

Tanning salons attract a diverse group of people — from Charmaine Lachapelle, who currently holds the bodybuilding title of "Miss Inland Empire", to Whitworth's own psychology professor, Bill Johnson.

Freshman Wendy Galloway offers advice from her tanning experiences. "I think that the secret to achieving a natural-looking tan is not to go for the darkest possible look, but to get a healthy glow by proper moisturizing and carefully monitored exposure times. Tanning makes you look and feel your best, but it should be done in moderation."

Reel Views "Radio Days" ★★★ Humorous media history

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

Woody Allen is one of the most original comedy writer/directors to ever have films grace the silver screen.

He alternates between 'large' films like last year's "Hannah and Her Sisters" (nominated for the Best Picture Oscar) and small, unpretentious romps like the new release "Radio Days."

In this, "Radio Days," his 15th film, Allen has given us a funny and moving account of the unifying effect radio had on the United States in the late '30s and World War II. Unlike most of his earlier films, Allen is not seen on-screen, but as the movie's narrator.

"Families gathered in the evening, and these wonderful stories were coming over the air," said Allen in a published interview about the movie.

"The whole country was tied together by radio. We all experienced the same heroes and comedians and singers. They were giants. They were so huge and now today the whole thing has completely vanished," he said.

Through the film's nostalgically autobiographical family, Allen never loses sight of his end goal, thoughtful and reminiscent humour. The vehicle for this goal is a "collection of old radio stories," through which we meet the family of Joe (Seth Green) and the radio stars.

One such story concerns Joe's idolization of the Masked Avenger (Wallace Shawn) — and how Joe almost got away with robbing the synagogaue poor box of the 15 cents needed to purchase a Masked Avenger Secret Compartment Ring.

Each of Joe's eccentric family members (mom, dad, a married aunt and uncle, their daughter, and unmarried aunt, grandma and grandpa) have their own favorite shows which are the subjects of the many vignettes.

Exceptional performances are turned in by Julie Kavner as Joe's mom (best known as Rhoda's sister), Dianne Wiest as husband-hungry Aunt Bea, and Allen-regular Mia Farrow (as rags-to-riches cigarette girl, Sally White).

This is a fun film, and one which might let you understand something more about a time in our recent history from a slightly different and often humorous perspective.

Finally, in the words of the infamous Masked Avenger, "Beware evildoers wherever you are!"

Program opens doors to 80 countries

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

Many Whitworth students dream about studying at colleges in places such as Australia, Switzerland and Montana, but don't believe that there are such opportunities. But there are!

Whitworth became a member of the International Student Exchange Program (ISEP) in December 1986. This program offers Whitworth students the chance to study at 80 foreign or 70 U.S. ISEP member schools they would not otherwise be able to attend.

Whitworth became a member of ISEP because of the limitations our current cross-cultural opportunities have.

Whitworth has been building a network of sister schools including Hong Kong, Korea and China, in the last few years. We have four new sister colleges in Mexico City, Thailand, Korea, and China with which we will be exchanging students this fall. The problem students have with sister schools is that there aren't enough of them, and they aren't in the right places.

We also have the opportunity to take many study tours to such places as Berlin, Belize, Central America, France and the British Isles. The problem with these programs is that students don't get to study, play or live with the native students in natural college settings.

International Programs Administrative Secretary Kathy Cook explained that ISEP provides an exciting, simplified method for exchanging students.

"The neat part about it is that our people can go wherever they want. We could send someone to Europe, and get someone from Africa," she said.

Sophomore John Kessel, an art history major, is applying for an exchange to the University of Glasgow in Scotland.

"When I leave I will open up a spot for someone who wants to come here," he said. "I'll still be able to make payments directly to Whitworth, and study abroad."

Kessel explained that in the exchange process he will pay regular tuition to his school. In this way, the exchange, not necessarily a direct one, remains balanced and neither school loses money.

"The only drawback to ISEP is that in some foreign countries, students have to know the language well," Cook said. "Our French language students would love studying at a French speaking school," she said, "but art history majors would have problems because most of them cannot speak French. Most French schools don't offer English instruction."

The most important aspect of exchanges is that most participating programs make no special provisions for Americans. The American student will sit in the same class, eat the same food, and live the same life as local students.

Some unique and popular members of ISEP include Australia, Malta, Sweden, and Fiji. If a foreign country doesn't appeal to you, think domestic. It is possible to attend such U.S. ISEP member schools as the University of Idaho or Washington State University. Several other U.S. colleges, such as Virginia's Old Dominion University and Georgetown in the District of Columbia, are also members of ISEP.

Interested in getting away for a semester?

"Anyone who wants to go on an exchange in the fall of '87 must apply immediately," Cook said. "Placement begins March 1. Spring '88 applications should be in by May 1." General qualifications require full-time enrollment at the student's present school, a good academic standing, and at least sophomore standing.

Most financial aid for Whitworth students will apply to an exchange program.

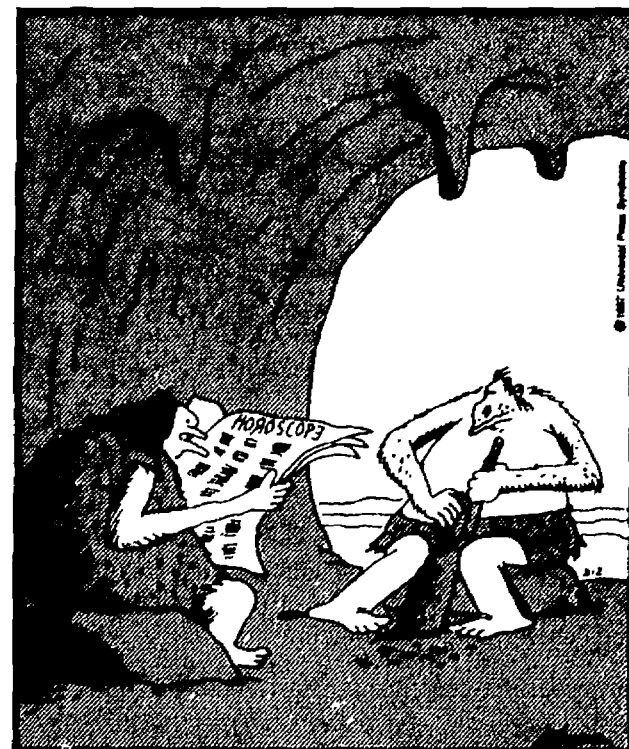

"I would recommend for students to come in and look through the ISEP directory," Kessel said. "More students should be aware that they can go abroad independently, without tour groups."

The library has microfiche on ISEP and its member college catalogs. If you would like more information about ISEP opportunities, contact Kathy Cook in Grieve 107, International Studies.

Guder leads tour of Berlin; students see both sides

by Kathy Marousek
Special to The Whitworthian

Imagine living in a society where you cannot communicate clearly with anyone. You hop onto a bus with the feeling that you might not reach your destination because you cannot read the bus schedule or any of the street signs.

Out of 23 students from Whitworth who went on the first trip of the Berlin Encounter during Jan Term, most coped with this situation, knowing very little German or none at all. Junior Laura Lee Pritt said, "It was like floating around in a little plastic bubble." Frustration and isolation were common emotions for the students.

Though communicating was a negative part of the trip, the students and instructors believe the Berlin trip was definitely a positive experience. "What I learned was not the kind of material you forget after a test. We experienced different views and living history," said Senior Dave Janssens.

The class focused on the religion and history of Berlin, Germany. Students studied the Third Reich, the Holocaust, the division of East and West Berlin, and their relationship with the church. Darrell Guder, Vice President for Academic Affairs, founder of the trip, believes that Berlin is a "city in which major issues in Western history can be encountered."

A fascinating experience for many students was being able to see and touch the history they had read about. "Being around Hitler's past was very exciting," said Senior Brad Larkin.

The students were able to cross the Berlin Wall and stay for a day in East Berlin. Their general reaction was that it is dull and gray.

Senior Peter Erickson said,

"I am so grateful that I don't live in a country like that. There were guards everywhere, the food was terrible, and the clothes were boring. The stores were worse than the worst K-Mart, and the lines were an hour long."

While in East Berlin, Pritt felt that the people were living just because they were alive.

"They are working and functioning because that is what they are supposed to be doing, not because they want to," she said.

Janssens noted that the cars in East Berlin all looked the same. "They look like refrigerators on wheels," he said. He also said there were big piles of coal all over the sidewalks used for heating homes.

The students reactions to West Berlin were the opposite of East Berlin. "It was like night and day on the other side of the wall," said Erickson.

Janssens said there were many different things to do and see in West Berlin. He said, there are a lot of wild dance clubs that stay open all night, and "tons of pubs that serve big beers."

Students also attended a few of Berlin's church services. Janssens said that for the German people, religion is not very personal, and not a very high percentage of the public goes to church.

"Our religion is a lifestyle, to them it is completely separate. Their values are those of a Christian, but they don't think of them as Christian values," said Pritt.

Political values were also examined during the Berlin trip. Janssens learned that America has more influence on world politics than he first believed. "Every time we make a military move it affects everyone, not just ourselves," he said. He also came to the conclusion that Americans are somewhat self-righteous about foreign policy.

Janssens said he has become more aware of politics and foreign relations resulting from the trip. "Over there people our age want to talk about politics. They are more knowledgeable on the subject. Here we just leave it to the politician," he said.

The Berlin Encounter will be offered every two years. Guder believes the trip was a valuable experience for everyone involved, including the German people, who asked Whitworth to return. Guder said Whitworth students had a great impact on the people they met.

"They opened up people's eyes who were very negative toward America," he said.

Janssens even promised to send one German student a yankee's T-shirt.

After spending three weeks in Berlin, the students had a five-day respite in London.

"It would've been better if I had had more money, but I did get to see Elvis Costello in concert," said Janssens.

Erickson enjoyed London because he could speak the language, talk to people in stores, and finally read a menu to order some good food.

Grief, isolation stimulates action

by Philippe Coulon
of The Whitworthian

Renda Cole, a Whitworth graduate, resolved to form a special counseling group for students who have lost either a parent, a relative, or a close friend, when she realized the college's inefficiency in dealing with the issue.

After her father died three years ago, Cole found that Whitworth was a very difficult place to find adequate comfort to overcome her grief.

"I had a hard time getting through it and I did not want to talk to anyone," said Cole. "If it was not for a friend, I think I would have left Whitworth."

One thing that Cole was frustrated with was the lack of background given to the resident assistants in dealing with the subject of death.

"My resident assistant did not know what to do or where to go," said Cole. "It is scary to know that they are useless and kind of confused. At least if they had some background, it would help."

The following year Cole met a girl who encountered similar difficulties on-campus when her mother had died a few years earlier. This element persuaded Cole to start an organization.

"I got an idea in my head that we really needed something on-campus where people could get together to talk and work things out, some sort of counseling," said Cole. "I called Kyle Storm. We started an organization and we got a lot of responses."

Kyle Storm, a counselor in the health department, explained how painful it can be for students that come to Whitworth who have lost one in their family, and how beneficial it is for them to have a counseling group.

"They feel lost and also guilty that they left home and are not taking care of their mother or father," he said. "The group helps those students who normally just drop out to cope with their feelings and to stay and finish their education."

This group, called the grief support group, allows students to identify themselves with other students passing through similar circumstances.

"When something happens to you, it is not uncommon to find other people that have had the same thing that happened to them," said Storm.

"The group helps them to understand their loneliness, to express their sadness. The group helps them to feel rooted here so that they can work through to deal with their feelings, to understand them and to feel connected to other people."

Storm said that it is imperative for the resident assistants to become familiar in dealing with these students.

"I know a lot of students who are in the group, and who were very angry at how the R.A.'s treated them. It is just awkward," he said. "If only they knew how to approach the person and to talk with him."

The grief support group plans to extend its activities beyond its weekly meeting. Cole hopes to bring the issue to the whole campus' attention.

"Campus awareness is one of our goals," she said. "We want to let people know that grief is not something that is going to fade away."

"We want to make people available on-campus for people having questions," she said. "We also would like to have seminars or discussions of what to do when a friend is going through grief."

The organization welcomes any student who is going through grief or dealing with pain. "Come and join the group, or even talk to one of our members," said Cole. "We would like to have you."

Whitworth rec-room; a flurry of action

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

No, you are not about to engage the NORAD computer in a friendly game of thermal-nuclear war. But, it could seem like it if a pingpong ball sails over your head.

This is the ASWC gameroom, free of charge to Whitworth students. It is situated at the rear of the HUB, under the KWRS studio and between the snack bar and student store.

Two pool tables, three video games, a pinball machine and a foosball table all contribute to Whitworth's "rec room."

And there is a pingpong table.

"I proposed that they bring this table out here," said Junior Kurt Solera, "and I helped set it up."

Stephen Mages

Student concentrates on task ahead: pocketing the 12-ball.

"This is the best table on campus," asserted Senior Darrell Duncan. Solera and Duncan play pingpong eight to 10 hours a week, but Duncan insisted, "We would play 12 to 15 hours a week if they put (the table) out there (in the ballroom area)."

At the pool table across the room, Senior Steve Williams and Junior Tim Wiersma get ready for a friendly game of eight-ball. "Choose your weapon," Williams said, holding both cue sticks out in front of him. "Rack 'em up!" shouted Wiersma, choosing his stick.

Wiersma said that they play pool about three times a week. "Lately it's been very often because I've been really bored," he said.

Most students come in to vent their frustrations or simply to get in a little practice. "The gameroom is used most during finals week," said ASWC Secretary Susan Blair.

Williams missed his next shot, but his 13-ball rolls into the corner pocket. "Slop-n-roll," he said as he walked toward the window.

Suddenly, "OK buddy, pull over," was heard. It was the "High Speed" pinball machine. It spurted out a novel traffic sound every few minutes, the sound of squealing tires, for instance. "Championship Baseball," a video game, sits next to the pinball machine. A man sat on an orange table and played the game. "Play Ball!" the machine said. Little men ran out on the field and took their positions.

Duncan yelled and the pingpong ball bounds across the room. Solera and Duncan play an aggressive style of pingpong. Another shot hits the ceiling, then rolls across the room.

The second pool table is now occupied. Freshmen Cathy Lee and Noelle Giffin prepare for a best-of-three match. "We come in two or three times a week for study breaks," said Lee. "We play just for fun, but sometimes we bet." They eat french fries between shots.

Wiersma tries to bank the three-ball, but misses. "It's good placement, though," he said.

"Go ahead and rationalize," retorted Williams.

The pingpong ball, like Halley's comet, makes yet another return. Wiersma tosses it back to Solera.

Foosball enthusiast's hobby led to professional ranking

How do you chase away the blues, or the stress, of studying and meet people at the same time?

Kathy Cook has discovered a successful way to let out frustrations, have fun, and win some money — foosball.

Cook, the International Programs administrative secretary, saw her first foosball table in a tavern in 1972 and started to play for fun. She was just learning how to play pool, but dropped that in favor of the more exciting, faster-moving table soccer.

The interest of foosball bloomed for Cook and she played throughout college when she had the time. The first tournament she entered was in Everett, Wash., and, although she and her partner were not old enough to enter the tavern, they managed to get in and take second place in the tournament.

Foosball has been an important factor for Cook in many areas.

"I decided to go to graduate school at University of Oregon, because at the time it was a real hotbed for foosball," said Cook. "The sport, among other things, influenced which graduate school I chose."

In 1975, table soccer players toured the entire country on tournaments — with a grand prize of $250,000. Cook couldn't go that year, but the next year she and her women's doubles partner drove from Eugene, Ore., to Minneapolis to the World Championships tournament and placed fourth.

But Cook saw her career in foosball come to an abrupt halt when, in 1978, the bottom fell out of the industry. The prize money for the tour had reached $1 million, but Japan had imported its newest invention — Space Invaders.

Companies who produced foosball tables went out of business, and Cook was forced to look for a new job, (she had been working for a tournament soccer company as a public relations officer).

"I moved to LA and got a writing job for a trade magazine for coin-operated amusement," said Cook. "After a couple of years, foosball started making a comeback."

Along with the industry, Cook had made her own recovery — as the executive director of the U.S. Table Soccer Association.

Some of the responsibilities of this position included setting up and running foosball tournaments, writing copy for the quarterly newsletter, editing the newsletter, and keeping membership fees organized.

At one of these tournaments, she met her future husband, Chris. However, because of her busy schedule, her recent marriage in June, and other interests, she has resigned her position as executive director.

"When you take your hobby and make it your work, it takes away some of the charm. I'm ready to let someone else have some of the responsibility now," said Cook.

For Cook to explain her involvement in foosball as a "hobby" is a modest declaration.

Cook calculated, "I've played for 15 years, and for 10 of those years, I was ranked as a professional player. I've won about $10,000 over the years, and I have 55 trophies.

"My highest award was that in '84 and '85, I was the women's doubles champion," she said. "Even now that I am semi-retired, I'm still ranked among the top 10 women players in the nation."

For Cook, table soccer was responsible for many things in her life, including her first writing job, and her first co-authored book, "The Complete Book of Foosball" in 1980.

Cook loves the sport of foosball, and she said she will continue to be involved, in whatever way possible.

Tennis golf—a new twist to an old game

"As soon as a young man's fancy turns towards the thoughts of golf, spring is in the air."

Erik Henriksen

It happens every spring. The sights and sounds of tennis and golf come together on the Whitworth campus.

"Tennis-ball-golf", as the name implies, is a combination of tennis and golf in which golf clubs are used to hit tennis balls. As one can imagine, it is an unusual sight to behold.

This sport has many unique characteristics which cannot be found in any other sport. Fluorescent-green fuzzy balls sailing across campus at supersonic speeds, numerous divots taken out of the campus "greens", and screaming throngs of people waving golf clubs, are just a few of the

Men's tennis team begins season early

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth men's tennis team has returned to the courts early this year. Less snow and warm weather have opened the courts almost a month earlier than usual.

As they approach the season, Head Coach Ross Cutter is very optimistic, looking for Whitworth's fourth consecutive winning season. "We have a number of lettermen returning. Even though we lost our two best players to graduation, we will still be reasonably competitive, though we might not look it on paper."

Cutter said that there will not be as many individual stars this year, instead the team will be more all-around.

"We have very good depth, which should be beneficial to our team," said Cutter.

Kirk Rector, the top player this year, agrees that depth is a definite asset to the team this year. "Last year we had strong number one and two players but lacked strength throughout the final six positions," said Rector.

"This year we will stress overall quality, and put less emphasis on individuality," Rector added, "It will be a good growing season."

Tough schedule lies ahead for improved track team

Competition at its finest. Runners competing against the clock and themselves. Throwers practicing technique and form. Hard workouts put in all week, to be followed by long road trips. It is all part of a track teams schedule, and it's beginning for the tracksters of Whitworth.

"I am very optimistic about the upcoming season," said Head Coach Arnie Tyler Sr. "We have improved over the last three years. It looks like a lot of records are going to be broken this year."

"We have the best women's track team we've ever had at Whitworth," said Tyler. "In Gwen Keiser and Barb Lashinski we have the two best javelin throwers in the NAIA."

Senior Gwen Keiser placed third last year in Nationals, and freshman Barb Lashinski was first in the Washington

An established course is used by the golfers. Many obstacles exist such as pits, fences, trees, and hills. The course begins at McMillan Hall and winds its way panile, the HUB, behind McEachran Hall, the front entrance, Cowles Library, behind Seeley Mudd Chapel, in and out of the Pine Bowl, and finishes at McMillan Hall.

The high point of the season is the Tom Taylor Tournament, which is held in April. It is the epitome of tennis-ball golf, and brings the top players together in a duel-to-the-death competition. The tournament is named in honor of Tom Taylor, who set up the course six years ago.

It rained during last year's tournament, and only 14 players braved the weather. Among those who turned out was Brian Killefer, who managed to win the tourney with a 7-under-par score.

As in all great sporting events, to the victor go the spoils. As tradition dictated, the winner of the Tom Taylor Tournament receives the highly coveted "green jacket", which is really a bright-green 7-UP Bottling Co. sportcoat.

According to Sam Weber, the Tom Taylor Tournament is the event. "There is a lot of keen competition, and the course can be very difficult, but the jacket is very prestigious."

To the dread of the Physical Plant, the event will be held again this season, and assuming there is good weather, could draw a field of around 20 competitors.

Many see this tourney as being a head-to-head battle between McMillan Hall and Stewart Hall for the prized jacket. Mac boasts of its "Senior Circuit", which consists of such famous golfing powerhouses as Killefer, Weber, Rick Kemman, and school, and are expected to do well this year.

In the distance events, Alan Bracken, a junior college transfer from Ireland, and sophomore Scott Hink, who was injured last season, have a lot of potential, said Tyler. Gary Knowlton, a junior college transfer decathlete, who placed fourth in the junior college state meet, should also do well. "I expect good things from him," said Tyler.

"We also have my son, Arnie Tyler Jr., and Tim Jacobsen throwing the hammer. They should both go to national this year, as well as beat the school record," said Tyler.

"We will qualify for districts with no problem. It will just be a matter of hard work and determination as to how far we go," said Tyler Jr.

With the first meet just one week away, the 45 member squad is working hard, individually and as a team, preparing for what appears to be a very exciting season ahead.

Pirate track stars expect to place high at Nationals

by Peter Christensen
of The Whitworthian

It is an all-time first for Whitworth College. Not one, but two Pirates competed at the NAIA National Indoor Track Meet in Kansas City, Mo. this weekend.

Arnie Tyler and Tim Jacobson both qualified last month to compete at Nationals in the 35 lb. weight throwing event, which is the indoor equivalent to the hammer throw. Whitworth has never sent anyone to Nationals in an indoor throwing event, let alone two.

Tyler and Jacobson both expect to finish in the top six. Last year's sixth place throw was 48-7. Currently both are throwing 54-55 in practice. In their last meet two weeks ago, Jacobson threw for 53-6½, a personal best and a Whitworth indoor record. Tyler threw for 51. These throws qualified them for the national meet.

Oddly enough, both Tyler and Jacobson learned the "35" only five weeks ago, and quickly used their experience in the hammer to adapt. While being quite different in appearance, the hammer and 35 are manipulated in a similar fashion. This similarity enabled them to develop quickly, and improve their throws.

Jacobson emphasized that the key to having a good throw is to avoid becoming tense. "If a thrower can avoid tension in the ring, he will have a good throw." This, they said, may give them an edge over some of their stiffer competition.

Most of their competition will have the advantage of size, but both Tyler and Jacobson remain undaunted. "I am really anxious for Nationals because everyone there will be bigger than us, and we have even more fun beating the big guys. Most of them have 40 to 60 lbs. and 4 to 6" on us, so it is really nice to beat them," said Jacobson.

Tyler pointed out that technique is the answer, not brawn. "They try to muscle it, and we will beat them with technique."

Tyler is 22 years old and married. This is his fourth and last year at Whitworth and he is anxious for another win. Last year he went to Nationals in the hammer and took sixth place, making him an All-American.

Tyler specializes in the throwing events. He throws the 35, hammer, and discus, but prefers the hammer to the 35.

Jacobson is 21, and also married. A junior transfer from Spokane Community College, Jacobson expects to graduate next year.

His wife, Kari, is also expected to qualify for Nationals in the 55 meter hurdles. Her personal best of 8.5 seconds is a Whitworth indoor record.

Jacobson specializes in throwing events as well, and throws the 35, hammer, discus, and javelin. In addition to his 35 school record, he also holds the school's indoor discus record at 158-8. He prefers the 35 to the hammer. "I can throw it proportionally further than I can the hammer."

While both Tyler and Jacobson are dedicated to becoming superior athletes, they also compete well in the classroom. Tyler is a double-major in physics and math and has a cumulative GPA of 3.5. Jacobson is majoring in Public Relations and has a 3.2 GPA. They are living proof that athletics and academics can co-exist on a higher plane.

"We practice year-round and still keep our grades up," said Tyler.

Tyler was recently accepted as a Navy Nuclear Propulsion Officer candidate, and will go in the Navy after graduation. Three of the five years will be in graduate school, at the Navy's expense. The other two years will be in active duty on an aircraft carrier.

After college Jacobson wants to go into business. He would prefer to be in a company that sells track and field equipment. After he gets experience in the field he wants to start his own business.

The results of the competition were not available when The Whitworthian went to press.

Women's tennis open season with upset

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth's women's tennis team opened their season with a surprising come-from-behind win over Whitman College Thursday in Spokane.

Coach Jo Wagstaff called the upset, "The highlight of my coaching career."

Krista Price and Allison Heiser sparked the turnaround. They rallied after losing their first doubles set, 2-6, taking the last two 7-6, 7-5.

Number one player Sally Reed opened with a convincing victory over Tammy Roe, 6-2, 6-0. Sophomores Sue Miller and Kari Strand, number five and six players, were the other singles winners.

However, it was the doubles teams that really turned the match around, with the Lady Bucs winning all three contests. Reed and the number two singles player, Ann Benzel, teamed up for the first doubles win. Toni Fenner and Sue Miller wrapped up the upset, easily winning in their doubles match.

Wagstaff noted that everyone played extremely well. "If we can play at that level all year I think we are going to surprise a lot of teams."

Last year's squad finished 7-7, and Wagstaff believes this year's team is much better.

Whitworth's next match is against Central Washington University, March 7, in Ellensburg.

Three-pointer lacks dazzle

by Mark Eldson
of The Whitworthian

Now that basketball season is over, we can step back and take a close look at the three-point rule. There are many advantages and disadvantages to this scoring rule.

First let's start off with the disadvantages. Aside from the obvious ones of taking away the inside power play and the firing of bricks from the corners, other disadvantages exist. The first, and least obvious, disadvantage is the recruitment of players that can do nothing besides shoot long bombs. This seriously lowers the quality of the game and takes away the dazzle that basketball fans have come to love. The most blatantly gross example of this occurred in a small college in Alabama. This school recruited a young buck from the bayous of Louisiana, let's call him Billy Joe Jim Bob. Billy Joe Jim Bob had never seen a basketball in his life, much less played the sport, but he could toss a possum into a bucket with incredible accuracy from 50 feet away.

This young man was whisked away to college to get a free education and shoot hoops, but he was cut after one week of practice. Why? Billy Joe Jim Bob could do nothing but shoot, he couldn't dribble and he couldn't play defense. But he could shoot, and isn't that the main purpose of the three-point rule?

Well, enough of Billy Joe Jim Bob, his kind is a rarity at best and shouldn't be criticized for his skills, or lack of them.

The advantages of the three-point rule are obviously just the opposite of the disadvantages. The fact that smaller teams can compete with larger ones, and because it makes games more exciting for the fans, are real advantages. The last second shots at the buzzer can provide an exciting ending to sometimes boring games.

High-scoring games are another advantage of the three-point shot. Who wants to see a game where the teams only rack up 60 points between them?

Though there are really no hidden advantages to the three-point rule, the obvious advantages must be considered.

Regardless of the advantages and disadvantages, the three-point rule is here to stay, so we'll just have to grin and bear it and be thankful that there isn't a three-point line in volleyball.

to play either number two or three on the varsity team said, "We have improved in depth and have some talented freshmen coming into the program."

Boo Boatman stressed another important factor for the team, "We would like fan support; they bring out the best in a tennis player."

Preparation time is limited now as their first league game against Gonzaga is approaching. "It should be a real good game. It is traditional that no matter how each team plays it is always a close game," said Cutter.

League action starts at Whitworth on March 13 at 2 p.m.

Henriksen. Said Kemman, "I don't see any competition coming from any other dorms, all the winners will be from Mac."

Killefer is confident of another win this season. "I am going to be defending the championship this year, and I feel I have a strong chance of winning again because everyone else out there will be nothing but weasels."

Stewart Hall's unofficial spokesman, Barry Elkin, feels that Stewart's top entry, Kurt Rasmussen, will come out on top. "I figure that Mac is going to have to give up the jacket for the first time in its history. Stewart will be bringing home the jacket this year."

A Mac competitor was quoted as saying, "We are very strong this year, we will beat the pants off Stewart."

In any case, all is in fun, so keep your eyes peeled for those Unidentified Flying Tennis Balls.

Hoppus, Buc lineman, drafted by Edmonton

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

An 8:30 wake-up call last Sunday gave Ken Hoppus an "instant blood flow everywhere."

Frank Morris, general manager of the Edmonton Eskimos called to tell the Whitworth senior to report to training camp May 20. The Eskimos picked Hoppus in the eighth round of the Canadian Football League's annual college draft.

Being taken by the Eskimos was a special honor for Hoppus.

"Getting drafted by Edmonton is like getting drafted by the Dallas Cowboys," he said.

Hoppus went through testing along with 79 other hopeful players at a CFL combine camp in January. At first it didn't look too good.

"I was the smallest lineman in camp," he said.

The key for Hoppus was longsnapping. Morris was impressed by Hoppus's ability to hurl the ball through his legs back to the punter. Having performed most of the longsnapping duties for the Pirates over the past two years helped Hoppus hone his skill.

Being 6 feet 1 inch and a solid 230 pounds is not big enough for Hoppus. He works out six days a week, trying to reach a playing weight of 260 pounds.

Joining Hoppus on opening day of training camp will be Whitworth All-American wide receiver Wayne Ralph. The camp gives the soon-to-be wed Ralph the chance that he needs.

"I just want to go up there and prove I can play," he said.

Professional bound football players, Ken Hoppus, 63, and Wayne Ralph, 20.

Ralph has been invited to camp by Edmonton and does have a verbal commitment to them. He does have other options though. The Calgary Stampeders put him through tests on February 20. The Dallas Cowboys have shown interest in the 5 feet 11 inch 190 pound Ralph. He expects to hear from more NFL teams later this spring.

Edmonton looks like the place for Ralph though.

"I'd really like to go to Edmonton. They've already stated that they need a receiver," he said. "I think my best bet is going to Canada then I can come down (to the NFL)."

The Whitworth duo plan to make the most of their opportunity.

"We're going in as hard-nosed as we can," Hoppus said. "This could be the only shot we get."

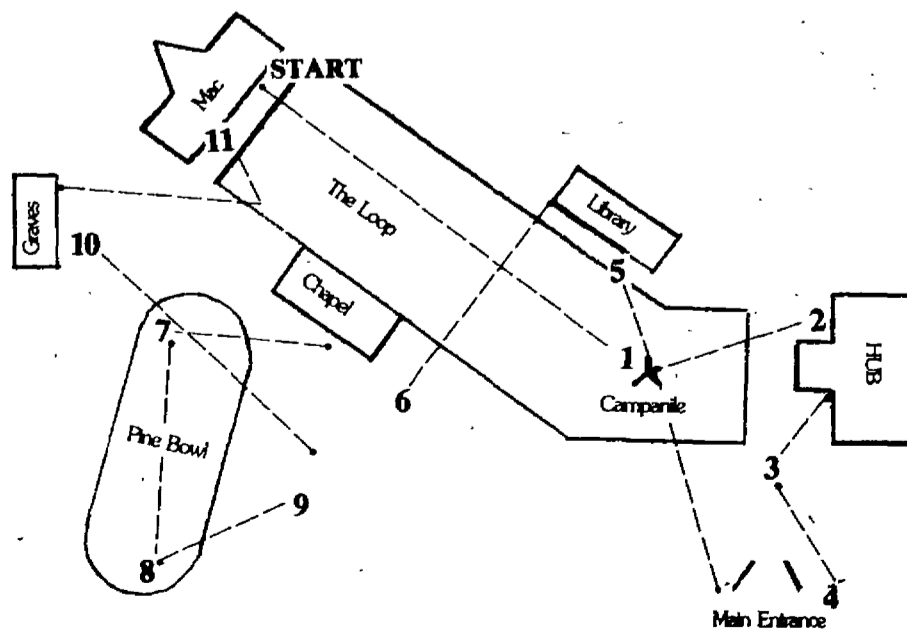

Both Hoppus and Ralph are thankful for the help Whitworth Assistant Coach Paul Merkel has given them.

"He's done a lot of work, he's done everything," Hoppus said.

Hoppus and Ralph are not the only connection Whitworth has with the Edmonton organization. Hugh Campbell, the Eskimo's general manager at one time coached the Pirate football team.

The gameroom brings in from $300-$400 a month for ASWC, according to ASWC Treasurer Linda Yochum. $500-$600 goes to "Bumpers," the vendor that brings video games to Whitworth.

ASWC uses its video game earnings to purchase new equipment for the game room and to pay the HUB managers. Director of Student Activities Glenn Smith said that students go through about 20 pool cues and wear out both table surfaces during the year.

But most students that use the gameroom aren't aware of these facts. They come between classes, during study breaks and on weekends to find a little competition, to release the day's tensions, or to try their hand at a new game.

No experience is necessary to compete, but you must have your ID card to play. If you wish to go into the gameroom to have a little fun, though, beware of the pingpong balls.

Hepatitis — from page 1

Hepatitis reported in the Spokane area is small and usually confined to cases of one or two family members, according to Cecil Hayter, food program health coordinator for the Spokane County Health District.

According to Hayter, the source of the disease was probably water or food, but the specific source will probably never be known.

Hayter and Koele are busy tracking down what are considered to be "close contacts."

A close contact, according to Hayter, would have shared food items, eating utensils, cigarettes, sexual contact or anything that would involve oral contact with a contaminated substance or object. At this point, almost everyone has been contacted by Hayter and Koele.

It is possible that this health problem could have been avoided by taking an immune globulin shot before leaving for Belize. The shot could have given immunity from the Hepatitis for a "period of time."

"Anyone traveling to a Third World country should check into these matters (immune globulin shots)," said Hayter.

The Whitworth custodial department reports that every attempt is being made to make the campus safe.

According to Larry Jones, Whitworth's lead custodian, disinfectant company chemists and the County Health Department suggest that bleach be used in addition to doubling the amount of disinfectant being used in restrooms.

According to Jones, those measures have been taken. "We got right on top of this."

The water pressure in drinking fountains on campus has been increased as a second precaution by the physical plant. The water pressure has been increased so that there will be no mouth contact with the fountains.

It is hoped that precautions taken now will continue to keep students from becoming ill, but that still leaves the problem of getting sick of school.

Sexuality Week — from page 3

Sexiness as a sales technique? Come hear Michael and Deborah DeGolyer at 8 p.m. in Baldwin/Jenkin's lounge.

Thursday will end with Dr. Robert Matthies and Rhonda Koele discussing one of the greatest problems of sexuality today; sexually transmitted diseases.

Forum on Friday will close Human Sexuality Week. The topic of: Sexuality, Love and God: The Longing To Be One, will be addressed by Don and Deanda Roberts, two Spokane counselors.

Presentations are expected to last approximately one hour. Some may be longer, but people are free to leave.

Koele thinks all the topics raised this week are very important. She said, "These are important issues that we need to address, because decisions need to be made."

When asked which topics would be most beneficial, Koele said, "All of them provide beneficial information, students need to choose what would be most beneficial for them."

Koele adds, "We have a wide range of students here, from students who haven't had a lot of exposure to these topics, to students who have thought through it all pretty well. No matter where we are though, there is room for more discussion and growth."

Minority Students — from page 1

"It's not the most effective way, but it's reaching students," said Reed.

One other way of recruiting has been to contact minority churches all over and trying to schedule a time for a representative to talk to students there.

Reed explained two problems with this type of recruitment. "One, churches don't want Whitworth to come in because they don't know about us. Two, if we do get in, no students come to listen."

"Whitworth needs to make a commitment to get the diversity of students on campus," Reed said.

One major problem with recruiting minorities is money.

The admissions department can do a lot of recruiting and reach many people — but there needs to be special financial aid for minorities in order to get them here, according to Reed.

Little Nell's Records

New Records & Tapes

Reed has a lot of ideas and plans for greater recruitment.

Reed suggests having a recruiter especially for minority students, preferably a minority.

He suggests also a minority visitation day when minority students can visit campus.

"I have a commitment to increase recruitment of minority students who would fit in at Whitworth and enjoy their experience," Reed said.

But once the minorities are here, do they fit in and feel comfortable?

There are minority clubs on campus which include the Black Student Union, Asian-American club, Hawaiian club, and one being worked on is a Hispanic club.

"These clubs are making them (students) feel as if they belong," Howell said. "It's important that they feel educated as well as that they're contributing."

Howell expressed a complaint that she often hears from minority students.

"They feel there isn't the faculty or administrative support that they should get."

Jeanee Quan doesn't feel so discriminated against here at Whitworth. "I get asked a lot of questions about my heritage. People are ignorant and I like to answer their questions so I can set things straight in their minds."

With the greater recruitment that Reed is hoping for, Whitworth may begin to see and learn more from the minorities on campus in the future.

Pregnancy Care Center which helps supply maternity and baby clothes, parenting support groups, and medical care.

"The agency is there for the woman anytime; we have a total commitment to the client," Gainer said.

Planned Parenthood, with clinics in Spokane and in the Valley, is another pregnancy counseling agency to which Whitworth Students may go.

Planned Parenthood education representative Carilyn Hangee said, "The most important thing to know about our agency is that we counsel for all options, that our counseling is non-directive, and that we play the role of advocate for the women."

By non-directive counseling, Hangee said that counselors do not seek to influence the woman in her decision.

"We present the options, and let the woman make her decision."

Hangee said that counselors ask the women how her religious beliefs, or her family might affect her and her decision.

Planned Parenthood provides one-time only counseling services, and refer women on to agencies that can help carry out the decision making process.

Those Whitworth students who chose to carry their child and to remain students have extra stresses with which to contend.

Mary Allen, a 1986 graduate, who tested positive for pregnancy at the Health Center last Spring, chose to keep her child and raise it as a single mother.

Looking back at campus attitudes she said, "People were pretty civil." At the time, however, Allen said it seemed as if everyone was talking about her and staring. "I didn't want to go to SAGA," she said.

Rhonda Noble, a sophomore last year at Whitworth, discovered she was pregnant just before school started in 1985. She and her husband, Jim, decided she would continue to attend classes and they moved into a village apartment.

"Taking classes was hard, I was tired all the time," Noble added.

"It was even harder after she was born." The Noble's baby, Rachel, was born last March. Noble took this semester off, but hopes to continue her schooling in January.

Both Allen and Noble found the faculty to be very supportive.

"Kids on campus seem to think you're not supposed to be pregnant when your going to college," Noble said. "They think you've ruined your life. I love being a mother."

New library out; renovations in

by Barb Visser
 of the Whitworthian

Last fall, a recommendation was made to the Board of Trustees that, in order to meet high priority needs, building a new library should be the major facet of the centennial campaign, according to D. Robert Mounce, president.

Library consultants who evaluated Whitworth's facility presented two alternatives; either build a new library, or renovate and add to the existing building. In October, the board decided to accept the recommendation to construct a new building for approximately $6 million.

Since then, the Centennial Campaign Committee has looked at the alternative of renovation and addition as a more feasible choice. They have discussed with the board that, in light of elements not originally brought up, the board's recommendation be amended.

The amended recommendation would include renovation of, or addition to the present library, renovating or rebuilding the HUB, and at least doubling the endowment funds.

According to Mounce, the board agrees with the idea, and two weeks ago it was announced to the faculty. A mistake was made in this discussion and decision process. According to Mounce, no one told the librarians, who are closest to the issue, but, he continued, formal apologies have been made.

Several factors led to this decision to look at the renovation/addition alternative. Since the first study of the library kept the option of renovation open, an engineering consultant was called in to see how adaptable the building was for several proposed uses. These uses included continuing its present function with an addition, serving as an administration and faculty center, as a new HUB, or as a classroom building.

According to both Mounce and Joe Black, vice-president of institutional advancement, the engineers' report showed that it was feasible to renovate and add to the existing library and still meet the basic needs.

But Dr. Hans Bynagle, director of Cowles Library, is concerned that the engineers' study offers little new information, and raises several new questions.

According to Bynagle, the first study showed the renovation/addition plan was not impossible, but would be tough and expensive.

The engineers' report raises questions about the structural adequacy of the building. Several times throughout the report, it was advised that more study be done on several structural aspects. An example is the live load limits, or how much weight can be put on the floors.

Also brought up are the questions of functional integration, or as Bynagle explains, how well the existing building will function with an addition. He continued by saying that there was little detailed support of their judgement that it could continue serving as a library.

Contrary to this, several details showed how it could be used as an administrative center.

Bynagle, along with the rest of the library committee would welcome further study.

"I care about the rest of the campus as a whole," he said. But he would not like to see a final decision based on less than an adequate decision.

Mounce pointed out one problem with constructing a new library. A round of "musical buildings" would begin. If the existing library building turns into an administrative center, the present administration building would need to be redone to provide another type of service, and the building previously used for that service would have to be redone, and so on.

Another important factor in amending the recommendation to build a new library, is how to make a successful cam-

Sexuality Week raises issues; progress made towards goals

by Sheila Farren
 of The Whitworthian

"Sexuality is probably the most powerful thing that happens inside of us. It is the best gift God has given us."

-Devon Greyerbiehl
 Counselor

The Whitworth community talked about sex, laughed about sex, and questioned sexual decision-making in an open atmosphere during last week's Human Sexuality Week.

Though time has not allowed for a complete evaluation of the week, members of the planning committee said it was successful. Resident Director Janelle Thayer attributed the success of the week to the "openness to discuss, rather than (students) being told what to think."

The committee, consisting of Chairwoman Rhonda Koele, Health Center director; Gregg Hamann, associate dean of students; Tracy Riddle, resident director, and Thayer, established four goals for the week.

1. That Whitworth be established as a safe place for honesty and openness about sexuality.

2. That we acknowledge our sexuality as being a gift from God, and as a part of our being in the image of God.

3. That we understand the ways in which our bodies, emotions, values and faith can work in forming a base for responsible decision making.

4. That we have adequate knowledge of the issues and resources related to our sexuality.

"I think we made progress toward our goals," said Hamann. "Are we that loving, caring community where we can openly discuss our concerns, our fears, our hopes of our sexuality? No, not yet, but we are getting there."

Julie Anderton, vice president of Student Life, said that students are starting to address the issue of sexuality. "It used to be that people wouldn't come to a masturbation workshop. Now we're in the stage where we'll come, but we're still not comfortable using all the words upfront."

"At least we're owning our needs, interests, and concerns," added Anderton.

Fourteenth annual 'Mac Hall in Concert' Spotlight hits campus stars in upcoming talent show

by Lynn Sievers
 of The Whitworthian

Those men from McMillan Hall are at it again, bringing a barrage of talent to Whitworth College.

The fourteenth annual "Mac Hall in Concert," will be held in Cowles Auditorium Saturday, March 14, at 8 p.m.

Singing, comedy, dancing and music are on the menu with every act you could think being represented.

The Auditions Committee, consisting of Trevor Francis,

Mark Frost, Whitney Wilson, Eric Roecks, Shawn Dewberry, and Eric Henriksen, have gone for "a well rounded show" according to Dewberry, president of McMillan Hall and primary organizer for the concert.

"It started when a bunch of guys in 'Mac' said lets do something the whole Whitworth community will enjoy. They wanted to give the talented people of Whitworth the opportunity of performing who otherwise wouldn't get the chance," said Dewberry.

The sign-ups for auditions have been in the HUB for about two weeks and the committee heard its last audition on Friday. Auditions were officially closed Saturday.

If past shows are any indication of what can go on at the concert, the audience beware.

"A couple of years ago the MCs had some goldfish in a blender," said Stephanie Halton, RA in Jenkins Hall. "It was weird."

All we can say is to expect the unexpected for this year's MCs, Steve Lewey, Whitney Wilson, Eric Henriksen and Rick Kemman.

OPINION

Editorial needed research Physical Plant working on problem

Dear Editor,

The February 17 Whitworthian contained an editorial which deserves comment. I would assume those who wish to be journalists would do a bit of research before writing about a subject. Their credibility is at risk when they don't. John Sowers went off on a crusade with a partially loaded pen-half-cocked.

He complains about the lack of campus lighting. He complains about the poor light of some of the fixtures. He complains about the lack of aesthetic continuity. He plants the illusion of the possibility that the Physical Plant allowed the situation to develop. Finally, he contends that the "Christian" thing to do would be to rectify the condition forthwith. Now let's look at the facts.

It is true that there should be more lighting. If Sowers had taken the trouble to find out, he would have found there was less light last year and even less the year before that. Obviously, we are making progress. It is also true that some fixtures don't provide as many lumens of light as others. There were many more of those poorer fixtures around in previous years. They are being replaced by the superior AlleyCat as quickly as time and money permit. Additional Alley Cats are also being installed. The Alley Cat gives considerably more illumination and they use much less current. They are, however, very expensive. Because they are so expensive, they cannot all be purchased at once. This is the cause of the mix of fixtures and it will continue for a while. A very small percentage, perhaps 1 percent, of the student body do a great deal of vandalism. Last week, for instance, five lights were put out quite deliberately — for the "fun" of it. This small population of students who delight in destruction of campus property deny us all the additional light we might enjoy were not funds being spent on repair and replacement of vandalized fixtures. Consider one Alley Cat costs in excess of $135. Also consider that a single bulb for one of those fixtures costs $38. So last week, the money spent on parts and labor to repair vandalized fixtures would have covered the cost of a couple of new ones — and left money to spare. The best and most ef-

Bone-heads dig-up campus

Dear Editor,

I'm having a hard time believing the ignorance of some of the kids that go to Whitworth College. As I walked across the "loop" the other day, I found myself tripping over the lawn. In an effort to be cool, these "bone-heads" take their hot cars and dig up the landscaping that the groundskeepers try so hard to maintain. Well guys, what can I say? "Hats off to you!" I hope that when I grow up I can be just like you. Everyone is always complaining about the amount of money we spend to go to school here (sometimes I find myself doing the same), and I'm wondering if the people that are responsible for these acts of vandalism have ever considered that they could be contributing, however slightly, to the incessant rise in our tuition cost. Kids vandalized the lawn in high school; my only hope is that in college we would be able to transcend this sort of deviant behavior--apparently Whitworth hasn't been able to do this yet.

Mirror image presented Manipulation the result

by Tim Boggess
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

We choose to be manipulated every day. We choose on Thursday evenings at 8 p.m. to turn on the television and watch a fictional program about a fictional family in a fictional house with fictional situations and fictional responses. It is our choice to do so, whether or not we acknowledge it as such. How many of us are really concerned about the choices we make with regard to what ideas and values enter our thinking? We anesthetize ourselves into passivity.

Let's face it, Tony Campolo really opened our eyes. He came here and said things that we didn't want to hear. We call that manipulation. All right, so what? Let's assume Dr. Campolo manipulated us. What do we mean by that? Did he force us into action? Did he force us to listen to him? Of course not. If by manipulation we mean the use of force to achieve specific ends, our case against Campolo doesn't hold water. But, if by manipulation we mean a conscious attempt to direct our thoughts and thus leave us feeling guilty about our chosen passivity, he is guilty of murder in the first degree.

Let us ask ourselves again, so what? Manipulation, once recognized as such, loses its sting. That is to say, when we realize that we are being manipulated, it is, by definition, manipulation no more. When a mother tells her child to clean his room, he says that she is manipulating him. She isn't, for when the child recognizes that he is a free actor able to freely choose whether or not to obey (though the choice to refuse has negative consequences), the bondage to forced action is truly destroyed. Why did Jesus command the disciples (and us) to turn the other cheek? Because it is disarming. It castrates the powerful because we choose not to be powerless. We have the choice whether or not to be manipulated.

Many people said Campolo made them feel guilty. This is a misnomer. No one can make another person feel guilty — guilt is a self-generated response to external stimuli. For when we put the blame for our feelings on some outside actor (i.e. Campolo), we void ourselves of the responsibility for such feelings. Sure, we all felt guilty about some of the things he said, but he merely recalled facts we already knew ourselves. Reality is not pretty. There are needs to be met. Most of us have the capacity to help meet some of these needs, but choose, for one reason or another, not to act. We know all this, yet resent it when someone holds up a mirror in front of us.

Of course, Campolo does not know us personally. He is not familiar with our individual spiritual lives, our personal sacrifices, and our reasons for doing the things we do (and conversely, for not doing those things which we don't do). But God knows us, and it is to him, not Campolo, that we have to answer. A dose of guilt is good for the soul once in a while, providing it is a catalyst to prayerful action in the service of Jesus Christ.

What are you going to do with your life, anyway?

'Widespread' unclear

Dear Editor,

I would like to commend Sandy Wark for her work on the pregnancy article in last week's issue of the Whitworthian. It accurately portrayed many of the issues that Whitworth women face in dealing with an unplanned pregnancy situation.

There exists, however, a great deal of concern in my mind about the opening statement of the article, a statement attributed to me. "Pregnancy is 'widespread' on campus" is the statement, and one with which I disagree, if, as is implied, it refers to the number of pregnancies that occur among our women students each year.

the problem occurs in a variety of student segments (i.e. Christian and non-Christian; freshman and seniors; on-campus and off-campus students) that the word "widespread" was used — meaning that the problem is not limited to one group of students but is dispersed throughout all of our female sectors.

From my perspective, Whitworth does NOT have a large number of pregnancies occurring each year, and I do not want the campus community to be under the impression that we do. If anyone is interested in discussing this issue with me, please feel free to call me at the Health Center.

Whit. actors headed for Denver

by Bob Coleman
of the Whitworthian

The Whitworth Players, a chamber repertory theatre company, will tour the greater Denver area from March 28 through April 5.

The tour will include 11 performances of "The Singer," by Calvin Miller, in churches and several how-to workshops demonstrating some of the nuts and bolts of chamber theatre in high schools.

"The Singer," an allegoric retelling of the Gospel story, has been adapted for chancel drama by Director Pat Stien. A chancel drama is done without the use of props or a set. This is especially important when playing in churches that differ in size.

"You have to be adaptable to any circumstance you find," Stien said.

For the high schools, along with the how-to workshops the group will include additional repertoire. This part includes largely ironic, satirical and often humorous literature. It is titled "Pumping Irony."

A main reason for performing in the high schools is recruitment.

"Part of our task in going is a recruitment task," Stien said. "We are looking for a few good students."

The company is made up of eight members. They are Brian Senter and Todd St. Marie seniors, D'Arcy Dent and Jeanee Quan, juniors, Jim Bennett, Kelly Donahue and Jim Owens, sophomores, and Ann Shriver, a freshman. When they return from touring they will be putting on a performance of "The Singer," April 12, at 7:30 p.m. in Whitworth Presbyterian Church.

Urban service exp. set for Spring Break

by Steven Brown
of the Whitworthian

The Chapel announced Friday, March 6, that a new outreach program is scheduled to begin during Spring vacation, March 28 through April 3.

The "Urban Service Experience," is intended to give an opportunity to students to "take responsibility for the care of the poor," said Chaplain Assistant, Carol Cook.

The experience is also intended to make students aware of on-going services to the poor, give exposure to the poor, and to make a permanent impact on students' lives.

This is a pilot program that is modeled after Diakonia, the Chapel's summer service opportunity.

It is expected that this program will continue on into the future, providing an opportunity for service that is shorter and more economically attainable than a three month commitment like that of Diakonia.

Few students have signed-up for the Seattle-bound Urban Service Experience.

According to Cook, spaces are available to serve in many diverse settings including food programs, shelter programs, health care, and clothes banks. Students are free to choose which area they would like to serve in.

wouldn't need to prioritize," commented Black. "All our needs could be met."

Questions concerning the amount of money set aside for endowment and what is specifically being done for students in this campaign have been raised since the fall meeting, said Black. Also, the committee is looking at what projects would appeal to donors.

Part of the campaign committee's job, he explained, includes appealing to a broad base of prospective donors.

Mounce agreed that reaching a larger constituency, with more areas open to donations will result in more money coming in.

Black explained that if the same amount of money is raised, and as long as the basic needs can be met by renovating the library, the remaining funds can be allocated to other needs, such as the HUB and the endowment funds.

Sooner or later, the decision of whether a new library will be built or the old one renovated will have to be finalized. Until then, the debate will go on and no real action will take place. More study is needed to see what exactly can be done with the building, so that energies can be concentrated on getting things done, according to Black.

"Nobody's going to get everything they want," he said. But they each have the right to lobby for what they want, he continued. Everything needs to be balanced, stressed Black.

said, "I think it's important to bring the subject out in the open. It would be naive of Whitworth not to address the question."

Anderton expressed satisfaction in the selection of topics, which included homosexuality, sexual decision making, unplanned pregnancy, and sexual violence.

"They addressed a lot of people's needs," said Janae Fox, a junior. "I like the idea that they brought up controversial issues."

Many students said they were challenged to think about happened," added Hamann.

Many people have questioned where this will go now. "I'd like to see at least a couple of Forums a year that address the topic," said Koele.

Hamann said he would like to see the discussion continue, among students as well as in the institution. "I also think the issue of how we (the institution) address students' sexuality in terms of policy isn't dead yet."

Hamann added that a task force has been formed to address the consistency of the school's policies to that of a healthy atmosphere for awareness of sexuality.

Library - from p. 1

According to Black, all the mechanics of the campaign are the responsibility of the campaign committee, made up of Trustees. The institution itself needs to specify its needs and prioritize them for two reasons.

The first is because some needs are more immediate than others. The second is money. "If we had all the money in the world we

"It was really good to see Whitworth present all the options of sexuality, instead of telling individuals right and wrong," said Sophomore Liz Hebgen.

Carey Bostic, a sophomore, said the discussions made him think about new things, and re-think through other things.

Hamann said, "Our hope was that we would get people talking about sexuality, and what ways they think are healthy and productive."

"What this week has felt like," said Anderton, "is that it has taken some issues that are current, and facilitated some good interaction. And, hopefully, given some value based perspectives."

"I'm real pleased that students are taking, what I think are very quality presentations, and taking the opportunity to be involved," said Anderton.

As one student expressed her thoughts to Thayer, "This is one of those times that Whitworth really impressed me."

Food, trips donated to auction

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

It's been said that good things come in threes and this year's third Annual Awesome Auction is expected to keep a good thing going.

Friday, March 13, at 7 p.m. in the HUB, the Chapel is sponsoring the auction. This is one of many fundraisers the Chapel uses to raise funds for Diakonia, its summer outreach program.

"It was such a success the first year. We raised about $1,200 in 1985 and $1,717 last year. We are very impressed with the results," said Quinn Fox, associate chaplain.

Fox attributes the success of the auction to the campus-wide support.

"Everybody gets involved in it. Not only in donating things but just in coming out during the auction and supporting it," said Fox. "The Whitworth community has been behind us all the way."

The invitation to the auction has always been extended to the friends, trustees, parents, and supporters of Whitworth, but this year the Spokane community was given the opportunity to participate.

Local merchants like Swackhammers, The Onion Bar and Grill, and Pioneer Pies have donated dinners-for-two to the auction. A local bike shop may donate two bikes and Nordstrom is donating gourmet coffee for all gourmet-coffee lovers. Homemade baked goods will also be in abundance.

Students are encouraged to donate their time for yard work, baby-sitting or what ever service they can offer.

In off-campus support the Whitworth faculty, staff and trustees have done their part in donating some of the most unique items.

Dr. and Mrs. Guder are offering a real, honest-to-goodness, down-home German bratwurst dinner at their home.

Dr. Kathy Storm, associate professor of Psychology and husband Kyle Storm, Student Life counselor, are donating a dinner-for-four called "Some Neurotic Evening." This evening will consist of fine dining and a stimulating discussion of the book Denial of Death and to top the evening off, a trip to a Woody Allen film festival.

This last dinner stems from Fox's suggestion that the faculty donate something related to their field of specialty.

One very generous trustee has donated a weekend in a condominium in Hawaii.

Also being donated are two season tickets to the Spokane Symphony.

"This is the year for big, expensive items," said Fox. "But there will be something for everyone."

Auctioneers this year are Fox, Dr. Gordon Jackson, chair of Communications Studies, and Dr. Ross Cutter, professor of Physical Education.

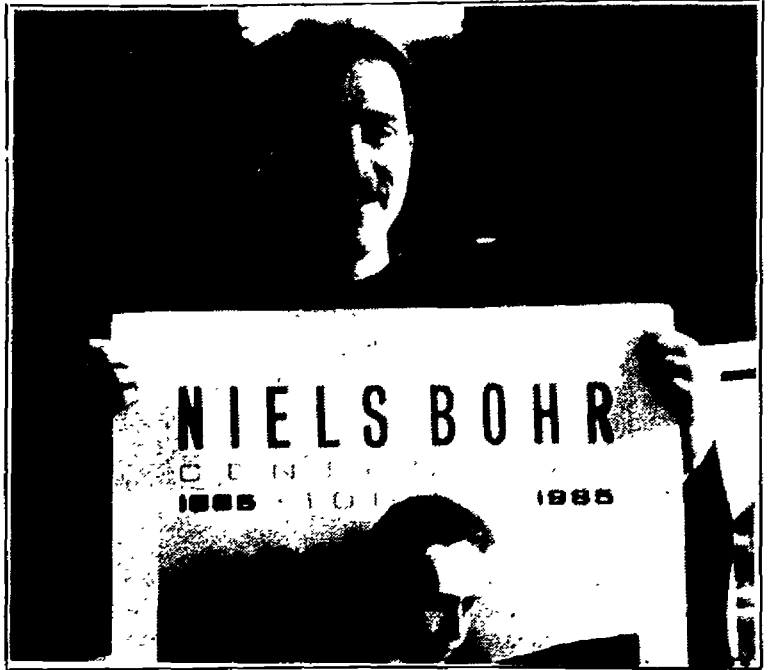

There will be cameo appearances by other faculty members.

In past years some fairly exotic things have been donated. Some have donated "dates" and bidders bought them with intentions of giving them to their close, unsuspecting friends.

The word "exotic" can also apply to some of the things that have happened during the auction.

One year Jackson bid in Swedish for a Swedish massage. Another year two friends were in a bidding war against each other to buy a kitten without the knowledge each wanted to buy it for the other.

This is plainly an event where everybody wins.

Shawn Gannon, a student involved in organizing the auction, holds a donated poster.

"When we thought up the auction, we were thinking not only of an activity to raise funds but also we thought the auction would be a fun way to encourage and support the Diakonia program," said Fox. "We get the funds needed to run the Diakonia program and the Whitworth community gets the chance to come together in good spirited fun."

Diakonia (a Greek word meaning service or ministry) is a long-standing Whitworth Christian service organization that sends selected applicants all over the country and the world for practical service ministries.

This program can be an opportunity for the applicants to earn a full credit in religion or to fulfill the cross-cultural requirement.

The selected applicants help raise the money needed to fund their trips abroad.

Tree overpopulation: a growing problem

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

Look out at the pine trees the next time you are walking from SAGA to the HUB. Notice how many there are, how beautiful they are, how unique they are to the Whitworth campus.

Now, look closer at the mature trees. Look at the large, ugly, life-constricting knots of disease on the branches.

Paula Pulver

Knots squeezing life from trees

Notice the condition of the light-starved grass of the tree-filled HUB area, and compare it to the condition of the lush grass of the more lightly-treed Loop area in front of Dixon Hall.

Study the parking areas around campus. Give special attention to the Warrens and the Village. Trees are growing through the pavement and hard-packed dirt, and are assaulted with bark and root injuries every day.

Now, think about what you have seen, and try to understand what needs to be done to relieve what some people think is a growing problem on the Whitworth College campus: tree overpopulation.

"The trees in the 'Back 40' are infested with mistletoe, and the trees next to the library are infested with gail," Grounds Supervisor Janet Wright said.

She has cut examples of the resulting damage and has displayed them on a shelf in the grounds office.

The examples show ugly knots, four to five times the size of the branches they grow on, that ultimately choke the trees to death by cutting off the flow of nutrients through their branches.

Don Holden, the Physical Plant director, said, "One of the best things we can do is thin them. Any disease that gets started is just going to spread. It will be uncontrollable."

He cited the Ball and Chain as an example. "In the Ball and Chain, we had to take down about 32 trees. If those trees had been thinned when they were 10-12 feet tall, the disease wouldn't have spread the way it did. That is an area that is going to be a parking area," he said.

Mature trees should be spaced a minimum of 20-30 feet from trunk to trunk, Wright said. Holden spaced them even wider, 35-40 feet apart. "There should be a separation between the boughs," he said.

"You want to save the prime trees," Wright said. She has done that in the past. There are times, however, when a tree has to be removed for safety. Either she or Holden hears complaints every time one of these trees is taken down.

"The forest service could come in and take out our weak and diseased trees, leaving our specimen trees, only for the wood (their payment), no other charge," said Wright. "You can't beat a deal like that. If we don't do something now, we will have a bare Whitworth."

Does the Physical Plant plan to thin them, then? "No," said Holden. "I don't want to fight the community."

Wright planted a blue spruce tree in the middle of the Loop area in front of Dixon Hall earlier this year. People from all over campus complained that the tree was "taking up too much open space," and should be removed.

This uproar took Wright, who graduated from WSU in 1980 with a degree in landscaping and an associate degree in horticulture, by complete surprise.

In her four years here, she said she has received complaints nearly every time her department takes down a tree.

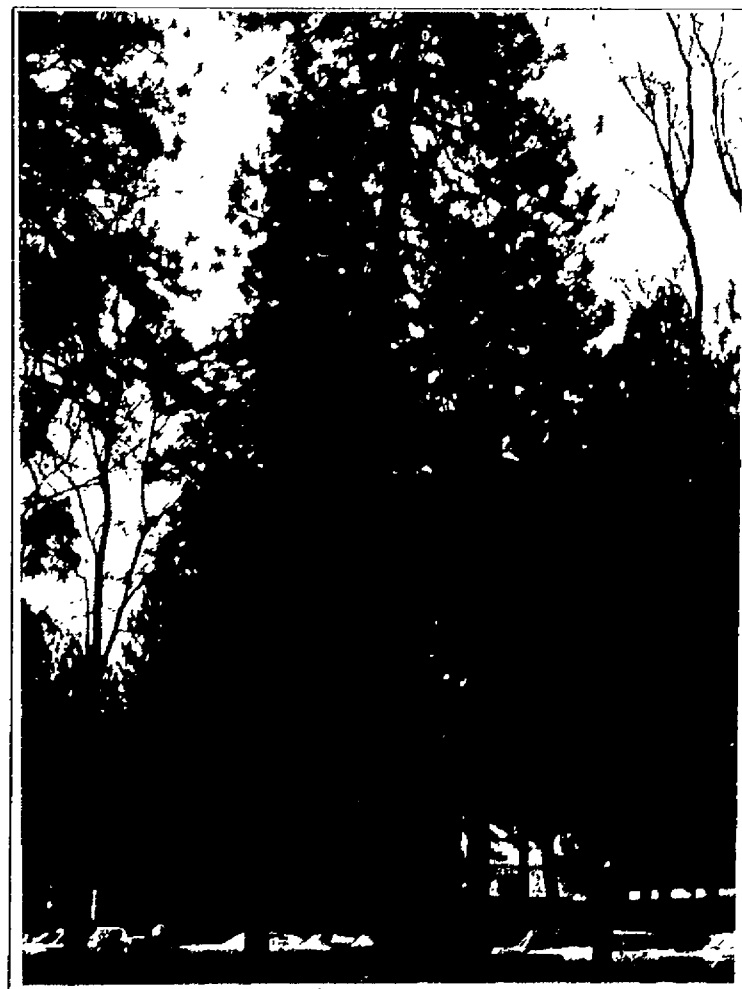

"There are a lot of dangerous trees we try to get," Wright said, "but unfortunately people complain about it." Lately, she has been hearing the opposite reaction.

Students and faculty have told her that they, too, believe that there are too many trees on-campus, and that there is not enough variety in the trees seen around here.

Sophomore Rob Schliebe said, "It would be great to have more open space on-campus. This campus has enough trees so that you could make a good campus design with them."

Perhaps the time is right for Holden and Wright to make a move. Perhaps the mood of the community has changed to where it wants more open space and variety in its trees. Perhaps, but Holden and Wright are not yet convinced that the thinning would be approved by the faculty, students and administration.

They wait to hear more people come out in support of thinning of the trees. While they wait, the trees continue toward a weakening future.

Reel Views ★★☆☆

Hoosiers scores

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

The scene is Hickory High, a small-town school in 1951 Indiana. The new basketball coach, Norman Dale (Gene Hackman), has just arrived, shaded past in tow. He's greeted by the school's principal (Sheb Wooley) with the line, "Ya got a clean slate here - job to do."

Ideally, that's how audiences would go into this movie, "Hoosiers." It has a job to do which it accomplishes admirably. Unfortunately, the formula is one that may have been seen a few too many times in recent years.

Think of "Rocky" (I-IV), "Karate Kid" (I and II), "Vision Quest" and the many other films that reared their profit-hungry heads in recent years and one might be wary of yet another "blue-collar-nobody-does-something-better-than-anybody-else-to-become-somebody-outstanding" movie.

But, this one is different. Director Richard Anspaugh has taken a decent story and translated it into people and pictures. This film makes it; a result of good character actors and some great cinematography.

For those of you who remember Hackman only as Lex Luthor in "Superman," you will be pleasantly surprised. He is convincing as an ex-New York college coach who escaped trouble by joining the Navy. How he grows and pushes his way into this Indiana town, that "...doesn't like change much," is wonderful to witness.

Hackman's clean non-compromising performance is further enhanced by the work of Barbara "Hannah and Her Sisters" Hershey as the antagonist turned love-interest, and comeback star of 1986, Dennis "Easy Rider" Hopper as 'Shooter,' the town drunk.

Hopper has earned himself a Best Supporting Actor nomination for his work in this film. Appointed assistant coach by Dale as his mission project of sorts, 'Shooter' earns our love and respect in the course of the film.

From the fear and despair of alcoholism to the pride of fatherhood and new-found self-esteem, Hopper plays all his roles well in this character.

His other films of 1986, which included "Texas Chainsaw Massacre II" and critically acclaimed "Blue Velvet," have re-established Hopper as a hot item in Hollywood.

The greatest acting in the world, however, could not accurately convey the spirit of the Hoosier state without the beautiful backdrops employed by Anspaugh. From wide-angle shots of the team bus and fans caravanning across rural Indiana to the 1940s vehicles of Hickory itself, we can really feel this place.

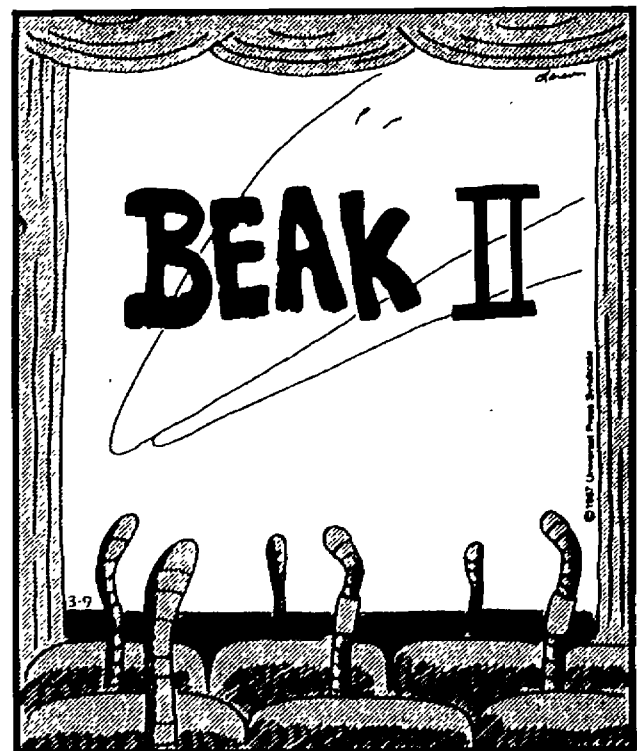

Lastly, and perhaps most important to the success of this film, are the members of the basketball team. Each of these guys looks and acts like a teen-age farm boy, which is what this movie is all about. "My boys know basketball, farming, and school, in that order," said Dale.

Teen-age farm boys have the same potential as a Philadelphia hood, a New Jersey kid transplanted in southern California, or a Spokane amateur wrestler, which is the same potential we all have.

I will never get tired of finding out how much people can achieve, as long as I can have a good time for the duration. If you like basketball you will go to see "Hoosiers;" if you don't like basketball, tough, you should go anyway.

Executive President D. Paul LaMontagne

J.B. Meade is far more qualified and can almost certainly do a better job of being ASWC president than I can.

Why then am I running?

As a part of the centennial fund raising campaign it had originally been planned to build a new library. Recently they have decided instead to renovate the present library, add a new wing, and use the money saved as part of the funding for a new HUB. If I am elected I will say to the trustees at their spring meeting, "My election means that the students of Whitworth College say: Thank you kindly for the offer of a new HUB. But we think that it is far more important to build the new library and to expand the collection of materials because this library is barely adequate for a college this size, and inadequate for a college that wants to be as good as this college wants to be."

J.B. Meade spoke up for the new library as soon as he heard what they had decided. But I am afraid that they will find it possible to ignore him. I am attempting to create a statement that cannot be ignored.

J.B. Meade

ASWC rests on the threshold of exploring its enormous potential. As the "voice" of students, ASWC is currently positioned to look beyond merely providing "low cost entertainment activities." This does not imply that entertainment programs are not a priority, but that another dimension exists outside the traditional focus of ASWC. The Associated Students must become an active, informed and motivating influence in the governance of Whitworth College.

If the HUB resembles a decrepit version of a 1970 student union, it is within the power of ASWC to make a change. If students are discontented over the food service, it is the responsibility of ASWC to mediate a more agreeable arrangement.

I believe that my experience as ASWC President has enabled me to formulate a strong vision for the Associated Students. Working with the issues confronting ASWC has led me to the conclusion that the Associated Students can and should make a positive contribution to Whitworth College. I am seeking a second term in office because I believe in ASWC's potential to guarantee a Whitworth College that we can enjoy now and revere as alumni.

Executive election campaigns begin

The 1987 ASWC election schedule officially began Monday, March 9, with the first of eight debates between executive office candidates.

McMillan and Ballard were host to the first debate Monday, March 9, at 10 p.m.

A schedule on page seven gives a full outline of the places and times for subsequent debates.

Primary elections take place Friday, March 13. Students may cast their ballots in SAGA or in the HUB, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Results will be printed in the Monday, March 16, issue of the Whitworthian.

For those students who are unable to attend a debate in person, KWRS will broadcast a radio debate Wednesday, March 18, at 8 p.m.

The Elections Forum ends the campaign with speeches from each of the executive candidates Friday, March 20, 11:15 a.m. General elections are also held on this day, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. in SAGA or the HUB.

New executives for 1987-88 will be announced in the Monday, March 23, issue of the Whitworthian.

Executive Financial Vice President Dan Hulsizer

I find it is clear there are certain qualifications to fill a need in the ASWC office of Financial Vice President. I know through my past experiences I have the distinct and unique capabilities to carry out the tasks and goals I have set forth if elected. For a person to believe in a candidate running for office you must realize their true sincerity and what they have to offer the students as a whole at Whitworth College.

My past ASWC interactions in committees and fund raising efforts have enabled me to realize the needs of Whitworth students. The students need to know where their money is used. Next, the students need to let ASWC know if that is what they want done with their money and if not then where the funds should be used. I know that given the chance I can right the wrongs of the past and make the situation of the students wondering what their money is doing non-existent. If elected I will be working for the students of Whitworth and I feel you should keep that in mind so you will elect the most qualified and dedicated candidate.

Paul Ramsey

If the FVP position is not expanded, we might as well get rid of it — it is a waste of ASWC's money. As the position stands now, it is primarily a book-keeping position — we already have a bookkeeper and she does a great job. Why, then, do we need a FVP?

We need a FVP with skills, capabilities and resources to push the right buttons and spring open the cash drawer. What for? An ASWC retreat to Tahiti — NO! We need an FVP committed to personal involvement with resource development for ASWC organizations. In English, that means finding a sponsor for the women's soccer club, creating effective sales portfolios for The Whitworthian and KWRS, and in general being a resource for club officers in handling their club's finances.

So what makes me uniquely qualified to transform the FVP position to match my vision? I have had a lot of experience in ASWC, connections in the Spokane business community, and experience in developing fund raising programs. But, more important than any of these, I am psyched to make ASWC the quality organization it can be!!!

Matt Rise

With the office of Financial Vice President comes a lot of responsibility. To fill this position effectively, a candidate must be adept at organizational skills. He must be a motivator and leader with charisma. He must have creative and workable ideas for the financial future of his institution. He must be a communicatively skilled representative of the college.

My past experiences have been excellent training for this position. I have held a variety of executive offices (including Stewart Hall FVP and National Honor Society President), and have kept accurate books for a private business. I have extensively developed my communication skills through classwork and public speaking competitions. And I have fine-tuned my motivational techniques through holding tutorial and teaching assistant positions.

My unique contribution to ASWC will stem from the wealth of creative and highly workable ideas that I have to offer the organization. I have a firm platform emphasizing the student's voice in financial decision-making policies. And I want to sacrifice of myself — to devote my time and energy to making 1987-88 a landmark year in terms of the advent of student representation in the financial proceedings of Whitworth College.

Executive Vice President

Toni Fenner

The greatest strengths of Whitworth College are its diversity and potential for growth. If elected as Executive Vice President I will help the community achieve its goals and increase its opportunities. My goal is to expand and promote involvement in all ASWC clubs and enlarge the number of clubs available to students. I want to enhance the accountability and credibility of the clubs, therefore strengthening ASWC. In addition I would like to create a stronger relationship between dorm officers and ASWC. Overall a greater community unification is what I hope to achieve.

"Only the dreamer can change the dream." ..... John Logan

I will give the position of Executive Vice President a new creativity, a stronger initiative and a receptive attitude towards new ideas. I spent six months in Hong Kong as an exchange student and am very open to diverse interests. For the last year I have worked as a Customer Relations Assistant for Aetna Insurance Co. I have developed necessary skills for relating to the public and working on my own initiative. These skills are a necessity in the position of Executive Vice President. The most important factor I feel I can offer the Whitworth community and ASWC is myself.

Timothy Miller

I have learned that there are three fundamental elements of success: commitment, determination, and focus. As I coordinate my jobs, academic pursuits, and personal life, I commit myself to certain long range goals and purposes which underlie my college education. To maintain perspective on these long term goals, I develop short term, intermediate goals, and I remain determined in the pursuit of them. Finally, I focus my energies on immediate tasks, remembering that they will accomplish short term goals, leading to the realization of my ultimate goals.

In applying this formula to the office of Executive Vice President, I will commit myself to the growth of Whitworth, and to the ASWC as the means by which the students contribute to the growth process. I will be determined to work closely with the representatives to insure that the concerns of the students are being addressed. And, I will focus my energies on each immediate issue. In so doing, I intend to include the student body in the decision processes surrounding the vital issues of today. And, I will involve the ASWC in the building of a better Whitworth, thus enhancing the image of our school, and increasing the value of our degrees over time. The result: the student of today will have a stronger voice now, and a stronger voice in the future.

Mark Eidson

How many times when you were younger did you wish for the day when you would be out on your own? College should be the time when you are on your own, but here we are restricted at almost every turn.

By sitting on ASWC Rules and Projects and observing ASWC both as a student and HUB Manager, I realize that there must be changes if we are to achieve our full potential as students. The office requires a vision, creative ideas and communication skills, all of which I possess. I am dedicated to making our college experience the best it can be.

Having public access to teacher evaluations, creating a student grievance council to take actions on complaints against faculty and staff, and implementing a student leadership class are one part of my vision. After all, Whitworth exists for us and we should have a bigger voice, and that's what I'm committed to.

What it comes down to is this — the better we make Whitworth, the more our degrees will be worth when we graduate. Our struggle for rights is in a valley, but the horizon can be seen, we must now reach beyond the horizon and into the future.

Eric Roecks

Who? What? Where? When? Why? How? Regretfully, these questions often crop up when an ASWC event takes place. However, this lack of communication need not be existent in our student government and can be effectively eliminated. To do so, I hold a committed vision to improving ASWC communication for the Whitworth Student Body. Because of this dedication, I am a candidate for ASWC Executive Vice President.

As a candidate, I see three renovation communication channels that should be implemented into ASWC. These involve a "special assistance program" for ensured success of dorm and club activities, a detailed network for YOUR student concerns, and revitalized, as well as creative, new uses of ASWC promotional resources. Dedication to these improvements is found in my ASWC experience, including the complete coordination of Homecoming '86, participation in Springfest '87, and activity in both the ASWC House of Representatives and the Senate.

By combining these qualifications together with my three communication channels, you should know the who, what, where, when, and why of ASWC activities. But to know the answer to the how of ASWC activities, your decision, coupled with my devotion to quality communication, must work together for effective progress in the office of ASWC Executive Vice President.

Hard work establishes the core of SAGA production

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

"You can open up, Vonda!" came a voice from the kitchen at SAGA. You take out your meal card and crowd through the door with the rest of the tired, hungry students. It's lunch time.

You pick up your tray and dinnerware, go through the serving line, and sit down at one of the tables to eat. You casually complain to your friends about the type and taste of food you have to eat, the hot bowl, the wet tray, and about the line you had to stand in. But, there is a lot about SAGA you don't understand, a lot about SAGA you never see.

It's time to step back into the SAGA production room, and find out why that tray is wet and why that baked fish keeps reappearing every four weeks.

The first person you meet is Jim O'Brien, the food service director.

"We don't make the menus," O'Brien said. O'Brien explained that they come from SAGA's headquarters, and, although they can change it a little according to what the students like and don't like, SAGA has to follow the basic menu. It is based on a four week schedule which helps SAGA "predict the best we can what people are going to eat," he said.

The menu changes from semester to semester. Alice Cremeans, the unit supervisor, said that last year's students would not touch oriental food.

"But they surprised us," she said. "This year they really liked it." She noted that each year the students seem to have different tastes, and it takes awhile for SAGA to adjust.

"Things run pretty smooth most of the time," said O'Brien, "unless the students surprise us, like last week with the taco salad. Usually they don't take it, but last week they did. I know people get frustrated when they find we're out of turkey cutlets, but that is because we're trying to cook to order to keep everything fresh."

"Our toughest difficulty is that we're working with a kitchen that is very old," said O'Brien. "We have different things that happen most people aren't aware of."

Keith Webster, a cook for SAGA for two years, had more to say about the outdated SAGA establishment.

"The equipment needs to be updated badly," he said. "Sometimes it can be a headache to work with. The ovens are getting to the point where they can't keep up with the demand."

One big problem O'Brien sees is the lack of space for students to sit down and eat.

"We'd like to see a no-line situation, but the line provides for rotation at the tables," O'Brien said. The building can no longer handle the number of students it serves. O'Brien believes that Whitworth will renovate it in the near future.

The dishroom is hidden from the students' view, but it is noisy enough to be heard. Trays are pushed in, loaded with plates, silverware and glasses. The dishes are rinsed, put into racks, and put through the automatic dishwasher.

Freshman Jeanene Allan is rinsing the dishes. Two other students stack the clean dishes and one person empties the incoming trays.

"Sometimes it gets frustrating because it gets hot and everybody's shoving their dishes through," Allan said. She said that the students can help the dishwashers by scraping their plates and tossing their silverware into the tray.

People complain about the dishes not being clean," Allan said, "but we scrape them and put them through the dishwasher, and check them while we're stacking them."

Allan explained the reasons behind the wet tray and hot bowl phenomena. "People are using them, and there's nothing we can do until the dishes go through the washer," she said. She explained that when the dishes are returned for washing, they are washed and taken back out to the counters as quickly as possible to meet the continuing demand.

O'Brien tells you that he sees his employees as "a group of people giving 110 percent. Our problem is that people think we're just throwing it out there."

The employees of SAGA believe that constructive criticism from the students is important to them. They read each comment, and try to improve themselves where they can. O'Brien encourages students to come in and talk to him or to Food Service Manager Gene Weekley about what they like and do not like about SAGA.

When you are tempted to complain about SAGA, stop and remember Vonda Miller's reaction to one student who complained to her.

"Was your mother ever able to cook something that pleased everyone in the family?" she had asked him. The student's answer had been "No." "Well then," she had responded, "consider that we are trying to feed 700 people at once." You begin to realize that not every person is going to be pleased with the menu. It's a fact we have to live with.

O'Brien asked for students to watch what happens behind the serving line, and appreciate SAGA's efforts more.

"Our door is always open," O'Brien said. "We're here from 6 a.m. until 7 p.m. We can do better the more input we get."

Student Life careers advising team educating students for life decisions

by Philippe Coulon
of The Whitworthian

Do you feel ready for the transition from Whitworth's seclusion to the real world?

"I do not want to think too much about it," said a senior, staring at the sky. "It is like jumping out of a plane."

Providing Whitworth gives the student a parachute (educational background), the Student Life career advising team will help him to manage a smooth landing (let him know about his potential and possibilities).

The advising team, through programs including interviews, job search seminars, and informational presentations, strives to prepare students for life after graduation.

"One thing I think is that students do not know that we are here," said Director of Career/Life Advising Gail Berg.

"I help the student to know what kinds of jobs they need to look at, kind of open their mind," Berg said. "We help to see what kind of skills they want to use so that they do not end up in a job they do not like."

Berg explained that help with job preparation is one task of the advising team. It makes the student familiar with the process of how to look for a job, how to find the employers that have jobs, and how to initiate contact with them.

The team also addresses more technical aspects of employment procedures.

"We are helping students to write a resume," Berg said, commenting that every senior needs to turn one in soon.

Simulations also play a significant part in the career advising agenda.

"We have mock interviews with videotape and camera going on so the actor would come to that interview by asking questions," said Berg. "After that they would play a feedback and say what they liked in that interview."

Some students believe that a real gap exists between what they learn in the classrooms and what they can expect in the real world outside. But, Berg disaffirms this view.

"That belief is real common and especially right now because it is close to graduation," she asserted. "But there are a lot of skills that you learn in the classroom that apply directly to the job market."

The career advising team also keeps frequent connections with the business circle around Spokane. Diane Thomas, a career counselor, visits four to five businesses every week.

"It is good to look and see what kind of careers it should be about," said Berg.

The advising service has also provided an annual follow-up survey to find out where people have gone. Berg told of one student that had success with the service.

"Douglas McFalls, a 1986 graduate, really wanted to work at Club Med, so we helped him to find those addresses and have him write to those people," explained Berg. "We put together a resume and now Douglas works at Club Med."

"We have a lot of opportunities for students, a lot of seminars to come and listen," said Berg referring to her spring calendar. "They (the students) may already have a good idea of what they want to do," she added, "but I am sure they can get some extra information."

Custodian draws on artistic gift

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Do you know who's taking care of you while you sleep?

While many students relax and dream, Doyle Lay, one of Whitworth's nighttime custodians, spends his nights maintaining and cleaning the Whitworth campus.

Lay said that he enjoys the graveyard shift because it's quiet and it gives him a chance to think and even create jokes.

Nicknamed Bill Cosby Jr. by some of his co-workers, 28-year-old Lay possesses a sense of humor which gradually emerges during a conversation. His nickname baffles him because, "I don't think I look like Cosby at all, and I don't like Jell-O. But, I certainly would like to have his money!"

Another event revealed Lay's sense of humor as well as his gift for art. He took a Damn Yankees poster and drew a duplicate poster, replacing the three baseball players pictured with three of the security guards he meets during the night.

According to Lay, "I wasn't really sure how they would respond to the picture, but my boss liked it, and, to my surprise, he even put it up in his office."

Lay has studied art before.

A Spokane native, Lay spent two years at Spokane Falls Community College, and studied in visual media courses. Although he enjoys drawing, Lay admits that he desires spontaneity in his art, and disliked being told what to draw.

Art has always been a hobby in the Lay family. "I have six brothers and sisters, and everyone loved to draw. I had many unusual pets while I was growing up, including a dog, a turtle, several birds, and even a boa constrictor, so I spent a lot of time drawing unique pictures of my pets," said Lay.

Lay has been at Whitworth for two years. His past work experience includes bartending and postal service.

"I've just always worked," said Lay. "I really enjoy my job at Whitworth. It's quiet, and I have a great boss who's very understanding and helpful. I work five nights a week from 11 p.m. to 7:30 a.m., which definitely took some getting used to. For the first year I think I worked in my sleep!"

Lay is currently taking some courses at Whitworth, but after Jan Term he decided to stick with night classes only.

"I worked all night and then I had a finance class every day from nine till noon, which was a very difficult schedule. I think I lived on coffee that month," said Lay.

He has taken a few art courses, and plans to take more in the future. "Class is a commitment to drawing, and I'm quite competitive about drawing, which is my driving force. If I see someone who is really good, I will usually try and compete to see if I can do better," commented Lay.

When asked why he decided to return to school after four years away, Lay said, "Tuition is free for employees of Whitworth so I viewed it as an added bonus of working. I really wish I'd taken growing up more seriously when I was younger, but I'm doing something now."

Lay is interested in law enforcement because he likes to work with people and also the challenge of new adventures. But, he is hesitant to talk about his future plans because, "I don't like to talk about things before they are done," said Lay. "But I really do want to do something with my life, which may mean taking some risks. I don't ever want to question what might have been, and all that I could have done."

"I really need to keep busy. If I sleep an entire day, it's gone and I can't ever get it back. Life shouldn't be full of regrets when there is so much to be done."

Mother of two ace for women's tennis

by Peter Christensen
of the Whitworthian

Sally Reed is the No. 1 player on the Whitworth women's tennis team. She is also a wife, mother of two, student, and part-time coach at Gonzaga Prep. She carries her energy and enthusiasm into everything she does.

Reed is a first year student at Whitworth, and has come back to school to finish her degree in Physical Education, and to compete in her favorite sport, tennis.

She was born and raised in Palouse, Wash., a small town in the southeastern portion of the state. Due to this isolation, she wasn't introduced to tennis until her late 20's. "I grew up on a wheat farm, and we didn't have tennis courts, so I didn't learn how to play tennis until I was 26 or 28."

She went on to attend the University of Idaho for two years, where she met her husband. They had two children and moved to southern Idaho; she then attended Idaho State for one year.

Since then, one of Reed's wishes has been to someday return to school and earn her degree. A Presidential Scholarship, which was based upon academics and athletics, enabled her to do so. She also returned for the thrill of competing at tennis. "Coming back to school is a dream come true, and playing tennis is the icing on the cake."

She currently has two years

Sally Reed practices her forehand for Saturday's match.

of eligibility in tennis, and plans to play them out. "I'm enjoying this so much that if there is anyway I could (continue playing), I'd like to."

Reed attributes much of her success to her husband, "He's my No. 1 supporter — he's really been encouraging, and he even helps me with my homework."

Reed's children currently live in Spokane. Wendi, the oldest, is a freshman at Whitworth. Anne is a junior at Gonzaga Prep High School. Incidentally, Reed has coached the varsity girl's tennis team at Gonzaga Prep, for the last 4 years.

One of the highlights of Reed's tennis career came in 1984, when she, Jo Wagstaff, the Whitworth women's tennis coach, and several other players on a Spokane team traveled to Florida to compete in the Michelob National Tennis Tournament. They beat a southern California team in the finals, and captured the National championship. "It was one of the funnest times of my life, it was neat because it was a real team effort."

Set Point Proper training absent due to poor facilities

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

What's the problem with Whitworth athletics? The players? No. The coaches? No. The facilities? Maybe. Whitworth is lacking many facilities that our athletes need.

The first thing that springs to the minds of many is our fine weight room. But we have new Nautilus equipment you say. What good is a Nautilus set if you don't have any free weights to supplement your workout? This is painfully evident for the football players. With only one bench in the entire school it is not only hard to use it when you want to, it's pretty near impossible. The dumbbells that we have on hand are also sub-par. Many of them are broken and someone is likely to fracture something while using them. It could be a good way to pay your tuition though, if you use them right. Maybe someone could work out a free weight exercise with the volleyball pole that came through the roof of the weight room.

Now that we've examined our fine weight room, let's go check out the locker rooms. There are roughly 75 lockers in the football locker room and only six showers. That seems about right for 80-90 football players. Let's get real, I've seen high school locker rooms that are 10 times better than ours.

Our track is also in need of some serious upgrading. I'm not sure if the school is keeping it around to turn it into a rock quarry in case they fall on bad times or they just don't care. Either way, something needs to be done. Our athletes should be able to train here, not travel to a junior high or high school.

We just got a new aquatic center, supposedly one of the best, after all the NAIA Nationals were held here last year. Even though it is new and it looks good, it's not what it should be. Money was allocated for a full-blown aquatic center, including larger deck space and longer pool. Whitworth failed to take advantage of the money that was given to them, instead of getting a top-notch aquatic center like we should have, we have our present one. Our pool is a fine center for recreation, but for competition it just doesn't cut it.

In addition to the obvious flaws in our facilities there are many, many more. Just take a look around next time you're in Graves Gym or the Fieldhouse.

How can any athlete be expected to take pride in the facilities when they're so run down?

Instead of pumping money into new facilities that we really don't need such as racquetball courts, we should start from the ground and work up. Get back to the basics and give us some good facilities that will benefit everyone.

Runners miss qualifying time, wind and rain definite factors

by Ed Shepherd
of the Whitworthian

Juniors Peat Sutherland and Jan Aubrey, and Freshman Lynnae Stevens challenged the weather and themselves to compete in the NAIA District I Marathon in Seaside, Ore. last weekend.

Sutherland, who placed second in the district, said, "The weather was really bad. If conditions would have been good, I would have qualified for Nationals."

Sutherland ran the 26 miles against 50 mph winds and pouring rain in 2:43.12.

"The course was not bad, in fact it was a beautiful course, however the wind was a definite factor in the race," said Aubrey, who ran a 3:49:33, and placed second in the district.

Aubrey was running at a good pace for the first half of the race, but at the 14 mile mark, rain and wind started to take effect.

"I knew I was in trouble at the 23rd mile, I kept telling myself to keep going," said Aubrey. "But on the 24th mile, I came down with hypothermia and that was the end of my hopes for qualifying for Nationals."

Stevens placed third in districts, running the race in 3:59:07.

"It was a very gutsy run," said Stevens, running in her first marathon. The weather was terrible. I was happy though in terms of the way I ran in view of the terrible conditions," said Stevens.

"They told me since it was my first marathon that I would suffer from trauma, but it turned out that they received hypothermia instead," said Stevens.

Lynnae Stevens and Peat Sutherland take an afternoon jog around campus.

Aubrey was very impressed by both Sutherland's and Steven's race.

"I felt very sorry for Peat. He ran so hard, and was gipped. If the weather would have been better he would have ran the qualifying time of 2:30," said Aubrey.

"Lynnae did a super job running in her first marathon. However, it is sort of ironic that Peat and I told Lynnae that she would get hypothermia, and instead we both got it. In fact, she walked away feeling pretty good after the race," said Aubrey.

Both Sutherland and Aubrey were taken to the medical tent after the race. Sutherland's temperature was 92 and Aubrey's was 90. Aubrey had to have an I.V. to regain her normal temperature.

Russ Sturgeon, Mike Lawrence, and David Saltzberg tune-up a bicycle in last weekend's Bike Tune. The cycling club raised $32, which ASWC will double. The club followed the event with a 17 mile bike ride around Spokane. The club will sponsor another Bike Tune after Spring Break.

Track strong in first meet

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

The 1987 Whitworth track team got a chance to "find out where they stand" Saturday at the Martin Relays in Walla Walla, Wash.

Head Coach Arnie Tyler was pleased with the overall performance of both the women and men's teams.

"After a first meet like this one, I'm excited," Tyler said.

The Pirates came home with some especially promising results. Junior Tim Jacobson and Freshman Barb Lashinski wasted no time in qualifying for Nationals.

Jacobson threw the hammer 175-6 to qualify, and missed the discus standard by only one inch, throwing 159-11.

Lashinski qualified in the javelin with a hurl of 147-9, far out-distancing her closest competitor, Whitworth's Gwen Keiser. Keiser, who holds the school record in that event, placed second, throwing 135-0. Lashinski said of her accomplishment, "I was real nervous all day, but everything felt right on that throw. It didn't hit me for a while that I had qualified."

Coach Tyler wasn't surprised about Lashinski's performance. "Barb is really strong. She has improved 20 feet since last year."

In addition to the National qualifiers, several Pirates qualified for the NAIA District I meet. Arnie Tyler, Jr., qualified in the hammer, 159-1; Jacobson, discus, 159-11; Gary Knowlton, javelin, 184-2; Paul Markillie, triple jump, 43-3½; and Scott McQuillen, 400 hurdles, 57-9.

Lashinski qualified in the shot put, 35-8; Keiser, javelin, 135-0; and Kim DeVilleneuve, javelin, 120.

The women's 800 medley relay team shattered the school record of 1:58. Jeri Wilkerson, Kari Jacobson, Jill Gardinier, and Annette Helling sprinted to capture first place with 1:53.6. Tyler said with more practice the four women can easily cut their time to 1:48, which would qualify them for districts.

Tyler said this year's squad should finish higher in the district than Whitworth has in past years. "The women will show the most improvement, I believe. We still lack depth, but that's the problem with a small college. We are so strong in the throwing events, if we could just pick up some more distance people."

Now that the first meet jitters are over, the tracksters are preparing for the real district opener, the Salzman Relays at Pacific Lutheran University. Nine schools and nearly 500 athletes will attend the highly competitive meet, which Tyler predicts will be "a good test" for his team.

For complete results of this week's meet, see the scoreboard.

Bucs bounce back from two losses, advance to finals against LCSC

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth men's baseball team fought its way into Sunday night's Banana Belt Tournament championship game against Lewis-Clark State College.

The tournament, held in Lewiston, Idaho, hosted four teams; Eastern Washington University, Lewis-Clark State College, Portland State University, and Whitworth.

Whitworth opened the tournament Friday losing to LCSC, 9-5. The Bucs trailed early, as LCSC scored two runs in the first two innings, and collected 14 hits for the game. Steve Sanger accumulated two hits for the Pirates in the loss.

The Pirates got things rolling Saturday morning with a 7-2 thumping of EWU. Right fielder Randy Russell blasted a grand slam in the third inning, and Scott Carolan scattered eight hits, while striking out nine and walking two. Carolan pitched a complete game for the victory.

Whitworth fell to Portland in their third game, 10-3. The Pirates were trailing 3-2 before Portland State erupted for five runs in the sixth inning. Ryan Clements had two hits for the

Escape to the great outdoors

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Finally, it's Friday! Now what is there to do? No, not another dance in the HUB-turned-nightclub. Another 1982 flick is unbearable, even if it is only $1.

For adventurous and imaginative students, there is an alternative at Whitworth — the Outdoor Recreation Department. Hidden away in the HUB Chambers, Outdoor Rec supplies the equipment; you supply the fun.

Funded by ASWC, the department's purpose is to make the outdoors accessible to the students. "It's for people who need to get away for the weekend," Director Mike Lawrence, a junior explained. "We've got a ton of equipment here," he said, motioning to the skis, snowshoes, ropes, and sleeping bags that fill the tiny office, causing it to resemble a condensed REI store.

So far this year, the program has sponsored several outings. In September, Lawrence led a group on an afternoon bike ride followed by a pizza feed.

Freshman Brent Soderberg who rode with the group said, "As a new student it was fun to get out and meet people who like the same things I do."

During January, Outdoor Rec sponsored a ski bus to Mt. Spokane every Wednesday. Students appreciated the service which provided them with transportation and $5 lift tickets.

The annual Lemon Creek cross-country ski trip, which sold out last year, didn't get off the ground this year. Originally scheduled in November, the trip to Canada was moved to Feb. 20 and eventually canceled due to a lack of interest. A somewhat disappointed Lawrence said, "The timing could have been off, but there's more apathy this year."

Sophomore Darrin Schmidt who went to Lemon Creek last year said, "Last year was so much fun because of the group that went. But a lot of the people graduated and the tradition kind of fizzled out."

Lawrence is excited about the program's spring project, the indoor triathlon. The P.E. and exercise physiology major, himself of veteran of two triathlons, hopes the March 15 event takes off. "It would be neat if a college our size could make this into a big thing," he said pausing to help a customer use the department's wind trainer. "The triathlon is the sport of the 80s."

According to Lawrence, the focus of Outdoor Rec is going to shift from organizing trips and aim towards more student-initiated excursions.

"We're going to go to clubs, teams, and individual dorms and say 'Hey, this is what we can do for you,' and let them plan whatever they want."

As spring becomes more evident, the opportunities for doing just that are great. Living in Spokane can cause even a big-city kid to feel like exploring the outdoors.

When the urge hits, Lawrence in the Outdoor Recreation Department will show students the ropes---and the tents, and the lanterns, and the...

Resume help available

by Tim Henson
Special to The Whitworthian

At this point in the semester, you are probably feeling a bit nervous about the future. Mid-terms are right around the corner, there's a threat of hepatitis type A in the air, and let's see...what was that last concern? Ah yes, what to do about summer employment.

The Career and Life Planning Services of Student Life have some seminars that will help you on that last one. As for the exams and feverish, yellow eyes...you are on your own.

On March 10 and 12, there will be two resume writing workshops led by Susan Elledge and Tim Henson in Student Life.

These seminars are designed to help students create their resumes and to update and improve their present resumes.

The seminar on Tuesday, March 10, will specifically be for students who wish to write their resumes for the first time or for those who choose to redesign their resumes.

The seminar on Thursday, March 12, will be devoted to proofreading and advising on final resumes.

In addition to these seminars, there are many other scheduled events from the Career and Life Planning Services. Throughout the months of March and April, there will be interviewers visiting from major corporations and organizations, interviewing strategy seminars, and other seminars on job search strategies.

Whether updating your resume, looking for summer employment, or merely assessing your interests, Gail Berg, Jim Swink or Diane Thomas in Student Life are available for counseling.

fective vandalism deterrent is peer pressure. Sowers might be infinitely more effective were he to direct his energies in the prevention of vandalism. Almost anyone at the Physical Plant would be happy to provide supportive information.

In-so-far as Christian duty is concerned, Sowers would find, on investigation, that the personnel at the Physical Plant are keenly dedicated to keeping the facilities on campus operating at peak effectiveness. He would be, I think, impressed with the ingenuity, inventiveness, and initiative these same folks go to to insure equipment (much of it antiquated) keeps providing heat, light, water, and fire control most take for granted.

How can I say all this? I've been a student at Whitworth since 1984 and I have also worked at the Physical Plant as an electrician's helper during much of that period. I have helped install many of the new outdoor fixtures and I have helped undo the damage a very small percentage of our classmates render to us all.

I suggest Sowers not throw stones until he knows what his real target is.

Primary elections over; candidates narrowed to six

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

The race for ASWC executive offices heated up Friday, March 13, following primary elections which set the stage for next Friday's general election.

Eric Roecks and Toni Fenner, executive vice presidential candidates, emerged from Friday's election with the needed number of votes to carry them into the general election.

Paul Ramsey and Matt Rise, executive financial vice presidential candidates, won the needed number of votes to advance them into the general election.

The ASWC chose to withhold the amount of votes cast for each candidate fearing possible embarrassment to the eliminated candidates and the possibility of swaying votes in the general election; according to Steve Broughton, this year's executive vice president.

Both Roecks and Ramsey led the election by a "wide margin," according to Broughton.

A total of 441 voters cast their ballots in the primary election.

Timothy Miller and Mark Eidson, executive vice presidential candidates and Dan Hulsizer, executive financial vice presidential candidate, failed to receive the needed votes in the primary election.

The candidates have been focusing on several issues thus far in the campaign.

Ramsey and Rise are focusing on the executive financial vice president job description and are looking closely at the Finance committee.

According to Broughton, the Finance committee has had its problems with consistently scheduling meetings. The candidates are proposing their plans to remove this problem.

Roecks and Fenner have been focusing their campaigns on the continuance of unity in the House.

This has been a good year for House representation. According to Broughton, no dorm presidents have stepped down and only one commuter representative has quit, citing schedule conflicts.

The problem in the House that is being addressed in the campaigns, concerns the lack of communication between dorm presidents and their constituents.

The solutions from both Roecks and Fenner focus on increasing student involvement and input in ASWC concerns.

Broughton said, "It's a basic, old issue. Hopefully one of their plans is going to solve the problem."

Roecks and Fenner are also addressing the issue of a proposed club council. The council would be chaired by the executives and be represented by all club presidents.

The club council is currently in Rules and Special Projects and is awaiting approval by the Senate to become a constitutional amendment.

It is hoped that the council would do their own chartering, decide what clubs continue from year to year, foster community involvement, make the clubs more accountable to ASWC, and at the same time make resources more available to the clubs.

The executive vice presidential candidates for both offices have been shying away from developing the specifics of their personalities that they will bring to office, according to Broughton.

"I'm a little bit concerned, I think that a big, big part of this position is your background," said Broughton. "It will certainly shape the way you address the table and the way you handle your position."

"Issues are ideas, but nothing is proven that they're going to work, but your personality definitely affects the office," said Broughton.

In the race for Executive ASWC President, D. Paul LaMontagne and incumbent J.B. Meade are squaring off for what Broughton called "the classic race."

Graduation countdown begins

by Shauna Winner
of The Whitworthian

May 17, 1987. Does that date move any tassels? It does for senior class members who will be going through commencement ceremonies in the Spokane Opera House at 2:30 p.m.

With two months to count down, preparations for commencement are underway.

President of World Vision Dr. Robert Seiple was chosen as commencement speaker in February. Darrell Guder, vice president of academic affairs, knows Seiple personally.

Seiple is currently president of both Eastern College and Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Philadelphia. He was previously vice president of Brown University in Rhode Island.

In a memo, Guder described Seiple as an able communicator, recognized Christian leader, and as having great ecumenical breadth, sensitivity and sense of humor. "I believe that he will do an excellent job and will focus especially upon the graduation class and its interests," Guder said.

Originally, Coretta King, wife of Martin Luther King was pursued as a possible graduation speaker, said Susan Elledge, senior class co-senator. Because of expenses and an answer not being available two months before the engagement, other choices had to be considered.

In addition to Seiple, student speakers and Scripture readers will participate at commencement. Seniors will receive sheets through campus mail to nominate seniors the first of the week. Nominations are due on Wednesday.

Unlike last year, tickets will not be required for commencement. However, seating will be on a first come, first serve

Int'l student recruitment aided by stiff competition

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth is a small private college that is reaching its arms around the globe to offer education to students of different countries.

At Whitworth many countries are represented; Hong Kong, Korea and Italy, to name a few.

There are approximately 50 international students this year, according to Gordon Watanabe, director of international student affairs.

Fifty students is a fair amount according to one student from South Africa. Sophomore Maseko Nxumalo said, "The ratio is fine here, the school is small so there are enough international students."

Dan Sanford, director of international programs, sees the recruitment of international students as a major service of our country.

"I think American education can be sold globally and in about 50 years I believe that most schools will be international schools."

It's difficult for some foreign students to study in their own country because competition is so stiff.

Sanford used an analogy to explain; What if every student in America who wanted to study at college-level had to be accepted to an Ivy League school? That is the comparison of the difficulty to study in foreign countries. Many people want to study but there are not enough schools, so the schools pick only the very best students.

In the United States, colleges are plentiful so education is easily attainable.

The competition doesn't end for the foreigners once they get accepted to a school in their country, however.

OPINION

Effective gov't requires informed electorate

by John Sowers
of The Whitworthian Editorial Board

The success of democracy is predicted on an educated and informed electorate. The recent fluctuation in President Reagan's popularity creates concern that the American electorate is not acting in an educated and informed manner.

With the publication of the Tower Commission report on the arms for hostages debacle, the Reagan popularity polls plummeted.

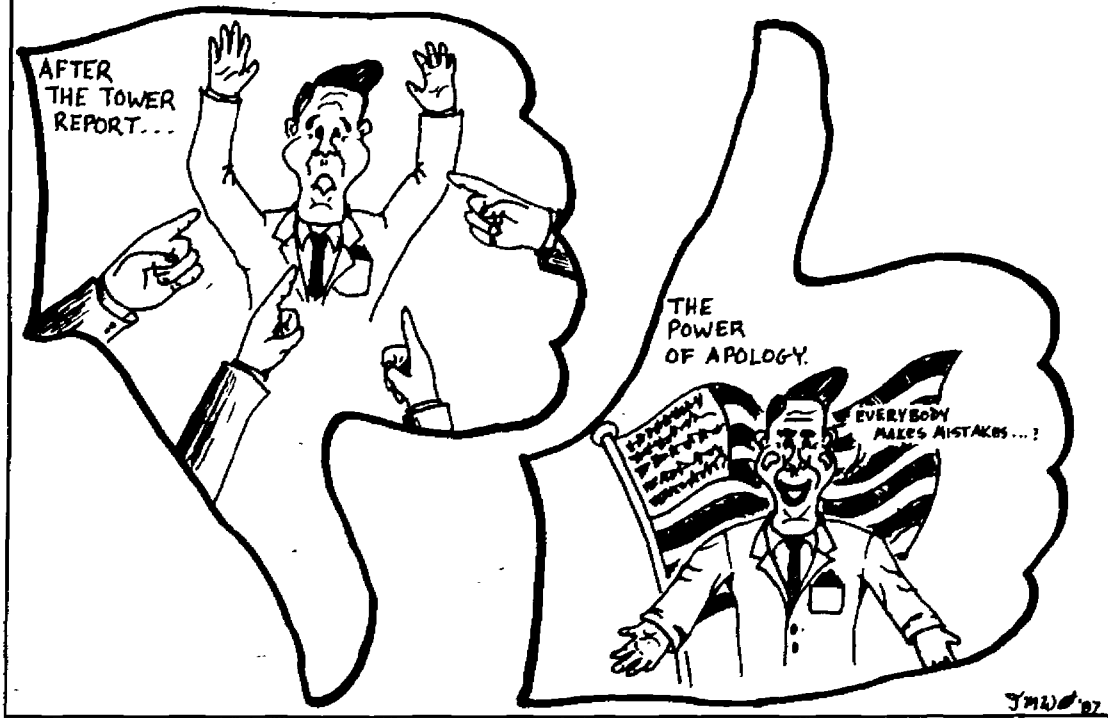

It is not the point of this editorial to disparage the seriousness of the facts found in the commission's report nor is their veracity questioned. The point of this editorial is to show what new light was shed to explain the loss of faith in one of the United States most popular presidents. It was found that Reagan is a detached leader whose style is to grasp "the big picture" while allowing his staff to run the day-by-day operations. An educated and informed citizen would have known that this was Reagan's style — indeed Reagan himself admitted to this management style since his California governorship. The Tower group also informed us that Donald T. Regan, the White House Chief of Staff, was the power behind the throne and wielded that with great relish. Again, an educated and informed citizen would have known this as Regan was exceedingly prideful and overt in brandishing his authority.

No, Reagan's public opinion dropped because of the public's willingness to jump on the bandwagon. The public quickly concludes without close study, that what Dan, Tom, and Peter tell us at 6:00 p.m. is historic and long lasting truth. These telecasts are only reports of daily happenings that often change, are enlarged and occasionally detracted or revised. But the American public sits on top of this weathervane spinning away whenever the winds of today's events lead.

Again, Reagan provides a current example. According to some polls the day after his speech on the Tower Commission's report, his popularity quickly gained a nine-point upsurge. Based on a twelve minute speech by an admittedly masterful speaker and suddenly that speaker's credibility and administrative ability are accepted again. Reagan only demonstrated that he is an orating artist and that we already knew.

Has American politics been reduced to the ability to push the right buttons so as to placate the pollsters? We need to be concerned enough about our government to spend some concerted effort to read up and stay informed of issues and leaders. The United States government is not a silly soap opera where villains suddenly and overnight become heroes or vice versa. The trends are there, the personalities, by and large, are already cast, we only need to remain educated and informed in order to guarantee strong effective leadership.

PUBLIC OPINION PERSPECTIVE - 1987

For an exchange program to come to America, the competition continues.

One student from China, Zi Zi Zhang explains, "We took an exam to be allowed to come. Sixty-two students attempted the exam and only the top 3 can come." But they can only come after approval following an interview.

The two ways students come to study in America are:

1. They come independently, getting sponsors and financing themselves.
2. They come on an exchange program.

According to Watanabe, most of Whitworth's international students are here independently. Only eight are on exchange programs.

There are many ways Whitworth interests foreign students in the school.

A few of these ways of recruitment include publications such as pamphlets that are mailed out, other students who have heard of or been to Whitworth, recruitment trips, missionaries who spread information, or exchange programs.

Watanabe says it takes about 10 years to build contacts around the world.

The college has started its plan to begin exchange programs based on our area. According to Watanabe, Whitworth began with Asian countries because of its location on the Pacific rim.

There will be a task force

Most of the exchange students who attend Whitworth are here for an education — top priority.

LaMontagne has set his basis. "We have every expectation people can invite anyone," said Registrar Paul Olsen, who has been involved in planning the last eight Whitworth graduations. Two years ago graduation required no tickets, and Olsen said there were no problems.

Besides commencement, other events for the weekend include baccalaureate at 9:30 a.m. Sunday, May 17. A band concert Saturday afternoon and senior dessert on Saturday evening are also planned. Olsen said a golf tournament, drama presentation and art gallery could also possibly be included in the weekend.

If seniors have questions they may be answered at Tea at Three, 3 p.m., Thursday, March 19 in the HUB Blue platform on one issue, the Library. LaMontagne is opposed to the reevaluation by the Trustees and administration making the HUB top priority over building a new library.

According to Broughton, LaMontagne wants the students to sacrifice a good student government for a new library.

Meade is running on essentially the same platform as last year.

According to Broughton, the largest differences in Meade's campaign is his hope to see ASWC issues and improvements continue and his discomfort with stepping down at this point.

Unlike the vice president candidates, the presidential candidates are running on two very different platforms.

Amnesty International proves affective

by John Boyer
of the Whitworthian

College teaches knowledge, leaving the task of applying it to the student. Many choose to become armchair philosophers, others choose to take action.

The Amnesty International chapter at Whitworth talks about the problems surrounding them but, more importantly, they set out to solve them.

"There are so many people with ideals, but this is realistic and it works," said Todd Davidson, senior, and member of Amnesty International, referring to his group and what it does.

Amnesty International seeks the release of men and women detained anywhere for their political beliefs, color, sex, ethnic origin, nationality, or religion — provided that they have neither used or advocated violence, according to an Amnesty International pamphlet.

The members of Whitworth's Amnesty International Chapter seek the release of these prisoners by writing letters to the people who detain them.

Response to those letters is powerful as illustrated by the

SERVE lacks volunteers

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Service opportunities aren't limited to Amnesty International. SERVE plans activities each year.

The initials "SERVE" mean "students eager to respond to voluntary

Lorri Albin, SERVE coordinator

endeavors."

SERVE Coordinator, Lorri Albin, doesn't think that Whitworth students are very eager to commit themselves to the volunteer part of this organization. Albin is responsible for contacting people that are interested in SERVE for credit, education, and especially for references.

"I haven't had very much input from the students. I don't think they know what SERVE is." She said that this unawareness makes her frustrated.

If you've been aware of the Date Rape seminar, the Eating Disorders seminar, the Blood Drive, and the Christmas Food Drive you've been aware of what SERVE promotes and produces.

These events have caught attention around campus, but they haven't caught the attention of potential volunteers.

During the Christmas Food Drive for the Spokane Food Bank only six people volunteered. These people collected 18 bags of groceries.

The next big activity that SERVE will sponsor is a booth at Springfest.

The lack of involvement doesn't slow Albin down. She has done volunteer work in Spokane for the Community Sports Medicine Center, the Sacred Heart Medical Center, and North Spokane Physical Therapy.

"This summer I'm doing Diakonia in New York, the Bronx," Albin said.

When Albin graduates from Whitworth with her physical therapy and nutrition degree she wants to do work with terminally-ill children and their families.

"Volunteering is something, to me, that would make God smile," Albin added.

A poster in her office said, "Don't conform — inform." Albin wants to inform the students of Whitworth about SERVE.

the one that the prisoner in the Dominican Republic experienced.

When they write the letters they are given a monthly date on the prisoner's status.

The group's letter writing efforts have been successful.

The group has tripled in the past month largely due to eight political prisoners who have been released because of the cooperative effort of the Whitworth chapter with other chapters in the past two years, according to Amnesty International member Lana Howe.

Personal reasons, in addition to the success of the group, have increased Amnesty International's membership.

"I joined Amnesty International because my brother was killed in Beirut," said Sophomore Hansa Kerman.

"He was a prisoner of conscience, his friends were killed in Beirut, and he went over to find them. The authorities (in Lebanon) arrested him because of that.

"I can help other people in his situation," she said.

Amnesty International is concerned with helping people around the world who are in difficult situations, and they're working for the practical application of human rights. They seek to free people who have been unjustly judged.

"We're not perfect judges, so how can we judge?" said Davidson.

Amnesty International seeks to help people who have been harmed at the hands of imperfect judges.

following example printed in Amnesty International literature.

"When the first two hundred letters came, the guards gave me back my clothes. Then the next two hundred letters came, and the prison director came to see me. When the next pile of letters arrived, the director got in touch with his superior. The letters kept coming and coming: three thousand of them. The President was informed. The letters still kept arriving, and the President called the prison and told them to let me go," according to a released prisoner of conscience from the Dominican Republic.

RC program measures quality

by Shauna Winner
of The Whitworthian

If success is measured only by productivity and quantity, then Whitworth's Resident Chaplain program doesn't rate effective.

Associate Chaplain Nancy Fox, who works with the RCs describes the RC program as "a structure that acknowledges the variety and needs of students. I'm not willing to say we're doing our job. There's an awful lot of needs we aren't meeting."

But, "As Christians we need to measure success by quality," said third semester Village Resident Chaplain Shonda Kessler.

At the first of each school year, RCs distribute interest cards to their residents. Fox said that two-thirds of the students fill out the cards saying they want to be involved in the RC program.

The focus of the RC program is on the covenant group. RCs are used to train and encourage members of the group toward greater ministry, according to Fox. The dorm RC pulls together people to lead separate groups, such as floor Bible studies, support and prayer groups. However, Fox said the program hasn't worked out that way.

Covenant groups average six to seven members. Group sizes range from three or four members to 15 or 20. Fox said Arend and Ballard tend to have the large groups.

The size of the covenant group depends on the dorm and the personality of the RC, Fox said.

Kessler pointed out the total number of residents involved in all covenant groups around campus is proportionate to the number of students who attend Midweek and Campus Worship services.

Assistant Chaplain Carol Cook, who also works with the RCs said, "The program touches many more lives than just those in the covenant group from what I've seen and heard."

"I've just, almost like popcorn, watched people grow this year," said Senior Kristen Will, Jenkins RC.

"It brings something to the dorm that the RA program can't do. It reaches people the RAs can't reach," said Will.

The RC program began approximately five years ago, according to Fox. Students took the initiative with the help of the Assistant Chaplain.

The purpose of the original RC program was to have something in the dorms to help people grow in faith and to provide both fellowship and scriptural challenge, Fox said.

Three years ago, one person was selected in each dorm through interviews. Floor chaplains were elected by each floor.

Now nine RCs are chosen through an application and interview process.

"The best kind of person to be an RC has to be able to inspire and motivate others to do things they don't want to do," said Fox.

The job of RC is not easy and can be discouraging, according to Fox. Resident Chaplains are paid for 10 hours of work a week, "so they won't have to get another job and will put time into it," said Fox.

"I'm not always hiring the most angelic types as RC. I really want people who can reach out and relate to non-Christians," Fox said.

Fox said that RCs face a lot of struggles and judgementalism. Two RCs quit this year, according to Fox. "Students change and follow a different path."

As for the future of the Whitworth RC program, Fox said improvement will be made next year with increased supervision regarding what's planned in dorms.

Cook sees the program as having room to grow and continuing to blossom. "I see it as having unlimited possibilities," Cook said.

As a class project for Educational Ministries, Kessler and two other students are working to reevaluate and restructure the RC program. A proposal will be made at the end of the semester.

"I believe in the program but it's never going to meet the ideal because we're all human and it takes effort," Fox said.

"Part of my vision is not even for the program but for people on this campus to be able to say, 'Hey, I'm a Christian,'" Fox said.

Homeless cats get love

'No Kitting'

by Philippe Coulon
of The Whitworthian

Do you miss your pet at home?

Don't feel sad, Whitworth campus abounds with solitary and homeless cats waiting for someone to love them, to take care of them, and to take care of their troubles.

bringing her food from home. She remembered coming out on weekends to feed him during the winter because at that period of time, cats have no place to get any food.

But, Zehm did not content herself with only one cat.

"I used to take care of anywhere from 10 to 15 cats because many cats are running around here," Zehm said, explaining that many cats on-campus have been dumped by neighbors.

Zehm told the story of a cat named "Mama Kitty", or "Buttons" as it was later renamed.

"It was a little white kitty that was running all over campus, somebody had dumped it, she was just left hungry and did not have a house," Zehm said. "After I tamed her and was able to pet her, I found her a home. Ron took her home."

Custodian Ron Cravens decided to have "Buttons" for a pet rather than to have her taken away by the Humane Society.

"She is doing pretty good now to a point that she does not run out of the room everytime I walk through," Cravens said, smiling. "She spreads long white cat fur over every piece of furniture in the entire house but, she is a neat cat, very loving."

Zehm gives names to cats handing around.

"The tamed cat that I first fed, I called her "Grandmama Kitty," she has been around here as long as I have and she still has kittens every once and a while," Zehm explained.

"The beautiful kitty with long hair, which I'd love to take home if I could catch him, I called 'Blacky,'" said Zehm.

"The one who lives up under Grieves building usually, I call him "Dustball" because when he was little, he

Fluffy — one of the many homeless cats that roam about campus

The campus work force and students revealed an endless number of stories about their concern for their neighbors, the wild cats.

"As Christians we've got to feed them because they are God's creatures," said Senior Seong Jin Kim from Korea. "Christianity always talks about love in reference to human behavior, but I think it should apply to animals too."

Kim used to live in the Village and fed the cats when they visited him at night.

"Why should we not take care of those little wild cats, they need love," said Kim. "As for humans, love changes their behavior."

Lead Day Custodian Carol Zehm started to feed them when she first arrived at Whitworth 13 years ago.

"When I was sweeping in the fire escape of Arend first floor, I went out and saw a great big tomcat in the bushes," Zehm said. "She looked like she was hungry so I took half of my sandwich and gave it to her. She wolfed it down."

From then on, Zehm kept

Spring fever spreads, Whitworth a victim

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Are you tired of dreary days and wintertime blues? If the thought of warm sunshine and the scent of lilacs in the air makes you want to forsake graduation requirements and head for the outdoors, then take heed. You've caught spring fever.

March 20, also known as the vernal equinox, marks the official beginning of spring. The American Heritage Dictionary defines spring as the season of the year, occurring between winter and summer, during which the weather becomes warmer and plants revive. In the Northern Hemisphere, it lasts from the vernal equinox, comprised of March, April and May.

Although this definition is accurate, spring is not just another season. It represents an attitude, and a renewed outlook on life. Many students emerge from hibernation at the first ray of sunshine. After months of snow and endless homework, spring is eagerly anticipated by many students because it symbolizes that life is a continuing and changing process.

Thoughts often turn to spring break, lazy days at the beach, baseball games, and even romance. It's suddenly easier to get up in the morning because each day promises to hold beauty and adventure.

"Spring is so much more spontaneous than any other time of the year. My mind often wanders because there is so much action going on outside. Flowers are blooming and clouds go jogging by. How can I possibly be expected to concentrate?" said Freshman Laura Parker.

Senior Aki Savage shares Parker's sentiments. "I grew up in San Diego, and I've never really gotten used to the snow and cold weather. I don't care if it's 50 degrees outside. If the sun is shining, I'll wear shorts. I feel more positive about life in the spring."

Not all students view the coming of spring with such enthusiasm. According to Frank Benjamin, "I don't understand what all the excitement is about spring. It's just another season of the year. Incidentally, did you know that the vernal equinox is on March 20th this year, not March 21st?"

School unity and class participation often prosper in the spring months. During the winter, many students are restricted to a small radius surrounding their dorm due to adverse weather conditions. As the weather gets warmer, more activities are planned that allow for more school integration. Recently, Stewart and Jenkins participated in a Sunday picnic and softball game.

Only in Spokane can one see people sunbathing in 60 degree weather. Students from Hawaii and California welcome the sunshine they thought had deserted them. They may be seen running around in shorts and thongs for the rest of the year.

These are just a few of the symptoms of spring fever. Freshman Tod Whitman said, "I tried to look up the definition of spring fever in the medical dictionary, and I can't understand why it wasn't there. I know I've got it, and I'm seeing it spread throughout the campus."

If you find yourself feeling sudden bursts of emotion and joy, unable to sustain a thought in the classroom, and an itch to go outside, don't worry. These feelings should cease by June 21, the first day of summer, which will unleash a whole new batch of symptoms.

Pictionary craze hits campus

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

Let's test your knowledge of the world of sports.

Name the game which requires almost no athletic ability (although minimal wrist movement is involved), stamina, quick thinking, and is the newest craze to sweep the country. If you guessed Pictionary, you are absolutely right.

tine's party and that's when I first played Pictionary. It was a lot of fun and I figured with the appeal it has on campus it would be a good idea to have a Pictionary tournament," said Allen.

The date for the tournament was set for Friday, March 13th, at 9:30 in the Warren's lounge. Three teams signed up. Team one consists of Steve Turbin, Wayne Ralph, and Bruce Bennett. The second team is made up of Brittany Manning, Jill Rauch, and a freshman.

Little did they know they were going to sweep the game and become champions overnight.

"We were surprised we worked so well together. We just knew what our partners were thinking," said Manning, also a freshman.

"Once we start playing, watch out!" said Rauch.

This game has attracted many people because it is so different. It stems from the Trivial Pursuit phenomenon, but has its own characteristics that make it appealing.

Maybe the game's appeal comes from its simplicity. The object of the game is for team members to guess the name of the object, action, or thing one team member draws. There can be up to four players on a team. There is a time limit of one minute for each guessing situation, and if you think quickly, you should have no problem guessing what the drawing is. You don't even have to be an artist to play, just imaginative.

Junior Dale Christianson got interested in Pictionary when his sister asked him to play one day.

"The first time I played it was Christmas break and my family and I picked words out of the dictionary and drew them. When I got back from vacation for the first time, I saw the actual game," said Christianson.

The hardest word he can remember trying to guess was "black hole."

Christianson explained, "My partner drew a circle and colored it in, but I kept thinking hamburger for some reason. I finally got it."

Another Pictionary fan is Freshman Joy McCallum.

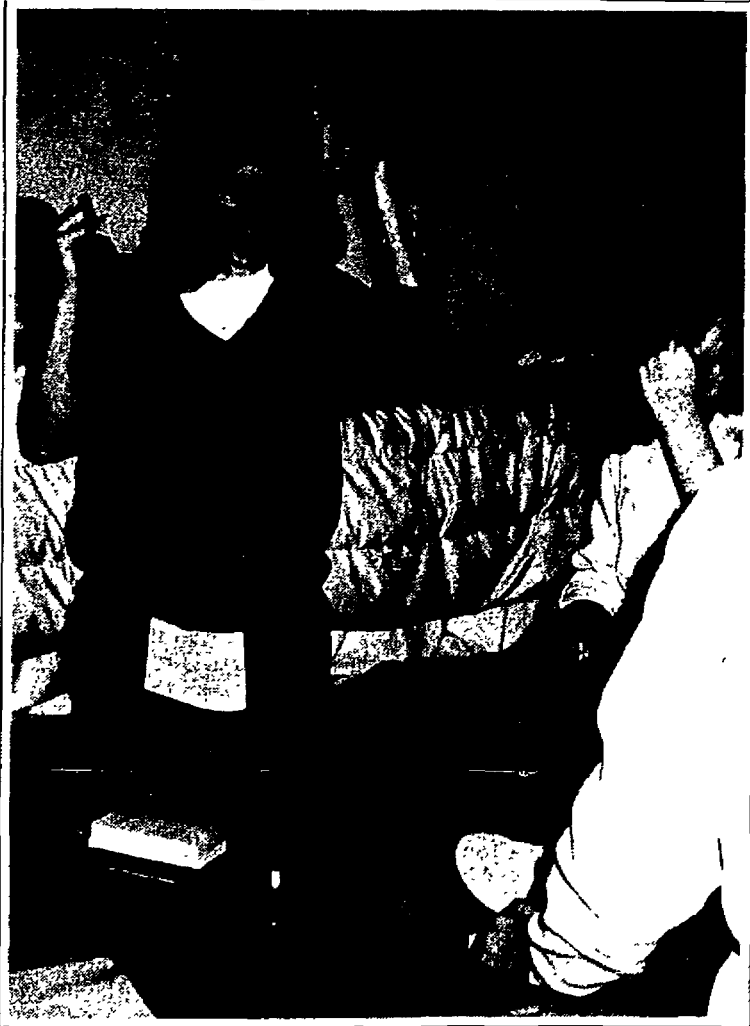

"The first time I ever played Pictionary was at my sister's house. It was a lot of fun," she said. "I like the tension of racing the clock and trying to cheat on the side."

Pictionary's popularity can be attributed to the fact that anyone can play if they have the right stuff, an imaginative mind and a good sense of humor.

Heidi Hellner. Winning the tournament was the third team which included Wendy Joe, Bobbie Michler, Susan Ponting, and Ken Brooks.

Manning, Rauch and Hellner all got interested in Pictionary after playing one night in the Baldwin/Jenkins lounge.

"It was just another boring Saturday night and it was something to do," said Rauch,

Sheila Farron

Mixed emotions: Sophomore Sandi Harris (L) cheers in triumph as teammate, Sophomore Laurel Sanford (R), bows her head in amazement.

Pictionary may well be the game of the decade. It has a wide appeal with a quick-spreading popularity and it has captured the hearts of people everywhere.

Taking note of its increasing popularity at Whitworth, Intramural Coordinator Sally Allen thought it would be a great idea to have a Pictionary tournament on campus.

"I was at a broken Valen-

Cats — from p. 4 always kicked his legs out while running. He looked just like a dust ball going that way."

Zehm explained how "Grandmama Kitty" kicked her out of the carpenter shop

"Grandmama Kitty used to live down with her kittens, in the carpenter shop, and I went there to sneak a peak," Zehm said. "I did not see her but when I picked up one of her kittens, the kitty yelled his head off and 'Grandmama Kitty' came from nowhere. She chased me and cleared me out of the carpenter shop."

Zehm believes that cats help maintain a healthy environment.

"When you have cats, the skunks don't go under the buildings because cats and skunks won't live in the same area," she explained. "There were skunks under the custodian building, but the cats almost killed them."

Zehm said that the cats kept the skunks from stinking up the place. "It is real good that way," she said.

Often cats found themselves victims of their environment.

"We lose four to five a year.

Dogs that come on campus chase them and kill them," said Zehm. "We had quite a bad time one year, we lost about six cats, mainly because of two malamutes who were not allowed to come on campus.

Zehm asserted that a cat needs protection, but also a companion.

"I talk to my cat and he talks back to me. We must understand each other," said Zehm. "I think they need somebody. Nobody likes to be alone, not even a cat."

If you happen to meet a cat on campus which looks hungry or lonely, just stop and take a few moments to care. As Zehm said, "It should be everybody's project."

Reel Views "Lethal Weapon" ★★½

Film hits mark

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

"All units are warned — this man is armed and dangerous."

How many of us first think of a policeman when we hear this description?

In Richard Donner's new film "Lethal Weapon," suicidal Martin Riggs (Mel Gibson) is a lethal weapon. His brand-new partner, Roger Murtaugh (Danny Glover), doesn't like the unsafe reputation of this guy. Tension between these two characters is immediately felt, and remains an integral part of the film as their relationship develops.

The fact that Murtaugh is black and Riggs is white is not as important to the story as their conflicting views of weapon use in the line of duty. Murtaugh carries a 4-inch Smith and Wesson 6-shot revolver while Riggs packs a 9-mm Beretta, 15 shots in the clip, another one in the chamber. Translated, Murtaugh prefers wounding suspects with the hope of interrogation while Riggs shoots to kill, no questions.

It is logical that nobody wants to be partnered with a manic-depressive neurotic with an itchy (and in this case, very accurate) trigger finger. Murtaugh sums up his opinions, "God hates me, that's what it is."

Riggs sharp reply shows the bitterness of a man who had just lost his wife of 11 years in a car accident. "I hate him back — works for me."

Our antagonist, "General" Peter McAllister, heads up a squad of ex-CIA operatives, who, through war-time contacts in Southeast Asia, have become a crack team of heroin importers and almost religiously-warped killing machines. The loyalty of his sado-masochistic albino henchman Joshua (Cary Busey) is demonstrated in a scene involving a hairy forearm and a lighter.

The ensuing plot is interesting and well-done. It best serves its purpose as a vehicle for the relationship between Murtaugh and Riggs.

Murtaugh's wife (Darlene Love) and bountiful family is his support. One can't help but find similarities to the Cosby family; pegging one scene in particular when Riggs first comes over to eat some of Mrs. Murtaugh's terrible cooking.

The closeness of the family is important, and when one of Murtaugh's children is kidnapped by this "Shadow Force" drug squad, all intensity breaks loose. What started out as a weak lead in a murder case is now a war.

"We're gonna get bloody on this one, Roger," said Riggs.

From choppers to limos to grenades to automatic weapons and oriental torture, this movie has it all. Donner, who also directed "Superman," should be commended for avoiding getting bogged down in the fire power and car chases. They serve to further excite the adventure without taking over the film.

The final scene raised some questions of credibility for me, but were quickly reconciled and dismissed. This movie stretched my limits, but remained believable.

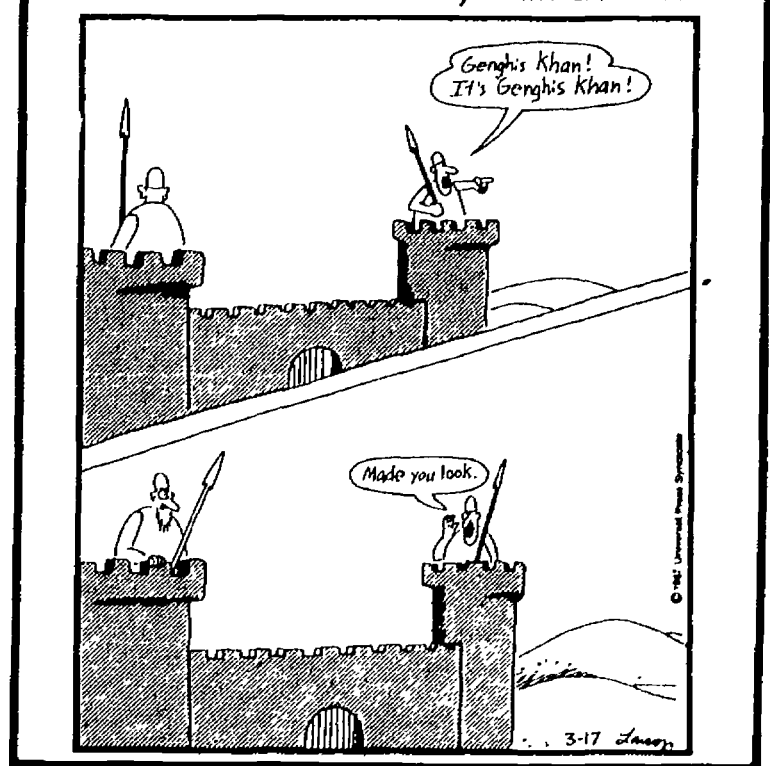

Gibson goes further in this film than he ever has before. One unforgettable scene near the beginning was one of the most intensely powerful I have ever witnessed on screen. No further explanation required.

This film is not without its light and often very funny moments, but the times of extreme seriousness were most effective.

A member of the Special Forces Assassination Squad in Vietnam, Riggs confesses to Roger, "When I was 19, I hit a guy in Laos from 1000 feet out in high wind. It's the only thing I'm good at."

Becker good example for talented Americans

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

Tennis of today, what has happened to it? The graceful masters of yesterday have gone by the wayside. Young big-serving bucks are taking the tennis world by storm.

There also seems to be an obvious absence of Americans in this circle. What's the problem with U.S. tennis? To fully answer that we must take a look at a young, non-American, and exciting star.

Boris Becker burst onto the tennis scene in 1985, capturing the hearts of millions by winning Wimbledon at age 17. In two weeks he went from a talented, husky boy to a big, burly stud desired by every teen-age girl in the free world. He didn't get that way overnight though, he put in a lot of hard work and was involved in an excellent national junior program.

I first saw Boris play in a small tournament in Portland, Ore., six months before he won Wimbledon. Though he was at least two years younger than any other player in the tournament, he cruised through the draw with hardly any problems. He destroyed Robby Weiss, one of the United States top collegiate players, in a little over an hour. Banging forehands from corner to corner he ran Weiss like a dog, demolishing his older opponent. With his tongue rolling over his lips and diving for every ball in a 10-mile radius, he set the standard for tennis of the future.

Americans are definitely lacking in the fine arts department of tennis. We have no rising superstars such as Boris on our horizon. The reasons for this are endless; no national training facilities, no national program, and the lack of drive, or maybe even talent, that we as Americans have.

What we lack most though, is moderation. Let's face it, we're an indulgent society and that is reflective in our poor junior players. Our juniors are dedicated players, but they are a little too dedicated, burn-out is a serious problem. Andrea Jaeger, Jimmy Arias, and Aaron Krickstein are prime examples of playing too much at too young of an age. Physical and psychological injuries abound among many juniors who don't go at tennis in moderation. Arias is a good example of that. He went from a hot young player with a bright future to a mental weenie plagued by injuries. Today's juniors just don't have the same year-upon-year staying power that players used to. They flash in and out of the tennis scene faster than Mazola on a hot skillet.

There is also a lack of unity among the players in the junior program. There are top junior tournaments competing against each other for commercial gain, not the players' gain as it is in other countries. Nick Bolletieri, who started a tournament to compete with the Easter Bowl a top junior tournament, is an excellent example. The people who coordinate junior play need to get together and work out a solid schedule for our juniors, otherwise our juniors will continue to flounder in international competition.

The commercialism of junior tennis is also hampering the progress of an effective program. Kids nowadays have agents by the time they're hitting puberty. But they're amateurs, they're not getting money you say? Bollocks! Some of these kids are raking in thousands of dollars in clothes and equipment. I wouldn't doubt if some of them even start to sport tattoos of their sponsors.

Junior tennis in America needs to get back to the basics, kids are shooting for the big and burly image too soon and are burning out in the process.

Pirates reach finals, fall prey to LCSC

by Peter L. Christensen
of The Whitworthian

For the second week in a row, the Buc baseball team has reached the final game of a tournament. For the second week in a row, the Buc baseball team has faced the number one team in the NAIA, Lewis-Clark State College. For the second week in a row, the Bucs have been shut-out.

The Bucs traveled to Lewiston, Idaho for the Hathaway Tournament hoping to make up for two losses against LCSC last weekend, instead they fought their way into the final game, only to lose to LCSC, 20-0.

LCSC accumulated 4 homeruns and 6 doubles during the victory, but the Pirates weren't able to hit, field or pitch the ball, said Coach Scott McQuilkin.

McQuilkin was able to see the brighter side to the loss, "It makes us tougher having the opportunity to play a great team like that." Whitworth has played LCSC three times this season and have seven more games against them, plus 13 games against Pac 10 teams.

The Pirate's trip to the finals began in the first game, a game which they lost to Willamette University 3-1. Troy Oliver pitched for the Pirates. "We played very poorly," said McQuilkin. McQuilkin blamed Willamette's three "unearned points" on infield miscues.

The Pirates improved during their next game against Eastern Oregon State College. Whitworth won 13-3. Scott Carlam pitched eight innings, giving up 3 runs, and striking out 5. Ryan Clements broke the game open in the fourth inning with a bases-loaded double, bringing in 3 runs. Jeff Bare hit 3 for 4, Troy Anderson 3 for 5, and Scott Barkley 2 for 5, including a bases-loaded triple in the seventh inning.

The next game was against Linfield College. "It was a game that wasn't very well played," said McQuilkin. However, the Pirates managed a 10-9 win. The Pirates were down 9-6 going into the eighth inning, but scored 4 runs before the game was called due to time. Bare scored on a sacrifice fly by Scott Ralph. Wayne Weststrom picked up the win in the top of the eighth inning.

Whitworth's overall record is 4 wins and 5 losses for the season.

Tennis team warms up courts, cools down Seattle University

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

The sunshine that graced the men's matches quickly diminished when the women's tennis team took to the courts Saturday afternoon. The Whitworth women generated their own heat, however, taking seven of the nine matches from Seattle University.

Due to eligibility problems, Seattle U. has only four women on its team. The Chieftains played Gonzaga Saturday morning before visiting Whitworth. "We lost 7-2; that's been the story of our season this year since we have to forfeit those matches," Seattle's coach explained.

Her prediction proved to be accurate. Whitworth lost only two of the afternoon's matches.

In doubles, Krista Price and Allison Heiser, both juniors, defeated Hannah Kunz and Alicia Ossenkap 5-7, 6-1, 6-1.

Pirate Coach Jo Wagstaff pointed out that this is the third season that Price and Heiser have teamed up. "They're a real seasoned team. It took them a while to warm up today but they looked good."

Seattle claimed victory in the other doubles match with Tomoko Miyazwa and Carla Milan defeating top-ranked Sally Reed and Ann Benzel 7-5, 4-6, 6-1.

Miyazwa also beat Benzel in the No. 1 singles match 6-2, 6-2. Miyazwa, a senior, is undefeated this year in singles and doubles and was named to the All-District team last year.

Whitworth's Reed, sporting an ice pack on her knee, said of Seattle's star player, "She's quick, a lot of fun to play. You think you've hit a really good shot and she manages to get a racket on it."

Miyazwa was the only Chieftain Whitworth had trouble handling, though. Heiser quickly defeated Kunz 6-2, 6-1. Freshman Sue Miller defeated Ossenkap 6-1, 6-2, and Junior Toni Fenner battled in the dark to narrowly defeat Milan 7-5, 2-6, 7-6.

Coach Wagstaff praised Fenner's performance. "Toni got tough in the end. When it came to the tie-breaker, she was so steady and the other girl's nerves were shot. Toni did a great job today."

Track team reaches new heights

by Sheila Farren
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth track team broke personal, meet and school records this weekend at the Pacific Lutheran University Salzman Relays.

For the second week in a row the women's sprint medley relay team broke the school record. Kris Young, Jeri Wilkerson, Jill Gardinier and Annette Helling ran the medley in a time of 1:52.2, compared to last week's 1:53.6.

The men's distance medley relay team, consisting of Joe Cabler, Ted Gerken, Peat Sutherland and Scott Hink, acquired a time of 1:52.2, the second best time in the school's history.

Tim Jacobson, who placed first in two events, set a meet record in the hammer, throwing 175-7.

Gwen Keiser, set a personal record and tied a school record in the high jump, jumping 5'0. Scott Hink also set a personal record in the 4 x 800 meter relay, running his 800 meters in 1:58.

Helling had an impressive day, running the 400 in less than 60 seconds, twice. Helling is only in her second week of practice since the ending of basketball season.

Hard-working swimmers earn All-American honors

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

In their second year, the Whitworth College swim team has quietly and earnestly reached heights without distinction. They have done so with enthusiasm, hard work, and discipline, drawing on each other for strength when times seemed lonely.

Last week they capped another improved year by taking 11 swimmers to the NAIA National Swim Meet in Milwaukee.

Bob Blazek, a junior who graduated from Shadle Park High School, repeated as an All-American. Last year Blazek finished 11th at Nationals in the 200-meter breast stroke. This year he earned such honors by placing 16th in the 100 breast stroke with a time of 100.3 seconds.

"I was kind of surprised because I expected to do better in the 200 meter. But I was pleased with my time," said Blazek, who was also recognized this year as an Academic All-American.

Coach Jon Buzzard echoed Blazek's comments. "They all swam very well. We were all pleased with the performances."

At the conference meet, where swimmers qualify for Nationals, every Whitworth swimmer except for one earned their best time.

"We really peaked at conference," said Junior Cordelia Small.

"That is what makes my job worthwhile," said Buzzard, "to see these kids continually improve. They settle for nothing less than excellence in themselves. They have worked for everything they've earned."

For example, Buzzard noted the improvement of freshman swimmer Chris McInerney.

"At the beginning of the season Chris' first swim time in the 100 freestyle was 1:24. At National's Chris swam a :59.00. That's a whole 25 seconds!"

It is this kind of opportunity that Whitworth's swim program allows for. "Everyone can participate and that's what sports should be about," said Buzzard.

In addition to Blazek, Kim Moore finished sixth at Nationals in the one-meter diving competition, to earn All-American honors. Along with Blazek, Sophomore Margaret Lee was also named Academic All-American.

As summer approaches, the team will focus on strengthening themselves out of the pool by weightlifting.

"It takes a tremendous amount of strength to swim successfully at a competitive level. People would be surprised," remarked Blazek.

However, it is obvious that these swimmers are not surprised by their achievements. Next season will be the team's third year in existence, and they will continue to work together with the same drive and quiet enthusiasm that brought them such a rewarding season.

Men's tennis net first victory, clean sweep over Seattle U.

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

In a clean sweep, the men's varsity tennis team defeated Seattle University, 9-0, Saturday.

"I am very pleased with the team's performance. I was not really surprised that we beat them overall, but to beat them in all nine matches was surprising," said Head Coach Ross Cutter.

"We won four three-set matches, which is the equivalent of winning in extra innings in baseball. Matches that go into overtime can go either way so it was actually closer than the 9-0 outcome."

Whitworth's No. 1 player, Kirk Rector, said, "I played pretty good. It took me a match to loosen up after last week's bad performance against Whitman, but once I started gaining my confidence I hit the ball pretty good." Rector defeated his opponent 6-3, 7-5.

Willie Stewart had different views on the bad performance last week against Whitman.

"Last week's match was good, because it showed me what I needed to work on for this week's match," said Stewart, the No. 2 player. "I also thought that I would have had a closer match, because when I was warming up with my opponent we had some good rallies, but I won the match easily (6-2, 6-2).

The only player forced to come from behind to claim a victory was Brad Larkin, the No. 5 player. He had a hard time getting into the groove, due largely to last week's poor showing against Whitman.

"It took me a while to get going, but after a while I could tell that I was going to win," said Larkin.

The scores of the remaining singles matches are: Mark Frisby, 7-5, 2-6, 6-3; Armond Boatman, 6-4, 6-3; Tod Whitman, 6-0, 6-0. The doubles teams also played well: Rector-Stewart winning 6-2, 3-6, 6-4; Boatman-Frisby, 7-6, 3-6, 7-6; Mark Eidson-Mark Eilers, 7-5, 6-0.

"We are off to a good start, however, there is a long way to go. Gonzaga is coming Monday. Hopefully this win will give us a lift for this upcoming match against Gonzaga," said Cutter.

Tribal Indians visit

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

It started with an attachment.

Laura Carle, a math and secondary education major, had spent her Jan Term working with kids of the small Coeur d'Alene Indian communities of DeSmet and Tensed. She became attached to the people she saw fighting to keep their culture alive and to improve themselves in a world that once passed them by.

Then, Carle saw a way to help. She decided to invite the tribal school kids to Whitworth.

In a field trip proposal she sent to Whitworth admissions, Carle stated, "The purpose of this field trip would be to expose the tribal students to a structured and lectured classroom. This would help in the understanding of where Whitworth is and what it is like to be a college student for these kids."

She also wanted to prepare them for the switch they will make to high school next year.

"While I was (at the tribal school) they kept asking what college was like and where Whitworth is, and I thought it would be better if they saw it instead of just telling them," said Carle.

The field trip was approved, and she went to work, enlisting the help of many people on campus and at the tribal school. It was arranged that the visitors would stay in South Warren, and on March 5, seven boys and two girls, with their teacher and their teacher's assistant, arrived.

"I wasn't going to come because Anna Galler couldn't come and I didn't want to be the only girl," said Roxanne Pluff, a seventh-grader. "I thought it was going to be real boring up here, but it's been real fun." Pluff did most of the talking while she and Galler, who did come, were being interviewed. Galler quietly played with the crab that had been crawling around Carle's apartment.

Dave BrownEagle, the seventh- and eighth-grade teacher at the tribal school, said that the kids were brought to Whitworth "to give some of the students with higher education potential some idea of what to expect. A lot of them don't realize the amount of work and self-discipline involved. This allows them to see people who have disciplined themselves."

BrownEagle said that the biggest impact the field trip would have on the kids would be on their egos. "Someone is caring about them," he said. "People are taking the time to show them things. They can say 'Hey, someone notices me and cares about me. I must be worth something.'"

"One of the things we try to do is not only have them dream (about what they want to be), but show them how those dreams can become reality," said BrownEagle. "If a kid wants to be a doctor, take him to a hospital and have him talk to a doctor."

Many times, however, those dreams are not realistic, and have to be redirected.

The tribal children, for example, live for basketball, but the chance of one of them reaching the pros is small. "If a kid can't play pro basketball," said BrownEagle, "maybe he can be a coach."

ing the kids to Whitworth. They have to find out what reality is, and mold their dreams to make reality a friend, not a dream-shattering shock.

The kids attended a special seminar that was designed to explain how students get into Whitworth, what students do to earn a degree, and about the life students lead here.

Cajie Matheson, a seventh-grade student, thought that SAGA served pretty good food, that our classrooms were small, and that the college was 'neat.'

"We went swimming Friday night and they had a blast," said Carle. "They didn't like working in the library, but they did an excellent job. And they didn't like the classroom, but that's a part of college life. I didn't make them do a lot of studying, but tried to balance things out."

Sophomore Loren Portwood, a resident of South Warren, marvelled at the kids' discovery of our bathroom water systems. He explained that they kept flushing the toilets and turning on the showers for about half an hour.

"I wouldn't have brought them up here six months ago," said BrownEagle. "They weren't responsible enough, and didn't have enough discipline for a trip like this. They have grown up a lot in those six months."

"I was impressed with how good they were," said Senior Heather Wilhelm who housed the two girls. She worked with these same kids last Jan Term and said that they were a lot better than she had expected them to be.

"I think it's a lot more fun than grade school," said Pluff. "You have more things to do, and there are more responsibilities, and there seems to be a lot less homework to do."

New ASWC officers elected; Meade, Roecks, Ramsey in

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

For the past two weeks we've seen posters hang, pulled fliers out of mailboxes, listened to campaigns, and finally the elections for the 87-88 student leaders for Whitworth have been completed.

The candidates gave their final speeches on Friday, March 20, in Forum and students could vote all day.

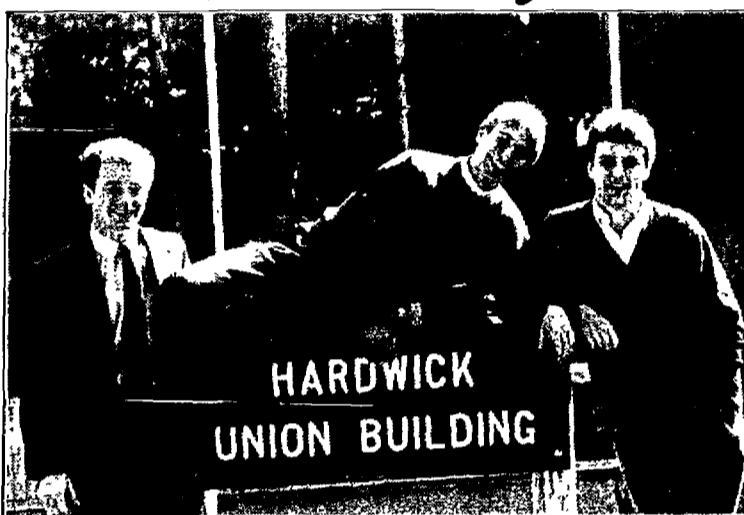

The winners are J.B. Meade for ASWC president, Eric Roecks for executive vice president, and Paul Ramsey for financial vice president.

According to Steve Broughton, this year's executive vice president, 534 votes were cast.

The margins each candidate won by has not been released.

According to Broughton, the results will be announced to the candidates on Monday and may be used at their own discretion.

In his final speech in Forum, the re-elected Meade stressed his accomplishments of this year as president, and focused his speech on getting all of the students to realize that they are ASWC and with him as the leader, "We as individuals can find the answers."

ASWC '87-'88 executive officers J.B. Meade, president; Eric Roecks, executive vice president; and Paul Ramsey, financial vice president.

Roecks was elected executive vice president. Roecks described in his final speech, two ways of helping students know about what's going on. First, he will meet regularly with officials around campus so students will, "know their campus." Secondly, he introduced his book, "How to get things done in ASWC." This will help students "know their ASWC."

Ramsey, the new financial vice president, is bringing his experiences to his new position, suggesting sales portfolios for KWRS and The Whitworthian. He also hopes to gain sponsorship for some clubs on campus. Ramsey said, "I will work with as many people as possible — so when we're gone, they can continue."

In Forum, Glenn Smith, director of student activities, said the leaders need to "imagine the possibilities — then accomplish them."

These new leaders appear to have imagined great possibilities, and through their campaigning have described their ways of accomplishing them.

On the ballot this year there was an advisory question: "If you had the choice, would you want limited visitation hours in the dormitory?"

According to Broughton, there were 44 "yes" and 293 "no" votes.

Pres. candidate invited to campus for two-day visit

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

The first of two presidential candidates, Dr. William Dunifon with his wife Margaret, arrives Tuesday 24, for an intensive two-day stay at Whitworth.

A second candidate will visit the campus April 7 to 9, the week following spring vacation.

The Presidential Search Committee (PSC) has chosen to withhold the name of the second candidate until Monday, April 6.

According to Joe Black, vice president for Institutional Advancement, and secretary of the PSC, the decision was made in order to offer the second candidate an equal chance in the selection process.

It is hoped by the committee that undue comparison will not take place if the name and background are withheld.

Dunifon is the dean of the College of Education and professor of Higher Education of Illinois State University.

Dunifon's past work history includes a two-year stay at State University of New York College at Cortland, as dean of Professional Studies and professor of Education.

Dunifon will be attending meetings with campus representatives beginning as early as 6:45 a.m. and continuing as late as 10:30 p.m. both Wednesday and Thursday.

Student involvement

Students will have the opportunity of meeting with Dunifon twice during his stay.

The first will be Wednesday, March 25, at 9:15 a.m., when Dunifon tells of his faith and Christian experiences in a Seeley G. Mudd Chapel worship service.

A brief period for questions and answers related to his personal expression of faith is part of that service.

Dunifon will meet with ASWC/student representatives in the HUB chambers at 10:15 a.m. following the worship service.

The meeting, hosted by ASWC President, J.B. Meade, member of the PSC, will be limited to 10 to 12 students in order to allow for the greatest possible communication, according to Black.

Meade has the responsibility of picking who will attend this meeting.

The campus visits by the candidates are considered an integral part of the selection process.

Final decision

Trustee Victor Peniz, chairman of the PSC, emphasized that the arrival of candidates does not mean that a final decision is near.

The final decision will be made by the Board of Trustees after the PSC makes its recommendation of one candidate.

Ideally, the committee would like to have one or two more conversations with the candidates before taking its final recommendation to the board, according to Black.

Just as the college has invited the candidates for evaluation, each candidate will be making his own decision concerning Whitworth.

A possibility exists that both candidates may choose to turn down a recommendation or withdraw their candidacies.

"It is feasible that the whole search may evaporate," said Black. But he doesn't expect this to happen.

In narrowing down the number of candidates, the PSC evaluated about 160 applicants, the number was then cut to seven.

Woman candidate

After a PSC subcommittee traveled to Chicago to talk with the candidates, an invitation was extended to three, including one woman and two men.

The woman withdrew her candidacy citing personal circumstances that would not allow her to attend and her decision had nothing to do with Whitworth, according to Black.

Student store faces closure

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

If you're used to feeding your sweet tooth with Twinkies or fruit pies without leaving Whitworth's campus, that may be coming to an end.

The ASWC has been considering the possibility of shutting down the student store and replacing it with another school service organization.

The store has been plagued by sliding sales for about three years.

Student store Manager, Paul Stachowicz, a Business/Accounting/French major, admits the store has had revenue problems.

"We have been in the red about $1,200 for the past three years," said Stachowicz.

A number of factors have contributed to this loss in income.

According to Stachowicz, competition from 7-11, Exxon, and other grab-your-food-and-go places have cut down business sharply. The two biggest problems however, come from inside the college.

"Our location is the biggest problem. We're just not in a convenient or accessible place," said Stachowicz.

Another big problem is the contract the store has with SAGA.

"We are bound by a contract that limits our merchandise so we are unable to sell many of the things the snack bar does," said Stachowicz.

The contract expires in the 1987-88 school year.

"Then we will be able to effectively compete with the snack bar and outside influences and put the profits back into ASWC," said Stachowicz.

If the student store were to close, it would have an effect on more than just ASWC profits.

OPINION

The story is OK; the policy is faulty

by Bob Coleman
Editor in Chief of The Whitworthian

The Whitworthian has been strongly criticized about its lead article in the March 16 edition, 'Primary elections over; candidates narrowed to six.' In a letter in the voters' pamphlet ASWC Executive Vice President Steve Broughton insinuated that the article was unfair and biased.

The article's intentions were twofold, to give the results of the primary elections and give information concerning the candidates' platforms. We believe it did a good job on both counts.

We believe further that The Whitworthian news editor, Steven Brown, who wrote the article did a fair and accurate job of reporting. He presented the facts clearly and impartially.

During the interview between Broughton and Brown there was no mention of information being off-the-record with one exception: the vote totals for the primaries; which Broughton did not make available anyway. As a student government official being interviewed by a reporter, Broughton should have expected that anything else he said could be used. He was naive to think otherwise.

The Whitworthian stands by its story.

If the story did have a weakness it was the failure to give the primary elections voting figures. This was no fault of Brown. The election committee refused to make this vital information available.

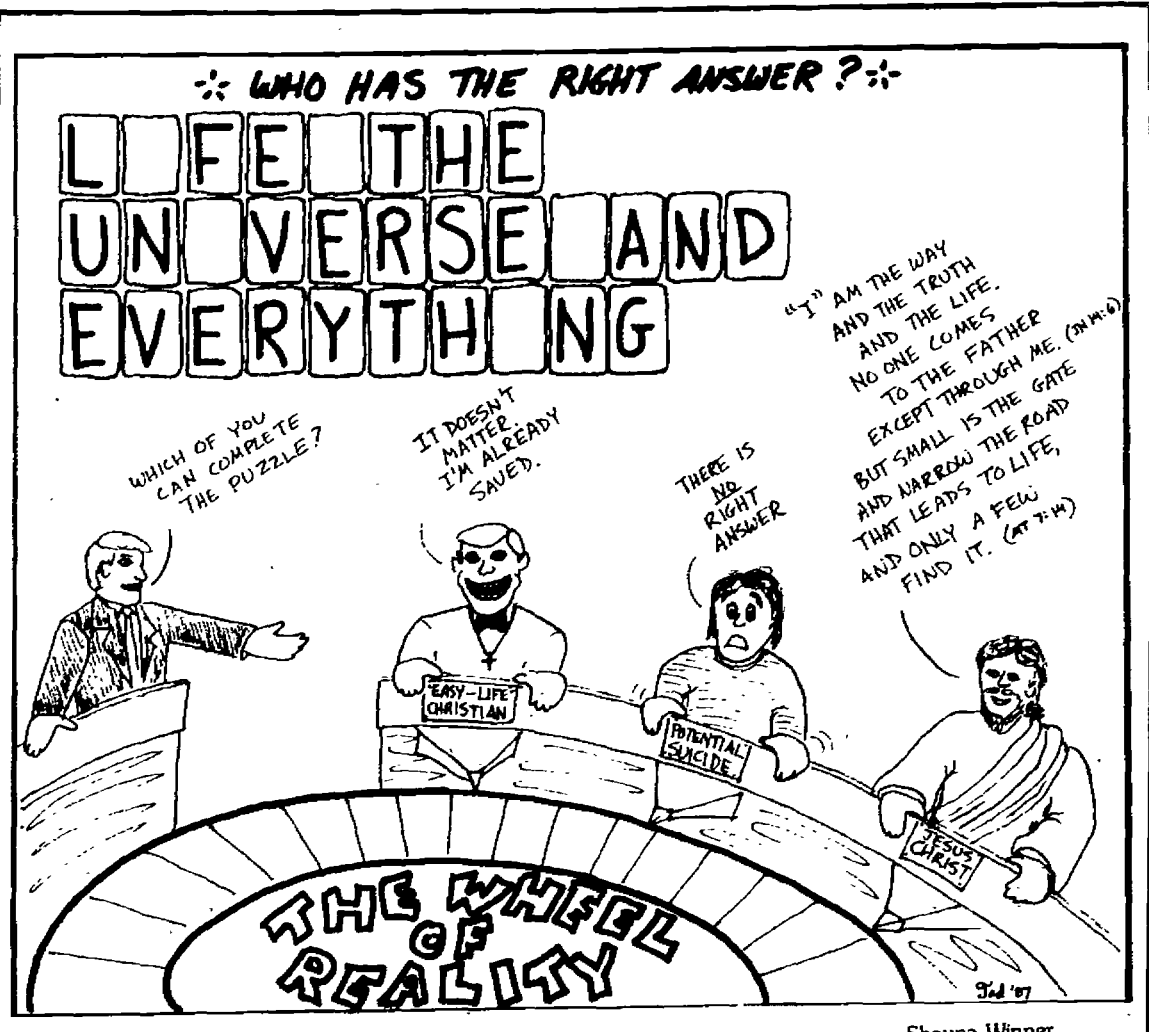

Elections are intended to allow people to choose the best candidate available. The elected ASWC officers will be working with more than $120,000 of the students' money. The students should be allowed to make their decisions with the confidence of being fully informed.

The election committee has a duty to give a clear picture of the elections, not one clouded by a lack of information. The committee has a duty to give fair and accurate information about the election, and has no right to withhold information to make the elections look different than they really are.

To withhold information to save candidates from being embarrassed is not fair to the students. When people run for public office they thrust themselves into public light. In doing so they take the chance of losing the election and even being embarrassed. This is a chance they take knowingly and willfully.

The ASWC needs to adopt a consistent policy on elections. This policy should include the release of all election results, both primary and general, regardless of the outcome.

It is sad to see the ASWC, which has run fairly smoothly this year, use closed door tactics like this. In a community like Whitworth, trust and openness should be rules we live by.

Christ, not a simple answer

by Sandy Wark
of The Whitworthian Editorial Board

In the last two weeks six teenagers have jumped into their cars and instead of spinning off to McDonald's drive-up window or to some remote place with a view to watch the stars from the back seat, they just sat there.

They just sat there and waited until the carbon monoxide filled their lungs, and inhaled their way into death's eternal slumber. In the last two weeks six teenagers have committed suicide, four in New Jersey and two in Chicago, and if the sociologists are right, more will follow.

There are no easy explanations for these suicides. Blame is tossed from one party to another — the schools, their families, the media. Whatever the cause, for these youths the promise of a beautiful life turned out to be a lie.

It is appropriate at occasions such as the suicide death of six young people to reflect again on what makes life worth living, and perhaps what this generation can impart to the next. It is far too easy to cry out, "But they had so much to live for!" without speaking to the despair and depression many people, young and old, experience. What does it feel like to be a high-school dropout? Few at Whitworth College have even a clue.

The Christian wants to say something about Jesus Christ, that he gives life meaning. Too often, however, Christians buy into the secular notion that life should be pain free. Christ becomes like a drug — pop a prayer and everything will be okay. Such an interpretation of the Christian life leads only to disillusionment. As Scott Peck writes in his book, The Road Less Traveled, "Life is difficult." Jesus is no cheap magician who takes away the pain of the world in one wave of his magic wand. Christ may be the answer, but he's not a simplistic one. The "good Christian" does not float through life on a blissful cloud of spiritual highs. The Christian who hurts is not failing, in fact he may be following in the Master's steps — those steps lead to the cross, not to Disneyland.

Tony Campolo stood in front of Forum and screamed down at the audience, "YOU'RE DEAD!" Maybe he was right, maybe that's what we want. Maybe that's what the teenagers wanted. To be dead is to feel nothing — not pain...not joy. The Gospel of an easy life is a lie. So back to the original question — what makes life worth living?

Animal abuse not acceptable

Dear Editor:

I attended "Mac Hall in Concert" expecting to be entertained by the various talent we have at Whitworth. I was appalled when a blender and a bag of gold fish were brought out in order to make a "Saga Smoothy." I can not comprehend why the men of McMillan Hall find this funny or entertaining.

I had to run out of the auditorium when I realized what was happening. This did me no good, however, because a second set of fish were liquefied later in the show before I had time to react. I applaud the woman who rescued the first set of fish, I only wish the Mac men had taken this as a not-too-subtle hint that their prank was not going over well with everyone in the audience.

I do not consider animal abuse (no matter how small the animal) an acceptable means of amusement. I realize that it is not possible to please everyone with the acts or jokes presented to an audience; however, it does not take too much common sense to realize that this type of action is bound to offend people.

My whole view of "Mac Hall in Concert" is marred by this one event. I hope McMillan uses more tact in planning next year's show and realizes it is not necessary to torture animals in order to have a good time.

Goals, policies for education set by three faculty-led councils

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

Faculty responsibility doesn't begin and end in the classroom. They take leadership roles, shaping the direction of the Whitworth education.

Each faculty member at Whitworth is required to join one of three councils.

The three councils are: the Council for Professional Learning, the Council for Developmental Learning, and the Council for Liberal Learning.

Each council has specific college goals assigned to them.

The goals outlined in the student handbook are the guidelines for each of these councils.

According to Dr. Jean Anderson, president of the faculty, the Council for Professional Learning, co-chaired by Dr. Gordon Jackson and Dr. John Yoder, is designed to discuss majors and the programs involved with students reaching their majors.

The Council for Developmental Learning, co-chaired by Dr. Pat MacDonald and Dr. Tammy Reid, is designed to improve programs for student's communication skills, both written and oral, and their critical and creative thinking.

The council also overlooks personal growth at Whitworth, with special emphasis on freshmen, according to MacDonald.

The Council for Liberal Learning focuses on the educational goals and requirements of the college. The council is co-chaired by Dr. Laura Bloxham and Dr. Howard Stien.

Each council is divided into task forces for individual projects.

The entire council meets approximately once each month and the task forces meet separately once each month also.

The following is an update on the projects and issues each council is working on.

The Council for Professional Learning, according to Yoder, has just finished designing guidelines for hiring new faculty. These guidelines consisted of setting time lines that require the department and the dean to meet the spring before hiring, allowing adequate time for consultation about the needs of the department.

Yoder said, "This will lead to larger and better discussion."

By the time September arrives, the needs would be discussed and hiring could take place.

Right now, this council is discussing the shape of the religion major: should World Religions be a part of it?

There will be a discussion of the Journalism department. Yoder said, "Journalism and communication are separate but connected...should we give more emphasis to interpersonal or rhetoric/debate skills?"

The final product, Yoder explained, was one of strengthening majors, and the possibility of a candidature.

Candidature would mean students would need to apply for a major.

"No one would be left without a major. Students would only get their major after consulting with people in the department," explained Yoder.

The Council for Developmental Learning is focusing mostly on written and oral communication and critical/creative thinking, according to MacDonald.

"We're planning how we can most effectively develop student's writing skills above a Writing I course," said MacDonald.

To encourage oral communication skills this council is discussing whether or not a speech class should be required and how to implement speech skills in activities within a course.

The Liberal Learning Council has the job of examining requirements.

One of their largest projects, according to Bloxham, is designing the guidelines for Core 350, the science core class.

There is discussion covering outlines of topics and team members.

"We're also setting guidelines for the humanities requirement that the faculty passed last spring," according to Bloxham.

These are the councils that decide the curriculum and projects for Whitworth students.

Yearbook completed; due out May 6 or 7

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

The '86-'87 yearbook due out May 6 or 7, is centered around a theme of celebration of what Whitworth stands for.

More importantly, however, it's a celebration of getting the yearbook out successfully.

Due to the incompetence of the editors for the '85-'86 yearbook, it wasn't distributed. They promised it to the students in the spring of '86, and failed to deliver it then.

According to Editor, Steve Olsonowski, sometimes he had to work eight to nine hours straight in order to meet his deadlines.

"I was supposed to put in 17 and one-half hours each month, but I put in a lot, lot more," said Assistant Editor Joy McCallum. Part of her reason for this was that she was the only editor present during Jan term.

Bruce Eckley, the photographer, added that he put in as many as 25-to-30-hours a week during the time in which deadlines were due.

Among the reasons that caused the staff to put in many hours was that only a few people worked on the project.

McCallum said that she wanted more students in-involved in the process of putting the yearbook together. "By having people apply for yearbook positions, they will see it as a more serious position," she said.

It appears that the hard work has paid off.

The printers, Taylor Publishing, were pleased. Olsonowski said that Taylor Publishing was excited when they received photography and layout of such high quality from a small college like Whitworth.

"We lost a lot of confidence," said McCallum, referring to the image of the previous editors set forth. "I think people will maybe see now that yes, we can turn out a yearbook," McCallum said.

Store - from page 1

"About 11 to 13 students, including the manager, could lose their jobs. But it's more than that. It's a great experience for all people involved in running the store," said Stachowicz.

Lorinda Funk, a sophomore English major and employee of the store, agrees.

"It not only provides jobs for students on campus who don't have regular transportation, but it's also a valuable job experience," said Funk.

What could be done about the problems of the store? There is one idea that could be the answer.

"There is a possibility of moving the store into the game room and moving the pool and ping-pong tables into the student store," said Stachowicz. "This would give the store the accessibility it needs."

The only added expense to this idea would be the removing of the wall between the store and the store manager's office.

The idea was discussed during the March 17, Senate meeting.

The idea was well received and a proposal will be written on the possible expenses and time that would be needed to put the idea into action.

Discussion will continue at the next Senate meeting.

Another possibility to help the student store get back on it's feet, would be to lower the employees wages from $3.65/hr to $3.35/hr.

"This proposal would save approximately $800 a year," said Stachowicz.

Ultimately the fate of the store is in the hands of the Whitworth students.

"If the students would support the store, the profits would go right back into the ASWC. The money could be used for the benefit of the students with more activities or HUB improvements," said Stachowicz.

Stress... Working for you

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

It's Sunday night and you find yourself in the library.

You have a midterm tomorrow, a committee meeting on Tuesday, a scholarship application due Wednesday and a Core paper due Friday.

Your datemate is complaining from lack of attention, your roommate wants you to play intramural basketball, and you have to work security at the dance Saturday night.

You look at your appointment book and suddenly feel the stress building up inside you, but you don't know how to get away from it.

What you don't know is that there are several ways that this stress can be used to help you overcome what looks to be "Hell Week."

Stress is fundamental to our lives.

"Stress is what gets us out of bed in the morning," said Devon Greyerbiehl, a Whitworth counselor in the Health Center. "Stress makes us pick up the phone and call the insurance man. It's what makes us go for the grades, form relationships, and confront people."

We can use stress to help us through organization. When a person is under stress he or she becomes more alert and more aware of his or her surroundings.

"The adrenaline would be going, so I would hope that they could get organized," said Greyerbiehl.

"Organize your time," she said. "The worst thing you can do is procrastinate. Avoidance is never helpful. Let stress push you from the beginning (of your project) to the conclusion."

In his book Stress Without Distress, Hans Selye says, "Try to keep your mind constantly on the pleasant aspects of life and on actions which can improve your situation." He also said, "Nothing paralyzes your efficiency more than frustration; nothing helps it more than success... (Take) stock of all your past achievements. Such stock-taking is most effective in re-establishing the self-confidence necessary for future success. You would be surprised at how much this helps when everything looks hopeless."

Take a positive attitude toward your project.

Are you afraid of Spanish, and know you're going to hate every minute of it? This attitude puts stress to your disadvantage.

Instead, look at Spanish as a challenge. Millions of people will learn Spanish this year, and most of them will have the same fears as you do. Everybody is in the same boat, facing the same obstacles.

With this thought in mind, put your stress into self-improvement channels, and prove to yourself that you can make it. Anyone can succeed if they take their energy out of negativism and put it into positivism.

Naturally, some of us will not be able to change our habits quickly enough to survive the upcoming "Hell Week."

As an immediate form of stress release, use a creative warm-up exercise. Write a poem or a letter to a friend. Balance your checkbook. Organize your desk and notes. Prepare your mind for your big project.

"The expression of creative impulses in these ways provides an outlet for excessive tension, making it unnecessary for that energy to be channeled into the pathways which lead to physical, mental, and emotional distresses," said Robert A. Anderson in his book, Stress Power! How to Turn Tension into Energy. By directing your stress through positive avenues, you can avoid negative stress situations like all-nighters.

"It's when we let it overcome us that stress gets bad," said Greyerbiehl. "Monitor your stress. If you know you have a paper due in three weeks, then do it."

For those of us that will find ourselves pulling all-nighters because we didn't heed this advice, there are several remedies for avoiding distress.

"Stay away from drugs like No-Doze, caffeine, and sugar, eat right, get exercise, get enough sleep, and budget your time," Greyerbiehl said. You need to do healthful things for your body while you are under stress, not hurt it.

"Learn to relax," she said. "Stress is a given. Use it to your advantage."

Vonda, SAGA's tough lady, really an ol' softie in disguise

by Philippe Coulon
of The Whitworthian

Would she really let you die if you were thirsty?

You're desiccated in the middle of the desert with Vonda Miller, checker for SAGA, refusing you some water because of failure to present your I.D. card.

Bruce Eckley

Vonda gets a ple-in-the-face at a b-ball game.

But those that know Miller would agree that the portrayal, as shown on Sat. March 14 during Mac Hall in Concert, does not resemble what Miller is really like.

Speaking about her, some students use terms as "dragon lady" or "tough to deal with", but her co-workers, friends, and other students identify her as a loving and caring person.

"She has a huge heart," said SAGA Manager Jim O'Brien. "She really cares about students and enjoys talking with them."

"Her job sometimes will come in direct conflict with what she is," O'Brien explained. "There are situations where she needs to be tough because of the high cost involved."

Cheryl Busby, SAGA employee, has known Miller for three years and appreciates knowing her. "Vonda is so jovial. We have a lot of laughs together," said Busby. "She is very honest and likes to tell things how they are and does not hide anything very real."

"Carrying out SAGA policies does not mean that she is a gruff and tough person," Busby continued. "She often helps her friends or relatives whenever she can." Busby also described Miller as a Christian lady who has a big heart for God and others.

Travice Apple, a student employee, often helps Vonda clean the dining room after dinner time.

"She is kind of a mother," said Apple. "One night I did not feel very good and almost passed out under the table. Vonda gave me a hug and I felt a lot better."

Miller was born in Spokane and graduated from Mary Cliff High School. She got married and eventually had four boys.

"My dream was to have 12 children," she said smiling, explaining that when she attended high school she dated a kid who had 12 brothers and sisters. "I envied them."

Miller's oldest boy, David, is stationed at Fairchild Air Force Base and works as a flight controller.

Mike, her second son, is employed by SAGA, and her two younger sons are studying at Rodgers High School.

Mike considers his mother a loving person.

"One day my brother David fell down while he was water-skiing in Twin Lakes," Mike said. "When my mother saw David floating on the water, she started to scream and weep. She asked me to jump in the water to save David, but he was faking."

Miller responds to other people's needs.

"I always see people who need help and try to help them the best I can," said Miller. "I always try to solve other people's problems, but I can't solve my own problems."

Miller is also committed to her Christian faith.

"I sing and read the Scriptures in my church (Calvary Chapel)," she said. "I would like to take some religion classes to get more of that learning to interpret the Bible."

Miller also would like to take some classes to improve her spelling and reading, but time and finances do not allow her to make it possible.

Miller said that she enjoys being at Whitworth because she likes its Christian atmosphere.

"The student's language is so good and students are polite," said Miller. "I have a job to do and it is hard because I have rules and regulations that I have to follow. I have to be tough and let the students know that I am not an easy touch."

From theology to architecture Chapel brims with symbolism

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Attending chapel services at a Christian college can become as routine as SAGA meals. But, imagine how much more rewarding it could be if one fully understood the structure and symbolism in the Chapel.

Peter Christensen

The Chapel cross symbolizes the redeemed world.

The design of the Seeley G. Mudd Chapel was intended to be the "quiet crossroads" of campus. It is where the college gathers for worship, small groups strategize for action on hunger or peace, the Chaplain staff plans for and is engaged in a variety of ministries, and individuals come for quiet and prayer.

The story of the Chapel, from theology to architecture, is an invitation to consider the meaning and implications of the Christian faith, an integral part of life at Whitworth.

The design of the Chapel is both timeless and timely, and motifs accent a Biblical faith in the Reform tradition. The theological concept reflects the gathered/scattered nature of Christian faith and life.

On one side of the Chapel's central walkway is a worship space with a seating capacity of 200. Original plans for the Chapel focused on the central commons area exclusively as a worship center.

But, Whitworth's commitment to integration of worship and service is reflected in smaller spaces on the other side of the walkway; the seminar room, an informal group room, and other multi-purpose rooms. The Chaplain staff is housed on this side of the building, directing ministries of nurture, healing and mission.

At the center of the building in the walkway is a design in brick depicting Jesus Christ as Lord, Servant, Friend and King. Brick pavers carved with various Christian symbols were contributed by students and lead in the Chapel one way and out the other.

As one enters the worship space, the eye is directed upward and outward. According to Chaplain Ron Frase, "The essence of the Chapel structure is simplicity, so that students will not be distracted and will focus upon God."

The architectural plan of the Chapel was that it be a living building. It was intended that the wood and brick would give shape to ideas and feelings. It was meant to blend in with the buildings and beauty of the campus. The brick exterior is the same as McMillan and Ballard, the oldest buildings on campus. Simple beauty was the goal of the design committee.

"I really appreciate the setup of the Chapel because it allows for one to worship and feel the presence of God in a relaxed and pleasant atmosphere. It isn't too stiff and formal like church. I always feel welcome there," said Freshman Tamra Weselius.

The use of cedar in the building's interior accents the Northwest environment, as well as providing a warmth of tone.

Wood is the dominant material in all the furnishings. The foundation of the building is made of the earth's clay with the roof offering a sense of shelter.

According to Frase, "The abundant use of natural materials, such as air, sky, wood and stone, expresses an openness to God's good creation."

The use of light is a subtle dimension of the Chapel. The earth, sky and buildings are always in view. There is a sense of ambiguity as to where the light comes from. In the worship space, only the light from the skylight is visible, symbolizing a direct vertical relationship between a transcendent God and His people.

The worship furniture reflects the heritage of the Reform tradition. The handles on the interior doors depict the historical symbols of the four Gospels, with John as eagle, Mark as lion, Luke as ox, and Matthew as human figure.

The cross is a crucial element in the Chapel. "The circle around the cross symbolizes the world, and we look at a redeemed world through the cross," said Frase.

Junior Nancy Moomaw shared similar sentiments. "I really like the window beneath the cross. It's so peaceful and quiet, and I just like to sit there, watch the rain, and be alone with God."

Peter Christensen

Frase said that when former Chaplain Ron White returns from Princeton this summer, there are plans to print a brochure explaining the structure and symbolism of the Chapel.

He said, "We hope that a more detailed description of the Chapel and its functions will clear up many misconceptions and invite more students to participate in some of the Chapel's various services and activities."

Reel Views "Heat" ★ It's only lukewarm

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

Burt Reynolds meets nearly all of the requirements of a true Hollywood star.

He's good-looking (even with a hairpiece), he's been rumored to have AIDS, and he lives with Loni Anderson — each of which serves to keep him in the public eye.

In fact, about the only thing keeping Reynolds from being a true Hollywood star is his most recent string of films.

Reynolds has not made a decent movie since "Sharkey's Machine." A list of flops including "City Heat," "Stroker Ace," and "Stick" have helped to flush what was once a successful career built on the high-quality performances of "Deliverance," "The Longest Yard," and "Smokey and the Bandit."

Unfortunately, Reynolds' latest film, "Heat," will do little to help him reclaim past fame as a Hollywood legend. Directed, the term is used loosely, by R.M. Richards, the screenplay and original best-selling novel were written, this term is used even more loosely, by William Goldman.

Reynolds plays Nick 'Mex' Escalante, a Vietnam veteran and hero of "Soldier of Fortune" military magazine.

Listed in the Las Vegas yellow pages under "chaperones," he dreams of living in Venice, Italy. His office is shared with a two-bit lawyer (Howard Hesseman, in one of the least utilized but most entertaining character performances of the film).

A friend of Nick's named Holly (Karen Young) has been brutally raped by the son of a mafia chieftain. What Holly does to her assailant, pretty-boy Danny DeMarco (Neill Barry), after Nick subdues him, gives an interesting new use for garden shears. Don't worry, it's filmed tastefully.

The rape has been revenged, so each takes $10,000 of DeMarco's cash and Holly splits town in a dirty car, (a nice touch considering movie cars in Las Vegas are never dirty).

Now, Nick has time to spend with his latest client, Cyrus Kinnick (Peter MacNichol), a rich wimp who wants to learn bravery. Cyrus assumes that Nick is basically a violent person, but Nick contradicts him, "No, I'm not. I'm just good at it."

The return of Danny DeMarco and his horde of new and improved bodyguards sets up the film's rather simplistic ending.

"I'm not gonna run, and I don't know how to hide," says Nick.

Cyrus is brave, DeMarco is the real wimp, and a lot of naughty bad guys get killed by Nick (his specialty is edged weapons. He doesn't use a gun).

I got the feeling throughout this film that I was watching a very low-budget 1970's made-for-TV movie. Lights of the Vegas strip reflect off the camera lens, causing a shoddy glare, and movements often seem either too slow or rushed and choppy, as if the producers had pieced together and 'made due' with what shots they had.

I saw a few glimpses of Reynolds and MacNichol that were well-acted and enjoyable in spite of all that was working against them, but not nearly enough to make this film even barely salvageable.

If you had just been shot in the stomach six times would you look up at your buddy, smile weakly and say, "No pain..." before you passed out? No, I didn't think so.

Whatever "heat" was intended for this film ended up lukewarm at best.

Spokane tennis champion coaches Whitworth women

by Peter Christensen
of The Whitworthian

The game has taken her cross-country and back. And whether she is coaching it or playing it, Jo Wagstaff lives tennis.

Wagstaff, better known as "Coach" to members of the women's tennis team, has been playing tennis since about age 12. She is a Spokane native, and graduated from Shadle Park High School. After high school, Wagstaff attended Spokane Falls Community College for a year and attended Washington State University for three. It was at WSU that she received her degree in physical education.

While at WSU, she played on the women's tennis team. And still to her delight, she was the No. 1 player on the team for both her junior and senior years. She felt that it was a high point in her tennis career, "You're kind of a celebrity when you're No. 1."

Another of Wagstaff's competitive high points came in 1984, when she and nine other Spokane women, several of whom were housewives, formed a team. The group fought their way through several regional competitions and earned their way to the finals in the Michelob Light Tournament, which was held in West Palm Beach, Florida. The tournament brought in teams from all over North America, yet Wagstaff's team made it to the finals and won.

In addition to those merits, Wagstaff currently holds the city tennis title which she won two years ago. She has also coached several local high school teams, and even coached at the Eugene Country Club in Eugene, Oregon for two years. "I learned a lot," said Wagstaff.

Since Wagstaff took over as the women's coach, the team's win-loss record has steadily improved from no wins to many wins. Wagstaff's coaching philosophy is aimed at preventing burnout on the game by placing tennis in perspective to everything else. "I want (the players) to work hard at it, but enjoy the work. I want tennis to be a release from their studies and stresses," said Wagstaff, who describes herself as, "not a really hard-core coach."

Wagstaff's family life centers around her husband and two children who take time to enjoy the outdoors together. Her husband is an avid tennis player and currently holds the men's city tennis title and is ranked 12th in the Pacific Northwest division and 3rd in doubles. He has also been the boy's coach at Mead High School for the last 10 years. Her kids, a 20-month-old baby and 6-year-old girl, are active as well. Wagstaff's daughter has taken up tennis and already has her own "Prince" racket. Her family also enjoys snow skiing, camping, and water skiing.

As the coach though, Wagstaff eagerly expressed her thoughts on this year's team, "I think we're an incredibly good team for such a small college. Most of the colleges we play have four times as many students." Wagstaff also expressed delight in the number of people who turn out and that she always has a full roster, which is sometimes a problem even for larger schools. She said, "I think that Whitworth has a lot to offer tennis players."

One of her toughest challenges this season is to simply keep the team together. "We're plagued with eligibility problems and injuries, and it's hard to keep people up."

Her goals as a coach are pretty clear. To have a winning season and to keep the players healthy, but she added, "As a coach, what I want to see more than a win-loss record is for the players to learn about tennis and improve."

Wagstaff views this year as another building year and has been working on improving the team by going out of her way to schedule tougher teams. Along with making her players tougher, she wants to earn more respect for Whitworth in the district.

Wagstaff is proud of the team's improvement and wants to see the improvement continue until the team someday makes it to the Nationals. She would like to continue coaching here, adding, "I like it here at Whitworth."

Bucs split series

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

Over the weekend it was feast and famine for the Whitworth baseball team, as the swept a double header from PLU on Saturday, and then returned the favor by losing a pair to the Lutes on Sunday.

In Saturday's opener, Scott Carolan tossed a six-hitter, in leading the Pirates to a 13-5 win. Carolan struck out two and walked none, as he improved his record to 3-0. Scott Barkley ripped three doubles, while Ryan Clements and Troy Anderson also collected three hits.

Vern Hare blasted a three-run home run and Dan Demchuk belted a solo shot.

In Saturday's nightcap, pitcher Troy Oliver, 1-2, picked up where Carolan left off, pitching a four hitter and going the distance for the 5-2 win.

The Pirates led the whole way after erupting for three runs in the second inning. Clements spanked the inning with a double and scored on Hare's single. Randy Russell followed with a double and Brian Parisotto collected the game-winning RBI with a sacrifice fly. Randy Russell had two doubles.

However, the Pirates' bats fell silent on Sunday as they only managed to score three runs, losing 10-2, 3-1. PLU jumped out early in the first game, scoring five runs in the first inning. Whitworth committed four errors in the game. Demchuk scored a run and had one RBI. Brian Cook, 0-2, took the loss.

In Sunday's nightcap the big blow for PLU was Jerry Larson's third inning two-run home run off Pirate pitcher Eddie Eugenio. Whitworth scored their lone run in the sixth when Jeff Bare's sacrifice fly scored Steve Sanger. Eugenio, 0-2, took the loss.

The Pirates' overall record is 6-7, 2-2 in districts, and 4-2 in NAIA play. Whitworth's next game is Wednesday at home against Gonzaga University.

Tough LCSC team defeats Whitworth men

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

The men's tennis team was beaten by Lewis and Clark State College, after defeating Gonzaga earlier in the week. In fact they weren't just beaten, they were destroyed, 7-2.

Kirk Rector Trevor Francis

"LC played really well. They were certainly better than our first two opponents we've played this year," said Coach Ross Cutter. "We played really good against a really good team." A team whose top three players were recruited from Mexico.

"We had some really close matches. Both (Kirk) Rector and Mark Frisby lost in the third set," said Cutter.

"Kirk played his best tennis against a good player," added Cutter, who said Rector played his best match of the season on Saturday.

Tod Whitman, who played tough but was defeated, thought he played well. It was just that his opponent played better.

"I wasn't disappointed with the way I played. He just was better...today," said Whitman.

Willie Stewart took this match in stride, even though he lost 6-1, 6-2. "I hope to play better next match, because he showed me what I need to work on. He had a lot of top spin on the ball and that was hard to handle," said Stewart. However he enjoyed the match because, "I came out knowing a little more Spanish," Stewart said with a chuckle. "I was able to practice my Spanish with my Mexican opponent."

Whitworth's two victories were due to forfeits.

The results of the singles matches were: Luis Miguel Mejia defeated Rector, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4; Hector Aguirre defeated Stewart, 6-1, 6-2; Dan Streeby defeated Frisby, 6-3, 6-7, 6-2; Rusty Peterson defeated Boo Boatman, 7-6, 6-2; Bob Uhlenkott defeated Tod Whitman, 6-3, 7-6.

In doubles, Mejia-Peterson defeated Rector-Stewart 6-2, 6-2; Aguirre-Streeby defeated

Whitman-Frisby 6-1, 6-1.

"We had four three-set matches and if we would have won them it would have been much closer," said Cutter.

They also played Gonzaga on Thursday and man handled them, winning eight of the nine matches. Scores of those matches were unavailable.

New records set at Bigfoot Open

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Broken school records, new personal bests, and national qualifying performances highlighted the Bigfoot Open for the Pirate track team, despite blustery conditions.

"We had some outstanding performances today," Coach Arnie Tyler said Saturday, of the meet held at Spokane Community College. "This was our first open meet, and the athletes got a chance to stand alone and prove themselves. I'm real happy with the results.

Washington State University, University of Idaho, Eastern Washington University, Northern Idaho College, Gonzaga University, and SCC provided stiff competition at the meet.

Junior Alex Heiser conceded, "It's not very realistic for us to try to top WSU. Their program is so much more serious than ours." But the discus and javelin thrower added, "In the throwing events we were hot today. I got a personal record every time I threw today."

The throwing events were without a doubt Whitworth's strong point in the Bigfoot Open. Tim Jacobson took 2nd in the hammer with a throw of 174-9, and Arnie Tyler placed 3rd, throwing 169-5 (his best mark this season). Teammate Stuart Woods placed 7th with a 146-9 throw.

Jacobson, who has already qualified for Nationals in the hammer, qualified on Saturday in the discus, with a throw of 160-3 and a 3rd place finish.

Gary Knowlton faced tough competition in the javelin and managed to place 6th by throwing 182-5.

The women also made their presence known in the throwing events. When Barb Lashinski's javelin finally landed, she held the new school record of 160-0 and earned 2nd place at the meet. "She's got to be ranked in the top 10 of the NAIA for the javelin," Tyler said.

Lashinski, a freshman, also took 4th place in the shot put, with her best throw of the season, 37-2 1/2.

Swim team coach resigns

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

Jon Buzzard, aquatic center director and swim team coach, handed in his resignation last week.

Buzzard sighted the inability to be with his wife, Marilyn, as the major factor of the decision. Marilyn works as a nutrition researcher at the University of Minnesota.

"There just hasn't been a very satisfactory way to commute," Buzzard said. "We don't see each other for months, that's no way to live a life."

They expected to find a research job in the Inland region but nothing was available. Buzzard will return to Minnesota in August.

Buzzard regrets leaving Whitworth at this time.

"I feel badly about not being around next year," said Buzzard. "I think there are going to be some exciting things around here in athletics next year.

"I love it here; this is a wonderful place. I'm very sorry it hasn't worked out for me."

Annette Helling, in her first attempt to run the 400m intermediate hurdles, qualified for Nationals and took 1st place with a time of 1:03.76. Helling was also a part of the 1600m relay team that blew away the competition by nearly 4 seconds, running a 4:08.77. Lisa Jenkinson, Kris Young and Jill Gardinier set the pace before Helling took the baton.

Young, Gardinier, Jeri Wilkerson and Kari Jacobson combined in the 400m relay team to take 2nd place, breaking their own school record with a time of 50.14.

Wilkerson tied the school high jump record, leaping 5'0", and Gardinier ran her best 400 of the season in 1:04.22, placing 3rd, and also placed 3rd in the 200 with a 27.5. Jenkinson placed 2nd behind Helling in the 400 hurdles with her best time this season, 1:07.81.

Tyler said, summing up the women's performance, "They did really, really well."

Freshman Sam Stockton said, "I think part of the team's success is because we've been training harder. We're getting ready for a big meet April 11 (in Bellevue, Wash.), and we've been working hard. It's making me better."

Stockton got a personal best in the 400m Saturday. He also spoke for the team in his appreciation of the supporters from Whitworth who turned out to the chilly meet, "It really helped to have someone cheering us on."

Tyler is amazed at the success of the team this early in the season. "A lot of the kids are way ahead of schedule, and they aren't even close to doing what they are capable of doing."

Second presidential hopeful makes campus appearance

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

Dr. Walter R. Eckelmann, one of two presidential candidates under consideration by Whitworth College as a successor to Dr. Robert Mounce, the current president, wound up his campus visit last Wednesday, April 8.

Eckelmann's wife accompanied him on the visit.

The first of the two presidential candidates, Dr. William S. Dunifon, visited the campus three weeks ago on March 25-26.

Dunifon's wife, Margaret, accompanied him on his visit.

Each candidate has been subjected to an intensive two-day visit that introduced them to virtually every department and interest group at the college. Both candidates faced identical schedules.

Eckelmann's education credentials include a master's degree and doctorate from Columbia University in the combined fields of geology and chemistry, and a bachelor's degree from Wheaton College in chemistry.

Eckelmann's background is primarily in the business area. Currently he is the president of the RCB Company, an oil and gas exploration and production firm.

Eckelmann has also been employed by Sohio Petroleum Corporation as senior vice president of technology, (1983-1985), and the Exxon Corporation as deputy manager of the science and technology department, (1978-1983).

Whitworth requires the candidates to make a statement of their Christian faith. According to Eckelmann, he finds his strength in the Scriptures

"God's word (the 66 canonical books of the Old and New Testament) is the rule of faith and practice for me as a Christian and as a Presbyterian," said Eckelmann in a written statement presented to the Whitworth Presidential Search Committee. "It is the cornerstone of my Christian faith."

Eckelmann also addressed the role of president and what he could bring to that role.

According to Eckelmann, his strong points are in management skills, interactive capabilities, academic involvements, and his Christian faith and practice.

Eckelmann received his academic training in management at the Graduate School of Business (University of Pittsburgh). Later, as he rose in Exxon, he said he found as much as 25 percent of his time was spent on personnel matters such as salaries and wages, plus the identification and development of people with high potential.

Although Eckelmann's background is not in education, he says his academic involvements in graduate school have provided a "broad-based training."

"My graduate education did not typically focus on a narrow window of some highly specialized problem," said Eckelmann. "This gave me an appreciation for the necessity of integrating multiple areas of study in order to solve many research problems."

According to Eckelmann, he has been instrumental in budgeting corporate monies to support selected areas of research in colleges/universities, preserving a link between the industrial and university/college community.

Dunifon's academic credentials include a master's degree and a doctorate from the University of Michigan with a concentration in educational psychology, and a master of divinity from Princeton Theological Seminary with a concentration in counseling psychology.

Currently, Dunifon is dean of the College of Education and professor of Higher Education at Illinois State University. He has been there since 1982.

In his work, Dunifon was employed as dean of Professional Studies and professor of Education, from 1975 to 1980, at the School of Education at the University of Michigan.

Dunifon describes his personal faith as constantly maturing.

"The experiences (and my interpretation of them) which are the components of my personal faith journey are varied," said Dunifon. "They have evolved and are continuing to evolve in God's good time toward a clear understanding of Christ's call to me in the context of the opportunities He has placed before me."

Dunifon suggested, in his response to the role of the presidency, that "It is im-

ASWC's Springfest benefits good cause

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

In an effort to become recognized in the community and to benefit a worthy organization, the students of Whitworth College will host Springfest '87 at Riverfront park on April 25.

The goal is to raise $10,000-15,000 for the Ronald McDonald House, according to Paul Ramsey, leader of the Springfest sponsorship committee.

The Ronald McDonald House is a place where families from nearby areas can stay while their children are being treated in a Spokane hospital for chronic illnesses.

The House has been quoted to be "The house that love built" because it can only be built through donations like what the students of Whitworth College are doing.

The plans for Springfest include games, food, rides, raffles, and other activities that contribute to carnival atmospheres.

The students of Whitworth are sponsoring the entire day and have been hard at work organizing, planning finances, and pulling the whole event

Chinese engineer and research chemist visit campus

A civil engineer and vice president of the 3M Company, Joseph Ling, and his wife, Rose Ling, a research chemist for the Henkel Corp., will be on campus April 19-25 as the Visiting Fellows of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation Program.

While at Whitworth, the Lings will teach classes, deliver lectures, and lead discussion sessions.

Mrs. Ling's topics of expertise include minority/female employment problems in industry; problems related to China's culture, history and social systems; and women's roles in old and new China. Mr. Ling will speak on the subject of environmental problems, including legislation, trends and government regulations.

Born and educated in China, the Lings completed their graduate work at the University of Minnesota, where Mrs. Ling received a master's degree in chemical engineering and Mr. Ling received a doctorate in sanitary engineering, the first Ph.D. to be given in that field.

Mr. Ling has been with the 3M Company since 1960 and is a special consultant and executive of the Community Service Executive Program. He is currently a member of the Advisory Board for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

In the past, he has served on the President's Advisory Board on Air Quality; the Environmental Studies Board, Commission on Natural Resources for the Natural Research Council; the National Technical Task Committee on Industrial Waste for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and dozens of other boards in the world.

Mr. Ling worked as a research chemist at General Mills for five years before returning to China as a research Fellow at the Institute of Chemistry, Chinese Academy of Science, in Peking. She has been a research chemist for the Henkel Corp., which was formerly General Mills, in Minneapolis since 1966.

Numbers irrelevant

To the editor,

This letter is in response to the March 24 Opinion column written by Bob Coleman with regard to the March 16 elections story. Coleman wrote that the purpose of the elections article was "to give the results of the primary election and give information concerning the candidates' platforms." Does the term "results" necessarily mean the numerical ballot count? He wrote "the elections committee has a duty to give a clear picture" and "not withhold information to make the elections different than they really are." The reality of the election was that two candidates for each position were chosen to participate in the general election while others were eliminated.

I find it hard to believe that the exact numbers of votes cast is "vital." Being fully informed about the candidates requires an understanding of the platform and beliefs of each candidate. It has nothing to do with the popularity of the candidate in the primary election. To publish the numerical results may simply encourage voting for the candidate who led in the primary election "because he'll win anyway."

A second disagreement with your Opinion column deals with the issue of confidentiality. Coleman wrote, "In a community like Whitworth, trust and openness should be the rules we live by." It is interesting that you can call Steve Broughton "naive" for trusting your reporter to not print certain facts he was given. Broughton probably should not have revealed them to the reporter, but he really believed Steve Brown understood his intention. Perhaps you mean that we at Whitworth should trust everyone in the community except reporters on the search for a story. Perhaps a course in ethics should be required of all students. If Whitworth is to be a Christian community, everyone, including the media, must respect the rights of others and care for them as individuals. To do otherwise is hypocritical.

Central America: I felt the contrast

To the editor,

Nothing educates better than experience. It embodies the very essence of learning and can, in an instant, turn an unaware student into a questioning thinker. Experience enables the learning to become a catalyst for change. The Central American Study Tour Group is changing.

In 1987 the eyes of the world are focused on the small strip of land joining North America and South America. The news media detects even the slightest tremor in these confused nations. Imagine a study tour just prior to World War II Germany or the Vietnam conflict! We are here where the tremors occur.

Thus far, our group has visited Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador and Nicaragua. We have met with their government leaders and those who work by the sides of El Salvadoran highways. We have heard differing reports of the political, economic and social realms of these countries from a spectrum of speakers and are only beginning to piece together a picture of the situation.

I think I speak for the group when I say that the most valuable part of the trip so far has been our Honduras experience. Guatemala was delightful. We studied Spanish in the quaint city of Antigua in preparation for our month of campo in Honduras. My campo was a small, one room mountain shack shared with a family of eight. I arose with the sun, worked and laughed with the campesinos and after our dinner of beans and rice I retired with the rise of the moon. For almost four weeks I saw poverty and the plight of the oppressed from their perspective.

Last night I was showing some photos of my home and family to them and they were obviously floored by the wealth and affluence. I began to look at the photos in a different light. I saw a group of happy, frivolous, ignorant North Americans. Standing in the poverty of that shack I felt the contrast of home - hot showers, plentiful variety of food, plumbing, medicine, clean clothes, entertainment, a job. I began to see the U.S. from the perspective of the eyes of the poor and it became a giant fantasy land, a Hollywood party, a Presidential Ball, a gold medal in the Olympics. Inconceivable! An unreachable folly, best not to think about it.

Whitworthian coverage poor

To the editor,

Lately, there have been some complaints about The Whitworthian's failure to do significant news articles about some of the major events which have taken place on campus. This has led me to seriously question the policies of The Whitworthian.

The International Spring Banquet, hosted by the ASWC's International Club, which includes more than one hundred members, undoubtedly represented a very significant event and cultural contribution to our college campus and the general community. Although the United States is widely recognized as having one of the most developed mass media in the world, many international students (some coming from countries where news publications are severely restricted) are curious about The Whit- worthian's lack of coverage for this important event.

The Whitworthian may not be effectively accomplishing a primary purpose; to deliver news about significant events around campus. For instance, many people wanted to know more about what happened at Mac Hall in Concert and about what kinds of food and entertainment were offered at the International Spring Banquet. However, they could not read about those events because The Whitworthian failed to write about them. Whose responsibility is it to report to the student body about those significant events, if it is not The Whitworthian's?

I would like to commend The Whitworthian for the quality reporting of issues it does cover, but also want to encourage better coverage of major on-campus events.

You might like to know

To the editor,

Here is a poem I wrote at the airport in El Salvador. The tour had a layover for eight hours in El Salvador between Honduras and Nicaragua. Because of the length of the layover, the airline bused us into San Salvador, the capital, to eat lunch, swim and relax at the Westin Motel, a luxury, even in the United States. We all found it a painful contrast to the four weeks earlier that all of us had spent living alone in rural poor villages in Honduras. It was a painful contrast to the shacks of cardboard, tin, and other scraps we passed in and out of in San Salvador.

As I rode the bus out of San Salvador back to the airport contemplating all this, we drove past a dead man lying on the side of the road. He had been hit by a car or something earlier, and he was left a bloody, mangled, twisted body on the side of the road. A crowd stood off to the side hardly acknowledging the dead body lying there next to them exposed and lifeless.

Here goes:

Next to the Crowd

*Sitting alone in a window seat
Feeling the warm sun on the side of my face
And the humid breeze
Through a half cracked window.
Riding this chartered bus
Past lands and lives
I've never seen before.
Staring pensively somewhere -
Where I can't remember -
My hands folded in my lap,
My head floating through a foggy mist -
I am where?
I still don't understand Why?
Nobody had the decency
To close
The dead man's eyes.
He is still laying
On the side of the road
Cold and stiff
Staring eternally
At me
On a chartered bus sitting alone.
Through the big hole in his head
I climb inside -
Sitting alone in a window seat
Feeling the warm sun on my face
And the humid breeze
Over my cold and stiff body
On the side of the road
When the chartered bus Passes by.*

I thought you might like to know. I thought Whitworth might like to know. Maybe nobody wants to know - I don't know. You decide.

Easter celebration under way

by Bob Coleman
of The Whitworthian

Easter Vigil celebrations are under way once again.

The Whitworth Easter Vigil began Ash Wednesday and will continue through the Lenten season culminating on Easter.

"The whole purpose is to have people experience the walk through history and the significant events that led to the death and resurrection of Christ," said Jenny Matheny, co-chair of the event.

Communion services are being held every Tuesday morning at 7:30 in correlation with the special services to be held on April 18, and Easter.

A Walk Through Holy History is planned for the day before Easter. This walk will include six programs put on by the Easter Vigil Committee.

The Service of Light will begin the night by giving an introduction to the whole Easter Vigil, according to Matheny. Creation and Fall is the title of the second program which will tell the creation story and Ken Urie and Kara Colyar will perform a dance symbolizing the fall of man. The Seder Meal, which is similar to the Jewish Passover, will be held at SAGA. Renewal of baptismal and communion vows is the focal point of the New Covenant service which will be held in the Chapel. The Babylonian exile will reflect on the suffering felt by the people of that time.

The Crucifixion service, which impacts people the most according to Matheny, will remind people that Christ died for them and leave them anticipating the morning, the Resurrection.

The Easter Sunrise Service will celebrate the Resurrection of Christ. It will be held in the Auditorium and proceed to the Pirate's Cove.

Famous potter offers lecture and workshop

David Shaner, a prominent Northwest potter, will demonstrate his techniques at a workshop at Whitworth College on Thursday, April 16 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Shaner's handmade and wheel-thrown pots are in the permanent collections of the National Arts Collection of the Smithsonian, the Philadelphia Museum of Art, and the Museum of Contemporary Crafts in New York.

Shaner, who will be on campus as a visiting artist, will also give an illustrated lecture on Wednesday, April 15, at 7 p.m. in the Little Theater in Cowles Auditorium.

After the lecture, a reception for the artist will be held in the Koehler Gallery at Whitworth, where his works will be displayed through May 1.

The idea for Springfest was born last year among three Whitworth students. Jenny Wilcox, John Sowers, and J.B. Meade, talked of the possibilities and Meade, ASWC president, used this idea as one of his campaign promises when running in '86.

According to Glenn Smith, director of student activities, the original idea envisioned a carnival-type day in Whitworth's Pine Bowl, designed to raise money for clubs and organizations.

The idea expanded from this and has grown into a single-day event in downtown Spokane. Area businesses will also participate.

Bands from the area will be performing as well. "Legend" and "New London" are two bands that will perform. One more will be added but has not been confirmed at this point.

Clubs from campus will set up booths around the park. Rocky Rococco Pizza will sponsor one booth selling pizza by the slice.

The involvement from the community has been terrific, according to Ramsey.

The purpose behind Ramsey's committee is to go out to the community and find sponsors.

The people in the businesses are extremely willing to help out," said Ramsey. "It's not because of the advertising mostly either. They are giving to a good cause." Some businesses have donated the labor and equipment for a video PSA (public service announcement).

Another big contributor has been the Key Tronics Corp. who will sponsor a 5K fun run through the park.

There will be an ongoing volleyball tournament during the day between eight teams. Teams will be from Whitworth and other Spokane leagues.

The Lions Club of Spokane will raffle off a 1950 Mercury during the day to benefit the McDonald House.

The intentions of Springfest, according to Smith, Ramsey, and Roeks are to:

1. Get Whitworth's name known around the community. "Here's something we can do to change the fact that Whitworth sometimes plays second seat to Gonzaga," said Smith.
2. Bring the student body at Whitworth together for a good cause.
3. Give something to the community.

President - from p. 1

perative to reduce the college's dependence on student tuition income and increase the endowment."

He lauded the current plan for a $20 million capital improvement campaign as properly timed, adding that further efforts are still needed.

In considering the role of presidency, Dunifon viewed the job not as a one-man show, but as interdependent with the areas of concern on the campus.

"The issue is not so much what I feel I can bring to the presidency of Whitworth College as it is to what extent there is congruence between my strengths and the accomplishments and the needs of the college," said Dunifon.

The Presidential Search Committee met Friday, April 10, to discuss the issues and make their evaluations of both candidates.

An announcement is expected from the committee chairman, Victor Pentz, about midweek, April 15, with the committee's recommendation which will go to the board of trustees for their approval.

Los Angeles firm assists in search for financial aid

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

Money can't buy you love, but it sure helps in paying for an education. With next year's hikes in tuition and room and board, students will need all the help they can get in appropriating the funds needed to attend school next year.

The Scholarship Bank, a non-profit organization, has been in business for nine years searching for possible private sources of financial aid.

The Los Angeles based firm has over 5,000 corporate, civic, and trade institutions such as the Ford Motor Co., and All State Insurance Co., who contribute funds to the Bank annually.

Availability

According to Steven Daz, director of the Scholarship Bank, half a billion dollars are available to students who can qualify on the basis of academic merit, anticipated college major, geographic preferences, special research projects, or through contests.

Also if student's parents are employed in a certain business, belong to a union, or have had military service, it could help them qualify for other scholarships.

The Scholarship Bank

works with the financial aid offices of high schools and colleges nationally to provide the information on the scholarships.

Each scholarship is worth at least $1,000 and some are renewable annually. For graduate students, grants worth $25,000 or more are available.

For Information

To receive more information on the Scholarship Bank, send a business-sized stamped self-addressed envelope to The Scholarship Bank, 4625 N. Grand, Covina, Ca. 91724. A questionnaire about the type of aid you are interested in will be sent back to you.

After receiving and processing your questionnaire, a print-out listing of up to 65 possible different financial aid sources will be returned to you.

You check the financial aid packages you're interested in and upon returning it, the Bank will send your name to the organizations you checked and the organizations will send you their application.

According to Daz, the ideal time to turn in your request form is before May 1.

You can also send for a free brochure called "How to Play Grantsmanship" which describes other helpful ways to obtain financial aid.

Bloomsday... the race date nears

by Philippe Coulon
of The Whitworthian

Bloomsday is coming! For the challenge, excitement, competition, health or tradition, you could be part of the 11th Annual Bloomsday run the first Sunday of May.

Maybe you feel like Junior Tracy Ver Velde, excited by the event, but wondering if you can run it. Then you should not hesitate because in Bloomsday you can fly, run, jog, walk, or even crawl. You can do it by yourself or with friends.

Dayne Nix, Whitworth bursar, has participated in the last two runs. He prefers to walk it with friends.

"It is nice to get out and walk with friends," Nix said. "I get my exercise. You have a feeling of accomplishment when you get through."

Last year, Nix covered the 7.2 miles in 1 hour and 43 minutes and expects to improve his time for this year.

A healthy exercise for one another. Whitworth graduate Tim Schwantz, who weighs 250 pounds, decided last year to walk Bloomsday for the first time.

"I walked it very slowly with older nurses from the hospital where I work. It makes it easier," said Schwantz, smiling. "It took time but I felt so good when I finished it. After the run, we visited to congratulate each other."

Schwantz wants to come back this year. "I am exercising at Club North (health facilities) to get ready for it," he said.

Preparation

For novices who prefer running or jogging, professional advice would not be superfluous.

"Participants should prepare themselves for that, starting at least three months before the event," said Hal Werner, Whitworth cross-country coach and former international trainer. "If they are not ready, the run would probably be reduced to a walk."

Werner specifically referred to the 700-yard hill, coined Heartbreak Hill, located at the last part of the loop.

"One should work out some hills at an easy, slow rhythm to know how to run the hill for Bloomsday," Werner said.

Werner suggested that, if possible, runners should participate in a shorter distance run in preparation for Bloomsday. He cited the Springest 5K fun-run, organized by the ASWC and held two weeks previous to Bloomsday, an excellent choice.

"Athletes will seek their own pace. If they are able to hold a continuous running pace for a 5K, it would not be much different for a 12K."

Julie Anderton, the vice-president for Student Life, ran the event two years ago, but missed the one last year.

"This year I want to do it again because it is so much a part of the city," she said with assertiveness. "I train 40 miles a week."

Excitement

Bobbie Mishler, a sophomore cross-country runner, will combine competition with fun.

"It is a lot of excitement to look around for people I know," said Mishler. "Last year I saw two people dressed up like tennis shoes and Whitworth students running in pajamas. This year I want to have fun, but I want to see if I can better my time and run below one hour," she added.

Looking around seems great, but listening to what you see could sound very strange. Junior Andy Collins said that the start of Bloomsday sounds like "thousands of feet pounding on the pavement, similar to a cattle stampede." Collins also noted the sounds of 100 cups hitting the ground at the same time at a water station, with the mass of people behind crushing them.

From the sound of a cup to the sound of a bridge, there is a gap.

"When thousands of people crossed the Maple Street Bridge at once, we could feel the bridge wiggling under our feet," said Gordon Watanabe, the director of International Students Affairs.

Watanabe hasn't missed any of the Bloomsday editions since its creation in 1977. At that time 1,200 people showed up at the starting line. "We felt like it was a huge race with tons of people," said Watanabe.

But, with last year's participants totaling around 48,000, Watanabe said, "We never believed that it would be that big."

Handicapped

Each year a great number of handicapped people can also become Bloomsdayians, because some people have dedicated themselves to pushing their wheelchairs.

This year, the members of Circle K are offering their services to the community by helping four handicapped people from Regency South Care Center in Bloomsday.

"In doing something for them, they are going to see that people care for them," said Sophomore Susan Poning, the secretary of Circle K.

"Bloomsday is a wonderful community event and health community event," said Watanabe. "We can really be proud of the city of Spokane and be part of it."

Assignment lasts beyond class students continue friendships

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Do you ever wonder what it's like to grow old, or do your thoughts often revert to the innocence and joy of childhood?

The college years provide a gradual transition from youth to adulthood, and some students participated in a program covering the entire spectrum last term.

Students in Developmental Psychology studied first-hand, through spending one hour each week with an elderly person and with a young child, the different stages of life.

According to the professor, Dr. Pat MacDonald, the course "covers the entire life span, from birth to death, and the progression from childhood through old age is viewed as a natural process. The essence of the program is that the students are not supposed to study the people, or report on them, but they are expected to concentrate on developing relationships and communication skills."

The program is designed to be a practical application of what the students learn in class. The goal is to make a friend with someone new who is in a different stage of life.

"The ultimate goal of the course is that students integrate their individual experiences with the material covered in class. Activity and variety are encouraged, so that each person's learning is unique," said MacDonald.

Sophomore Kate Christy felt she learned a great deal about life and people from the program.

"I was surprised at the results, because I was a little afraid that the program would become too routine and not enjoyable enough," said Christy. "My elderly friend, Frances, and I became quite close, and the relationship has continued beyond the class."

Kate Christy (L) and her friend, Frances George (R) — a lasting relationship.

"Frances was losing her eyesight, which gave me insight into her problems, and I helped her all I could. She was a teacher during the Depression, so she had many fascinating stories to share with me."

Junior Holly Stone felt that Developmental Psychology was one of the best courses she's taken at Whitworth. From her time with her young child, Stone mostly reviewed the developmental process. Through her relationship with her elderly person she recognized the dreams, hopes and fears of the elderly.

"My contact with my older friend broke a lot of stereotypes for me," Stone said. "She was very involved in her church, and even ran Bloomsday. Our friendship has continued, and I see her often."

Sophomore Steve Flegel felt his experience was positive because he didn't set any goals for himself beforehand.

"Because my expectations weren't too high, I was completely open to learning new things. In the 9-year-old child, I saw a lot of myself at that age. We went to football games, sledding, and even to dinner at SAGA. With the older person, I developed a friendship and often wondered if I'd be like that at his age."

Sophomore Beth Griffith learned the most from what her elderly friend couldn't do.

"My friend suffered from Alzheimer's disease, and she wasn't able to go out much, so we spent a great deal of time talking," Griffith explained. "She had so many interesting stories and history to relate to me. I learned a lot about relational skills and gained fresh insight into the life of a disabled person."

"With the child, it brought back many memories for me, and I learned to appreciate a child's view of the world. I've kept in touch some, and I recently sent my child a birthday card."

The consensus was that the students' experiences were positive and they learned many things that will prove valuable in the future as well as now.

They built friendships and gained new perspectives through 'mutual relationships' which integrated the material learned in class and perfected their communications skills.

Flegel concluded, "That kind of 'hands-on' experience can't possibly be learned in a classroom!"

Pictionary created in Spokane; inventor plans to expand market

by Ted Wilson
of the Whitworthian

The world is full of inventors who stumble upon original ideas that become fads. We have discovered Rubik's Cube, Apple computers, Dungeons and Dragons and Trivial Pursuit in the last several years. Now, we have another inventor who has stumbled onto another fad: Rob Angel, a Spokane native and inventor of Pictionary.

The game is played on a board, on paper and in the mind — and has its roots in the dictionary.

"It's something we would do at parties, and people would go absolutely crazy," said Angel. "We get letters constantly from people who have just played it, saying that it's more fun than Trivial Pursuit."

But, the game wasn't originally designed for kids, college students or families:

"It was originally an adult board game," said Angel. "But now families and college students are having a great time with it. The market has greatly expanded."

The game made its first appearance at Whitworth last fall, and its popularity grew measurably during Jan term.

"I'd heard of it but hadn't played it," said Junior Cheryl Sloat. "I finally got to play it at a non-alcoholic party during Jan term. I enjoyed it a lot. It was a stress release. You get to scream and try to draw pictures. Some of the words were really tough, though."

Angel played the game for three years in Spokane with his roommates when he got home from work. He later tried his game out on his family, and when they liked it, he knew he had something. It eventually turned into a large-scale project.

"I was self-taught in doing this," said Angel, who graduated from Western Washington University with a degree in business.

He wanted to sell 1000 games, but no one would produce such a small number for him.

"I literally started by looking in the yellow pages under boxes, and also bought pencils and paper and all those things and had them shipped to Seattle," he said.

The games were assembled, and he went to work trying to sell them. Major stores wouldn't sell it, but enough smaller stores took it to give Angel and his partner, Terry Langston, a start. Since they didn't have much money, they depended on word of mouth and toy shows for sales.

"It's a fun game, especially if you don't restrain yourself," said Sloat. "Trying to figure out what the other person was drawing and thinking was real difficult. Mary Bear kept drawing circles and I kept saying 'Marbles!' Later I found out it was a congregation of people in a church."

The game has drawn a lot of media attention, which helps Angel in his word of mouth campaign.

Locally, the Spokesman-Review did a profile on him on March 8, and the Whitworthian covered the first campus Pictionary tournament in its March 17 issue.

"It's a rowdy game," said Angel. "It's a party game. It's a good reason to sit in your dorm on a weekend and invite 10 friends over instead of going out and spending a bunch of money." The game costs between $24.95 and $29.95 in Spokane.

"People can't worry about what they look like or act like around other people when they play the game," said Sloat.

Angel's company was originally called Angel Games Inc., but was changed to Pictionary, inc. after the game became popular. The company plans to stay with Pictionary for a while.

"We're planning to expand by introducing Pictionary Junior and a travel Pictionary this summer," said Angel.

Reel Views "Sid and Nancy" ★★★ out of ★★★★★ Punk realism shown

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

Movies are like people. Each has a very different and distinct personality. Many appeal to a large majority with universally accepted qualities and are well-received and successful. Others are more difficult to understand and get to know, and they have a much smaller circle of friends and admirers.

"Sid and Nancy" falls into the second category. It is the story of real-life punk and "Sex Pistols" bassist, Sid Vicious (Gary Oldman), and Nancy Spungen (Chloe Webb), a groupie and heroin junkie.

At the film's outset we are introduced to Sid and Johnny Rotten (Drew Schofield) as they vandalize a Rolls-Royce on a London street, spray paint an apartment, drink a lot, and perform in a club, "the seedy underbelly of Europe." They are hardly portrayed as the cult heroes they were becoming, but just anti-establishment punks doing exactly what they want to.

The first time Sid really talks to Nancy she's furiously pounding a brick wall. He proceeds to smash his head against the wall, a wonderful sharing experience.

In London, the "Sex Pistols" are on top. In behaving as they please, they are feared and respected, or at least amusing and accepted. But, when the band tours the United States, and breaks up in San Francisco, the mood has changed.

With nothing left for the two of them in London, Sid and Nancy decide to try New York, Nancy's old stomping grounds.

In one of the most difficult scenes in the film, a drugged Nancy discusses the couple's future. Sid reassures her that everything will be better when they get to the States. Nancy reminds him that they've been in New York for a week already. They don't even know what day it is.

Sid's cohorts hate Nancy; Nancy's family hates Sid, a humorous, but uncomfortable episode. We are set for the Romeo and Juliet tragedy of the '70s to come to full-circle. Their lives are a mistake (Sid's manager called him a "fabulous disaster"), but these lost kids (Nancy is 20 when she dies) still take our pity with them.

The fact that this is a docudrama of sorts, in that the story, written and directed by Alex Cox, is based primarily on true-life accounts, only adds to the strange flavor of this touching and often amusing view of two very depressing lives.

From his choice of the two leads, to his decision to hire former "Sex Pistol" Gary Matlock to re-record the songs for the soundtrack (the actors sang their own parts), Cox covered nearly all the bases.

My only problem stems from the flow of the film. Being a stickler for continuity, it was hard to watch several scenes which flashed between New York and London, and different time periods with neither rhyme nor reason. Sandwiched between two scenes like a dried flower pressed in a book, they look nice, but don't make the reading any easier.

The fact that this film is not going to interest the vast majority of the populous is evident in the crowd at the showing I attended at the Magic Lantern. Besides myself and the friends I came with, the only other people in the theater were six high school girls with loud hair, make-up and clothes, and louder comments. They had already seen the film several times.

Expectations too high?

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

Drugs in college athletics. To what extent do they affect the quality of play? As with the changing times comes a change in the athlete. Gone are the days of wholesome youths playing college sports for fun, now it's big pressure and with that pressure comes choices. Unfortunately many of the choices turn out for the worse. Not to say that there aren't any wholesome young individuals left, in fact there are quite a few, but unfortunately they don't get any press for being drug-free.

Yet is it always the player's fault when he/she turns to drugs? With the pressures that come with athletics, such as the halls of academia and the social realm, what is to stop someone from "escaping to nirvana?" When there are high expectations placed on their shoulders, plus the social values of today is it any wonder why more and more athletes turn to drugs? Can you imagine what it might have been for Len Bias if he hadn't snorted a snootful of snow?

Whether it be hallucinogenic drugs, or so call "performance enhancement" drugs athletes are turning to them to ease the pressure that society places on them. The football player that takes steroids to beef up so he can fulfill his and others' expectations is a classic example. The only 'roids that should be in sports start with hemmorrh and can be cured by Preparation H.

Whether the athletes of today realize it or not, they are setting the trends for the next generation of upstarts. They are also influencing many people who look up to them. Their behavior, whether they like it or not, is carefully watched by thousands, and in some cases even millions. They need to set the precedents for the future.

Lady Bucs swing past SFCC, 9-0

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth women's tennis team completed a sweep of the Spokane Colleges Saturday by defeating Spokane Falls Community College, 9-0. The Lady Bucs defeated Gonzaga University March 24.

Spokane Falls started practicing only two weeks before the match.

"There is just not too much to say about the match," said Coach Jo Wagstaff. "Practices might have helped them, but I still think we would have beat them even if they would have started practicing earlier," said Wagstaff.

Freshman Sue Miller and Kari Strand had the same comments about the match.

"Most of the (Spokane Falls Community College) team had been practicing for only two weeks, and the girl I played had only practiced yesterday," said Miller.

Strand had similar feelings regarding the 9-0 sweep of Spokane Falls.

"My opponent hadn't played much lately. She was not very experienced," said Strand. "They asked people to go out for tennis that had never played before, because they didn't have enough players for the team," added Strand.

"We were out there giving them lessons. You can't even tell if you're playing good by playing them," said Wagstaff.

Wagstaff added that this match was like playing a high school team. "We are looking forward to Central Washington next weekend. Central will be a lot better game."

The game against Central Washington University is a rematch of a match the Whitworth ladies lost earlier in the season.

The Lady Bucs have a 7-5 record so far this season, with one of those victories being against Whitman College, last year's NAIA champions.

The results for the singles matches are: Ann Benzel defeated Christi Riper, 6-0, 6-0; Allison Heiser defeated Erika Hall 6-0, 6-1; Toni Fenner defeated Becky Naylor 6-4, 6-0; Sue Miller defeated Leslie Osbourne 6-2, 6-2; Kari Strand defeated Marty Wrigley 6-2, 6-2; Krista Price defeated Brenda Smith 6-0, 6-0; Michelle Conner defeated Marianne Bowen 6-0, 6-0.

The results of doubles were as follows: Sally Reed and Benzel defeated Riper and Hall 6-2, 6-1; Heiser and Price defeated Naylor and Reisenauer 6-1, 6-2; Fenner and Strand defeated Wrigley and Osbourne 6-1, 6-0; Conner and Miller defeated Smith and Bowen 6-0, 6-0.

The women were scheduled to play Gonzaga Friday, but the match was cancelled due to rain. Wagstaff said the match will be rescheduled for late April.

Pirates sweep series, win-streak reaches nine

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

In one of his essays baseball writer W.P. Kinsella called it "The Battery": a balanced attack of consistent pitching and strong hitting. Multiply that by 10 and that's exactly what the Pirates used to win five games last week, improving their win-streak to nine.

Whitworth opened the week on Tuesday, at home against Gonzaga University. The Bucs broke away from a 1-1 game, scoring six runs in the bottom of the third inning. Center fielder Scott Barkley, who had the game-winning RBI, led a barrage of RBI singles in the frame, as the Pirates never looked back in their 12-6 pouncing.

Pitcher Scott Carolan went the distance, scattering nine hits for the win.

However, the real festivities began on Saturday when the Pirates hosted the University of Puget Sound Loggers for a set of doubleheaders.

In Saturday's opener Whitworth got things rolling early as they pushed across seven runs in the bottom of the second inning. Catcher Ed Beloate started the rally with a bases-loaded, two-run single. Randy Russell, Barkley, and Ryan Clements also had RBI singles in the inning. Dan Demchuk, Troy Anderson, Beloate, and Clements all had three hits for the game. Barkley belted a two-run homer and collected four RBI's, as did Russell.

The Pirates belted 19 hits for the game and hit an even .500, as they coasted to a 16-4 win.

In Saturday's nightcap it was the long ball that propelled the Bucs to an easy 8-3 victory. Anderson and Barkley each homered, while Beloate drilled a two-run triple.

Pitcher Brian Cook, 2-3, scattered seven hits and struck out five in his first complete game.

On Saturday, UPS hoped to bounce back and salvage a split with the Pirates. However, the battery continued as Whitworth increased its one-two punch of deadly hitting and strong pitching.

In the opener, Carolan, 5-1, returned from his win over GU on Tuesday, blanking the Loggers, 18-0, in a five-hitter.

The Pirate bats showed no mercy, scoring eight runs in the first inning, and pounding out 20 hits in the route. Anderson, Beloate, Clements, and Russell all homered. Shortstop Scott Ralph had three hits and four RBI's.

In the finale, Whitworth increased its run-total for the five games at home to 69 by thumping UPS 15-1. Anderson continued his hit parade with two more long balls, giving him four for the weekend. Barkley also homered giving the Bucs 10 home-runs for the homestand.

Eddie Eugenio, 2-2, struck out six and went the distance for the Bucs.

However, the big story was Clements. Clements increased his hitting streak to a sizzling 15 games. Over the weekend Clements was 11-16 with 10 RBI's and five extra base hits.

Clements played with an injured ankle earlier in the season.

Coach Scott McQuilkin was very pleased with the team's performance. McQuilkin noted that the Pirates were playing hurt earlier in the year and, "We're just starting to get healed up. We can hit with anyone, and our pitching staff is getting some much needed rest. We're definitely one of the teams to beat along with Central and PLU."

Men's tennis drop four of six

by Peter Christensen
of The Whitworthian

The men's tennis team finished a 2-4 week Saturday. On Monday the Pirates slammed Eastern Montana University 8-1 at home. Kirk Rector, Whitworth's number one player, won his match in straight sets, along with Brad Larkin, Mark Eidson, and Marc Eilers. Willie Stewart and Mark Frisby won in split sets.

"We didn't play tough enough when we had to."

-Ross Cutter

On Tuesday the team traveled to Eastern Washington University where they were beaten 3-6. Coach Ross Cutter said, "We didn't play tough enough when we had to."

Rector won in straight sets, as did Boo Boatman. Frisby won in split sets.

Whitworth lost all of the doubles matches. Said Cutter, "We definitely did not play our best match of the year (at Eastern), we were a little disappointed in the results. I would like to think it was an off day that isn't going to happen again."

The Pirates played at home again on Thursday where they crushed the Community Colleges of Spokane, 8-1. Stewart, Frisby, and Tod Whitman won their matches in split sets. "With all those close matches we had a few anxious moments," said Cutter. Larkin and Eidson both won in straight sets. Whitworth won two of the doubles, the other was cancelled because of an injury.

The Bucs ended the week losing three matches. Forced to play indoors due to rain the Pirates fell 6-2 to Willamette in shortened pro-sets.

Boo Boatman concentrates on the return. Peter Christensen

Mark Frisby and Boo Boatman picked up wins in the Pirates 7-2 loss to Seattle Pacific.

Whitman, which ranks among the top ten NAIA tennis teams nationally, according to Cutter, downed Whitworth 9-0.

Knowlton captures decathlon, Jacobson takes heptathlon

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth came out on top of the men's decathlon and women's heptathlon at the Spokane Falls Multi-Event Invitational.

Gary Knowlton, a junior, accumulated 6258 points to win the decathlon. Junior Kari Jacobson took first place in the heptathlon with 4173 points, while teammate Gwen Keiser finished second with 3868 points.

Sophomore Darrin Schmidt, who also competed, said, "After doing a decathlon, a triathlon would seem easy. This is so mentally draining."

Schmidt placed seventh overall, racking up 5072 points.

Coach Arnie Tyler, who specializes in multi-events, agreed, "It is a challenge to go from one event to the next. There's only a half-hour between events...It's mental as much as a physical challenge."

Tyler was extremely pleased with his four athletes' ability to "separate (themselves) mentally from the past event and do their best in the next event."

Knowlton and Jacobson got off to a strong start Friday. Knowlton won the 400m dash, running it in 51.7. He narrowly led the men with 3256 points.

Jacobson captured the 100m hurdles (16.39) and ran in a downpour to win the 200m dash (26.82). She had 2497 points at the end of the first day, leading her closest competitor by 137 points. Winning the 800m with a time of 2:28.36, Jacobson clinched her victory Saturday.

Keiser ranked fourth after Friday's results were tallied, but overcame the competition Saturday to take second place.

Jacobson's victory was especially impressive because she has been battling a strained quadricep injury.

"I'm pretty happy about the meet, even though I have done better," she said. "It was my first real meet since the indoor nationals. I hadn't run the hurdles for six weeks, so I feel good about the results."

Knowlton attributes his win to better training. "I'm stronger and quicker this year." He hopes to continue his progress and qualify for Nationals this season.

Tyler praised Knowlton and Jacobson and was positive about Keiser and Schmidt. "Gwen has the potential - she's done better in the past and I know she can do it again. This was only the second time Darrin has done the decathlon. He learned a lot. In this game experience is so important."

Despite the fatigue after the meet, Schmidt was still convinced, "It's the ultimate sport."

Blood drive draws 91 pints

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

As reported by the Spokane and Inland Empire Blood Bank, 2,000 pints of blood are needed each month in Spokane and neighboring hospitals.

In response to this need, the Whitworth community donated 91 pints of blood in last week's blood drive, April 9 and 10.

Lori Albin, SERVE coordinator, spent two weeks preparing for the blood drive.

Her job consisted of finding volunteers who would help to process information.

Albin also worked at encouraging student donations by organizing a campus-wide contest between dorms and off-campus students.

The off-campus students donated the most blood and received a plague which had been held by Ballard.

The donors had to meet certain eligibility requirements before they could give blood.

They could not have AIDS, Hepatitis, Malaria, or a cold. If their blood was given to a recipient, that person could catch the same disease.

"I heard that some people were afraid to give blood because they might catch AIDS," said Dave Landfried, Physical Plant employee.

According to Blood Bank information, AIDS can't be caught by giving blood. However, you could catch it if you received a transfusion from someone else who has it.

Donors could not be under 110 pounds, pregnant, or have undergone surgery within the past six months. People in these categories need their reserves of blood and they shouldn't give it up.

$2500 raised for Diakonia

The Awesome Auction raised more than $2500 for Diakonia, Whitworth's summer mission program for students.

The money will help pay transportation and expenses for students who will work for Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity in New York, Tony Campolo's program for underprivileged children in Philadelphia, and ministries in Northern Ireland and Mexico.

A variety of contributions were donated to the auction. One of the most unusual donations was from Dr. Victor Bobb, associate professor of English, who writes romance stories under an assumed name.

For $27, two Whitworth students will be immortalized in prose, guaranteed to include guilt, love, passion, and sentimentality.

Letter — from page 2

We closed the picture case and walked to our beds. The little boys, shuffled clumsily in their boots to their room divided by an aluminum siding bag and blew out the candle. The frigid room became a black cell and my mind wandered home one last time; to my bedroom, to the kitchen, to the living room, to the garage - what I was sleeping in tonight was much worse than living in our garage. I was deeply saddened and found it terribly difficult to sleep. As Ron Frase said, "It's painful to lose your innocence."

Search reopened for presidency

by Steven Brown
of the Whitworthian

The Whitworth College presidential search committee (PSC) reopened the search for a successor to the position being vacated by Robert Mounce, Whitworth's current president.

Mounce will retire later this August after holding the position since 1981.

The PSC made its decision to reopen the search following two on-campus visits by its candidates, Dr. William Dunifon and Dr. Walter Eckelmann.

Dunifon, who visited in late March, is dean of the College of Education at Illinois State University. Eckelmann, who finished his visit two weeks ago, has been primarily employed in business areas including the Sohio Petroleum Corporation as senior vice president of technology.

Both candidates faced an intensive two-day visit that introduced them to virtually every department and interest group at the college. Following the visits, the PSC chose to reopen the search.

"What we saw didn't warrant making either one of the candidates president of Whitworth," said Vic Pentz, chairman of the PSC.

Pentz could not say that the two candidates have been eliminated from the selection process but said "that may not be an unwarranted conclusion."

Pentz was responding to the rumors circulating around the campus that both candidates had been dropped from consideration.

The PSC has not addressed the issue of the two candidates' stance in the process but will at their next meeting.

Robert, Jean Mounce honored by Whitworth

Robert H. Mounce, Whitworth's president since 1981, and his wife, Jean, will be the guests of honor at an April 26 brunch in the Empire Ballroom of the Ridpath Hotel, college officials said last week.

A search is now in progress to replace Mounce, who recently announced he will retire in August.

During the Mounce administration, enrollment at Whitworth increased to 1,900 students, and the endowment fund quadrupled to $8 million.

Other achievements include the new $2 million Aquatic Center, completed in 1985, and a $7 million renovation of the campus which is now in progress.

Mounce, 65, said he decided to retire in order to spend more time traveling for the college and writing.

A New Testament scholar, he is the author of 11 books, including commentaries for the Good News Bible series and the Wycliffe Bible series.

He has acted as consultant to the publishing houses of Harper and Row and J.P. Lippincott, and written articles for five Bible dictionaries.

A program following the brunch will feature selections by the Whitworth Choir and a special presentation to the Mounce couple by the Whitworth board of trustees.

Other presentations by the Whitworth Auxiliary, ASWC, Alumni Association, and the faculty are also planned.

McMillan Hall undergoes renovations beginning May 19.

Mac Hall ready for facelift

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

Bo Pear, Inc., a Spokane-based construction firm, has been awarded a $556,488 contract for this summer's renovation of McMillan Hall, Physical Plant Director Don Holden announced last week.

The company was the lowest bidder for the project, which will cost the college in excess of $1 million. The renovation, scheduled to begin May 19, will last a maximum of 110 days. The dormitory is scheduled for completion on Sept. 4.

Mac Hall, built in 1914, has a character all of its own. President Mounce charged a design committee last December with the task of maintaining McMillan's unique and historical image, while modernizing and improving its aged and inadequate facilities.

Adkison, Leigh, Sims and Cuppage (ALSC), Architects, were contracted by the college to listen to the design committee's suggestions and to incorporate them into their renovation design.

Two of the committee's members, Holden and Paul Ramsey, McMillan resident assistant, said that the committee worked very well together, and the architects' design is an excellent representation of its desires.

The basic design of the structure does not allow for the residence rooms to be made similar, to the relief of everyone concerned about the renovation.

Although space is going to be maximized and the rooms will be standardized in lighting, heating, color, and furnishings, the uniqueness of rooms will largely remain intact.

The restroom facilities in the remodeled building will be stacked and standardized. The showers and the sinks and toilets will be remodeled with separate cold water lines, eliminating scalding in the showers.

A pump will be installed to ensure that the third floor will have hot showers.

New ASWC senators elected

by Barb Visser
of the Whitworthian

Senate elections, the second in recent Whitworth history, took place on April 9. The new senators are: for the Sophomores, Mike Rough and Ron Goodale; Juniors, Wendi Barram and Mark Eidson; Seniors, Carolyn Click and Cheryl Sloat; and senators-at-large, Barry Elkin and Dan Hulsizer.

Because this is the second year of the bicameral system, the senators' roles are still ambiguous.

"It's sort of a gray area," said Hulsizer, who will be a junior next year. He explained that the Senate deals more with issues that have an impact on the college as a whole, such as 24-hour visitation, rather than dorm activities.

Not only do the senators add a student voice in campus issues, they also try to unify the group of students which they represent.

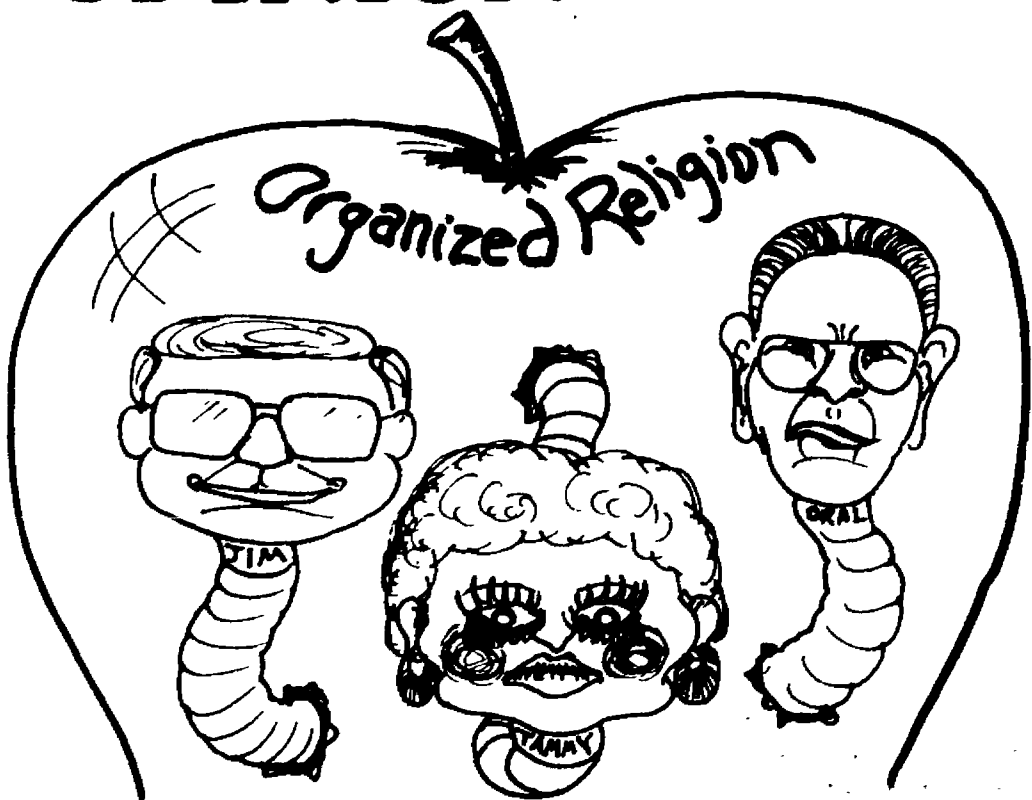

Barram, current president of South Warren, added that another topic under discussion is how involved the students should become in the centennial campaign renovations. They will also look at faculty hiring policies and the teacher evaluations filled out by students.

Personal goals for Barram as senator include trying to make it impossible for students in the junior class to be unaware of what is happening. That way, she explained, "They can't use the excuse that 'they didn't know'."

Barram stressed that students need to see results so that they can see how hard ASWC members work and how worthwhile the positions are.

IT ONLY TAKES ONE TO MAKE IT LOOK ROTTEN!

Kittens insignificant

Emphasize the poor

To the Editor,

As we anxiously awaited the joy Don Liebert would bring us in the form of letters from campus we discovered that he also had several copies of the March 17th Whitworthian. As we finished reading the letters, I reached for news from my academic and intellectual base, when I was attacked by "Dustball" and "Grandma Kitty". Then overjoyed to hear how happy and exciting Pictionary could be. With a turnout of 3 teams for the championship, I can see it truly is sweeping the campus by storm.

I by no means am trying to tell you, from here, that you must be bored out of your minds. But, you must be bored out of your minds.

As we stare down the throats of poverty and contemplate the never-ending complications of political turmoil both first hand and by word of mouth, the poor little kitties lose significance to the world in general.

As was stated in the cat feature story the fact that they (the kitties) are God's creatures, and thereby deserve love and attention too and I realize there isn't much you can do to aid Central America, where we happen to be. I also realize that on a slightly higher level are the poor and hungry in Spokane not to mention the homeless on top of all that. Look to the Union Gospel Mission and please give that half of your sandwich to them, as cats can live on what they find in holes and under picnic tables, Man cannot.

Each resident space will be given a desk, including three drawers, a bookcase, a light and a vinyl covered bulletin board. Also each room will receive one bunkable bed, one chest of drawers and a wardrobe.

Except for the third floor, all of these furnishings will be moveable. Because of its pitched ceiling, the third floor's rooms will have built-in wardrobes and drawers.

The floors of the residence rooms will be vinyl tile. A color scheme of mauve and tan will be used with substantial dark wood trim throughout the building.

Flourescent lighting will replace the dim incandescents everywhere except for the lounge, recreation room and resident director apartment.

"The RD will be moved over here. That will put a little damper on things," said Mac President and design committee member Shawn Dewberry. "Jim Swink (RD for Mac/Ballard) wants to be sure that several traditions go by the wayside so as to preserve the structure."

During the design process, Dewberry was on the lookout for the important aspects of dorm life that could be improved through the renovation process.

"There will be a visitor's toilet for the young ladies who are over here visiting late at night," he said.

He also voiced concern about certain traditions that will no longer be accepted.

"Obviously we can't bring in six dumptruck loads of leaves (for the annual haunted house) and smear the walls with ketchup."

The unwritten law that you can do whatever you want to your room except set it on fire or park your car inside will be gone.

Ramsey was also a stickler for details.

"There was a big argument over doorknobs," said Ramsey. "They wanted to

Electronic churches fall from grace

by Tim Boggess
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

And Jesus entered the temple of God and drove out all who sold and bought in the temple, and he overturned the tables of the money-changers and the seats of those who sold pigeons. He said to them, "It is written, 'My house shall be called a house of prayer'; but you make it a den of robbers." (Matthew 21:12-13)

Mainline Christians are having a field day with the latest incidents bubbling up from the murky bayous of the "Electronic Church"; and, like the gas expelled from these decomposing waters, the situation is explosive and stinks to high heaven (no pun intended). Gosh, we haven't had this much fun since we watched Shirley MacLaine go "Out On a Limb" — and out of her mind — on prime time TV. Martin Luther would have loved this.

It has all the makings of a Heraldo Rivera documentary — the good, the bad, the ugly, and the Seven Deadly Sins to boot. First, the fallen hero: Jim (alias "Papa Smurf") Bakker, the warm fuzzy of televangelism, stripped of his $129 million per year PTL (or "Praise The Lord" and "People That Love") empire due to a night of sin in 1980.

The culprit: Jessica "She-Devil" Hahn, the avid follower of Bakker who was (by her account) dragged with wine and seduced in a Clearwater Beach, Fla. hotel.

The confused, yet faithful wife: Tammy Faye, whose frequent habit of speaking in tongues was probably less a manifestation of the Holy Spirit than a side effect of her expensive drug habit.

The power-monger: Jimmy Swaggart, who blew the whistle on Bakker and is being accused of trying to take over PTL. He is also being sued for $90 million for exposing another Pentecostal evangelist of infidelity. His ministry grossed $142 million last year, making it the wealthiest member of the $2 billion (of which none need be accounted for) "Electronic Churches."

The savior: Moral Majority Leader Jerry Falwell, appointed by Bakker as his successor of PTL. Though a fundamentalist, Falwell is hoped to be able to bring credibility back to the tarnished, mainly Pentecostal, televangelists.

The extortionist: Oral Roberts, the granddaddy of televangelism, whose "God will call me home" plea got him $8 million and an urging to seek psychiatric help. Not since the fall of Elvis has waning popularity come to such a pathetic ending.

Many people are relishing this "fall from grace" of televangelism, and with good reason. Mainly targeted at the low-income, low-educated sector of the population (i.e., little old ladies with their Social Security checks), televangelists commonly preach easy, diluted answers to tough theological questions. Emotion-packed and ethereal, many television evangelists consider doctrine merely as a minor obstacle. A spoonful of sugar helps the medicine go down. Mary Poppins would be proud.

Although we are told to love our neighbors as ourselves, I find it very hard to sympathize with the plight of Jim Bakker. Any man who, dressed in a velour jogging suit and cheesy grin, can stand in front of millions of people and ask for donations to build a 2,300 acre, multimillion dollar amusement park (while also filtering $265,000 of proceeds to appease his adulteress) deserves a good flogging. What good is a wave pool to someone who is dying of hunger?

have stainless steel doorknobs, but we thought that they would make Mac look too modern. So we fought for brass doorknobs — and we won.

"We looked at small details like these, but they help to preserve the tradition of Mac. Once we got the idea across to the architects that we wanted to preserve Mac's tradition, they took off with it. They were the ones that came up with the lofts in the shaft," he said.

The unique lofts that are prevalent in Mac are an attraction for many students.

"The lofted areas are our attempt to maintain the uniqueness of Mac," said Holden.

The room designs were an immediate hit with Mac residents. The rooms will be constructed in what is called "The Shaft."

According to Holden, the original vaulted ceiling of what once served as the Murray Chapel will be revealed by removing the lowered ceiling that was installed during a former remodeling.

The added space will allow for three new rooms, one quad and two doubles, to have both a main living space and interior stairs leading to an 8-foot wide loft.

There is one problem the residents have with the renovation — many of their rooms will not exist next year. There are 11 singles this year, but there will only be five next year.

McDonald House celebrates opening

by Suzan Fleshman
of the Whitworthian

Whitworth students have been working hard, planners at the Ronald McDonald House have been working hard, and finally it will all come to an end as Spokane's Ronald McDonald House, W. 1015 5th Ave., will open its doors this week.

The celebration of the week began with the ribbon cutting Monday morning and will end Saturday as the students of Whitworth College sponsor Springfest '87, a day of activities at Riverfront Park designed to benefit the house.

Carol Koller, the executive director of Spokane's Ronald McDonald House said, "...every person, business, or organization of the community that does something is considered a volunteer to the McDonald House... (and)... this is the biggest volunteer effort this community has ever seen."

Two and one half years ago the entire work force of the McDonald Houses was completely volunteer. The McDonald House can not survive without its volunteers. According to Koller, the exterior of the house is brick, "...and every brick was laid by volunteers."

The volunteer coordinator for the house has designed a program, recruited, and trained enough people to have 90 volunteer workers ready to go when the doors open, according to Koller.

The first Ronald McDonald House, built in 1974 in Philadelphia, addressed with the need of helping families in a time of crisis.

According to Koller, over 2,000 children come to Spokane for medical treatment every year because of lack of facilities in their home area.

The service of the McDonald House is to provide a "home away from home" for these families. "Some families drive 300 miles a day now to get their treatment," said Koller. With this house, families will be able to stay where their children are.

There is no limit of time a family can stay at the house.

"Maybe a baby will need treatment for six months," said Koller, "the family can't stay that whole time... they will know they have a place to stay when they come back each time."

The house has already been proving itself to be a success by families calling weeks before the opening to inquire about staying.

The house has space for 14 families at a time with up to five members per family, and families are served on a first come, first served basis.

Koller said there are certain criteria that each family needs to meet to be able to stay at the home.

The family must have a child with a long-term or serious illness, must live away from Spokane, and must be referred by their physician. Koller added that the house will be working closely with all area hospitals.

"(Springfest) exemplifies how this house has come to be."

Carol Koller

This house has been built to serve the people in the Eastern Washington area, all of Idaho to central Montana, and the northeast part of Oregon.

To cover the rest of these states, there are Ronald McDonald homes in Seattle, Portland, and Billings, Mont.

The name of "Ronald McDonald House" does not mean that the McDonald corporation owns the house.

"They give wonderful support," said Koller. She also added that McDonald stores of the area, reaching from Pendleton, Ore., to Sandpoint, Idaho, have been doing fund-raising for the house and have pledged to give 25 percent of the on-going operating budget.

"A McDonalds representative does sit on the board of directors though," said Koller.

The rest of the money comes from donations from the community such as businesses, schools, and organizations.

ASWC hopes to raise approximately $10,000 — $15,000 for the house with their efforts at Springfest, according to Paul Ramsey, leader of Springfest's Sponsorship Committee.

"I think it's wonderful... (what Whitworth is doing)... I have been very impressed with the quality of leadership and follow through," said Koller.

"(Springfest)... exemplifies how this house has come to be," said Koller, "everyone has a gift to give, and everyone's gift is needed."

The building could only have been built through the contributions of people and organizations, said Koller.

Koller said the estimated annual budget stands at $100,000.

Historical Hawthorne House harbors heritage

by Philippe Coulon
of the Whitworthian

Many cities have their historical monuments, Whitworth College has its historical home.

The Hawthorne House, and more precisely the imposing white house facing the school, had been the residence of three consecutive presidents before being rented out in the late 1970s. It required the decision of Darrell Guder Vice-President of Academic Affairs, to occupy the house in order to see that asset being reused to the service of Whitworth College community.

Whitworth College purchased the Hawthorne House in 1942 under President Frank Warren who resided there from 1940 until 1964. At that time the Whitworth Board of Trustees decided to name the house, "the President's Home." As soon as Warren was established in the house with his wife and three children, he made it available to the college community.

Regular Visits

"He often invited students and faculty members in the house," said Mrs. Alice Quall, Warren's sister. "He used to entertain all the faculty for Thanksgiving with a watermelon feed."

Basketball players regularly visited the President's Home. The president did not miss any game, he often went down to the locker room to congratulate the players," said Quall. "After the game, basketball players were received in the house."

Warren not only invited Whitworth community in the house but also outsiders.

"Governor Arthur Langlie (former governor of Washington) stayed several times in the house," said Mrs. Virginia Aisley, one of Warren's daughters.

Senator John Fitzgerald Kennedy (who became U.S. President) might have stayed in the house during his presidential campaign in February 1960 while visiting Whitworth but Aisley cannot confirm this.

Hawthorne house has not always appeared as it does now.

Restorations

"The pillar was white," said Aisley, "but the house showed its red bricks before. In the garden was a fishpond with a bridge passing over. They filled the pond with dirt in 1964, just after my dad died."

Under Warren's presidency, no restoration had been made. "My dad said that it was no way to restore the house until he is gone," said Aisley.

Remodeling of the old house only started following Warren's death.

From 1964 to 1979, Dr. Koehler and Dr. Lindaman the two successive presidents occupied the President's Home.

"Lindaman used to have a reception for new students at the house," said Dr. Pat McDonald from the Psychology department.

After 1979 the house ceased to be the President's Home, and was simply rented out.

"It needed a lot of work," said Guder. "The college at that time was not able to do the kind of work on that house to put it into good shape."

Guder was asked to be the dean's residence of the house. "Many people came to us and asked us to consider living there because it is a house which is a part of the college community," said Guder. "We made a suggestion to the college that we would restore the house without the expenses of the college."

The board of trustees and administration agreed to dedicate the house in honor of Dorothy Dixon, a highly respected trustee, said Guder.

The Guders have restored the old-fashioned features.

Traditional

"We completely added a room and made it into a family room," said Guder. "We remodeled the stairway to make it more traditional and we put in an additional fireplace."

Dr. John Yoder, Political Science department, who worked as a carpenter in the past, appreciated the quality of the work.

"It is done extremely well," said Yoder. "It is restored as it has to be restored."

The house has regained its unity with the college community.

"We are using it under various kinds of hospitalities," said Guder. "It is primarily faculty although we have had various student groups coming in as the international students, the Berlin trip students."

"Having a place intrically involved with campus activities is a nice feeling," said McDonald.

Variety sets WW apart

by Michele Morin
of the Whitworthian

Attend Generic University. We are the best Christian liberal arts college in the country. The tuition is reasonable, the campus and the facilities are top notch, and a degree from Generic University virtually guarantees our graduates a rewarding job in a high-paying field.

Although many college brochures and handbooks lead prospective students to believe that their institution is the most qualified and fun, one can often be left confused because many colleges promise things they can't deliver. What separates one college from thousands of others, and how is Whitworth unique among Christian colleges?

Many students and faculty agree that certain programs and standards at Whitworth allow it to stand apart from other similar institutions. The difference seems to be in the areas of size, freedom, and diversity of people.

According to Gordon Toyama, assistant director of Admissions, "A lot of schools say they are unique and some are stronger in certain areas, and what makes Whitworth unique to one may be different to another. Some attend because of the opportunities to study abroad or because of the Jan Term programs."

Some students feel that the smaller size of the school allows for more personal contact between the students and faculty, and more of a chance to be involved in activities.

"The size of the college is what makes it special to me. The small size is both good and bad. The negative aspects are that the tuition is extremely high, and the facilities are basically nothing more than minimum. The positive aspects are that the school and the teachers are committed to the students, and the school is a close community. The class sizes are small, which enables a better student/teacher relationship. I believe that Whitworth is a great place to learn!" said Freshman Josh Wilcox.

Junior Stephanie Halton shared similar sentiments.

"I believe that Whitworth is unique because of the people and their attitude. There is more communication between the professors and the students. The small class size

Theatre Arts plans 'Picnic'

by Kim Riemland
of the Whitworthian

The Whitworth College Theater Arts Department is planning a picnic and inviting everyone to attend.

William Inge's "Picnic" hits the Auditorium stage April 24, 25, and 26.

The play, performed by a cast of 11 Whitworth students, is described as a summer romance.

"Picnic" is a story of two all-female families in a small midwestern town whose lives are turned upside down when a young, handsome vagabond enters the picture. The play takes a serious look at how each person's life is affected.

Director Rick Hornor has confidence in the script and its track record.

"Picnic" won a Pulitzer Prize for literature and the Critic's Choice in the early 1950s, and was later made into an Academy Award-winning movie, according to Hornor.

Hornor said the play is very realistic and the characters are easy to relate to.

"The strongest quality in the play is the characterization," he said. "It's a good character play."

"I think many people will see themselves," said Hornor.

According to Hornor, rehearsing for the production has been no picnic; the characterization that makes the play so powerful also makes it a tough one for the actors to master.

'Raising Arizona': a rollercoaster ride of abduction

by Tad Wisenor
of The Whitworthian

Kidnapping, armed robbery, car chases, and blackmail are occasionally used as vehicles for comedy films; but almost never have all three been employed in the same movie. "Raising Arizona" is not a typical comedy film, however. Unlike most recent entries in this genre, "Raising Arizona" is original, thoughtful, extremely well-crafted, and very funny.

Never before has more story been revealed prior to the opening credits. H.I. "Hi" McDunnough (Nicholas Cage) is a continually unlucky convenience store robber in Tempe, Arizona. In between prison sentences he woos policewoman Edwina (Holly Hunter). After the couple marries and discovers they can't have children, life in their mobile home loses its "pizazz."

When unpainted furniture magnate Nathan Arizona and his wife, Florence, give birth to quintuplets (Harry, Barry, Larry, Garry, and Nathan Jr.) the McDunnough's are jealous and desperate. In an attempt to save their marriage they decide to steal one of the children. "I need a baby. They got more than they can handle," said Edwina. Only now do the opening credits roll.

More characters quickly enter the picture. Gail and Neville (John Goodman and William Forsythe) are two escaped cons, "the livest pair that's ever broken air," and a 'swinging' 80's couple, Glen and Dot (Sam McMurray and Frances McDormand), "respectable" friends of the McDunnoughs, bring another wrinkle.

Finally, Leonard Smalls, an apocalyptic Mad Max-style biker, fills out our list of people to come in contact with the rollercoaster ride that is Nathan Jr.'s tale of abduction. Says hired manhunter

Smalls, "You want to find an outlaw, call an outlaw. If you want a Dunkin' Donuts, call a cop."

The highlights of the film involve Nathan Jr. himself (T.J. Kuhn). The Coen brothers — director-screenwriter Joel and producer-screenwriter Ethan had a casting director sift through over 300 8-month-old babies before choosing from the last six themselves. Aside from the story itself, the art of the brothers' comedic wit extends to the meticulous and unordinary camera angles. Never before has visual point-of-view been employed to such a hilarious end.

In television and film, chase scenes have become gratuitous and predictable. The fact that this film contains one of the two best chase scenes ever witnessed (second only to the "Blues Brothers") is icing on the cake. What H.I. will do for a bale of "Huggies" diapers boggles the mind. One vigilante convenience store employee, several trigger-happy cops, an innocent pickup driver with the line "Son, ya got a panty on your head," a city pound-full of mongrels, and one urban household later and the audience needs time to breathe. The musical accompaniment only adds to the hilarity.

The film never slows down until the climax, and a thoughtful ending provides plenty of warmth amidst the belly-laughs. This motion-picture is appealing on much more than a slapstick level. While they may be unrealistic and almost stereotypically 'hayseed,' the characters are genuinely loveable albeit quirky.

The lone standout of this solid, consistent cast is Nicolas Cage. Considered too young and a little overdone in "Peggy Sue Got Married," here he shines. As the film's narrator he brings a definite intellectual charm to a "product of society" droopy-eyed ex-con who just wants his life to work out. You can't help but cheer him on.

This is easily one of the most original films I have seen in several years. That is a pretty good thing to be in these days of endless sequels and repetitious formula films for profit. "Raising Arizona" is unpretentious, but it's not afraid to be itself; take it or leave it. Take it wholeheartedly and you will leave the theater refreshed with a smile on your face.

thing is seeing the realism in the play and not allowing it to become melodramatic," said Hornor.

"It's demanding a lot of sweat," he said.

Cast Member Stephanie Halton agrees with Hornor on the challenging roles.

"The play is very natural," said Halton. "It's not an easy play to do because it's not easy to be that natural."

The seven female, four male cast has been rehearsing since March 11.

The play will be performed on April 24 and 25 at 8 p.m., and at 7 p.m. on April 26 in the Auditorium.

Tickets are $4 for adults and $3 for students. They can be purchased at the door or in advance in room 202 of the Auditorium weekdays from 8 a.m. until noon.

President — from pg. 1

According to Pentz, written evaluations from students, faculty, and staff members of the college were extremely helpful and thorough.

"The committee's decision was confirmed by the evaluations," said Pentz. "They reflected the thoughts and insights of the committee."

Right now, the PSC is gathering its energy and forces to begin another round of searching for candidates.

This time, it will focus more on personal contacts instead of letters. In addition to classified advertisements, the committee will be contacting other leaders of higher education, pastors of large churches, and will be taking suggestions from anyone on Whitworth's campus who have nominations.

Obscenities A pressure release?

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

"How in the _____ could you _____ing miss such a _____ easy shot? What are you, a _____ moron or what?"

If the above rings a bell to any of you, or if you've ever heard a variation of that catchy phrase, then you have already been initiated into the world of athletics. For those of you who haven't yet been initiated, then Welcome! You are now a full-fledged member of the AWUEP — the Athletes Who Use Expletive Phrases. This club boasts quite a majority of today's athletes and degrades everything from mothers to the church — sometimes even in the same breath.

No sport is exempt from membership, whether it be the angry bubbles of a swimmer, the sweet nothings whispered under the breath of a basketball player, or the blatant torrent of emotions that explodes from a tennis player's lips. Every sport has its members.

To many non-athletes, these outbursts often seem unnecessary and unwelcome. But to the athletes it is a way to vent frustrations from a poor performance on their part. Granted, some sports' language is worse than others. A football player may be able to take out his frustrations by sticking someone from the opposing team, or a basketball player may throw a carefully placed elbow here and there. Heaven forbid though, if a tennis or golf player throws a punch at another. As far as I know that goes against proper etiquette for those sports. High expectations put on athletes by their coaches, teammates, and themselves lead to frustration. Those frustrations lead to language that Siskel and Ebert would give a definite thumbs down to.

There is no way to avoid it for as long as there are athletics there will be language that could lead to premature hair loss. Whether it is heard, or seen in person, or by TV or radio there is no way to avoid it.

My favorite is when the camera zooms in a player for a close-up. Everyone expects him to say the traditional "hi mom" with the peace sign, but instead they get something that they don't put on closed caption TV. Sure, he says mother but what comes after would make his real mom blush, and the peace sign is missing one finger.

With no way to escape it people might think that there should be tighter rules governing the athletes' conduct on their respective fields. Wrong. Let's face it, a great number of sports viewers like the bad boys with their colorful language and gestures. People are more apt to remember the player who uses obscene language or flashes a one-finger peace sign, than they are the athlete who makes the great play.

I'm not condemning these outbursts. I have been known to let a few choice words fly on the tennis court. But, I'm not defending it either. Everytime I let loose with a burst I could kick myself, but it does relieve tension. Some athletes use that sort of language as a pressure release and often play better as a result. McEnroe is an excellent example of the pressure release system.

Sooner or later there will have to be a line drawn between pressure release and downright ridiculous. Sometimes it sounds as if the Second Coming is here with players "praying" at the top of their voices.

Fortunately there are athletes who don't resort to the sort of language that a majority of us use, and I applaud them for their behavior. For the rest of us maybe we should all switch to tamer sports for a while — maybe hopscotch or bingo.

Mardelle Shagool, part-time swimmer, assists students in the registrar's office.

Swimmer's debut soaks opponents

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Somebody forgot to tell Mardelle Shagool to be nervous. Somebody forgot to tell her she was a beginner. Somebody forgot to tell her it wasn't easy. And Shagool forgot to tell somebody she was going to break four swim meet records.

Shagool, who works in the campus registrar's office swam competitively for the first time at the Masters Inland Empire District Meet, April 10-12. She left looking like a veteran, setting records for the 50-55 age group in the 50-yard backstroke, and the 50, 100 and 200-yard freestyle.

Shagool said she was "totally amazed" when the results were announced. "I nearly fell over," she said.

Shagool decided to enroll in Jon Buzzard's Swim for Fitness class. "Until then, the only swimming I had ever done was cooling off in the lake during the summer. I had no idea how to breathe properly so I decided to take the class," she said.

"Jon noticed that Mardelle had a natural feel for the water, and we encouraged her to join the Masters Swimmers," explained Beth Mastell-Smith, who coaches the group.

Shagool gives credit to Buzzard and Mastell-Smith for her recent success, "I told Jon he's launched me into my second childhood," she said and laughed.

"I really enjoy swimming Masters, but it's been an adjustment," she admitted, "We swim three times a week from 5:30 to 7 a.m. I'm not sure I like this."

A wife and mother of three children, Shagool watched her share of high school sports. At the Inland Empire meet she discovered first-hand that "Sports are stressful. It was hard, intense work. But I wasn't very aware of the competition. I knew that it was just myself against myself."

Mastell-Smith, who noted that only about 10 percent of the Masters ever compete, said, "Mardelle did absolutely wonderful."

"She grew up at a time when women weren't involved in athletics, society wouldn't allow it," she said, sadly shaking her head, "It makes you wonder what she could have done."

Mastell-Smith explained that the people who join Masters are a supportive group. "They kind of adopt everyone as one of their own; they're excited for Mardelle. They call her 'the Animal' now."

Wind, rain biggest challenge

by Peter Christensen
of The Whitworthian

In a track meet dominated by bad weather — not competitors — the Whitworth track team had an average day. The Central Washington Invitational was held in Ellensburg Friday and featured men's and women's teams from seven schools.

"This was a very difficult meet to compete in, because the conditions were extremely difficult," said Assistant Coach Hal Werner.

The weather proved to be a handicap in the unscored meet. The runners were affected by the cold temperatures, and the throwing events were affected by the wind and rain.

Head Coach Arnie Tyler said, "On a day like this there is a high potential for injury." He also emphasized that they were fortunate not to have had any.

The women's team had two first places for the day. The 4 x 400m relay team continued its domination by placing first with a time of 4:10.0. The team, including Lisa Jenkinson, Kari Jacobson, Gwen Keiser and Annette Helling, consistently improve weekly and hope to qualify for Nationals.

Barb Lashinski, another dominant force on this year's squad, captured 1st in the javelin, throwing 146-1. Lashinski hurled the discus 114-6 to place 5th. Janine Hoffman threw 104-6 to claim 6th in the discus. Keiser took 4th in the long jump, jumping 16-0.

In the running events, the 4 x 100m relay team, consisting of Kris Young, Jenkinson, Jeri Wilkerson, and Jacobson, placed 3rd with a time of 50.2.

Young also competed in the 100m and 200m, placing 4th and 5th respectively. Helling took 2nd in the 400m, running 61.2. Keiser competed in the 100m hurdles and placed 5th with a time of 17.0.

The men's team was also challenged by the high winds and rain. In the 5000m, Scott Hink beat the wind and his opponents to capture 1st place with the time of 15:44.6. Jeff Mullaney followed closely behind, placing 3rd.

Two Pirates competed in the steeplechase. Joe Cabler took 3rd with 10:41.9 and Guy Duryee 4th, running 10:47.7.

In the 4 x 400m relay, the Pirates placed 5th. The 4 x 100m relay team ran a 50.1 and placed 5th.

Whitworth heavily challenged opponents in the hammer throw. Arnie Tyler placed 2nd, throwing 167-4. Tim Jacobson's throw landed only 2-1/2 behind Tyler's, capturing 3rd place for him. Stuart Woods took 6th with 151-8 1/2.

In the javelin Jacobson, Mike Pritcher, and Gary Knowlton placed 2nd, 3rd and 4th respectively.

In other distance events, Peat Sutherland ran the 1500m in 4:06.6 and placed 2nd. Allan Bracken placed also captured a 2nd, running the 10,000m in 33:25.1.

According to Tyler the meet was aimed toward training and strengthening for Districts, which will be held in Ellensburg in three weeks.

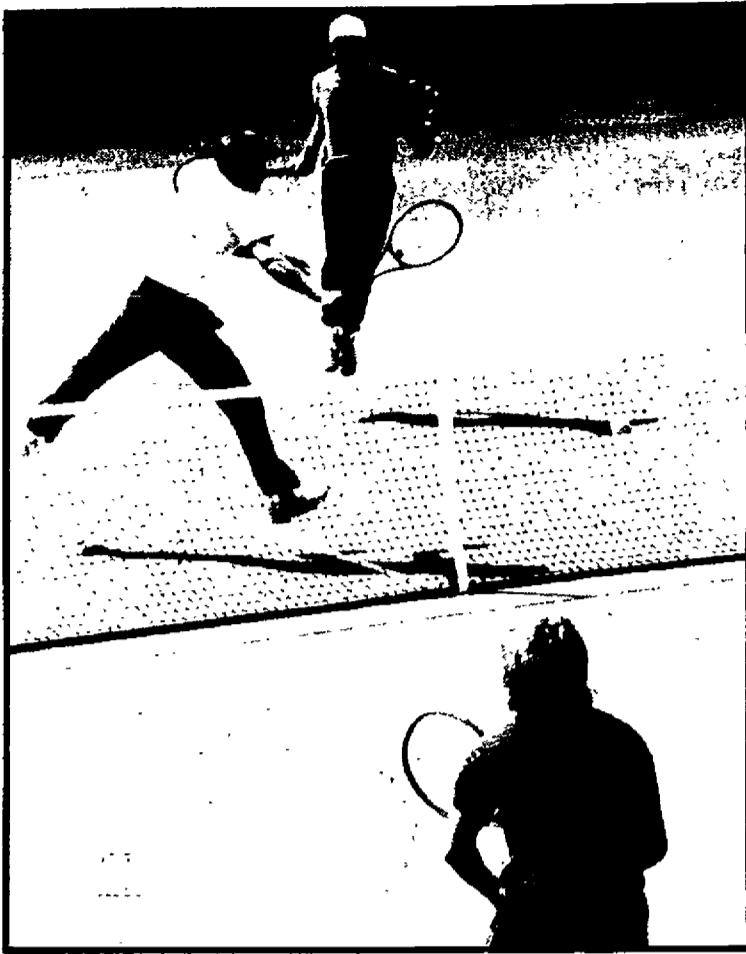

In the next meet the men's team compete at Spokane Falls Community College on Friday, April 24 at 4:30 p.m. The women are taking the weekend off.

Tod Whitman and Brad Larkin double up to defeat the opposing Columbia Basin team.

Men's tennis nab three wins

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth Pirates had a very successful week defeating Spokane Falls Community College, Gonzaga University, and Columbia Basin Community College. The only loss came against a stubborn Eastern Washington University team.

"We played close to our potential this past week. We played consistent tennis, and that is one of the key ingredients to beat someone," said Coach Ross Cutter.

Cutter was especially pleased with the domination his players displayed in beating Gonzaga 7-2 on Thursday.

"We got on top from the beginning, and dominated the match. I feel we improved over the first time we played them," said Cutter.

They also played Columbia Basin and beat them 8-1.

Kirk Rector also thinks the team is starting to play up to its capabilities.

"After the two last matches against Gonzaga and Columbia we have our confidence rebuilt, and are playing closer to our potential," said Rector, the No. 1 player.

Willie Stewart, the No. 2 player, agrees that the team and himself are coming into form.

"We are hitting really good, and I myself hit a lot of backcourt winners that kept my opponent running around the court today," said Stewart, who was referring to his match against Columbia Basin (vs. Larry Troxel) on Saturday.

The Bucs played Spokane Falls Community College on Monday, dismantling them 8-1.

The Bucs' only loss came against a tough EWU team Wednesday whom the Pirates

Gonzaga wins, 11-10

Bucs' winning streak halted by ninth inning home run

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth's nine-game winning streak came to a halt when the baseball team fell to Gonzaga University 11-10, in Wednesday's slugfest.

Vince Barranco's one-out 400-foot solo blast in the bottom of the ninth did the damage.

Ironically, Whitworth's Troy Anderson started the game with his own version of home run ball. However, GU bounced right back in the bottom of the first when Barranco drilled his first of three home runs of the day. Whitworth fought back from two four-run deficits in the fifth and eighth innings.

The Pirates had tied the game 10-10 in the top of the ninth and were still threatening when Warren Ayala replaced Troy Cunningham on the mound for Gonzaga.

Catcher Ed Beloate greeted Ayala with a line drive, but second baseman Dan Beach snarred Beloate's shot. With one out and first base open, Ayala walked Scott Barkley and faced Pirate first baseman Ryan Clements.

Risky? Maybe so. But Clements popped up to Jeff Zenier in shallow right center. Scott Ralph faked a tag-up at third, but wandered too far off. First baseman Bauroth cut off Zenier's throw home. He gunned down Ralph at third to end the inning, and Whitworth's rally.

That set the stage for Barranco's game-winning home run, and the Bulldogs went home with an exciting 11-10 win.

On Thursday, the Pirates headed for Pullman to take on nationally-ranked Washington State University. Trailing 4-2 in the sixth, the Cougars erupted for six runs and coasted to a 12-4 victory. Whitworth's pitcher Scott Carolan dropped to 5-2. Last week's two losses dropped the Pirates to 15-11 on the season. However, neither game effected Whitworth's district record which is 6-2.

There was good news last week for the Pirate ball club. Second baseman Troy Anderson, was named NAIA District I Player of the Week. Anderson hit 10-18 in five games, with four home runs, 13 runs, nine RBI's and no errors.

"We had five three-set matches that we lost. I guess you could say that three-set matches were not our forte today," said Cutter.

"All the Alumni had positive comments about their matches today," said Cutter, though most matches were not completed due to rain.

The Bucs started the week off on a good note by beating Spokane Falls, and ended on the note of soundly defeating Columbia Basin.

and the caring attitude of the people here in both the administration and faculty set Whitworth apart from other schools."

Toyama commented on one of the many differences between Whitworth and larger institutions.

"At larger schools students often rely on the administration for activities and a sense of structure, but at Whitworth, even a group of students can make a difference in clubs, dorms, and student government."

Many people at Whitworth enjoy the classroom ratio because it allows for more communication and personal attention.

"Whitworth contains an interesting mix of students. I really view my teaching as an aspect of ministry to students who are or aren't Christians. I try to pose and answer questions that they face both personally and academically in order to lay a firm foundation for their future," said Chemistry Professor Dr. Calbreath.

Freshman Matt Woodruff related a story from earlier this term.

"I took a Calculus course from Ed Korntved fall term and now, in spring term, I still see Ed around campus and he always says 'Hi Matt!', I really appreciate that. I don't think you'd find that kind of atmosphere at EWU, WSU, or U of W."

Perhaps one of the things that separates Whitworth from similar institutions is the freedom allowed to students in a Christian structure.

"I think Whitworth is unique among Christian colleges because of its diversity of students. It isn't restricted to one denomination, and there are many students with no religious affiliation. At Whitworth students are given the freedom to explore. Some Christian colleges are very strict. Students need to develop their own set of values. They are allowed to make their own decisions. Some institutions prohibit dancing, co-ed visitation, and even drinking off campus. At Whitworth the rules are simple and clearly stated."

Kyle Storm made an interesting assessment of Whitworth on the 1987 Leadership Retreat. He said, "Whitworth is small enough that many have a chance to be involved, but large enough for a great diversity of opportunities."

ASWC protests on 24-hour issue

by Lynn Sievers
of the Whitworthian

The ASWC gathered 475 student signatures from 600 petition sheets last week.

The petition sheets asked students to strongly reconsider their decisions to live on-campus if the president's cabinet denies them the right of setting visiting hours.

"That's more than voted in the last ASWC election," said J.B. Meade, president of ASWC.

The petition sheets were circulated by dorm-presidents.

A task force was formed to look into the policies of Whitworth in general earlier this fall.

The group was established following the presentation of position papers, dealing with 24-hour visitation, by both the ASWC and the president's cabinet.

The task force's biggest job was developing alternatives on the 24-hour issue.

Meade was not pleased with the task force's proceedings.

"We did not get down to the real issue of 24-hour visitation until the last of the six scheduled meetings between the ASWC and the task force," he said.

Meade was also disappointed by not being able to sit down and talk with the task force about the policy.

"We are willing to negotiate. We've said that all along," said Meade. "But we want to keep open the option of setting our own visitation hours."

Wednesday, April 22, the cabinet members, Dr. Darrell Guder, vice president of Academic Affairs, Dr. Julie Anderton, vice president of Student Life, Mike Goins, financial vice president, and Joe Black, vice president of Institutional Advancement, met to discuss recommendations on the 24-hour visitation policy.

The cabinet met again yesterday, Monday, April 27. It is expected that the cabinet finalized its recommendation.

Anderton remains firm in her commitment to reevaluate the policies of Whitworth.

"Our policies must be consistent with our values and morals," she said.

According to Anderton, even though the 24-hour issue has been a sensitive subject on campus this year, positive results have taken place.

"There's been an increase in students' awareness and evaluation of our residential atmosphere," said Anderton. "There has also been a heightened awareness of our values as a community."

Anderton expressed concern that too much discussion on

Sun, crowds attend Springfest

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

The Associated Students of Whitworth College presented Springfest '87 Saturday at Riverfront Park.

All proceeds of the event will benefit the new Ronald McDonald House of Spokane.

According to Steve Broughton, executive vice president of ASWC, "It wasn't everything we had envisioned as far as the money goes...but this was probably the best event (ASWC) has done this year."

According to Paul Ramsey, chairman of the Sponsorship Committee for Springfest ASWC expected to raise $10,000-15,000.

Exact figures aren't available at this time, but an estimated total was placed at $3,000.

Springfest '88 has been planned into the budget for next year already, according to Broughton. "We learned a lot of things this year to help us next year."

There was good attendance at the event, according to Broughton. "There were a lot of people there around 10 a.m. and it stayed stable until about 2 p.m. Then we had a big crowd the last couple of hours."

There were no major problems throughout the day. During the morning, the clock

Centennial highlights trustee meeting

by Barb Visser
of the Whitworthian

A progress report of the Centennial Campaign Committee will be a highlight of the spring board of trustees meeting, scheduled for April 30.

Although the actual board meeting starts Tuesday evening, members of the Centennial Campaign Committee will meet all day Tuesday, according to Jon Flora, director of Institutional Advancement. They will be touring the campus, looking at the buildings and facilities that may be affected by the campaign.

"We need to show them where we are and why we need to do these things," explained Flora. He added that the committee is now down to looking at the nuts and bolts of the campaign.

Other items on the agenda include a report from the special Endowment Investment Subcommittee. This committee, set up last fall partly in response to strong student concern with apartheid in South Africa, is structuring a new investment policy for the college.

It will allow Whitworth's investments to be compared with those of similar institutions.

Overall, "It's pretty much a housekeeping meeting," said Dr. Darrell Guder, vice president of Academic Affairs.

Guder commented that the Admissions department's report should be interesting. Flora added that it's time to take a look at the new system, which was completely reformed and implemented this past year.

The Finance Committee will be presenting a 1987-88 budget which will be in the $16 million range, according to Jack Hatch, chairman of the board.

A report will be made by the Buildings and Grounds Committee on the status of bids for the McMillan Hall renovations, which is on the college bonding program.

Also, the Presidential Search Committee will report on the newly reopened search. This will be Dr. Robert Mounce's last board meeting as president.

Chad Brinderson enjoys a sunny afternoon in The Loop while keeping up on his school work.

To J.B. Meade Ideas for next year

by John A. Sowers
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

First of all, congratulations on your re-election. It either represented a ringing endorsement of ASWC's policies for this year or you are still confusing people with that Kennedy resemblance thing. We think playing the "Camelot" theme before your Forum speech was a little much but it apparently worked.

As for next year, here are some suggestions:

There has been some limited discussion already on the Student Store. Currently the Student Store is running in the red. Part of the problem is location, to have the student store tucked back and away in the HUB defies any marketing logic at all. The Student Store needs to be in a location where students often walk by (as often as you need to see that Bazooka bubble gum to know you need it). In addition to location, the student store also seems a little weak in the way of products offered. Why not utilize business and nutrition majors to expand the student store? It would be terrific if we could combine an espresso bar, with a variety of gourmet coffees, a mini-bakery with freshly baked cookies and brownies and also frozen yogurt machines with a variety of toppings. In order to provide these services, ASWC would most likely need the approval of SAGA as they control the snack bar in the HUB. It is our hope that SAGA would see fit to allow for such an enterprise.

Another suggestion regards the reinstatement of "Community Days." It was an old tradition at Whitworth where the whole community got together and worked on school projects during a fall and spring weekend. Creativity would be the key; the temptation would be to stick a rake in everyone's hand and rake up the pine needles and in two weeks the ground would again be covered with pine needles. Instead, let's have individual dorms seek out specific projects. Some ideas for projects would include: flower beds around dorm facilities, repainting the HUB, building a brick barbecue structure, planting deciduous trees in the area in front of Mac and Ballard (perhaps including picnic tables), and maybe a gazebo in the Loop. If we ran out of on-campus projects we could certainly look into fixing up some retirement homes or other facilities of that type. It would be the responsibility of each dorm to raise the funds necessary for each project.

J.B., there is an upswell of enthusiasm on this campus, much of which can be contributed to the fine job this year by the organization you lead. The challenge for next year is not to rest on this year's laurels but to forge ahead with new and exciting ways for Whitworth students to serve each other and to serve others... We know, we know, undoubtedly you're going to refer to these programs as Whitworth's "New Frontier." JFK would have been proud.

Letters raise guilt and ignorance

To the editor,

I felt a real sense of guilt and ignorance after reading about Kurt Liebert's and Dodge White's experiences in Central America in the April 14 issue of The Whitworthian.

As I read their descriptions of their experiences of contrasting worlds my mind raced over the pettiness of decisions and experiences in my life. My life here at Whitworth is very protected. My concerns extend from how I'll come up with that extra couple thousand dollars to meet rising tuition costs to whether or not Student Life will allow me to have a guest in my room after 1 a.m.

Through these letters by Kurt and Dodge I, as I have at most acknowledged before, perhaps, realized the limited and naive American view of life. As a college student it seems so obvious that the standard expectations of life are to get an education, obtain financial security, get married, have children, and live happily ever after.

But, what happens when I've obtained all that? What will I have to look back on? Will I have a complete world view? Or will I only see my own pettiness? Will I have enough open-mindedness and compassion to remove myself from this world and step into someone else's world? Can I step into a world that doesn't offer education or any form of security? Will I be able to allow myself to be touched by the pain and suffering of people that are beyond my "American" point of view? I hope so. I hope and pray that we, as Americans, with all our wealth and power can put ourselves into the shacks and poverty and despair of other worlds!

Anyway you look at it, it's stealing

To the editor,

For many of us, the Time magazine that arrives in our mailbox every Wednesday is our link to the outside world. We try to make ourselves better, but do any of us subscribe to Ethics Daily?

It's worse to steal a BMW than an apple, right? It's better to steal something small than large? It's okay to steal a pair of Imelda Marcos' shoes, but not okay to steal a poncho from a peasant in Nicaragua?

You're either pregnant or you're not. You're either stealing or you're not.

So is taking food from SAGA really stealing? Surely there's nothing wrong with sneaking into SAGA and eating some lovely Veggie Cheese Medley, is there? As one student said, "They've been ripping me off all year, I missed lots of meals last semester that I paid for, I'm just getting even."

Not so. SAGA has calculated that students will only eat 70 percent of the meals they sign up for. They only charge you for this amount.

Consuming a glass of brown cow without paying for it is stealing. It doesn't seem like a big deal. It's a big deal when someone steals something from me. It sounds hokey, but treating others the way you want to be treated is a good ethic to subscribe to daily.

'Romeo and Juliet': a passionate ballet

by John Boyer
of the Whitworthian

After long hours of practice and production, the Whitworth Ballet is ready to give its presentation of "Romeo and Juliet."

The performance, which will take place on May 1 and 2 at 8 p.m. and May 3 at 2 p.m., was directed and choreographed by Rita Rogers, the ballet instructor at Whitworth.

Rogers started work on it in September and got the students involved during Jan Term.

However, it was not produced by Whitworth alone. Other schools and people got involved.

The Whitworth Ballet gave Shakespeare's tragic love story of two lovers caught between two feuding families a new and interesting twist.

Because it's a story about passion, passionate music will be played. The Whitworth Ballet will use the music of Prokofiev, a 19th century Russian composer. "It's so moving," said one person at ballet practice.

In addition to passion, there will also be action. Lord Capulet (Greg Bonfiglio of Gonzaga) and Lord Montague (Greg Knoll of Gonzaga) will be in a sword fight.

Rogers added that if they made a wrong move, one of them could get seriously hurt.

Romeo's role will be shared between a Whitworth student and a Gonzaga student.

Whitworth Senior, Ken Urie, will dance on one of the nights and a Gonzaga Junior, Daniel Barnett, will dance on the other.

The two will alternate over the three-show engagement.

When Barnett is not in Romeo's role he will play Mercutio, Romeo's friend. When he is in Romeo's role Junior Scott Kellmer will play Mercutio.

Juliet's role will be shared between a Whitworth graduate, Janice McQuilkin, and a Spokane Falls Community College student, Elizabeth Rurey.

It has not yet been determined on what nights the characters will dance.

Whitworth Senior Andrew

Janice McQuilkin, a Whitworth alumna, and Daniel Barnett, from Gonzaga University, rehearse for their performances as Romeo and Juliet.

Swift will play Paris. In the ballet, Juliet is supposed to marry Paris. However, Romeo kills him when he catches Paris laying flowers at Juliet's grave.

"I'm a guard, doing a lot of fighting and killing," he laughs.

Heather Carlson, 13, is one of the four younger girls in the performance. She plays a street child in one scene, and a wedding attendant in another.

"She (Rogers) does really well with people my age," Carlson said referring to the training that she was given.

"If they aren't strong, the ballet fails," Rogers said, referring to the importance of people like Blodgett, Carlson and Swift.

In order to interpret Shakespeare for the ballet as best as possible, dramatic consultant Dorothy Darby Smith helped out.

"Dorothy and I have worked as a wonderful team together," said Rogers.

Paul and Francis Sackett, formerly of the New York City Ballet, are also assisting in the production. Rogers emphasized that their help will be needed in order to organize and direct everyone.

The costumes in "Romeo and Juliet" will be authentic. Mike Klieset, a member of the Creative Anachronism Society will provide real armor and other clothing reminiscent of that era for the characters. Klieset will also portray the Prince of Verona.

The tickets cost $5 for the general public and $3 for students.

WW singers present 'Songs of the Heart'

The Whitworth College Chamber Singers, a 20-voice ensemble, will present their spring concert May 4 at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Building Recital Hall.

Titled "Songs of the Heart," the concert will include Renaissance madrigals, part songs by Debussy and Poulenc, and contemporary folk songs. The Chamber Singers are directed by Deborah Ellefson, and will be accompanied by guitarist David Mintz and pianists Judy Guder and David Johnson.

Admission is free.

Tracy Riddle, Arend Hall resident director, prepares for her debut as a disc jockey at Arend's street dance.

Springfest — from p. 1

tower in the park acted as an antenna, and when the electrical things were plugged in, a local Christian radio station came in clear, according to Broughton. "But we got that fixed and there were no other major problems."

Dorms and clubs from around campus set up booths with games, food, and raffles. Among some of the booths were: a bagel stand, pizza by the slice, teriyaki sticks, photography, and a game booth where Springfest visitors could throw sponges through toilet seat rings.

Other game booths included a gold fish toss and a mock jail.

By paying $.50 you could have friends arrested and held in the jail. Bail of $1 could be paid to get out.

The day was sunny and warm, leaving people with sunburns.

Broughton was pleased with the outcome and said, "I'm excited about the whole thing. Next year should be even better."

24-hour — from page 1

the policy has taken place. "That's where the task force came in," said Anderson. "It got down to what alternatives exist that could improve or be added to make the residential environment better consistent with our values."

Through intense discussions of the 24-hour visitation policy, Meade has discovered what he considers an area of great responsibility for students.

"I've come to realize that we as students must take a more active role in our community rather than having Student Life decide for us," he said.

Ultimately, the final decision on the issue is in the hands of President Robert Mounce who will be strongly influenced by the cabinet's recommendation.

No definite date for the final decision has been set. It will be at Mounce's leisure.

Meade predicted, "It will be decided that one dorm will have designated visiting hours — probably one of the Village dorms.

"This will be an option for the students who want to have set visiting hours," he said.

When Dexter Davis accepted an award in February, he not only received recognition for outstanding student leadership, but he also achieved his personal goal of making positive strides for the cause of minority students on Whitworth's campus.

The awards ceremony, held at Cavanaugh's Inn at the Park, was sponsored by the National Council for Black Studies, which presents awards for outstanding community service. According to Davis, he was nominated by Minority Student Director Rose Howell and was notified by the organization on his selection.

Concerning his award, Davis said, "It's really nice to be appreciated for your work. It reinforced in my mind that I'm doing a good job and helping others."

The junior from San Diego plans to major in Physical Education. His sister, a Whitworth graduate, attained her master's in Special Education, and is presently employed by the Mead School District.

"My sister is the main reason I came to Whitworth in the first place. I also came to play baseball and football, because I wasn't very academically minded at the time," said Davis, "my mom really wanted me to receive a college education, and I finally realized that I wanted to achieve something in my life too."

While at Whitworth, Davis has involved himself in many activities. He played baseball his freshman year, is currently a D.J. for KWRS, and is the vice president of the Black Student Union.

"I think that a lot of people misunderstand the role of BSU on the Whitworth campus," said Davis. "It's not meant to be a club that excludes others, but it should extend itself to others."

"Although there are some good people in Student Life, I feel that the minority programs are lacking support, and BSU hopes to make progress in that area, as well as give students of the same color a chance to relate and be involved."

Davis feels that he has made a lot of progress in his studies since he first arrived at Whitworth.

"I used to have very little interest in academics, but I now consider myself as someone who somewhat equally divides social and study time. I'd like to make myself an example to others that you can have a lot of fun and still do well in school if you learn to manage your time well," he said.

Davis has also devoted a great deal of his time to work for the benefit of the community. He works at the Martin Luther King Center, which is mainly an outreach center for youth.

The center is currently in the process of coordinating a parent outreach program. The goal of the organization is to fulfill the needs of the whole community. Unfortunately, due to a lack of funds, the center has had a difficult time accomplishing its tasks.

According to Davis, "The center attends to the needs of the lower income people in the community. I was raised in a low income situation by a single parent who had to hold several jobs just to make ends meet, so I can relate to many of the problems the kids face."

Davis related a situation which occurred fairly recently.

"I went to a lady's home, and her daughter was a cocaine addict and a prostitute. This girl's son was having behavior problems in school, and the administration wanted to place him in a special ed program even though his test scores were very high. That kid needs someone to talk to and to share his frustrations with. I'd like to help kids realize their full potential."

Davis feels very satisfied in his service role, and plans to continue his work.

"The center is currently conducting a survey on the future of Spokane, and is soliciting input from parents about projections and goals for the community," he said.

"It's a needs assessment survey about what programs would best benefit the community as a whole," Davis added.

"I've found that it requires a lot of faith and patience in community service, but I get a warm feeling knowing that I've helped someone make it through the week who needed me. Helping others is an incredible reward."

"Picnic," presented by the Whitworth Theater Arts department, on April 24, 25 and 26, combined humor with the painful facts of life that are part of any relationship.

"Picnic" features the story of a family, with two daughters, living in a small Kansas town whose lives became deeply disturbed at the arrival of a young handsome vagabond. The play depicted how this newcomer affected people's lives through relationships.

Director Rick Hornor aimed to entertain his audience and to help people to see themselves through the cast of 11 Whitworth students. Hornor worked to emphasize the painful side present in any relationship.

Hornor appreciated people's feedback, "I received a very good and surprising response from the audience," he said. "At certain moments people were laughing when we did not even expect it."

"A lot of people came to me and said they were laughing on the outside, but crying in the inside."

Some members of the audience learned a lesson from the play.

"It was a good realistic application about making decisions in my personal life," said Sophomore Andrew Kennedy. "In making important decisions about life, one needs to consider and act according to one's will."

Kennedy explained that each actor in the play happened to face an important decision for their personal lives. Kennedy related the example of Madge Owens, a beautiful girl, who for the first time in her life made a decision for herself.

"By doing that," Kennedy said, "it freed her from her and emotions are so closely related that there cannot be a mother's power decision."

Terry Guder, Darrell Guder's son, learned about the need to have control of one's feelings. "Not to deny any feeling can be detrimental," said Guder.

Kennedy thinks that reason "black or white answer."

"Rosemary Sydney (a single school teacher) was rational, but she took enough time before realizing rationally that it would not lead her anywhere," said Kennedy. "Then, she chose irrationality."

Sophomore Leah Fabie explained that she also learned about making important decisions for her own life.

"Millie (the 16-year-old girl) has many dimensions to her character," said Fabie. "Her sister Madge has only one dimension, she is beautiful."

"Alan (her boyfriend) did not look at the inside of Madge but only knew that she was beautiful. When he realized that he was also guilty at just looking at Madge as an object, his life changed."

Hornor and actors of the play also learned from it.

"I learned not to forget my first impression when I read the play," said Hornor. "I saw the humor, but during the five weeks of repetition I saw the painful side. After the five weeks, the public reminds us of the humor side of the play."

For Matt Tompkins, playing the young vagabond, Hal Carter, a main character of the play, the role proved to be a challenge.

"It is probably the most challenging play an actor can do," Tompkins said. "It is so realistic, characters are like people that you can encounter," he said. "The toughest part was bringing the believability to the character and to make it fresh."

"I learned about myself. I learned that there is nothing wrong about being myself."

Kirkpatrick is moving on; speech prof Illinois-bound

by Ted Wilson
of The Whitworthian

It's Friday morning. A short, black-bearded man wearing a vested sweater that stretches over a bit of a ponch, tinted glasses and a cap walks with his daughter, Juliann, to class. She doesn't have preschool today.

They walk into class just a few minutes late. He goes to the front of the room, organizes the table and podium, then introduces his daughter to the class.

"These people are in my public speaking class," he tells her. "They stand up there in front of the room and give their speeches." He picks the girl up and sits her in the back row. It is now time for class to begin.

Dr. Tom Kirkpatrick grew up in Willamette, Ore. His father worked in forestry, and his mother worked as an elementary school teacher. Two of his brothers became teachers, and the other became a minister. Kirkpatrick studied music at the University of Oregon, then went on to seminary. Following seminary, he entered campus ministry at Western Oregon, then at Western Washington.

"While in campus ministry, I worked with small groups. When space opened for me professionally, I decided that I had learned a lot about communication...and I completed a Ph.D. in speech communication at the University of Washington," he said.

He came to Whitworth in 1980 and assumed the chair of the communication department. At that time, the department was just beginning to expand from a journalism department. There were about 35 journalism majors and no speech majors when Kirkpatrick arrived.

"I had a plan all written out when I came here. I understood that Whitworth was interested in creativity, new ideas and innovation, and so I could really make a contribution to the school," said Kirkpatrick.

The speech department consisted of one faculty member (himself) plus adjunct when he came here. Today, two full-time and two half-time professors, plus adjunct, populate the growing department. Majors in the communication department are now in excess of 100 students. Kirkpatrick gave up the department chair last year.

"The innovation of the Lindaman era and integration of faith were the two things that caught me," said Kirkpatrick.

"But I'm ready to move on." He will not be back next year, but will instead move east. "I will pastor at Westminster Presbyterian Church in Galena, Ill., and teach several courses at Dubuque Seminary." His wife will be attending seminary there as well.

ture about giving speeches, but he had us get up and deliver our own speeches."

"Tom conveys communication really well through example," said Junior Steve Gaffney, who is presently taking Public Speaking and Communication Ethics from Kirkpatrick. "He's a buoyant person — he's very enthusiastic about his area of expertise — which causes me to get interested. I've learned, just by watching him speak, some of his speaking techniques."

Kirkpatrick brings the classroom alive not only with his enthusiasm, but with his humor. Gaffney recalled a time when Kirkpatrick took a girl's shoes (she had taken them off and was walking barefoot in the hall) and threw them out the window. She worried about them the whole hour. At the end of class Kirkpatrick went outside, picked up the shoes, and brought them back in to her.

"We're very excited about the move," said Mrs. Kirkpatrick. "It seems to be a place in our lives where God has meshed everything that needs to be meshed. I'm excited to continue this journey."

"He's very excited," said Sophomore Eric Roecks, who has taken two classes from and is presently a TA for Kirkpatrick. "He gets the best of both worlds — his wife is going to seminary, and he gets to work as a pastor and still work in communication," said Roecks.

Kirkpatrick and his wife, Carol, began looking for a place where she could attend seminary and he could find a job last year.

"If something came along that would further my career, it would be of God's grace," said Kirkpatrick. God's grace did intervene, and the Kirkpatricks leave Whitworth as they move on in their careers.

"(Tom's leaving) represents a significant loss," said Gordon Jackson, the Communication Studies department chair. "Tom has brought in enormous enthusiasm and energy. And, he's a caring and sensitive teacher. The growth that is associated with his department must be in large measure attributed to Tom."

Kirkpatrick leaves Whitworth after seven years of teaching students. His personal teaching and model communication styles have left their impressions on many students.

"Tom is a very fine instructor," said Roecks. "He is very much concerned with us applying what we have learned. We could have sat for two weeks at the beginning of the term and listened to him lec-

Fox boosts career

by Tad Wisenor
of the Whitworthian

"That wasn't so bad. Can you do it again just as good?" is a question asked of Brantley Foster (Michael J. Fox) by his junior executive love-interest Christy Wills (Helen Slater) after their first kiss. Brantley's answer is a self-assured, "I can try."

The question can be easily applied to Fox out-of-character. The youthful superstar of "Family Ties" and last summer's "Back to the Future" (for which he was a mid-production replacement) is riding a wave of popularity that any actor would be proud of.

His latest film, "The Secret of My Success," will only help to further his growing career.

Brantley is a Kansas farm-boy and college graduate who dreams of making it in the 'Big Apple.' New York is a dream world, so beautifully photographed by Carlo di Palma that it can't be real. Yet, it remains the perfect setting for this fantasy-comedy, an unbelievable but fun joyride-into the financial sector.

The only job Brantley can get is from a distant uncle, Howard Prescott (Richard Jordan), who married into his position as CEO at a multinational corporation.

As Brantley heads for his new job in the mailroom Prescott warns, "You're in the front door, kid — what you do on this side is up to you."

Here begins Brantley's quest to become an executive. An affair with his "Auntie" Vera (Margaret Whitton), Prescott's wife, helps him establish important contacts, but not without a few scrapes.

An empty corner office inspires him to take on a double-identity as "Carlton Whitfield" and Brantley's entry into the front door quickly escalates as the company becomes the target of a hostile takeover attempt.

The relationships get more and more mixed up, as do the politics of business, until all is resolved in a climactic comedy-of-errors accompanied by musical group Yello's "Oh Yeah." An ensuing board meeting ties up all the loose ends, a satisfying resolution to an entertaining romp.

"The Secret of My Success" is thick with innuendos. The mechanical incarnations of sexual frustration between Vera and Brantley in the limousine is almost taken too far. But, like everything else in the film, it toes the line and retains the humor.

Director Herbert Ross ("Footloose") presents us with yet another slick film for young adults. A veteran of many Neil Simon projects, Ross brings a more defined vision to this film than has been seen in this genre of late.

This makes Fox, described by Ross as "a very understated actor," look even better than usual. Coming off his last film, "Light of Day", a well-acted but depressing supporting role, "Success" allows Fox a nice solid comic performance, long his forte.

Co-star Helen Slater was better in "The Legend of Billie Jean." But, she is putting "Supergirl" behind her with this movie and works well considering the limits of the character.

The film has many funny scenes, not the least of which combines very vocal neighbors making love, thin walls, and the talents of Brantley turned symphony conductor.

Fox has done it again "just as good" and I suspect he will continue to do so for some time. At least as long as his popularity holds out.

Personal triumph or opportunity for injury?

by Mark Eldson
of The Whitworthian

Intramural sports. To some they are a nuisance, but to others they are the only way to pursue their collegiate athletic careers. Weekend warriors, as they are sometimes called, often put on dazzling displays of athletic ability in these "minor league" games. Others are not quite so fortunate; these are the people who drop the easy fly balls, or miss the break-away lay-ins and are often reckoned to the retarded waterfowl of the Yukon.

Let's take a look at the positive sides of intramurals before any judgment is passed. As said before, intramurals provide an avenue for athletes who aren't quite able to cut the competitive mustard of college athletics. Watching some contests, people may make the mistake of assuming that because a person excels in intramurals, they can do the same in the real sports world. Some do have a chance in the real sports world, but for most we have to rely on the late night adrenalin we get when no one else is around.

Another plus for intramurals is that it gets people to play sports that otherwise wouldn't do so. These are the people who strike-out in slow pitch or shoot granny shots from the top of the key. Still it allows these people to get out and experience a sport that they have never played. Sure they often get offers from Special Olympics to try out, but they are still enjoying the experience deep down.

Others use these games for "bragging rights." Many people derive pleasure from hammering another team 57-0 and the ensuing bragging rights that follow. To many, the winning of a game or championship is the pinnacle of their entire athletic careers.

While intramurals does have its positive sides, there are some negative ones that can often make intramurals ugly.

The competitiveness of some games borders on ridiculous sometimes. Everyone likes to win, but is it necessary to degrade anyone who gets in your way of winning? I've seen more fights in intramurals than I've seen in regular sports, and that defeats the whole purpose of having these sports. If the purpose is to give your opponents blood clots and contusions, then I apologize to the masses.

"Intramurals are to help facilitate growth and learning in an athletically-oriented atmosphere." The dream of every intramural organizer is summed up in that Freudian phrase and is generally ignored by everyone else. Who wants to grow and learn? Everyone wants personal glory, even me. I'm out there for the incentives. I'm not a team player, an individualist. Maybe that's why I've been cut from three different intramural teams. At this point in time I'm in arbitration with two softball teams. Maybe I'll learn and grow from this dandy little experience.

Embleton snatches T.B. golf victory

by Sam Weber
Special to The Whitworthian

Last week McMillan Hall held its annual Tom Taylor Tennis Ball Golf Tournament that included a break from tradition involving a dorm that is rich in tradition.

The emergence of Freshman Shay Embleton coupled with the experience of seniors Richard Kemman and Erik Henriksen, as well as defending champion Brian Killefer, brought about an atmosphere that was very conducive to championship caliber tennis ball-golf.

The bets were on defending champ Killefer and the long-hitting southpaw Kemman. Killefer struggled all day long to finish well off the pace with a one-under-par 48 while Kemman shot a 5-under 44.

Freshman phenom Embleton was on fire shooting a 5-under to match Kemman's score of 44. The closest golfer behind the leaders was Turner — one stroke off the pace.

The stage was set for a classic sudden-death playoff for the Green Jacket between Kemman and Embleton.

The Green Jacket is traditionally awarded to the winner of the Tom Taylor with Killefer wearing the jacket during the past year.

Kemman had difficulty navigating throughout the tall Ponderosa Pine trees in The Loop as the younger Embleton played the hole superbly to shoot a birdie 5 and snatched

Jacobson wins big, places 2nd in nation

by Peter Christensen
of The Whitworthian

Tim Jacobson's hammer throw of 183-4 set a new school record and nationally ranked him 2nd in the NAIA to set the pace for the men's track team this weekend.

The solid performance by the men's team here in Spokane helped alleviate the losses of the injury-ridden women's team Saturday in Tacoma.

Friday night brought the men's team to Spokane Falls Community College where they competed in the Arnie Pelluer Invitational. The meet started at 4:30 and did not finish until the late evening. Whitworth gave strong performances in the triple jump, high jump, hammer, 110m hurdles, and 500m.

In the triple jump Paul Markillie captured 2nd with 43-7. Markillie snagged 2nd in the high jump with 6-2. Dave Rohrman followed closely behind taking 4th with 5-10.

In the throwing events Whitworth dominated the hammer by taking the 1st, 3rd and 6th places. Jacobson captured 1st with his throw of 183-4. Coming in at a close 3rd was Arnie Tyler with 167-11, and Stuart Woods rounded out the event at 6th place with 150-8.

Mike Pritchard squeezed in to 5th place in the javelin with a throw of 174-0.

The team managed to nab three out of six places in the 110m hurdles. Gary Knowlton turned in a strong performance, but just missed 1st by a slim margin. He took 2nd with 15.67. Rohrman came in at 5th with 16.88 and Mike Rough followed at 6th with 17.4.

Peat Sutherland finished the 5,000m in 15:13.6, placing 2nd and Alan Bracken followed with 15:55.4.

The 4x400m relay team edged in at 6th place with a time of 3:28.4.

On Saturday the women's team traveled to the coast where they competed at the University of Puget Sound's J.D. Shotwell Invitational meet in Tacoma. Coach Tyler explained that the below-average performance of the team was due to the many injuries his athletes have. However there were a few bright spots.

The 4x100m relay team, consisting of Kris Young, Gwen Keiser, Jeri Wilkerson and Kari Jacobson finished strong and captured 2nd place.

Young also qualified for Districts in the 200m with her 4th place time of 26.3. She is currently ranked 4th in the District lineup.

Barb Lashinski rose to the occasion again this weekend, and captured another 1st place in the javelin with a throw of 149-7. Lashinski carried away the women's only 1st place.

Women's tennis serves fierce victory over SCC

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

Preparing themselves for a heavy schedule this week, the women's tennis team battled Spokane Community College Tuesday. The challenge proved to be positive for the team, downing SCC, 8-1.

"We played real well against Spokane. Our numbers 4, 5 and 6 beat their numbers 1, 2 and 3 players in singles," said Coach Jo Wagstaff.

Toni Fenner, playing the No. 1 spot, won her match 6-3, 6-2, however she thought she could have played better.

"I played okay, but I made a lot of unforced errors on my backhand," said Fenner.

She also added that "The team is starting to gel, and we are having a real good season. So far we have a 9-6 record," said Fenner.

The women's tennis team also played Seattle University and Seattle Pacific in a couple of hard-fought matches.

"We had to play real well in order to beat Seattle University," said Wagstaff.

Wagstaff also commended Sally Reed who played well against Seattle University's No. 1 player.

"Sally played fantastic against a new No. 1 player," said Wagstaff.

They also played Seattle Pacific and didn't fare as well, losing six of the nine matches, but the final score was deceiving.

"We played well against Seattle Pacific. Our girls gave 100 percent in singles. I would even go as far as to say it was our best match of the season," said Wagstaff.

"Ann Benzel, Kari Strand, and Sally Reed all played outstanding in winning their matches. The rest of the girls played their hearts out as well, but came up a little short," she added.

Benzel, the No. 2 player, felt that it could have gone either way.

"We played tough, in fact, we just came up on the short end of the stick if you consider that we lost all four three-set matches to SPU," said Benzel.

The Lady Bucs also were scheduled to have played Eastern Washington University, but that match has been postponed until Tuesday.

Whitworth host tournament dominated by Seattle Pacific

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth's tennis courts were rarely bare this weekend as the Pirates hosted their invitational tournament all day Friday and Saturday. Seattle Pacific University returned to the West Coast as champions in the third annual tourney, wiping out competition from Whitworth, Seattle University, and Central Washington.

SPU's domination was apparent in the championship singles match, as Falcon teammates Dave George and George Solovjev competed for the tournament title. George beat Solovjev 6-4, 0-6, 6-4. Seattle Pacific also won the top spot in the lower bracket (players ranked three through six), as well as sweeping first and second places in doubles.

Falcon Coach Mark Alman said, "We came here with confidence; we've had a good season and we know what we're capable of. I'm proud to see the team put their talent to work. I've got eight great tennis players who are also great guys."

Alman's team finished the weekend with 74 points, with the Pirates taking second with 38 points, edging Central's 34½ and Seattle U.'s 30½.

Whitworth's head coach, Ross Cutter, was satisfied with the results. "SPU was quite heavily favored. They've got five seniors who are real strong players," he admitted. "We came in second and that's fine. We didn't do bad at all."

The Pirates won the tournament two years ago and have placed second for the past two invitational.

Cutter singled out some individual performances as exceptional, "Our freshmen Mark Frisby and Tod Whitman played particularly well." Frisby, No. 3 for Whitworth, made it to the consolation finals and ended up finishing fourth after SPU's Bob Shimer defeated him, 6-2, 6-4.

Whitman, ranked fifth for the Pirates, was 6-2 overall in the tournament, defeating several higher ranked, more experienced opponents. He said beating Ken Rey from Seattle Pacific was a high point for him, "He creamed me at the tournament in Walla Walla a couple weeks ago, 6-1, 6-0, so it felt good to beat him this time."

Whitworth's Mark Eidson staged an upset of his own. Number seven for the Bucs, Eidson won the consolation finals in his bracket after downing the number three player from Seattle U., Walter Jackson. The score from that match was 7-5, 6-1.

Brad Larkin and Mark Eilers teamed up to grab the doubles consolation title in the final match of the tournament. The pair battled the No. 2 duo from Central Washington. The match looked even in the front set. Larkin and Eilers scraped out a win, 7-6, with an 8-6 tie-breaker. But in the second set, no holds were barred and the Bucs cruised to victory, 6-1.

Cutter summed up the weekend's tournament as "delightful. It was a lot of fun; I'm happy we played so well, and everything went so smoothly.

Earlier in the week, the Pirate squad took on Lewis-Clark State and Seattle Pacific to finish their regular season. Whitworth lost to both teams to end the season 7-8. They are now preparing for the district tournament to be held in Ellensburg.

Loss costs Bucs 1st place

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

The Pirate baseball team surrendered first place in district play Saturday to Central Washington University by losing the first game of their doubleheader, 8-4, to the Wildcats.

Central is now 5-1 in districts, while Whitworth follows at 7-3. Scott Carolan tossed three innings and suffered the loss.

Buc second baseman, Troy Anderson, had two hits, two runs, and one RBI.

In the nightcap Anderson was the hero as he blasted two solo home runs and propelled the Pirates to a 12-11 win.

Eddie Eugeno tossed 4½ innings of the one-hit relief.

Earlier in the week Whitworth took on Washington State University. Pirate pitchers yielded 21 hits and lost 16-5 for the fourth straight time against the Cougars.

Whitworth managed eight hits, three by Ryan Clements. Pitcher Brian Cook took the loss.

On Wednesday the Bucs continued their ways, losing a doubleheader to Eastern Washington University 6-4 and 13-2. Pirate pitching continued to be the weak spot as the Eagles pounded out 17 hits in the nightcap to stop their eight-game losing streak.

In the first game Carolan went the distance in a strong performance, but came up short as the Pirates only managed four hits.

One of these was a three-run homer by Clements.

Whitworth wrapped up its 1-6 week by losing a doubleheader to visiting Lewis-Clark State College 10-2 and 17-7.

Pitcher Troy Oliver took the loss as the Warriors scored in every inning but the last. Whitworth got its two runs on solo blasts by Anderson and Randy Russell.

In the nightcap the Warriors erupted for 12 runs in the first and coasted to a 17-7 thumping of the Pirates. Pitcher Ian Cameran suffered the loss. Keith Wesland pitched excellent middle relief before giving way to Wayne Wenstrom in the seventh.

Troy Anderson homered for the fourth time this week, giving him a total of 10 on the year, which ties his school record. Vern Hare also homered for the Bucs.

SpringFest

SpringFest '87 proved to be fun-for-all. The Associated Students of Whitworth College raised an estimated $3,000 for the Ronald McDonald House of Spokane. Although the event didn't meet its monetary goal of $10,000, it did meet other goals. SpringFest '87 brought together the Whitworth community in pursuit of a united goal. ## College appoints interim president

The Whitworth board of trustees confirmed Joseph P.H. Black, vice president of Institutional Advancement, as interim president of Whitworth, according to Jack W. Hatch, chair of the board of trustees.

Black will assume his duties September 1, following the August 31 retirement of President Robert Mounce.

Black's appointment comes as a result of a recent decision by Whitworth's Presidential Search Committee to reopen its search to fill the presidential position.

Two candidates were brought to campus in late March and early April for intensive on-campus interviews, but neither was offered the position.

Black was chosen by the Personnel Committee of the board after interviews with key campus officials.

Trustee Curt Shoemaker, a Spokane attorney and chair of the committee, announced the appointment to the campus at a meeting last Thursday, April 30.

According to Shoemaker, the committee had considered a number of alternatives for dealing with the time between Mounce's departure and the naming of a new president, which could be as short as four months, but could be as long as one year.

The alternatives included asking Mounce to extend his retirement date, bringing in an outside administrator, and naming someone from within.

"Mounce's first response was that he'd do whatever is best for Whitworth," Shoemaker said. "But he has plans and opportunities that we were reluctant to ask him to suspend for such an indefinite period."

Outside administrators were ruled out because the time it would take someone to become knowledgeable about the college could be longer than the interim period, according to Shoemaker.

Black has been in his present position since 1985. He is responsible for the admissions, development, alumni relations, church relations, and public relations departments of the college.

He has served as administrative coordinator of the Presidential Search Committee, but will be relieved of those duties immediately in preparation for his assignment.

Black is a 1960 Whitworth graduate and holds two degrees from Princeton Theological Seminary. Prior to coming to Whitworth, he was a fund-raising consultant for Barnes and Roche, Inc.

The Whitworthian takes third in Wash.

The Whitworthian captured third place in the Washington Press Association annual state competition.

Only The Mast from Pacific Lutheran University and The Daily Evergreen out of Washington State University topped The Whitworthian in the general excellence category for four-year colleges.

In the general excellence category papers are judged for overall superiority in the areas of graphic design, editorial content, photography and writing.

Other papers entered in the competition included the University of Washington and Western Washington University.

There were more than 800 entries from high schools, community colleges and four-year colleges.

Several individual articles were entered by The Whitworthian writers, but none received awards.

The Whitworthian Editor-In-Chief Bob Coleman will attend the WPA awards luncheon in Bellingham, Wash., May 16, to accept the award.

Commencement plans formed

by John Boyer
of The Whitworthian

Commencement is a time when graduating seniors move forth into the world. This is the idea embodied in Robert A. Seiple's commencement address.

Seiple is the President-Designate of World Vision, an organization that cares for the world by distributing food and medical assistance to countries like Ethiopia and Sudan.

He's also the president of Eastern College in St. David's, Pa., and Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Philadelphia.

Also speaking at commencement will be two Whitworth presidents: one from the present, and one from the past.

Current president Robert H. Mounce will welcome the audience to commencement and past president Mark L. Koehler will give the invocation.

Koehler, Whitworth's president from 1964 to 1969, will commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of his graduating class. Students who graduated in '37 will be onstage.

After that, graduating students Marc Eilers and Shonda Kessler will present selected Bible readings.

After Seiple's commencement address, Whitworth's choir will sing "Praise to the Lord, the Almighty." Graduating student Melora Brooks will direct.

Graduating Senior Tim Boggess will be one of two student speakers.

"It's a big honor to be chosen among all of the seniors to speak," Boggess said.

"Basically, it's the end of an era, a stage of all our lives. I see graduation as a time of rejoicing and a time of accomplishment too. I want my speech to mimic those values," Boggess added.

International Studies graduate Steve Matthies will speak next. In a way, he

Graduation: A shot into outer space

by Sandy Wark
The Whitworthian Editorial Board

There are many ways to handle being a senior. There is the "Robert Clancy" method — take your time, as long as you've made it to the pinnacle of undergraduadom, why not enjoy it for a year or two...or three or four.

Then there are those who have been planning their senior year since they were freshmen. They're the ones who have their resume typed and distributed to a dozen or so would-be employers. They already own a navy blue suit, and know what to say in an interview...disgustingly prepared.

There are others who will graduate in two weeks, they know that for a fact, in fact that's the only thing they know for a fact. These poor souls whose well-meaning friends and relatives who ask, "So, what are you going to do with you degree?" might as well have their heads slammed against a brick wall.

An idea for a young Whitworth entrepreneur: create a button reading, "NO, I DON'T KNOW WHAT I'M DOING, SO DON'T ASK!" and market it at commencement — it could make a quick fortune. Better yet, shock that aunt who remembers "when you were this high," with a creative answer, "Yes, I'm going to the Amazon to tame anacondas."

For nearly all seniors, graduation is like being shot into outer space — who knows what's out there? On one hand it's got to be better than CORE 250 five days a week, but on the other hand it's CORE that's supposed to have prepared us for what comes next...now that's a scary thought.

Here's a bit of naive wisdom for seniors who find themselves shaking in their boots — RELAX! Even if you're not ready, it's too late now, so why worry? Take a Kierkegaardian "leap of faith" (see, CORE 250 does have its applications), and go for the gusto!

Remember back to being a freshman, driving on to campus with Mom and Dad in the station wagon. Between doing push-ups and shaking your bushy tail, the question certainly arose, "What am I doing here?" God only knew, and God only knows now. Perhaps it's better that way — God has a better grip on life than the average senior, and he doesn't even need a resume.

We live as if Christ died in vain

To the editor,

It seems somewhat ironic to me, and yet so telling of how we are here at Whitworth, that on the same day we are 'celebrating' the death of our Lord Jesus on the cross, we are also having the McMillan Hall 'function.' This event is but another excuse for most who attend to spend another Friday, and this with an early start, getting drunk. The contrast is most convicting — or should be!

How is it I wonder that we can go out at all and get drunk every weekend when God says clearly in Scripture that this is not something that we were created for? How sad it is that on the very day Jesus died for us that we might be like him, we find the need, again, to go out and deliberately disobey Him; acting so unlike who he created us to be — His children! That's why Jesus died. How is it then that we can so continually be disobedient, especially when he says that those who cannot obey in such 'simple' things will not be entrusted with larger things — not with heaven itself! If we cannot be obedient here on earth, how is it we suppose we will desire to be obedient in heaven?

Abraham Lincoln, in his famous Gettysberg Address, said that we must dedicate ourselves to that cause to which "they who died here gave their last full measure of devotion. We here highly resolve these dead shall not have died in vain." This must be our rallying cry around the cross of Christ. Rather, we live our lives as if Christ had died in vain — or not at all! This is what our lives say, for there has been no change. There is no difference from the world in the way we live our lives. We are anything but dedicated to the cause for which He died — making us His children. If we were, we would be truly obedient to Him. John says, "the man who says he knows Him (Jesus) but does not do what He commands lies, and the truth is not in him." Let him who has ears hear!

C.S. Lewis best sums up our problems when he writes:

"Indeed, if we consider the unblushing promises of reward and the staggering nature of the rewards promised in the Gospels (and we might well consider the staggering punishment too!), it would seem that our Lord finds our desires not too strong, but too weak. We are half-hearted creatures, fooling about with drink and sex and

ASWC produced first-rate event

To the editor,

Almost a year ago, two great friends, John Sowers and Jennifer Wilcox, contacted me with an idea they strongly supported. They asked that ASWC seriously consider "Springfest 87."

Over the last few weeks, out of the fatigue endured by the "Springfest" committees and myself, I have seriously considered sending these two fine individuals' letters that I'm sure would have ended our friendships. Now that "Springfest 87" is receding in our rear view mirror, I am extremely thankful ASWC chose to accept their wisdom or foolishness (I'm not quite sure yet). "Springfest 87" was in almost every category a complete success.

The paramount objective of "Springfest 87" was to rally the student body around a major project benefiting the Spokane community. At 7 a.m. on the morning of "Springfest 87," there were about 50 students gathered behind the HUB to help with set-up. Throughout the day there was an unbelievable amount of student support, in the booths, in the Fun Run, and just enjoying the beautiful weather and entertainment.

It is also estimated that over 4,000 people from the Spokane community enjoyed "Springfest 87." Karen Settle's picture colored the front page of the Sunday morning edition of the Spokesman-Review and "Springfest 87" was a feature story on KHQ news. For a solid week all I have heard from students, faculty, administrators, trustees, and friends of the college, is how much they liked seeing Whitworth and its student body out in the community doing something fun and raising money for a good cause.

Now, before you start thinking that I have rose-colored glasses on, let it be known that there were a number of problems and we will learn from them in planning for next year — however that is not the point of this letter. The point is that the Associated Students produced a first-rate event and in doing so raised $3,500 for Ronald McDonald.

ASWC has not put on an event of this caliber for over 15 years and as a result this success, optimism is overflowing in ASWC about what we as a student body can do next year. You say you would like to see Whitworth display more of its tradition and heritage? You want to have more pride in Whitworth? More attendance at sports events? Or how about a decent looking student union building? All of these ideas and more are possible. In fact, next Saturday and Sunday we are asking for students to come help us paint the major areas of the HUB so the carpet layers can begin their work next Monday. When students enter the HUB next year there will be a new face to what used to be a rather depressing landscape.

The end result is that we as students can and should take more pride in Whitworth; we have a lot to be thankful for and be proud of. The entire ASWC team has worked diligently this year to make changes in student attitudes toward ASWC and I think it is finally paying off. Through the team efforts of this year's House and Senate, and the individual efforts of Trey Malicoat, Glenn Smith, and Steve Broughton, next year's ASWC will be able to build on their foundation. Eric Roecks, Paul Ramsey and myself, are extremely excited about what next year holds. We hope you share this enthusiasm.

ASWC President

Students publish magazine

by Steven Brown
of The Whitworthian

"Script," the first Whitworth literary magazine in over 10 years, made its debut on campus Monday.

Whitworth's literary magazine, "The Pines," has not been printed since 1972.

The "Script" features poetry and short fiction pieces submitted by Whitworth students.

The arrival of "Script" marks the beginning of what Beth Ann Lindell and Mark Eaton, co-editors, said will be a traditional yearly publication.

According to Lindell, a senior English major, the editors received about 200 poetry entries and had to turn down about half of them.

"The poetry is very imagistic," said Eaton, also a senior English major. "We tended to cut out poetry that was too philosophical.

"There is a lot of variety, we didn't want to be too pessimistic... (the publication) doesn't have a depressing mood," he said.

Both Lindell and Eaton said they were rushed to get everything finished in time, but they were pleased with the final outcome.

According to Lindell, the two editors have complimentary styles.

"Two Beth Anns wouldn't have cut it — neither would have two Marks," she said.

The editors received assistance in their editorial decisions by two Whitworth professors, Dr. Laurie Lamon and Dr. Vic Bobb. Lamon helped select the poetry and Bobb helped with fiction selection.

According to Lindell, all final editorial decisions were made by Eaton and herself.

Eaton took full responsibility for all art and photography used in the magazine including the cover design.

Eaton, who has spent a great deal of time working on poster and T-shirt designs said, "I wanted to do something that would be substantial."

The editors conceived of the idea for this publication earlier this fall when both students took a fiction writing class from Bobb. Both students took the initiative to begin the project.

"We didn't ask anyone if we should do it, we just did it," said Lindell. "Everyone was real skeptical at first — they didn't think we'd get any submissions or money.

"I think if we had gone around and asked everyone if we should do it, I don't think we would have done it," she said.

As it turns out, money was not a large problem.

The editors approached the ASWC financial committee asking for $250 and walked away with $500. They also received $200 from the English department, and had already made $150 in presales as of last Saturday, May 2.

"We appreciate the financial support of ASWC," said Lindell. "The committee was so supportive of this project."

The editors hope to sell all of the 400 copies they have ordered. If successful, any profit will be channeled directly into a fund for next year's "Script."

The "Script" was displayed yesterday, May 4, at an autograph party and went on sale to the general Whitworth community for $2 a copy.

The magazine will be sold on-campus through the bookstore and at SAGA between 5-6 p.m. all week, May 4-8.

Next year's "Script" editors have already been determined. Publishing the magazine will be students Bob Grondhoyd and Charlie Wait.

Six faculty members leaving Whitworth

by Suzan Fleshman
of The Whitworthian

Along with our president, many of Whitworth's faculty members will not be here next year. Some will leave to continue their education, others to retire.

Among the faculty leaving are, Frank Houser from the Sociology department, Tom Kirkpatrick and Karen Dalton from the Communications department, Terri Sanders from the Nutrition department, Craig Thomas from the English department, and Ed Korntved from the Math department.

Houser, who has been teaching for 28 years at Whitworth, will retire this year.

Houser has given the students of Whitworth a lot of entertainment through singing in the faculty quartet, playing his cello, playing tennis and performing in the "Music Man" three years ago.

"... (The traditional quartet that the students have grown to look forward to at "Mac Hall in Concert") will be not be there next year, unless the group can find a new 1st tenor," said Houser.

Houser is convinced that co-teaching "Is Love Enough" with his wife, Helen, is the one thing he is most proud of in reflection over his time at Whitworth.

"The course seems to have met a student need and an interest," said Houser. "The course has made me learn a lot about marriage and teaching."

Through teaching this course Houser is convinced the course structure taught him the importance of teaching useable material and facilitating discussion.

Houser came to Whitworth as a "Hard-nosed" professor. He said he has mellowed out through the years.

"I'm not so demanding now... I had a student once that was so fearful of me because of my intense feeling about academics, she was scared," he said.

Houser said now he would emphasize not necessarily the textbook as a way of measuring academic prowess, but instead to emphasize internships, on-site learning, independent studies, and field studies.

Houser said, "Almost a wall was raised between the student and me by my heavy reading assignments... but with my new way of teaching we have related as two minds, not just two people."

Plans for Helen and Frank are to do some traveling after retirement.

"When I first decided to retire I had no specific idea of what I wanted to do, maybe some marriage enrichment type work," said Houser.

Last spring, Houser spotted an announcement for professors of American Culture needed to teach in Nanjing, China.

From that, the Housers will head for China for a year of teaching.

"Retirement to me doesn't mean time to relax — it's doing something: using talents and ideas to enrich God's kingdom without the regimen

Support the home team

To the editor,

On Tuesday, April 7, the Whitworth Wind and Jazz Ensembles wound up their Great American Band Tour with a home performance in the auditorium. And what a grand finale!

However, as much as I enjoyed the performance, I walked home in grave disappointment. I had been one of an audience which embarrassingly numbered only about 250-300 people. And many of those were relatives of the performers — not students, staff, or faculty of Whitworth!

What ever happened to supporting the home team? Last Christmas, the Whitworth College Choir concert was packed. This spring's performance of The Singer was attended by a great number of staff and students also. Why not the wind and jazz ensemble performances?

This talented group of people, led by Richard "Doc" Evans, performs just as excellently, and works just as hard to represent Whitworth in high-quality tradition. It seems as though everyone but the Whitworth community recognizes this!

Thank goodness, we all have a chance to redeem ourselves, both faculty and students, this Friday at Forum, May 8, at 11:15 a.m. the Dixieland band and jazz ensemble will be presenting yet another outstanding performance — for us. They're doing it for us, so please let's all show them the support and respect they deserve, and I guarantee you'll enjoy yourselves!

ambition when infinite joy is offered us, like an ignorant child who wants to go on making mud pies in a slum because he cannot imagine what is meant by the offer of a holiday at sea. We are far too easily pleased." (From Weight of Glory) We conclude with the words of Peter in I Peter, chapter 2.

"Dear brothers, you are only visitors here. Since your real home is in heaven, I beg you to keep away from the evil pleasures of this world: they are not for you, for they fight against your very souls."

Let those who have ears to hear, hear — and obey! Amen.

Summer sailing class offered by Whitworth

Whitworth will offer an introductory sailing course on Lake Pend Oreille beginning May 20. A credit course, "Introduction to Sailing" will combine 18 hours of hands-on sailing aboard a 31' cruising yacht with 11 hours of in-class instruction on the Whitworth campus.

Class participants will learn basic seamanship, sail handling, helmsmanship, and heavy and light air techniques during on board classes. The course will also cover information that will be helpful to participants interested in qualifying to charter their own sailing excursions.

Leading the course is Lloyd Woleslagle, M.E.. Woleslagle is licensed with the U.S. Coast Guard for inland navigable waters as a charter boat captain. Woleslagle owns and operates "Wind and a Prayer Sailing Charters."

Trustees hear committee reports

by Shauna Winner and Barb Visser

While many in the Whitworth community were outside enjoying the afternoon sunshine Wednesday, April 29, Whitworth's board of trustees were holding their first of two plenary meetings inside.

Finance Report

Among highlights of reports made during the meeting was the Finance Committee report. Following a series of motions by the Finance Committee, the trustees approved the Whitworth College and Whitworth Foundation Ethical Investment Guidelines for Financial Managers and Investors.

It is a hope that the guidelines will aid the trustees and financial officers of the College and Foundation in protecting the integrity of the institution's economic assets and in recognizing a moral responsibility to make financial decisions which are consistent with the missions and goals of the college.

Decisions about college investments should reflect moral and ethical commitments as follows: Whitworth shall not knowingly hold securities in corporations involved in the abuse of the human body or of the natural environment; connected to blatant political and social oppression; connected to the moral and ethical abuse of human beings and their basic institutions; linked to violence and militarism; or involved in fraudulent actions or whose officers continue or tolerate criminal behavior.

Recognizing the complex nature of the contemporary economic world, the financial officers of the College and the Foundation will be guided by the following practical considerations about investment decisions:

1. There shall be no attempt to avoid responsibility when examining a specific company by arguing that there are so many cases of abuse that we cannot take action on any of them. On the other hand, since almost every economic institution could be linked with one of the problems listed above, there shall be no attempt to achieve absolute "purity" in the College or Foundation investment policy.

2. Cases which are of highest concern to the College family, to the Presbyterian Church, and to the greater Christian community will receive the first and most careful consideration. Our first concern is to be a "good neighbor," not to make universal moral declarations.

3. The College and Foundation shall not spend scarce resources searching for problems in the investment portfolio. However, those examples brought to the financial officers' attention will be analyzed as carefully and objectively as possible.

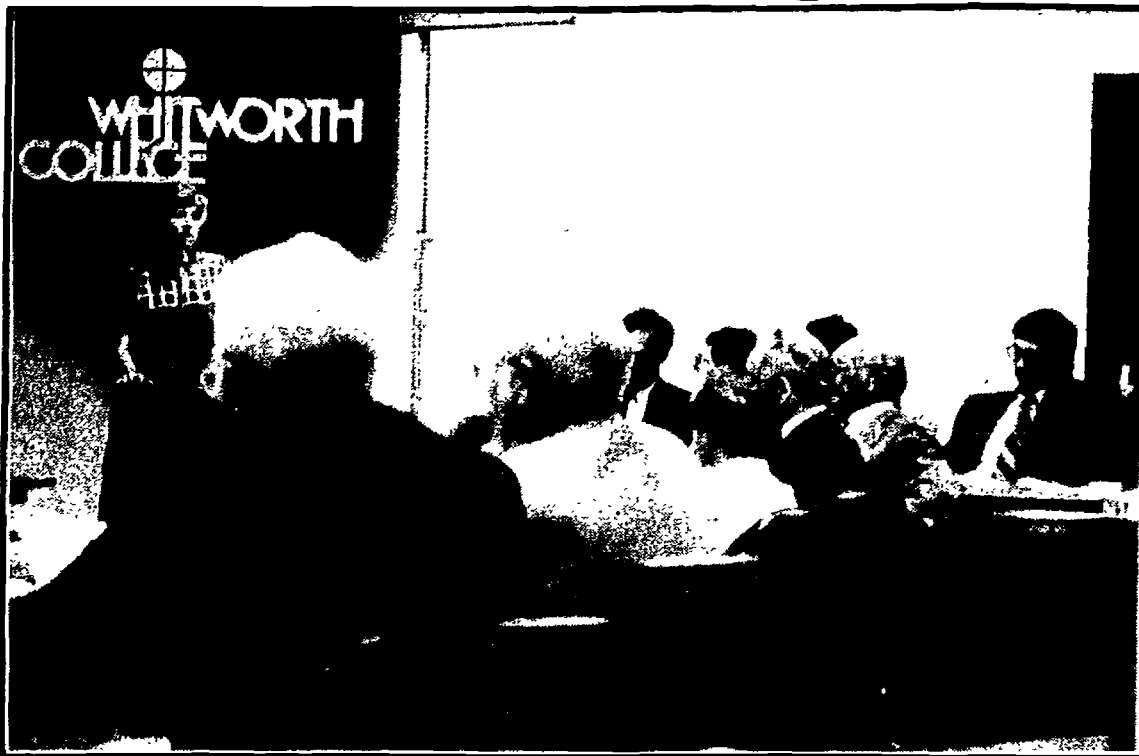

The College and Foundation shall be expected to sell or refuse unwanted investments in a prudent manner so as to avoid unnecessary losses.

5. The College and Foundation shall consider the total range of a company's activities before selling or refusing a particular security, taking into consideration the degree of abuse and whether there is substantial social injury.

Faculty Affairs

In addition to the Ethical Investment Guidelines, the trustees also approved the Academic Affairs Committee's faculty promotions, faculty tenure appointments, and new faculty appointments.

Faculty members promoted included the following: Dr. Jean Anderson from associate professor to professor; Linda Hunt from instructor to assistant professor; Dr. Gordon Jackson from assistant professor to associate professor; Dr. Lois Kieffaber from associate professor to professor; Doris Liebert from assistant professor to associate professor; Dr. Arlin Migliazzo from assistant professor to associate professor; Martha Nelson from instructor to assistant professor; and Dr.

Dr. Julie Anderton, vice president of Student Life, addresses the board during Thursday's meeting. (photo by Trevor Francis)

Raja Tanas from assistant professor to associate professor.

Tenure appointments of faculty include the following: Dr. Hans Bynagle, Associate Professor of Philosophy and Director of the Library; Dr. Tammy Reid, Associate Professor of Education; as well as Jackson, Kieffaber, Migliazzo, and Tanas.

The trustees also approved two new appointments to Whitworth's faculty beginning in the 1987-88 academic year. Dr. Robert Clark, currently of Gordon College, will teach sociology and family studies and Professor Ann Trefry, currently of Gonzaga University, will teach mathematics.

Health Education

Also, on the agenda, the Academic Affairs Committee reported a review of Whitworth's Health Education programs resulted in the elimination of the professional/vocational master's track which leads to the Master's of Health Education (MHED).

The review was conducted by the departmental faculty, the Community Health Education Advisory Board, a faculty task force, and the Council on Professional Learning.

The trustees approved that the Master of Science degree in health education, with a required thesis, will be the only graduate degree offered in health education in Whitworth College's curriculum beginning in the 1987-88 academic year.

24-hour Visitation

At Thursday's plenary session of the board of Trustees meeting, Julie Anderton, vice president for Student Life, reported on the 24-hour visitation issue.

According to Anderton, the Community Values Implementation Task Force has worked to clarify issues and to come up with some recommendations. An option as of now is that one residence hall with limited visitation hours will be available to incoming students.

This will most likely be one of the Village dormitories. This option will not displace current students living in the dorms.

Behavior Policy

Also, an interim paper was approved by the board which changes Whitworth's behavioral policies in three ways.

First, it combines the no-alcohol and no-drug policies. It also adds a destructive behavior policy. The paper tries to connect the policies with some value base. "Each policy is followed by a paragraph explaining why we have it," said Greg Hamann, director of Resident Life.

In the following year, the task force's job includes restating this document in more positive language. Serious consideration will also be given to forming a policy on fraud and educational dishonesty.

Centennial Campaign

In his report to the Board, Jon Flora, director of development for the Centennial Campaign Committee, commented that the trustees can look forward to a lively October meeting. He explained further that the committee is planning a busy summer.

Flora reported that production of an audio-visual promotion presentation geared to adults is an option that the committee is seriously looking into.

The committee will also be looking at the top donor prospects for the campaign.

Although the actual birthday of Whitworth is Feb. 20, 1990, the celebration will take place during the academic year of 1989-90. These "party elements," as Flora referred to them, may include special convocations, and possibly a week full of activities in mid-February. No plans are concrete yet.

The revised campaign project list includes a renovated/expanded library, student union building, and expanded endowment. Other projects on the original list, including the upgrading of the Pine Bowl and additions to the Fieldhouse, remained the same.

Admissions Report

John Reed, director of Admissions, made a report on the revised Admissions department and its progress. Even with a declining market and increased competition, Reed said that Admissions has received more applications than in previous years.

Joe Black, vice president for Institutional Advancement commented that he was very proud of the advancement staff, which includes both Development and Admissions.

Building Projects

The Buildings and Grounds committee reported that Don Holden, after nine years as director of the Physical Plant, will serve as a special construction/project manager for the next three years. In this position, Holden will oversee the tax-exempt bond projects.

The renovation of McMillan Hall, the next project on the list, will be finished by the beginning of the fall semester.

Other projects include 1988 renovations of Stewart and Ballard residence halls, and the Leavitt Dining Hall.

Doctorate Degrees

The Recognitions Committee recommended to the Board that honorary doctorate degrees be given to four individuals, all of whom live outside of the United States.

These degrees are given to recognize people who have distinguished themselves in areas that represent Whitworth's values.

Also, the committee recommended that the Distinguished Community Service award be given to Ed Tsutakawa of Spokane. Tsutakawa has headed the Sister City Society for approximately 20 years.

Governance System

Jean Anderson, faculty president, said in her report that the new governance system instituted last year was working out well. The faculty has moved that this council system of government be adopted permanently.

One goal of the new system was to reduce time spent in committee meetings. This has not been accomplished; however, Anderson said that the time spent has been more constructive.

According to Anderson, a price is paid in all areas including academics, for budgetary constraints. An example of this is Whitworth's average student/teacher ratio, now approximately 17:1, which is increasing. Anderson continued by saying that additional revenue is needed besides tuition.

But she added, "I'd much rather live with our problems than the ones other schools are facing."

Finance Committee

A continuation of the finance committee's report included a resolution that the administration financially support one South African student to attend Whitworth for each of the next five years.

The Board also adopted a new investment policy which states...

It is the desire of the Whitworth College Community to encourage responsible activity toward constructive change in South Africa and a peaceful end to apartheid.

As one means of implementation of this policy, the Board of Trustees herewith adopts the following policy for investments to be held or acquired hereafter by Whitworth College and/or the Whitworth Foundation:

Equity investments in companies with known significant operations in South Africa shall be held or acquired only if such companies subscribe to and seek actively to comply with the Sullivan principles or equivalent principles.

With respect to loans, no debt securities of banks or financial institutions will be purchased if there is reason to believe loans are being made to the South African government or its parastatal organizations, or of corporations, the equity securities of which would not be eligible investments under the preceding paragraph.

Where the above conditions are not met, the prudent divestment should be undertaken in accordance with guidelines established for administration and monitoring of College and Foundation investments.

"Alongside our career choices, we need to be concerned with the needs of the world," Matthies said.

Matthies added that he wants to become a pastor, so he can make the world a better place to live.

Bogges and Matthies were chosen among six other seniors who were nominated for this position.

In between Bogges' and Matthies' speeches, Dr. Julie Anderton will present the Servant Leadership Award.

Following the award, President Mounce will present the President's Cup, an award for the student who's kept the highest grade point average over his/her college career.

When undergraduate degrees are presented by department chairs, Leonard Oakland will present the English department's.

After the undergraduate degrees are presented, graduates George G. Warren and Jeffrey Lant will present their production of the hymn "God of Our Fathers."

Commencement will end with a benediction and recessional accompanied by the wind ensemble.

Commencement will be Sunday, May 17, starting at 2:30 p.m.

Decision reached on 24-hour issue

After a year of debate and discussion, a decision has been made on the 24-hour visitation issue.

In a letter to the Whitworth community President Robert Mounce recommended that the Student Life department develop an alternative residence for entering students who wish to live in a dorm with stated visitation hours.

Student Life is planning to set up a trial dormitory to test the effectiveness of limited visiting hours.

One of the Village dorms is the most likely site for the trial, according to Greg Hamann, associate dean of students.

ASWC President J.B. Meade is frustrated with the way this issue has been handled.

"It's made me sick to find out how much politics is involved in this decision," he said. "I think politics have prohibited us from getting where we need to go with this issue."

"I think the students on the task force have been made pawns in this chess game."

Hard-driving rock-n-roll featured by Stonehill

by Lynn Sievers
of the Whitworthian

Randy Stonehill will be performing at Cowles Auditorium, Thursday, May 7 at 7:30 p.m. Opening for Randy will be The Choir, an up-and-coming Christian rock band.

Stonehill is becoming something of an annual event at Whitworth. He has performed at Whitworth during spring for the past couple of years.

This year his hard-driving Christian rock-n-roll will include songs from his new album "The Wild Frontier."

The Choir will be singing songs from their debut album "Diamonds and Rain".

The Choir is considered to be a more serious rock band, out of the Christian rock mainstream.

The Choir started out as the Youth Choir and recorded an album entitled "Voices in Shadows."

As a result of that album they have received recognition as the most promising Christian rock band out of Southern California.

Stonehill was inspired to become a singer when he was 13-17 years old. The Birds and the Rolling Stones were a big influence on Randy's early development in his singing career.

His music now is a blending of that old inspiration plus the experiences and learning he's acquired in the past 20 years.

Tickets are available for $9 general admission and $4.50 for Whitworth College students.

of faculty work such as reading, grading, committees, etc..."

After their year in China, they've made no definite plans.

Houser added, I've enjoyed Whitworth. The past has been glorious, but the future has so many opportunities...I feel confident that God will use us wherever it is best."

As reported in last week's Whitworthian, Tom Kirkpatrick is also leaving. He is heading for a job in Illinois.

Karen Dalton, also from the Communications department, has been with Whitworth now for five years as a half-time faculty member.

Dalton will leave this year to attend Claremont School of Theology in California. Dalton will be working on her Master of Divinity, with hopes of leading her own church after her ordination.

Dalton is being guided by the United Methodist conference which covers the area of Washington, North Idaho and Western Montana. After her graduation she hopes to serve in this area.

Her husband, Bob Dalton, who works at Mead Jr. High, will take a leave of absence for two years so the family can move to the Claremont area.

Plans aren't certain yet whether the family will stay in California or move back to this area at the end of the two years.

"We'll have to wait and see," said Dalton.

"I'm realizing this spring that I will miss the relationships I've made with students. There are losses along with any change, though," added Dalton.

Besides working at Whitworth, Dalton also does work in the community with organizations, improving their communications, and before becoming a professor for Whitworth Karen worked with the off-campus study programs during the 1970's.

Terri Sanders has fallen into the perfect schedule for her year off. She will leave for the University of Minnesota to work on her doctorate, but, as luck would have it, her fiancée also lives in Minnesota.

Sanders will be taking a leave of absence, but will return for the 88-89 school year — as Mrs. Whyatt.

"This is my third year, and I hate to leave — even for a year," said Sanders. "I like teaching, really enjoy students, inspiring them and watching people change their dietary habits because of what I've taught."

"The year off is not to get married, but to get my education furthered. Things just worked out well."

As a final comment, Sanders added to everyone, "Cut down on fats in your diet and do something in terms of exercise."

Craig Thomas from the English department will take a year off to go back to Harvard to finish his graduate work.

"I left there without finishing, thinking I could finish it slowly while being here — I was wrong."

Thomas' plan is to come back to Whitworth.

"I have frustrations with Whitworth, but my leaving has nothing to do with those," said Thomas. "You can only put off the work so long for psychological reasons as well as graduate reasons — the school will only let you wait so long."

"This will be a time for me to build up my self-confidence as a scholar and to show that I do have talent, this is my avenue of doing that," said Thomas.

His wife and family will join him on his trek to Harvard.

Another faculty member who will leave the staff this year is Ed Korntved of the Math department.

Korntved has been at Whitworth for three years. He hopes to attend Washington State University to work on his doctorate.

If Whitworth still has an opening when he is done in three years, he would like to come back.

"You can't tell though. I'm not expecting to be able to come back, but if I do, that's great."

Korntved teaches all aspects of math, both upper and lower levels of math, and both upper and lower levels of computer science.

"That's what I like, not having the same thing over and over."

Korntved added, "I really like Whitworth, but God may have other plans for me. I'll leave God options with my life."

Musical expertise lures professionals

by Ted Wilson
of the Whitworthian

Winning the N.A.T.S. Inland Empire Voice Competition three years in a row might seem like an amazing accomplishment for a male vocalist from Spokane.

But, graduating Music (Vocal Performance) major John Cooper looks at it as just one of many accomplishments he has had on the way to eventually getting an apprenticeship with an opera company and working up into full-time positions.

Cooper has been involved in the concert choir for three years and was involved in the chamber singers for one year. He performed in the Christmas musical Amahl and the Night Visitors last year, and performed his senior voice recital on April 25.

"I was supposed to do Fiddler on the Roof at Springfest, but they kept having electrical problems, so I never got to," Cooper said. "I didn't get back from Springfest until seven minutes before I was supposed to be on stage."

He sang German and French songs, three operas, two arias and music from the musical carousel during his hour-long performance. But, this was nothing compared to performances he has made in the past.

Cooper said that his biggest break came when he performed with the Spokane Symphony. The assistant director asked Whitworth's Assistant Music Professor Randi Ellefson if he knew of any baritones in the Spokane area that could perform in the Symphony's "Faust."

"Randi directed him to me," said Cooper, "and I tried out and got the part. If he hadn't had ties with the Symphony, I would have never heard about it." The Symphony liked him enough to ask him to come back and perform in one of their connoisseur concerts.

He also has sang and spoke to various people in the community, including the mayor of Spokane and the governor. The college has paid him to perform.

"But I can't stay in Spokane. There are good places to start, but they don't have an opera company here," said Cooper. He wants to get a master's in music at a college that is near a center for operas so that he can work on getting his apprenticeship.

Cooper married Tamara Shawyer, an Art major, last year. She has taken the year off to work while he finishes school, and will return to school next year.

"She's been very supportive of what I do in music. I feel lucky to have a wife that is supportive of my music," he said.

He also credits Dr. Thomas Tavener, professor of music, as being "the most instrumental in that he has taught me everything I need to know. He has been my voice teacher and my advisor, and has been instrumental in what I've done."

"I've gotten to work with real good singers like Christy Burchette and April Vogel," Cooper said. "A lot of good people come here. I feel privileged to be able to go here and learn from these pros."

He plans to work this summer and then apply for graduate school this fall.

Headed for Hollywood?

by Kim Riemland
of The Whitworthian

Todd St. Marie is known for the many roles he has played at Whitworth...both on stage and off.

As a Theater Arts major, St. Marie performed in every theatrical production Whitworth put on from the fall of 1983 to the spring of 1986. Two of those productions saw him in leading roles: Grandpa in "You Can't Take it With You," and the stage manager in "Our Town."

His performance in "Our Town" earned him Whitworth's 1985 Best Actor Award.

Outside Whitworth's auditorium, the 24-year-old has proven himself beyond his acting ability. His extracurricular involvement ranges from being a resident assistant to a Young Life leader; from being an assistant youth director to working in Whitworth's Admissions Office.

Looking back on his college years, St. Marie remembers several highlights.

Special times that come to mind are the 1986 Jan Term London Theater tour, involvement in last year's Apartheid Simulation Day where he and some friends staged a mock overthrow of the government, and of course, The Gremlin.

The Gremlin is St. Marie's

1978 car, the latest in a line of "clunkers" he said.

"Last summer, I put a $50 stereo in it," he said. "I always say that doubled the value."

St. Marie has had the 3-cylinder car (the other three don't work) for about a year.

The Gremlin has gone places that most cars haven't.

For instance, one Saturday night, last fall, The Gremlin, St. Marie and five other people found out first-hand how it feels to be half-buried in sand.

While going up a sandy hill in the northeast corner of Whitworth's Back 40, The Gremlin gave up and sank halfway into the sand...and it stayed there until the next day.

With the help of another student, Craig Bennett, The Gremlin was recovered.

St. Marie said it took some doing, but between Bennett and his truck, the day was saved.

"He just pulled it out like it was nothing," said St. Marie. "He's my hero."

But the sand incident wasn't the first time St. Marie and The Gremlin had gotten into trouble.

Last spring, St. Marie decided to drive through campus...literally.

Beginning on the Music building's lawn, the route continued through the Warren's parking lot, up between the Warrens and Dixon Hall, straight across The Loop, and onto the road next to the library.

That short drive cost St. Marie a $25 ticket and a "private conference" with Physical Plant Director Don Holden.

"It was worth it," said St. Marie.

While St. Marie's past holds many memories, he thinks his most memorable experience at Whitworth is yet to come.

"I would say my highlight will be my senior performance," he said.

On May 15 at 7 p.m., St. Marie will perform "The Story of Little Dombey" by Charles Dickens.

Then, on May 17, St. Marie graduates.

This summer he'll continue with his current job as assistant youth director at Northwood Presbyterian Church.

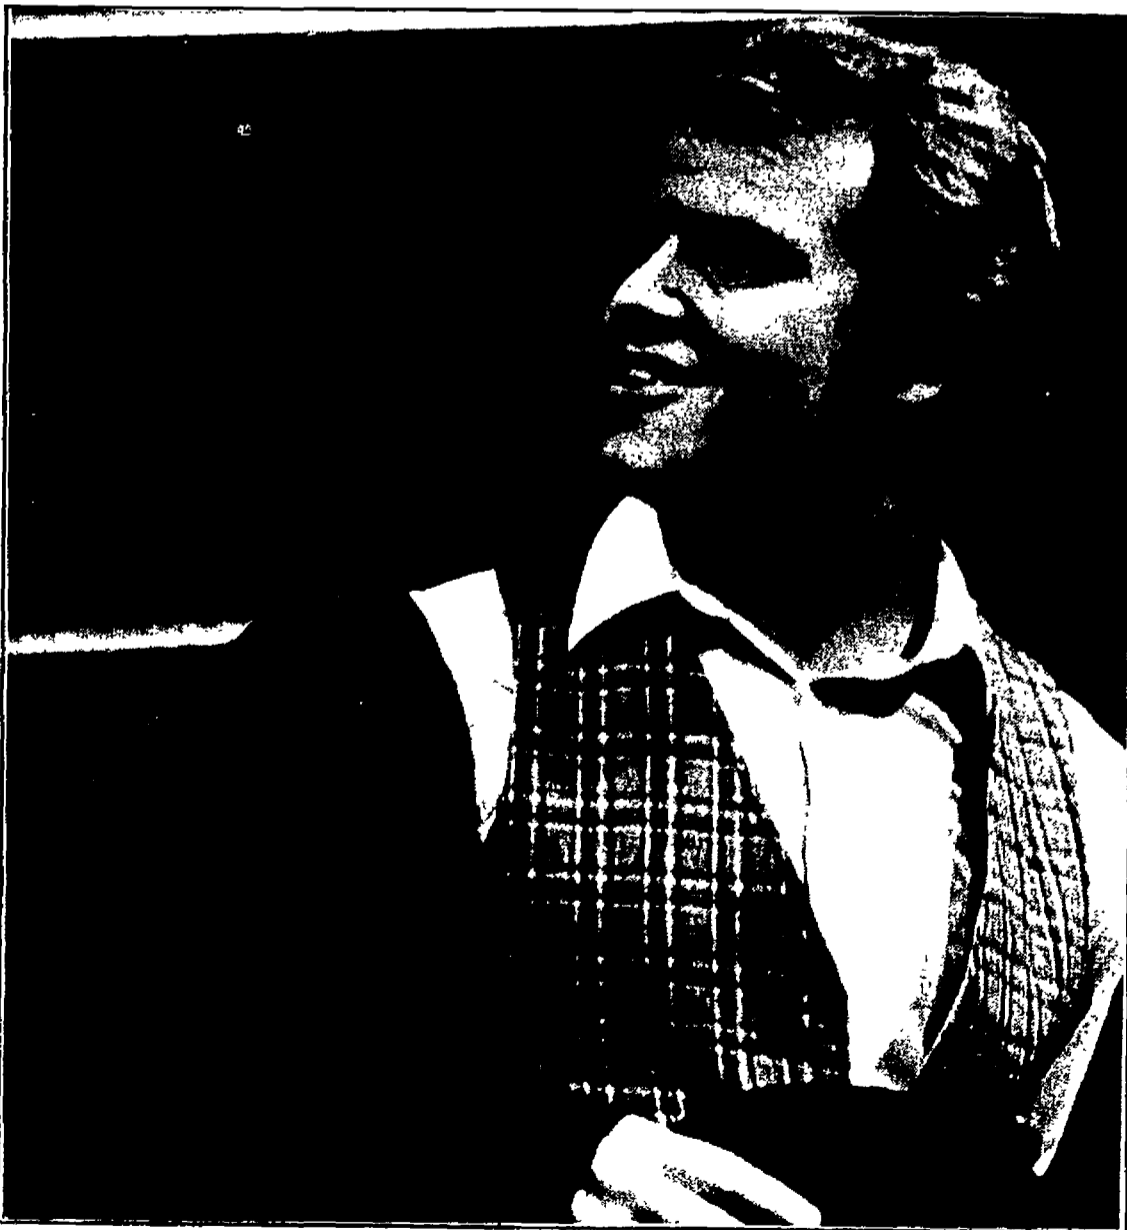

When summer comes to an end, he's heading south to try his hand in the world of professional acting. He plans to move to Pasadena to live with his sister.

"She'll support me when I'm starving," he said.

He plans to do whatever it takes to make acting his career.

"If I get a job in the business I'll take it," he said.

"I want to be a good actor. Ideally, I would like to make a living in the acting industry, solely."

Faculty encourages student in life's challenges

by Philippe Coulon
of the Whitworthian

"Share the talents that God has given you and be the best you can be but don't take life so seriously that you don't have fun."

This is Senior Danielle Brown's, a Psychology major and Business minor, advice to Whitworth College underclassmen. Brown, 22, from Kirkland, Wash., heard about Whitworth College for the first time when John Reed, associate director of Admissions, came to her high school for campus recruitment.

"I was very impressed by what he said and I came with the Great Escape," said Brown.

Brown came to Whitworth to find a friendly atmosphere and a friendly campus. During her freshman year, she found it a very difficult time to adapt to her campus life.

"I was very homesick and very unhappy," said Brown. "I almost transferred down to W.S.U."

Brown found in Linda Hunt, associate professor in the English department, the necessary support for her to remain at Whitworth while she was taking an English class with Hunt.

"She asked me to write a persuasion paper about why I should stay at Whitworth even though I did not want to stay," said Brown. "After writing the paper she really got me thinking and I decided that somehow I would try to stay here."

Brown believes that the biggest advantage at being at the school is the relationship a student has with the professors.

"The Christian atmosphere combined with the support received from the faculty," said Brown, "has a lot to do with why Whitworth has been a good experience for me."

Brown observed that her faith has grown stronger since she has been here, and also been challenged.

"I came to school with a lot of questions," said Brown. "Courses like Core 250, Psych and Christian Faith make you think about how strong your faith really is, and where your priorities are, but I think I am leaving Whitworth with a stronger faith than when I first got here."

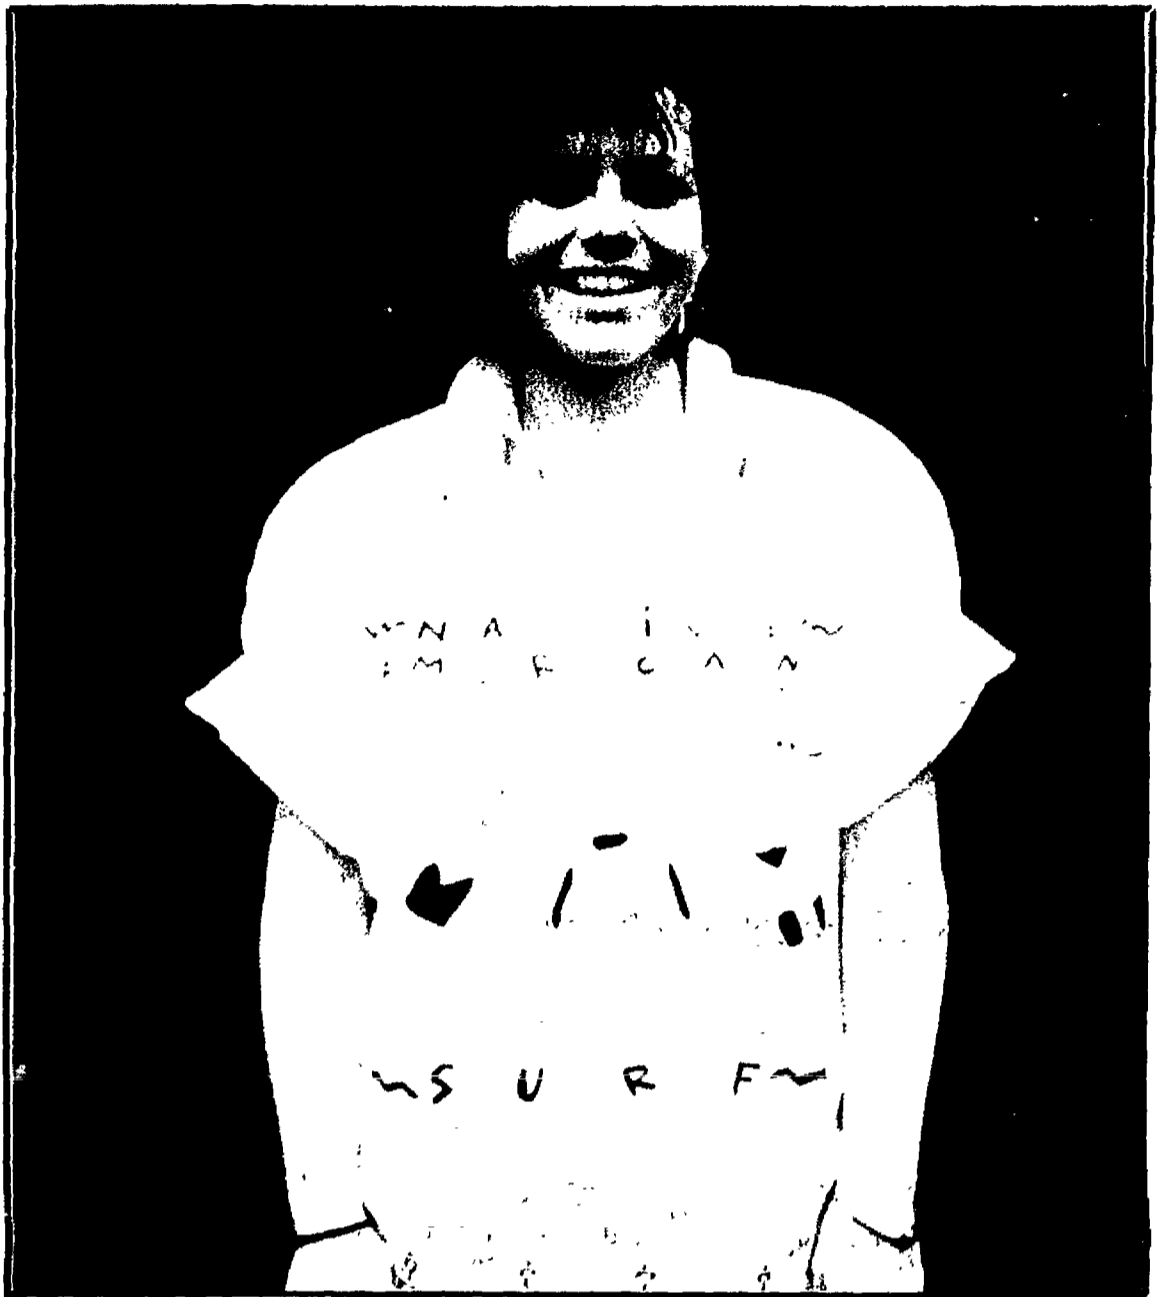

Brown found many beneficial aspects of being at Whitworth but believed that academic programs could be improved if Whitworth could integrate more departments with the Business department.

"There would be a lot of people interested if the program could combine more psychology and business into human resources," explained Brown. "It's becoming more applicable for jobs down the road."

After her four years in college, Brown finds it hard to leave us. "It's gonna be very hard and scary," she said. "It makes me sad because I have made a lot of close friends with students, professors, and staff members. I am going to miss that aspect of the school a lot."

At the end of this summer, Brown is going to move to Seattle with the hope to obtain a job in a personnel field or human resources.

"I'd like to combine my Psychology major with my Business minor and get some job as personal management."

Brown also plans to go to graduate school and study for a M.B.A. (Master in Business Administration).

And 10 years down the road...

"Ideally, I would like to be in a personnel management position for a company like Nordstrom's," said Brown.

"Combining work with fashion." Earlier than that, on Commencement Day on May 17, Brown will give her farewell to the school as a student and she will step on the threshold of a new life.

Practicing law occupies Liz Zirkle's future dreams for working in juvenile justice. (photo by Trevor Francis)

Activities enhance education

by Michele Morin
of the Whitworthian

Proximity initially brought Liz Zirkle to Whitworth, but it was the quality of education and opportunities for involvement which caused her to remain.

The senior, from Richland, Wash., "wanted a small, private school that was fairly close to home, and Whitworth met most of my expectations. It was difficult for me my freshman year because I didn't know what I wanted to do. I must have gone through five majors. My advisor, Kathy Lee, was very helpful to me as a friend and as an advisor, and helped me make important decisions for my future."

Zirkle's major is a combined History/Political studies. She will attend law school at Washington University in St. Louis, Mo., next fall.

"I hope to practice law after I receive my law degree and my master's in social work. I'm very interested in juvenile justice. I've always been sympathetic towards kids who needed help, and I think the work could be very rewarding," said Zirkle.

She feels that Whitworth has definitely prepared her academically for graduate school.

"Here you are taught to think critically rather than just learn facts. Professors are very knowledgeable and value ideas and creativity, not just memorization skills," said Zirkle.

Zirkle has been very active in the Whitworth choir, and music has always been very special to her. She has also been involved in two theater productions, and considers her part in "Damn Yankees" last fall to have been "one of the highlights of my years at Whitworth!"

According to Zirkle, "the choir has been a really wonderful experience, and I've also enjoyed working with the junior high at Whitworth Presbyterian Church."

She feels that she benefited the most from her relationships with her professors and her friends. One drawback she has observed is that Whitworth doesn't adequately promote an atmosphere congruent with the real world, which could leave many disillusioned upon graduation from college. On the other hand, she has been impressed by the professors' commitment to excellence, and she's very thankful for the opportunities she has had to be involved in extracurricular activities.

"Community activities teach one about how to effectively work in a group situation. Those who don't get involved are really missing out on a vital part of a complete education. I feel like a different person than when I first came to Whitworth. I've grown and learned so much about myself and how to think on my own," said Zirkle.

Thriving in activity

by Michele Morin
of The Whitworthian

Delaine Swenson definitely sets an example for others. He shows that with proper time management, one can be very involved in extracurricular activities and still devote adequate time to studies.

Swenson is graduating with a double major in History/Political Science, and Theater Arts. He feels that "my combined majors will work well together in the future. I've perfected my skills in theater work, and have gained intellectual background in my history courses."

Originally from Hermiston, Ore., Swenson first became familiar with Whitworth as part of a tour called the Fine Arts weekend.

"I was sold on the professors and their genuine concern for the students," said Swenson. "When I first came to Whitworth, I didn't have any particular major in mind. I was influenced a great deal by the talent and caring attitude of professors like Pat Stien. Most of the professors are very personable and take a vital interest in their students in and out of the classroom."

Swenson will attend law school in the fall, probably at George Washington University, in Washington D.C. He feels that his strengths lie in public speaking and analytical decision making.

"Theater has always been a hobby for me, and I've chosen History/Political Science as my career. I plan to practice law someday or work in some sort of governmental position," said Swenson.

He has been very involved in student activities while at Whitworth. He has been in about eight theater productions, and he starred as Martin Luther in the production of Luther his sophomore year. In his senior performance, Swenson portrayed Benjamin Franklin.

He has also been very active in ASWC. For 2½ years, he served as dorm president in East Warren and felt that "we established some tradition which had been previously nonexistent," said Swenson. He also was an off-campus representative, co-authored the new ASWC constitution, and this year he served as a senator-at-large.

"I feel that changes need to come from the students," said Swenson. "Many people don't think they have the time to get involved, but they miss out on a different aspect of the educational process when they restrict themselves to academics alone."

One of Swenson's biggest involvements has been with the Circle K club. He now holds the position of international president for the service and leadership development organization. His job requires that he oversee the budget, and travel on behalf of the organization, which is currently in seven nations. He has been gone 12 weekends this term, and he's been all over the United States, Canada, and even Jamaica. Swenson has found most of the professors to be quite accommodating to his schedule.

"I like constant pressure and involvement," said Swenson. "This year I've been involved in three clubs, several committees, and I've taken a full course load. It all works, I just have to make sure that I manage my time well."

Swenson feels that "there is more to a complete education than just academics; being involved in activities teaches one about working with others, and about yourself too. Much of the faculty realizes the importance of the extras."

Swenson has enjoyed his years at Whitworth, and feels that "it has developed and molded me as an individual, but I'm definitely ready to move on."

Faith demands action

by Philippe Coulon
of the Whitworthian

"(I want) to live in a relationship with Jesus Christ and to seek to do God's will in every area of my life."

Throughout his four years at Whitworth, as leader of a jazz band, resident chaplain, chairperson for the Staley Lecture committee and active member of various other working committees, Senior Steve Matthies has demonstrated his commitment to live in accordance to his faith.

Matthies, 21 years old, came to Whitworth in 1983 wanting to go to a small Christian school which emphasizes students as individuals, but in part also because Whitworth offered Matthies an attractive soccer program.

As a freshman, Matthies chose to study music but soon realized that it would not be the best career for him. In the spring of his sophomore year, Matthies took a course of Christian ethics with Dr. Duncan Ferguson who used to work for the Religion department. Ferguson made a considerable impact in Matthies' life.

"The course was challenging, provocative, and the teacher was excellent," said Matthies. "We dealt with issues that were current at the forefront of what was happening in the world at large and in our community in a smaller sense. We grappled with some tough issues and did not find any answers for them."

After that experience, Matthies wanted to study religion further. He believes that faith and action can not be separated from each other, but rather are solidly integrated.

"It is something I will always be striving for," said Matthies. "I will never attain it fully but it is a target to work towards."

Matthies did not want to study religion further at Whitworth because he believed that Whitworth's program did not respond entirely to his expectations.

"We were dealing in my mind too much with theological issues," Matthies explained. "Not enough with matters of social concern and how we can put our faith into practice."

At that time Matthies wanted to study further pastoral ministry and decided that it would be a better route for him to study in another discipline while at Whitworth.

Matthies has been involved actively in a considerable number of committees dealing with Christianity and social issues. One of the most enriching experiences for him relates to his work as the chairperson for the Staley Lecture committee, while preparing the stay of forum speaker Tony Campolo last March.

"It was the most challenging and the most rewarding time for me," said Matthies.

"What do you want me to talk about?" Campolo asked Matthies in the time before his talk. "You are the one who brought me here."

Matthies made himself ready for all sorts of challenges and Dr. Howard Stien, Biology professor, offered him a considerable one.

"He challenged me to state my views honestly and without regard for what people would think of them," said Matthies. "I know a good deal about guts from him."

Matthies' friends appreciate him as a person of pleasant qualities.

"Steve is funny from the outside," said a close friend of his. "Underneath he is very serious and mature."

"He is a young man with a sensitive conscience regarding the question of integrity," said Dr. Ronald G. Frase, chaplain. "His Christian faith is something he lives out with."

At two weeks from graduation, Matthies feels ready for the future.

"I am just on the beginning of my life," he said.

Matthies expects to go to the Theological Seminary of Fuller, Pasadena, Calif., in a couple of years and within that time he will be working in New York as coordinator for a community lunch program, and at Columbia University for a 15-month position.

He wants to encourage students, who are still undergraduates to make the most of their time, classes, and relationships.

"Do the things that you really believe and do not compromise them once you graduate," he said.

On May 17th, Matthies will be honored to address us as one of the two speakers during the commencement ceremony.

Languages direct int'l career

by Suzan Fleshman
of the Whitworthian

Senior Lisa Commander remembers back to her freshman year and all the fun things that used to happen. Things like the first floor espionage team of East Warren, and the terror of South's basement were "fun times" as she calls them.

That was all back when she was a freshman though. Now that graduation is around the corner for Commander, she can look back and see the accomplishments she's made during her four years, and can look forward and see even greater tasks ahead of her.

Commander will walk down the aisle on May 17 with a double major, International Studies and Spanish.

Commander knew when she came to Whitworth four years ago that she wanted to go into International Studies, and she had an interest in Spanish because she spent a year in Honduras during high school, where she learned to speak Spanish fluently.

When she came to Whitworth there was no Spanish major, only French.

"Since then they have instituted the Spanish major, and that's why I decided to pick that up also," she said.

Traveling is one of Commander's favorite things. She spent this fall in Spain, completing one of the Spanish majors "suggestions" — to study in a foreign country for a semester or a year.

During her four years, Commander has accomplished quite a bit. During her sophomore year, 1984-85, she was a member of the International Multi-Cultural committee which made decisions about study tours.

During her junior year, Commander sat on the Academic Affairs council which decided on school policies.

Commander has tutored Spanish for three years, and has been a TA for Ed Miller, a professor of Spanish, for two years.

Throughout her four years, Commander has been the recipient of some honorable scholarships. Commander won the outstanding Spanish student award this year, she has received the Presidential Achievement Award all four years.

"This award is given right out of high school and then if you remain active, and participate in clubs and activities it is renewed each year," said Commander.

She was also the first runner up to receive the Harry S. Truman scholarship. For this scholarship, the history department nominates one sophomore student.

"That was an honor to be nominated," said Commander, "...no one from Whitworth has ever won it and I'm one of the very few to make alternate."

The plans for Commander are in the long run, to hopefully work for a multi-national corporation so that she can use her languages. But, for right now, plans are to take a couple of classes during May term, then she and her mother are going to run a bed and breakfast in Valdez, Alaska ("home" to Commander).

Commander is in the process of applying for an internship in London through Boston University. If accepted this would mean four months in London as the next academic step before graduate school.

Graduate school is a hopeful for next fall for Commander. The number one choice is the American Institute for International Management, otherwise known as Thunderbird in Glendale, Arizona.

Jesus motivator of change

by Tad Wisenor
of the Whitworthian

Born in Oakland, Calif. and long-time resident of Berkeley, graduating Senior English major Chris Finnie is unique among other students for several reasons.

First of all, he just celebrated his 36th birthday in April. Born in 1951, he was out of high school before most present Whitworthians started grade school.

Secondly, being a Berkeley teenager in the turbulent '60s allowed Finnie to immerse himself in the hippie-scene, to his parents' chagrin. He spent much of his time exploring Eastern religions and philosophies.

In 1969-70, his first year at Chabot Junior College in Hayward, Finnie came to some major realizations.

"I went through a lot of crises as to what I was doing with my life."

After deciding that drugs were "unnatural" and not beneficial to him, Finnie pulled out of school so that he could take a summer job at Yosemite National Park. The only two classes he had regularly attended were philosophy and psychology.

At that time he was involved with the "Self-Realization Fellowship" under the ultimate leader of Paramahansa Yogananda. Finnie was also studying Buddhism, Hinduism, and Transcendental Meditation. He hoped that he would be able to find the truth during his summer in the mountains.

Finnie states, "I was raised with Christianity, but I didn't think it had anything to offer me. Except, I did believe there was something unique about Jesus above all other teachers and gurus."

Most of his friends were "freaked-out" said Finnie, but one friend whom he greatly respected was "different." "He told me about Jesus." When he left for Yosemite, Finnie took a Bible with him.

When another friend visited Finnie at Yosemite, "We both gave our lives to Him (Christ). Overnight, everything was totally different. I saw the world in a new perspective. Everything clicked. The Gospels made sense to me."

Finnie returned to Berkeley and worked different jobs while also participating in street ministry. In 1976, he got a job with a data-processing company which he held until 1984.

In the meantime, he took occasional classes, most notably Hebrew, and in the summer of 1979 he spent three months in Israel.

Deciding that he would like to minister through teaching perhaps in a foreign country, Finnie looked to return to college.

Finnie has a brother living in Spokane and liked Whitworth when he visited the school, citing its strong emphasis in the liberal arts as an important factor.

Coming from Berkeley, Finnie finds Spokane "quite the antithesis. Culturally it's been a real experience. I'm used to more diversity. (Living here) made me appreciate where I'm really from."

Several Whitworth professors have made a distinct impression on Finnie. "Nick Faber's radical view on education really made me think a lot," he said.

He also mentioned English Professor Craig Thomas. "He's such a bright person, but he's very down-to-earth at the same time. He has a genuine interest in his students."

Finnie has lived in the Village during all of his years here. He explained with a laugh, "I've lived communally, so it's sort of natural to me."

Finnie's immediate future will take him back to the Bay Area. He will spend time assessing his experience and actively seeking direction from God. He hopes to marry and one day return to Israel to teach English.

"Time is so strange. I feel younger now than I did when I was 19. (I felt old then) because of drugs and the hippie movement and everything I'd gone through. Being a Christian has changed my perspective on time also, in light of eternity.

"In relationships I have had with people here, I hope that I've inspired them to really find out who Jesus is, or who He can be in their lives. I know this sounds clichical but He's everything to me."

College freedom develops Lant's individualness

by Barb Visser
of the Whitworthian

Hailing from Columbia Falls, Mont., a small town with a population of approximately 3,000 people, Jef Lant arrived at Whitworth a very naive, very conservative thinking freshman.

In four years, things have changed.

According to Lant, he has swung from one end of the pendulum, almost to the other extreme. Change has been outwardly evident with the addition of an earring, non-conforming hair styles, and somewhat outlandish clothing.

"Most people will remember me for that," Lant said, rather than for his full time involvement with the Music department. As a Music Education major, Lant has been involved in virtually every ensemble group at Whitworth, including choral and instrumental groups.

Freedom from his family and hometown's outlook was a major catalyst for Lant's change in actions and attitudes.

While at home, he never felt entirely comfortable with the way things were. However, not until he left the conservative community, church and people behind, did he experiment with other ideas, while still holding on to similar values.

Along with other students coming from smaller areas, he expected Whitworth to be different than home since it was bigger, relative to what he was used to.

But, the pine cone curtain reigned, and Lant realized that Whitworth had several characteristics very similar to small towns. It isn't quite the same as the real world.

How did someone from such a conservative atmosphere, entering into another semi-conservative atmosphere become liberal?

During his first years at Whitworth, "I closed myself off to people and things that went on," he said.

Everyone was trying to fit into the "typical mold", and he didn't accept this.

"I got off campus as much as I could, and built relationships off campus," added Lant.

He stressed this need to get away from getting caught up in the mold.

After two years of living in Stewart Hall and one year in McMillan, he is living off campus this year.

"This is the best thing I could have done," he said. "I just wish I'd done it earlier."

But he doesn't regret living in the dorms.

"Stewart was great, especially for the first two years," he explained.

His move to Mac was the best move he made while on campus, since he grew a lot that year. He added that his floor grew very close, yet were very independent.

"They were there when you needed them," claimed Lant.

Lant believes that one of the best things about Whitworth, is the family atmosphere not only among students but also among faculty and others on campus. He asked, "Where else can you be a 'peer' with a prof?"

"I've built a lot of close relationships here," he said.

Lant has not, however, had many serious dating relationships.

At Whitworth, "everyone knows or suspects that you're going out," explained Lant. After one or two dates, everyone assumes that the couple is exactly that — a couple. Because of this attitude, and because of the pressures and the expectations of dating at Whitworth, he has maintained several female friendships, but few public dating relationships.

As far as an educational experience goes, Lant believes he couldn't have asked for much more than what he received at Whitworth.

"The student/teacher ratio is incredible," he said. "You have a wealth of information coming at you."

Lant believes he is better prepared for going out in the working world than seniors from other colleges partly because of the hands-on experience, both in music and in education.

For Lant, life beyond college graduation is scarier than leaving high school. Back then, he knew he still had four more years of school to go.

"Now that school is over with, a great amount of fear is there — can I do this? Where will I be? Can I be a good teacher? Will I use what I've learned? All these fears are coming to a head with only two to three weeks left," said Lant.

Kamerer prepared to face obstacles

by Ted Wilson
of the Whitworthian

Dan Kamerer was a Young Life leader and a graduate of North Central High School. His involvement with Young Life leaders from Whitworth brought him here for school, where he will graduate with a degree in math and a minor in physics. He lives off campus with Lori, his wife of 2½ years, and his two sons, Justin and Jaren.

He has graded papers for math instructors Ed Korntved and Dr. Ron Hansen while working for secondary education certification in his math/science field. He also won the $5000 Congressional Teaching Scholarship in February.

To qualify for the scholarship he had to explain why he wanted to be a teacher, what academic achievements he had, and any influences that had caused him to want to be a teacher.

"It's something to be proud of and helps pay off my loans," Kamerer said.

He has tried to stay away from taking out loans while in college. Kamerer was a volunteer wrestling coach at North Central during his first and second years of college, and was a coach at Spokane Wrestling Club his first three years. He gained a head coaching job at Shaw Jr. High last year, and is doing his student teaching there right now.

"I'd like to coach (wrestling) as well as teach," he said.

He's willing to teach anywhere. He has been offered a teaching position on the coast, but hasn't had time to study his options yet. He has done academically well, and had disciplined himself to do well in all his classes.

"I appreciate the environment, Christian atmosphere and small classes here," he said about attending Whitworth. "I appreciate the teachers; they're for you and want to teach you. The whole education program was excellent I felt."

He especially appreciates what Hansen, his advisor, and Education Professor Nick Faber have done for him.

"(Hansen) has always encouraged me to keep going on and to keep working hard, and takes time out to answer any questions I've had. I really appreciate the time (Faber) would have to encourage me to keep going on and to keep working (through my problems)."

"The people here are always encouraging you to keep working, to work through the obstacles and keep going," said Kamerer. "Their attitude of Christianity is not to jam it down your throat, but to have it there and to remind you that it's there."

"Whitworth has kept my eyes open to things. I've kept my perspective of the world by learning from and reading the Bible. By not being at Whitworth, I may have lost it all. Whitworth has allowed me to be more open about Christianity. Now, I can tell others I'm a Christian, and to show others that, yeah, I'm a Christian."

"It's been difficult to keep a tight schedule of coaching, grading papers, classes, other part-time jobs and trying to spend time with my family," said Kamerer.

But, he said that professors have kept telling him to keep trying — and to never give up.

"I've had relatives tell me to give up, that I couldn't make it. But I always found a way. If I had found the same thing that I got from them, I probably wouldn't have made it."

Exchange student defeats obstacles; learns from both students, faculty

by Debbie Saparto
of The Whitworthian

American college students don't study.

Or do they?

When Pik Wah (Bertha) Li, an exchange student from Hong Kong, decided to spend her senior year studying in America, she was under the impression that American students don't study. She thought she was playing it smart and opted to spend her last college year "taking it easy" in the United States.

"I had heard that Americans don't study as much as we do in Hong Kong. I expected to have a lot of free time to play," Li said. "But, it's not like that at all. The work load is almost the same and I have to study just as hard."

The English major said that this had surprised her and she spent most of fall term learning just how much work was involved.

Li spent most of her first semester struggling with the stress and pressure of school work. She said that she regrets not making time to be with her friends.

"I didn't hardly make any social time. I stayed isolated in my room doing homework," she said. "But, during second semester I realized that it wasn't a shortage of time, it's finding time."

Li noted that, with this attitude, second semester was a lot more enjoyable. She started spending more time with others and participated in activities around campus.

One of the ways she got involved was being one of two food coordinators for the international banquet. Her responsibilities included finding recipes, giving suggestions, attending planning meetings and making arrangements with SAGA.

"It was a challenge to work with that many people, of that many different cultures, in that (short) amount of time," she said. "It was fun, most importantly, to work with the people. You're really into just enjoying the moment working together."

During her second semester, Li said that even homework wasn't so bad. She explained that she had learned to set priorities and that helped lower her stress and make her enjoy everything she did that much more.

"Would you like to know my definition of happiness?" Li asked. "Well, to me, true happiness is not necessarily doing the things that I like, but liking the things that I do."

"I'm forced to do a lot of things in my life and if I just develop a liking for the things

I have to do, life is so much more enjoyable."

Even during her first rocky semester, to a certain extent, Li achieved this, her own definition of happiness. Li attributes this to two Whitworth faculty who she said gave her much help and encouragement: Karen Dalton, one of her professors, and Laura Bloxham, her advisor.

"They have both helped me a lot, especially outside the classroom," Li said. "Most of their help was not academic but with emotional needs and spiritual support."

Li told about one time, when she especially felt the stress building, and went to talk to Dalton.

"I went to Karen's office and just expressed (to her) how I was feeling. She just sat there and listened. That was exactly what I needed."

Looking at the immediate future, Li plans on returning to Hong Kong right after graduation and working. She hopes to eventually come back to America to get a master's in Business Administration.

"I have a dream of coming back (to America) for graduate studies. I even have catalogs from many colleges," she said. "But, for now I want to gather work experience, partly for financial reasons, and partly for experience in the business field."

Running into life

by Lynn Sievers
of The Whitworthian

What, Ho! Here comes Heather Wilhelm jogging towards us with her Doberman pinscher, Abby. Let's see if she'll stop and talk.

Tripl! Crash! Fail! Oh, Heather! Are you all right? You must have hit that phone booth right there.

Well, since you're here, let's sit down and have a nice chat shall we?

I'll bet being an Art major is thrilling. You say Gordon Wilson has really been a help and encouragement to you in your major. That's great. I'll bet you do a lot of work in your favorite color, crimson.

I see you've brought your favorite vegetable with you on your run. Ugh! Well, to each her own. Hey! Don't kick me with those size nine shoes!

You know, you and I have a lot in common. We both like horseback riding, fishing, basketball, volleyball, track, and we both play the flute and piano.

But, personally, I could never keep up with your schedule of Design II, Print Making II, Secondary Art Methods, and your Senior Art Show. Plus, you also hold down two jobs. One in the Art History slide room and the other one at Straw Hat Pizza.

What really amazes me is that you're a straight A student. I'll bet you study a lot. You do, huh? Where do you ever find time for your boyfriend of five years? None of my business?! Well!

Can you believe the school year is almost over? What are you planning to do with that Art major? Greeting cards or freelance illustration you think? Those are pretty good choices.

Here, have some Cherry 7-UP. I know it's your favorite. Hey! Don't drink so much! Never mind, you can have it.

You seem like a very good-natured person. Doesn't anything bother you? So the WHAM! of the phone booth door against your wall in your dorm really bugs you. You also hate to sew and do laundry. Sounds like you have your quirks like the rest of the population.

Whitworth is a pretty unique college. What attracted you to it? Yeah, Whitworth's Christian aspect and the way it supports those Christian values is impressive.

You must be an old hand at the "Whitworth Experience" by now after being here all four years. What do you like about Whitworth in general? You like the way the professors treat the students as individuals, not just a number.

That is really impressive. Well, I guess I'd better let you go home and take your lilac-scented bath. Or are you going back to the dorm to take a shower?

Anyway, it sure was nice chatting with you. Uh, could you get Abby off my leg now. Whew! Hey, don't run off so fast! You forgot your Cherry 7-UP!

When preparing for the Senior Edition, The Whitworthian asked faculty members to suggest those seniors they felt gave a unique contribution to their department.

Due to the overwhelming response, we thought we'd publish the list.

Although all seniors are unique these were some of the other seniors suggested as especially worthy of our focus:

Athlete enters the evangelism scene

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

Hello and goodbye my children, this is my last column of the year for two reasons. First of all this is the last issue of The Whitworthian, and more importantly I have chosen a new line of work. I have broken from the field of sports journalism and entered the realm of evangelical athletics.

I have formed my own broadcast company and future multi-billion corporation, the APTL, Athletes Praising the Lord.

In my weekly two-hour show, commercial-free with no interruptions, I will have special guest athletes, singers, and extra special guest speakers that will tell how they integrate their faith in their sport.

But my weekly TV show will not be the extent of my expanding outreach to people in need. I have some goals for you, my people — big plans.

One of these is to find myself a competent staff. One person in particular that I plan to hire as my personal secretary is Jessica Hahn. She has had a lot of experience as a secretary for evangelist Jimmy Bakker, and she would fit in fine on my staff.

Once I round out my staff I will embark upon a small fund-raiser to get things rolling. Nothing drastic will happen, I won't be called home — that comes later. For only a mere $19.95, in check or money order, you will be the proud owner of a beautifully hand-stitched Bible verse, Psalm 23 to be exact. What makes this offer so special is that it comes hand-sewn on any of the New York Giants' athletic supporters! I expect to raise a few million dollars and start my own university for Christian referees, all the while retaining my tax-exempt status. This university will have a tremendous impact upon athletics because whenever any athlete commits a foul of any sort, he/she will be able to have it erased and forgiven by simply paying $50.00. $49.97 will, of course, go back into the APTL to further better the athletic race, and the remaining $.03 will go to the orphans. This $50.00 contribution will be able to be paid on the field or court with any major credit card at the time of the foul.

Of course, once my school gets off of the ground I'm going to need some more money. I will be having a telethon on my commercial-free network, that will feature Billy Martin as guest vocalist, Mark Gastineau delivering enlightenment, and John McEnroe preaching the virtues of patience. Viewers will be able to call in and pledge any amount they wish (a minimum of $1,000 please) and for an additional $75.00 they will be able to hear a tape-recorded reading of the Sermon on the Mount recited by Muhammad Ali, as only he could do it.

After this little telethon I plan to gird up my loins for the fund-raiser that will save all of mankind. If I don't raise at least $317,467,389.78 in two weeks, I will be called home. Yes, that's right, I have been given an ultimatum, either raise the money so my graduated referees can go to underprivileged countries and stick, I mean save, the malnourished athletes, or be called home forever.

So I beg of you, please don't let this summer be my last, send large denominations of money to me, Mark Eidson of APTL.

Thank you and God bless all you who send in $10,000 or more, the rest of you — forget it.

Pirate baseball hits home; team captures district title

by Mark Westley
Special to The Whitworthian

For the second consecutive season the Pirates will be hosting the district playoffs. Whitworth clinched the NAIA District I championship and the right to host the playoffs by sweeping Central Washington University 9-0 and 5-3 Saturday afternoon.

In the first game Freshman Eddie Eugenio, 4-3, pitched a five-hitter for his first collegiate shutout. Eugenio limited Central to five singles. The Pirate offense provided plenty of breathing room for Eugenio by scoring three runs in the first, one in the second, and three more in the third.

The lone run in the second was a record breaker. Troy Anderson hit his eleventh home run of the season setting a new Pirate single season record. Randy Russell chipped in a single and a home run, his sixth. Ed Beloate had four singles for the game and Ryan Clements added two singles. Anderson also added a double to his record-setting homer.

The second game matched Senior Scott Carolan against University of Nevada-Las Vegas transfer Bill Wells. Wells won eleven games at UNLV last year but failed to shut down the Pirates. Whitworth scored three runs in the first, on Vern Hare's three-run double, to take a permanent lead. Central scored two runs in the fourth to close the lead to 3-2, but the Pirates answered back.

Consecutive doubles by Scott Ralph and Dan Demchuk and an RBI single by Troy Anderson iced the victory. Carolan held Central to eight hits while boosting his record to 6-4.

The Pirates' opponent has not yet been set but Central has the edge, needing to gain only one victory over the University of Puget Sound to make the trip.

double-header with Whitman College Wednesday afternoon.

Earlier in the week, the Bucs faced Washington State University in double-header action.

Washington State broke open a 7-2 game by scoring five runs in the sixth and six in the seventh, coasting to a 23-5 win over the Pirates.

Jeff Hooper hit a grand slam home run in the sixth for

The Area 1 winner qualifies for the NAIA World Series.

If Central loses both games, PLU would be in. The playoffs, best two-of-three, will begin Friday with a double-header most likely to start at 1 p.m. If necessary, game three will be played Saturday.

The winner will advance to the Area 1 playoffs. That tournament will be hosted by the Oregon representative this season. The Area 1 winner qualifies for the NAIA World Series in Lewiston, to be held May 22-28.

This is the third year in the past four that Whitworth has hosted District 1 playoffs. It is the second season in a row for third-year coach Scott McQuilkin.

The Pirates travel to Lewiston Monday for two games beginning at 4 p.m. Whitworth completes the regular season at home with a crushing blow. Two pitches later John Olerud hit his second homer of the day.

When the smoke cleared at Stannard Field the Cougars had scored 23 runs on 25 hits. Eight of the 25 hits were home runs. Joe Urbon, 3-2, picked up the win for WSU. Eugenio went four innings and was tagged for the loss, evening his record to 3-3.

The Pirates pounded out 12 hits while pushing across five runs. Randy Russell led the way with a single and a double. Ryan Clements, Brian Parisotto, and Scott Ralph added two singles each.

The game with Gonzaga scheduled for Wednesday was cancelled and will not be made up. The double-header with LC State scheduled for Friday was rained out, the Pirates will travel to Lewiston Monday to make up the games.

Women's tennis takes third, Wagstaff coach of the year

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

The Whitworth women's tennis team left Ellensburg Saturday not with a championship trophy in their hands but with smiles on their faces. Head Coach Jo Wagstaff was named NAIA District I Coach of the Year, and the women captured third place.

Coach Wagstaff in her third year of coaching led the team to an 11-7 record, compared to 1-14 two years ago.

"I'm totally shocked," said Wagstaff. The players, Whitworth coaches, and Bruce Grambo deserve a lot of the credit. "They've been behind me 100 percent," said Wagstaff.

Wagstaff added that the improvement over the years "is reward enough."

Wagstaff was encouraged by the team's results. "We came up against some tough players, but I thought we rose to the occasion. Third place is more than I had hoped for."

Whitworth had six singles players and three doubles teams in the tournament. The Lady Bucs' No. 1 doubles team, Sally Reed and Ann Benzel, scored the upset of the tournament by beating University of Puget Sound's Mimi Dega and Anne Marie Martin.

In singles play, Wagstaff commended her No. 6 player, Freshman Kari Strand especially. "Kari beat the odds more than once," she said. Strand beat Seattle University's Alicia Ossenkop

6-0, 6-1. Junior Allison Heiser also preyed upon a Seattle U. foe. She defeated Hanna Kunz easily, 6-3, 6-3.

Toni Fenner knocked Central Washington University's Lisa Burton out of the tournament, 7-5, 6-2, before being beaten by another Central player, Robbi Graham.

Reed, seeded fifth in the district, defeated Whitman's Jill Locke, but then lost to their No. 1 player, Tammy Roe, 6-2, 6-4.

Benzel, a senior, was eliminated from the tournament after losing to Sharon Crown from UPS. Lisa Dick, also a Logger, beat Whitworth's Sue Miller, a freshman.

In other doubles matches, Strand and Fenner worked together to conquer a Central Washington team, but then fell victim to the PLU duo, Carlson and Paczkavski, who were seeded second in the district.

Heiser and Krista Price were downed by a Whitman team.

Overall, the season was a successful one. The team had a 11-7 record as compared to 1-14 two years ago.

The team improved steadily throughout the season. As Wagstaff pointed out, "Last week we beat Central Washington University 6-3. Earlier in the season they beat us 7-2. That's got to tell you something."

Their results in the district placed them over four teams, one of which, Seattle Pacific, beat the Bucs in the regular season.

"We've come a long way, Wagstaff emphasized, "but more than anything, we've had a lot of fun."

Men's tennis achieves goal

by Peter Christensen
of The Whitworthian

The men's tennis team performed "as well as we expected" at the NAIA District I tournament last weekend at Central Washington University. The Bucs took 5th place out of eight teams from the district.

"We played well. We did not lose any matches that we should have won," said Coach Ross Cutter.

In first round action Whitworth advanced four of six players in the singles competition. Mark Frisby easily downed Walter Jackson of Seattle University in straight sets 6-2, 6-3. Willy Stewart whipped Garrett Mock of University of Puget Sound in straight sets 6-2, 6-4.

Both Kirk Rector and Tod Whitman were automatically advanced to the next round with byes. Mark Eidson lost to Kevin Wasaka of Seattle University 6-3, 6-1, and Boo Boatman lost, 6-0, 6-4, to Mike Dega of UPS.

The second round proved to be disastrous for the team, as Rector registered Whitworth's only win.

Rector pounced Jeff Smiley of Seattle Pacific University in straight sets 6-1, 6-0. Frisby was defeated by Dave George of Seattle Pacific University 6-1, 6-1. Stewart lost to Dave Olafsson of Whitman College 6-1, 6-3, and Whitman fell to Phil Ansdell of Whitman College.

In the third round Rector played against Luis-Miguel Mejia of Lewis and Clark State College, one of the best players there, and lost in split sets 4-6, 6-2, 6-4. Said Cutter, "Kirk played really well."

In the first round of the doubles competition Frisby-Eidson slammed McKenna-Hutley of Seattle Pacific University in straight sets 6-2, 6-2. Rector-Stewart were automatically advanced to the next round with a bye. Boatman-Whitman lost to George-Worden of Seattle Pacific.

The second round again proved to be successful for Rector-Stewart, as they handily disarmed Billups-Uhlenkoet of LC State in straight sets 6-2, 6-1. The round proved fatal for Frisby-Eidson as they were defeated by Ansdell-Roe of Whitman College.

The third round eliminated Rector-Stewart, as they were beaten by Stradling-Allen of Pacific Lutheran University.

Cutter remained pleased with the team's overall performance, and happy that they had an average draw of competitors at the onset of the tournament.

"I thought the team played — both individually and in doubles — really up to their potential," said Cutter.

The three-day tournament was completely dominated by the Whitman College team which easily took 1st place. Whitman's Chris Gregerson took 1st in the singles competition, and along with Olafsson, also of Whitman, swiped 1st in the doubles competition.

Here are the final team standings:

Whitman College	33
PLU	23
LC State	11
Seattle Pacific	8
Whitworth	7
CWU	4
Seattle University	1
UPS	1

Soccer scores

by Gina Johnson
of The Whitworthian

Whitworth's only team coming close to being undefeated this year, losing only one game, has not even been declared a varsity sport.

The women's soccer club has continued to terrorize teams from the Spokane Women's League throughout their season.

Whitworth's winning ways started on March 15 when they trampled The Woodshed, 7-3.

The following week they ripped Cosmos Travel 8-1.

Returning from Spring Break, the women didn't skip a beat. On April 12, they scored five goals to Mountain Gear's two.

Last week, Whitworth was given some tough competition by the previously beaten Woodshed. The teams ended the game in a tie, 2-2.

The club also played on an international level. The touring German team beat Whitworth 0-3, but Coach Mike Lawrence said, "It was good experience and they played really well."

Lawrence and Jeff Henstein have taken over as coaches for the club.

"I decided to help out to give the girls a chance to play soccer. We're hoping that women's soccer will be a varsity sport within two years," Lawrence said, explaining that according to NAIA regulations the next sport to become varsity at Whitworth will be a women's team, and "soccer would be the perfect choice because its low cost, and that would open up Whitworth to girls in this area that want to play collegiate soccer." Right now, Whitman is the only college in Eastern Washington to support varsity soccer for women.

Top players for this year include Junior Kari Kwake, Freshman Susan Westphal, and Junior Julie Critchlow, who Lawrence called, "the best goal keeper in the league."

"The girls who play are excited about this year," Bobbie Mishler said.

Professional football ahead for Senior Pirate lineman

by Peter Christensen
of the Whitworthian

With graduation quickly closing in, Whitworth will be losing an athlete whose name has become synonymous with the game of football. Ken Hoppus will graduate this spring with a B.A. degree in physical education and the world of professional football at his feet.

Hoppus, a 5th year senior from Lacombe, Alberta, shared a winning philosophy he picked up at Whitworth, "One big thing I learned at Whitworth College was that if you want something you've got to work for it."

Recently drafted by the Edmonton Eskimos, a Canadian Football League team, Hoppus and fellow teammate Wayne Ralph will attend training camp together on May 21. Hoppus said, "It will be nice with Wayne up there, we can spur each other on and help each other out."

"Right now I'm really starting to get jacked about going to camp, I want to make that team really bad. I'm a little nervous, but I'm getting more excited," said Hoppus.

"Football is probably the best experience I've had at Whitworth. I've met a lot of people who had a lot of influence on my life," said Hoppus.

Coach Merkel and Coach Williams helped Hoppus dream of professional football come true. Former Coach McNeal taught Hoppus proper technique and the secret of intensity. Coach Grambo taught him how to work as a member of a team. Hoppus acquired his cocky competitiveness from former player Vince Kopec.

Of those who supported Hoppus, none had as profound an effect as his powerlifting partner Mike Hurley, "He would build my confidence, he never had a negative word to say about me, and he would always spur me on," said Hoppus.

Hoppus' biggest gripe about Whitworth is the apathetic stance many students and faculty members take towards athletics. He pointed to the low attendances at games as proof of this.

On the other hand Hoppus credits Whitworth for making him so marketable, saying, "I got two careers out of Whitworth, I'm going to be a teacher, and hopefully I'm going to be a professional football player. Hopefully for about eight to ten years."

If his plans to play pro ball fall through Hoppus plans on returning to Whitworth next spring to finish up his education degree.

Whitworth tracksters prepare for districts

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

The track team went their separate ways this weekend as members of the team traveled to the University of Washington for a meet Thursday and Friday. The rest of the team participated in the Tartan Cup at Spokane Community College.

Kari Jacobson, Gwen Keiser and Gary Knowlton competed in the heptathlon and decathlon respectively at the U. of W. They competed against opponents from Seattle Pacific University, University of Washington, and Eastern Washington University.

"The weather conditions were terrible. There were harsh winds that swirled as is the case in University of Washington's stadium," said Coach Arnie Tyler. "The weather would lead one to believe that it would not be too conducive to great performances but somehow they still did well."

Kari Jacobson finished fourth in the 7-event competition. However, she improved the school record she had set earlier in the season. Currently, she is ranked No. 1 in the district.

In the 100 meter hurdles, Jacobson ran her best time of the year, 15.4. She also did well in the 200m, running a 26.7 against strong headwinds.

Decathlete Gary Knowlton also did well at the meet. He placed 2nd overall, and is the leading qualifier entering next weekend's district meet.

In Spokane, the women's 1600m relay team rose to the occasion of the final regular season meet. They set a school record with a blazing time of 4:02. The members of the team include Lisa Jenkinson, Jeri Wilkerson, Kris Young and Annette Helling.

Districts will be held in Ellensburg, where the wind has a habit of making running and throwing a difficult task according to Tyler.

"Not only is the weather a definite factor, but we also have several injuries, especially among our women runners."

The district meet will be the final meet of the season for the track team, except for those who have qualified for Nationals.

Keiser combines athletics, academics in college career

by Gina Johnson
of the Whitworthian

Gwen Keiser concentrates as she carefully steps out her approach for the high jump. A softball makes its way into her path and she throws it back to the owner with a smile.

A heptathlete for Whitworth, Keiser's dedication to her sport hasn't colored her perspective on life. As freshman Barb Lashinski said, "Gwen is serious about track, but she enjoys what she does." Last year her well-balanced attitude earned her not only the title of NAIA All-American but also the elite distinction of NAIA Scholastic All-American.

"I really wasn't expecting that. I think the awards meant more to others than they did to me, mostly because I felt like I could do better academically," the senior Biology major said.

Keiser graduated as salutatorian of her high school class from Northwest Christian in Spokane, and came to Whitworth in the fall of 1983. In high school she ran the mile and two-mile in addition to throwing the javelin.

So how did such a bright girl get conned into competing in the 100-meter hurdles, high jump, shot put, 200-meter run, long jump, javelin, and 800-meter run?

"Coming from a small high school, I found out in college track I wasn't really outstanding in anything, but I did well in a lot of things."

Coach Arnie Tyler introduced Keiser to the heptathlon, which she's been doing for four years now. During her sophomore and junior years, she practiced as the lone heptathlete, which she survived "because I got a lot of attention from the coaching staff." But Keiser has enjoyed having Kari Jacobson to work out with this year. "It really makes practice a lot more fun, more helpful to have Carrie there."

Keiser considers Tyler to be the greatest influence in her successful track career. "Arnie's more than a coach. While other coaches only help you physically, he's done a lot for me emotionally, too. And not just for track. If I had problems with school or with my family, he was there."

Keiser, who has been training since September, admits that she is frustrated with this season. She points to the fact that she has not qualified for Nationals yet. "I'm in the best shape I've ever been in," she said. However, tough courses and a 20 hour/week job as a waitress combine to make her life continually hectic.

Lashinski, who also throws the javelin, admires her teammate's dedication, "She works really hard. She's a silent leader on the team...she won't tell anybody what to do, but she'll help anyone if they ask."

Keiser sets high goals for herself. This summer she hopes to help Tyler with some coaching. And she has no plans to abandon her track career after this season. "The prime age for this sport is 26 - I still have a few good-years left," she joked.

"I'll still throw the javelin, at least. That's my strongest event. I can compete in some track meets independently, by entering unattached."

But, right now, the only goal on Gwen Keiser's mind is to qualify for the 1987 National meet. "I've done what I know how to do; now it's time to make myself believe what I can do."

Track star dives into Naval career

by Mark Eidson
of The Whitworthian

If the name Tyler rings a bell to any of you, you're not alone. The Tyler family has four of its five members at Whitworth: Arnie Tyler Sr., his wife Alice Tyler, their daughter Lisa Tyler, and Arnie Tyler Jr.

Tyler Jr., graduating in May, is known around Whitworth for his feats with the hammer on the field of green. An All-American in the hammer throw last year, selected to the All-District Track team, and currently ranked sixth in the nation, some may think that all Tyler Jr. does is heave cannon balls around. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In high school Tyler Jr. distinguished himself both on the fields of academia and athletics. He was an all-state football selection his junior year. He received the Male Scholar Athlete of the Greater Spokane League his senior year at Mead High School, the only Mead student to ever receive the award, with a 3.87

GPA, and a rank of 18th in his class.

Tyler's achievements didn't stop in high school, he was an Academic All-American his junior year in college, was selected to the College Who's Who by the faculty, and completed a B.S. degree in both physics and math.

That's not too special you might say, but Arnie Tyler Jr. is also a husband and father! Approaching his third year of marriage, Tyler is the proud papa of Keith, two years old, and Brittany, who is seven months.

Needless to say Tyler Sr. is very proud of his son, "What he (Tyler Jr.) has accomplished is far beyond what a typical college student can."

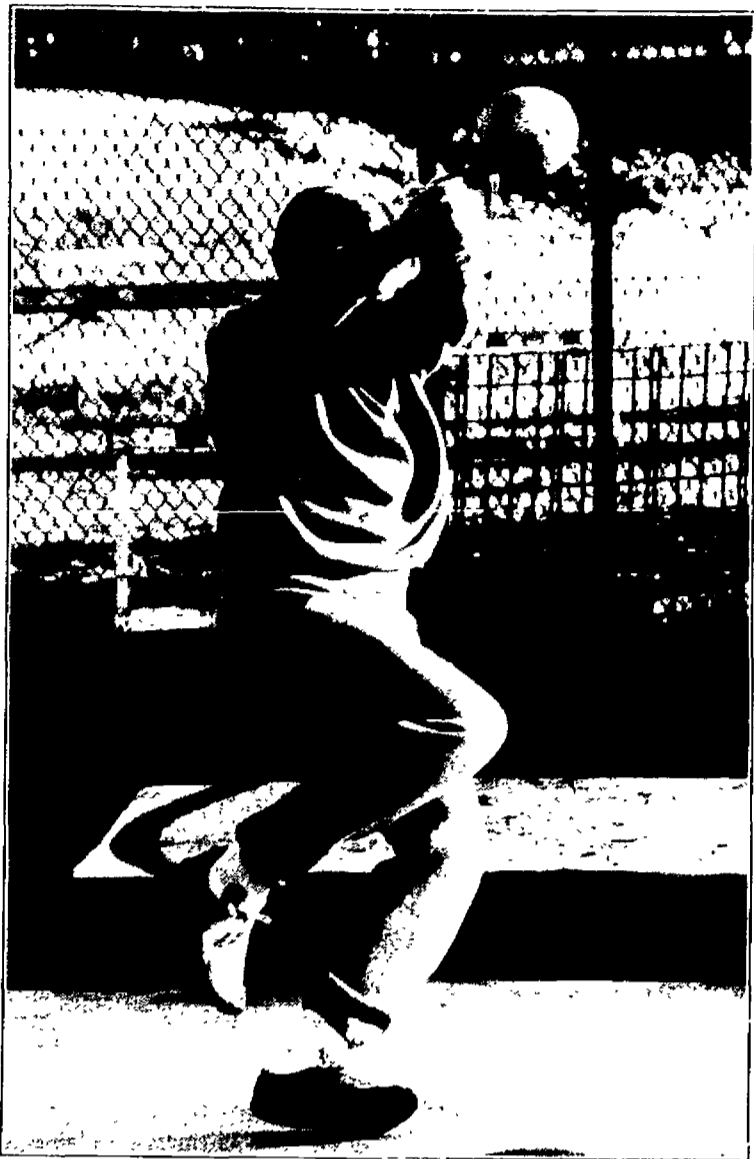

If you're still not impressed, grab onto something sturdy. In addition to his accomplishment in college, Tyler has also been accepted into the Navy as a NUPOL, a Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate. The selection process for this position was very rigorous, and only 330 of the applicants out of the 7,000 that applied were accepted. The selection began in the fall with interviews, transcripts, and physicals, and progressed to a series of three technical interviews in Washington D.C., and a final interview with Admiral McKee of the Nuclear Navy.

The interview process was like a cake walk compared to the 21 months that Tyler will go through. In August, Tyler will go to Rhode Island for officer's training school for four months, then it's off to Orlando, Fla. for Nuclear Engineering school. This will be a six month period that will involve 40 hours a week of class, and an additional 30 hours of required library time. After Florida, Tyler will go to New York for six more months for nuclear prototype training, then it's another five months for surface warfare office school.

After all of this schooling Tyler figures on staying in the Navy for at least three years.

During that three years Tyler describes his duties: "I will be in charge of operating the nuclear propulsion on a cruiser or carrier and be in charge of 40-120 my first time out, it's intense, the whole job is."

Arnie Tyler practices for the national meet. Tyler is currently ranked sixth in the nation in the hammer throw. He hopes to regain his All-American status earned last year. (photo by Stephen Meggs)

Nickname memorable for Schlonga

by Sheila Farren
of The Whitworthian

Most athletes remember "the big game" or "the game-winning play" when thinking about their athletic experience. But one of Colleen Schlonga's most memorable things about her Whitworth volleyball career is that it gave her the nickname "Red."

The 22-year-old redhead from Felida, Wash. (near Vancouver) said, "It's something I can identify with; there is something different to being called 'Red.'"

Schlonga obtained the nickname her freshman year during training camp. "Cathy Toutant gave it to me when we were eating dinner one night after an evening practice. Out of the blue she just said 'Do you mind if I call you Red?' Nobody had ever asked me before. It was kind of off the wall."

Schlonga's nickname carried with her into many activities. During her four years at Whitworth, Schlonga played on the varsity volleyball team, was The Whitworthian feature page editor, involved herself with the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, was named in the 1987 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges, and in her senior year, was named an NAIA Academic All-American.

But among all of her activities, volleyball stands out as the most enjoyable. "It got me introduced to Whitworth early," said Schlonga.

"It was neat to play in a program where the focus wasn't only playing hard and winning. Now I see there is a lot more to it than that," said Schlonga, stressing the importance of mixing faith and sports. "Now I see how important it is to give the glory to God for the talents he's given me."

As for the heavy travel schedule, Schlonga had mixed emotions. "As much as I hated getting in that van, I really liked the road trips," said Schlonga. Schlonga described the trips as either hot and sweaty or cold, there was no in-between, but "being able to be away from school and classes was worth it."

Schlonga said the friendships she made with her teammates will last. "We shared so much. You win together, and you lose together. In the same way that you don't want to let them down on the court; you don't want to let them down in life."

Though volleyball was an important part of her college experience, Schlonga stressed the value of her education. "I wanted to show people I wasn't a dumb jock," said

Schlonga, who will graduate with a journalism major and business management minor.

"I also appreciate how much the pros care," said Schlonga. She remembers her first semester on campus having classes from Ross Cutter, Racheal Wang, and Linda Hunt. "They didn't know me or anything about me, but they took the time to get to know me."

Schlonga said working with a professor is a fair exchange.

"The pros care for you, and you don't want to let your pros down," so you work.

Schlonga is unsure of her career plans but is working at a weight loss camp for young women this summer.

"It is a good way for me to earn a little money — Lord knows I won't get rich off it. The type of rewards are seeing the changes in the kids," said Schlonga. "For some they just need someone to care about them and what they do. I couldn't pass that up."

After the summer in San Diego, Schlonga will move home and look for work. She also plans to help coach a junior volleyball team and work as a Young Life leader.

"I was involved with both of those programs while growing up and I see this as a way of giving back some of what they gave to me."

Consistency key to Clements' success

by Jeff Gardiner
of The Whitworthian

In his four year stint as the first baseman of the Pirate baseball team, Ryan Clements has been "Mr. Consistency."

He's been the NAIA version of Eddie Murray or Willie Randolph.

In his four years as a Buc baseman, Clements has performed with the same zest and intensity day-in and day-out. His hard-nosed, heads-up play has been a model for all of his team members.

Clements said that he can perform consistently because he has the love for the game that is needed. "If you don't have that then it's all up-hill from there. My first-year coach, Steve Brown, instilled that in me and I've kept it with me ever since."

Indeed he has. Clements, a 1983 high school graduate from Spokane's Gonzaga Prep, has been a regular starter since his sophomore year. As a freshman, his first collegiate hit was a grand-slam! Clements hasn't looked back since. He'll take a .479 batting average into district play this week. Along with his league-leading average, Clements has also thumped home 44 RBI's and 11 doubles.

As a notable star though, things have gotten tougher for Clements.

"If there's been anything I've had to work on, it's been the outside pitch. I don't get many pitches in my wheel-house anymore," said Clements.

Looking back on his past four years at Whitworth, Clements is very thankful for the opportunity he's had here.

"Whitworth has given me the opportunity to play the game I love. The people here have been very supportive. I also feel I've gotten a class education which will give me something to fall back on once I'm no longer playing," said Clements.

Clements has also acquired a particularly special fan, his wife Laurie. They were married last December. Mrs. Clements is a junior at Whitworth, majoring in Public Relations and Communications.

"She's been my number one fan. Laurie is very supportive of me and my baseball," said Clements.

This June, Clements hopes to get drafted in the annual Major League Draft. "I'd like to play as long as I can. I want to give it a shot, and if things don't work out, then I'll make the transition."

On the field Clements has definitely made the transition to being one of the top players in the Northwest. His class and leadership has been a hallmark for his teammates and coaches. But, right now Clements hopes his bat will continue to keep the Bucs on track to (the NAIA World Series in) Lewiston.

Benzel travels beyond courts

by Ed Shepherd
of The Whitworthian

Senior Ann Benzel, an International Studies major, has spent much of her college career away from campus.

Benzel is currently involved in the American Studies program. 40 students all over the United States are selected to work in Washington, D.C. for half of fall term, then half of spring term. Benzel served as an intern for the Center of Development and Population activities. Benzel worked as an interpreter in Spanish and assisted the project coordinator.

Another highlight of Benzel's stay at Whitworth was during her sophomore year in 1985 (Jan Term). Benzel went to Ethiopia during the height of the famine.

"Seeing how they lived changed my life in regard to what I saw as important," said Benzel.

Benzel also went to Guatemala for a language study during Jan Term of her junior year.

But, Benzel did not limit her success at Whitworth to the classroom. She played tennis for four years, which Benzel said gave her an outlet from stress, as well as an understanding of unity among teammates.

A high point in Benzel's career was playing the number one spot her junior year.

However, Benzel added, "Districts are this coming weekend and doing good is a goal I really want to accomplish, considering I didn't do too well last year."

Benzel clearly emphasized the overall excellent quality of the college over the four years.

"Educationally, Whitworth is well balanced. The individual attention has helped me to grow tremendously in academics. It was a great growing and hard learning experience that I will take with me as I head into life after college.

"Hopefully overseas in the Peace Corps," Benzel added as she gazed at the sky.

Grambo announces resignation

Bruce Grambo, Whitworth's head football coach for the past six years, resigned, effective July 1. In a letter to Academic Vice President Darrell L. Guder, Grambo cited "the best interest of my family, the football program and Whitworth College," as reason for the decision.

"I have enjoyed my association with Whitworth during the past six years and in 1969-71 when I was here as assistant football coach and head track and field and wrestling coach," Grambo said. "I believe Whitworth College is the finest place anywhere for a young man or woman to get an education.

The resignation is similar to circumstances when Grambo became head coach in 1981. His predecessor in the position, Daryl Squires, resigned in early summer, and Grambo left his successful restaurant, Grambo's on the Mountain, to take the job at Whitworth.

In February 1984, the duties of associate athletic director were added to Grambo's assignment. He became interim athletic director in July of that year, following the departure of Jim Larson, and was named director a year later in 1985. He announced his decision to step down from that position last December, effective June 30. A new AD, Jim Ferguson of Arizona State University, was named and is scheduled to take up his duties August 1.

Out with the old, in with the new

The campus has been humming all summer to the noise of construction work. Students returning to Whitworth, as well as the newcomers can look forward to a few more comfortable, more modern and better looking changes.

Whitworth has had operations under way since May 18, 1987 renovating McMillan Hall and since early spring refurbishing the HUB.

All plans have been successful and according to Greg Hamann, director of student life, Mac Hall will be ready to house its 86 men when school starts.

"The inside of the dorm is completely changed, people coming back won't even recognize it," said Hamann. There is new furniture, a new fireplace, a new kitchen and new bathrooms.

The goal of the project has been to modernize the facilities while still keeping the character of the historical building which was built in 1914.

As reported in the April 21, 1987 Whitworthian, some of the features in the dorm will be stacked and standardized bathrooms, with separate cold water lines to prevent scalding in the showers, along with a pump to guarantee hot showers to third floor residents. Each room will consist of a desk including three drawers, a bookcase, a light, a vinyl covered bulletin board, bunk beds, a chest of drawers and a wardrobe.

The color scheme set up for the dorm is mauve and tan with dark wood trim through out the building.

The renovations for Mac Hall were funded by a bond process which began two years ago. Whitworth received 7 million dollars for repairs and work for on-campus facilities, according to Hamann. "This year it's Mac Hall, next year hopefully Ballard and Stewart."

The other building having work done is the Hardwick Student Union Building (HUB).

At the end of last year, ASWC's Senate set up the ground work for possible redecorating ideas for the HUB.

Before school was out, some students helped paint the building, according to Glenn Smith, director of student activities. After the painting of the dance floor area, the HUB chambers, some of the offices, and the commuter lounge, carpet was brought in for the blue lounge, the chambers and the commuter lounge.

Ideas for an entire new building for the student lounge are in process. "The goal now is to make the HUB a more comfortable place for students to go to hang out," said Smith.

The funding for the changes in the HUB is coming from the $15 HUB fees students pay. The fee was designed for paying the debt on the building. The debt has been paid, so with the continued charge of $15 redecoration can be made.

By the time school begins, Smith hopes the new furniture on order will be in the building to enjoy.

Ivan Miranda relaxes in the newly refurbished HUB.

Alumni celebrate 'the good old days'

When all the current students go home, it is time for the former students to arrive. July 17-19, Whitworth celebrated its 8th Annual Alumni Weekend.

Seventy-five alumni from as far away as Arlington, Va. and Honolulu, Hawaii invaded Stewart Hall to reminisce about "the good old days."

The weekend consisted of "a lot of eating and a lot of talking," said Ron Detrick, director of alumni relations. A luau at the Aquatics Center Friday evening brought many friends together for the first time in 40 years. The Classes of '77, '62, and '47 were best represented, though all alumni were welcome.

Assistant Director of Alumni Relations, Ann Kennaly, had trouble pin-pointing a highlight of the weekend. "It is hard to tell because each person feels something different is the most special, though meeting old friends is probably one of the highlights," said Kennaly.

Professor Emeritus of History, Homer Cunningham, coordinated the Homer Alder Memorial Golf Tournament. On Saturday morning Cunningham, a Whitworth professor for 26 years, and 11 alumni participated in the tournament held at the Wandermere Golf Course. Competition was tough, with John Roth of the Class of '40 (the oldest alumnus to attend) coming within three inches of a hole in one. The title was captured by Class of '51 member, Chuck Ainley.

A picnic was scheduled in the Loop for Saturday's lunch, but rain, though uninvited, attended. Spirits were not dampened though, as the picnic was moved to the HUB Snack Bar.

Four "mini-college" courses were offered Saturday afternoon. English Professor Laura Bloxham taught "Who dunnit? A Study of Detective Fiction."

Ed Olson, chairman of the Physics and Geology department, led a session titled "Geology Through Your Car Window."

"You Too Can Be a Star" was presented by Theatre Arts Professor Rick Hornor. "I was happy with the session," said Hornor, "the interaction was positive and many good questions were asked."

A discussion on South Africa, "Untangling the Webb" was offered by John Yoder

Saturday evening gave each class a chance to get together and visit. A dinner at Saga followed by a reception in Ballard was available. The Class of '62 was given a special treat by Gail Fielding, who hosted a barbeque at her home.

The weekend ended Sunday with brunch at Saga and a service in the Seeley Mudd Chapel. Rev. Odin Baugh, from the Class of '47, led worship, while former economic and business professor, Harry Dixon, gave the sermon.

Sundevil fills A.D. position

Jim Ferguson

James E. Ferguson, assistant athletic director for student services at Arizona State University, will fill the position of athletic director for Whitworth College as of August 1.

During the past three years at Arizona State, Ferguson was responsible for interpreting NCAA rules and for athletic eligibility, financial aid, housing, and advising. He previously served as assistant athletic director and golf coach at the University of Oregon.

Ferguson's leadership in golf at the University of Oregon resulted in 23 tournament victories and 15 All-American golfers. He was PAC-8 Coach of the Year in 1975-76 and 1976-77, both years when his teams finished in the NCAA top ten.

A Ph.D. candidate at Oregon State University in the field of recreation resource geography, Ferguson holds a Master's Degree in geography from Western Oregon State College.

Ferguson's first assignment as athletic director was to fill the position of head football coach, left open by Bruce Grambo's resignation. Ferguson chaired the search committee which hired Blaine Bennett.

Ferguson will be associate professor at Whitworth in the areas of athletics, physical education, and geography.

Mastel-Smith dives into new position

The Aquatic Center at Whitworth College will have new leadership when students return to classes this Fall.

Beth Mastel-Smith, current assistant aquatic director, has been promoted to aquatic director to replace Jon Buzzard, who is moving to Minnesota this month. Thomas A. Dodd, head coach for Spokane Area Swimming, will join Whitworth's Aquatic Center as swim coach.

Mastel-Smith has been with Whitworth one and a half years. She coordinated and supervised Whitworth's swim camp in June, attended by more than 50 children, and is head of the PINE programs for family fitness.

In addition, Mastel-Smith coaches the Whitworth master swimmers and has taught physical activity skills and health education for the college. She earned her Master of Science degree in Health Education from Whitworth and is a registered nurse.

Dodd helped form Spokane Area Swimming in 1986, a consolidation of the swimming programs at the YMCA, Spokane City Parks and Recreational Department and Whitworth College. His coaching has produced many junior and senior national qualifiers, with two swimmers qualifying for Olympic Trials. He also coaches the Spokane Swim Team.

Dodd attended the University of California, Berkeley, swimming varsity and later working as assistant coach. A cartographer by trade, he attended graduate school at the University of Idaho, 1979-80.

Football coach named

Blaine "Shorty" Bennett, Sr. was named to replace Bruce Grambo as head football coach, on July 22, effective immediately.

Bennett, a member of the Whitworth class of '62, played four years of varsity football as a Pirate.

After Whitworth Bennett went on to serve as assistant football coach at North Central High School, and then as head football coach at Ellensburg High School (1967-75).

Bennett taught summer sessions at Eastern Washington University and Central Washington University and developed the All Northwest Football Camp, held annually on the Central Washington University campus.

Athletic Director Jim Ferguson chaired the committee which recommended Bennett to the administration. President Robert Mounce and Vice President of Academic Affairs Darrell Guder concur with Ferguson's judgment that Bennett will bring great strength and vision to Whitworth's athletic program.

tion, 13 athletes were named NAIA All-American and six were named Academic All-American.

Four Whitworth coaches were named NAIA District I Coach of the Year in 1986-87: Pat Shelton, volleyball; Einar Thorarinson, soccer; Jo Wagstaff, women's tennis, and Scott McQuilkin, baseball.

In accepting Grambo's resignation, Guder praised him as "a man of high integrity and energy who is very committed to Whitworth College."

"I have enjoyed working with him, and I wish him all success in the next chapter of his career," said Guder.

Blaine "Shorty" Bennett was named on July 22, effective immediately, to replace Grambo. Bennett played four years of varsity football at Whitworth and graduated in 1962. His son quarterbacked the Pirates last season. Bennett is expected to continue the passing tradition the Pirates have.

Practice sessions begin the last week of August for the 1987 Whitworth squad.

Assistant coaches Bobby Williams and Paul Merkel will remain with the program, Guder said.

Pirate football teams posted winning seasons in the first four years under Grambo, and he was named Coach of the Year in NAIA District I in 1983. That year, the Bucs tied for second in the league with defending national champion Linfield College. The Wildcats regained their national title the following season.

Grambo's overall record at Whitworth is 23-29-2. His teams led the nation (NAIA) in passing offense three of his six years as head coach and were in the top five in the nation in both passing offense and total offense four of the six seasons. Four of his quarterbacks were in the national top five of passing and total offense stats: Mike Martin, an Academic All-American first team pick; Cliff Madison, All-American honorable mention; Milt Meyers, second team All-American and Blaine Bennett, All-American honorable mention.

His last year as athletic director produced a bumper crop of individual achievements for Whitworth athletes: Receiver Wayne Ralph repeated as Associated Press All-American and, in addi-

Looking ahead

Better late than never

by Stephanie Halton

This past spring as I registered for the up-coming Fall semester, I did so with a different feeling than usual. I realized that a year from now I won't be filling out these forms or anticipating the upcoming school year. This seems like such an ignorant revelation to be making as a senior, but keeping consistent sight of my goals and future these past three years has been more difficult than anticipated. Upon entering college, plans of the future busily whirl about the heads of freshmen, but somewhere amidst the Whitworth years, they tend to be forgotten for periods of time.

At one point, many students deal with this overdue realization, sometimes even after graduation. They probably wish they had kept in closer contact with their future and hadn't put off planning it.

Many become too content with "student comfortness" to keep focused on their future. The worthiness of the title "student" is often learned early during the freshman year. Declaring oneself a student can be very rewarding; it becomes almost an excuse — one which can be difficult to break. Summer jobs and internships are, at times, easier to obtain if one claims oneself as a student. Everything from public behavior to a lack of financial credit can be overlooked because of student status. Most people respect a person's choice to attend college, and many times bestow advantages upon the student as a result. With these benefits, it is easy to adapt to the comfort school can bring and use those four or five years as somewhat of a postponement.

Enjoying the collegiate atmosphere, activities, and lifestyle too much can cloud one's motivations for an education and a future. It is easy to be caught up with the present four years and use them as a stalling ground. College can be a nurturing greenhouse which, although very warm and fulfilling, can become too misty to see through. For some, this type to environment is ideal and addictive, for others, too uncomfortable and stifling. For those who become addicted — look beyond the comfort zone, it is vital to avoid procrastination.

Students should enjoy their years in college and live them to the fullest, however, keeping an awareness of what is ahead is helpful, and necessary. It isn't Whitworth's duty to ensure that we students remember what must come after the diploma, it is our responsibility. It is our responsibility to keep in touch with, and prepare for, the after years. That preparation should begin the first day students step on campus and should not end when the tassel is moved.

But, it shouldn't be a hindrance of lifestyle either. A peephole in the steam of the greenhouse glass to peer through periodically is sufficient. Who knows, it may even discourage students from making the revelation late in their senior year, or even as they are registering for it.

Can Whitworth handle the challenge?

by Kathy Marousek

Whitworth vs. the University — does it compare? As a student who just graduated and is about to embark on the next stage in her life, I have a nostalgic notion to look back on my college education, was it a good one? Am I ready to face the working world?

I attended both the large university, Fresno State, and the small private school, Whitworth, and can honestly say that Whitworth was the better deal. Maybe not financially, my debts will haunt me for years, but educationally and emotionally Whitworth was much more of a challenge.

While attending California State University, Fresno I remember feeling a lot like just another face in the crowd. The classes were huge, about 250 people. The professor was a "feared" stranger who spoke through a microphone, and if you had a question for him your stomach got butterflies in it before you talked to him. On one occasion in my trigonometry class I dared to ask a question, the professor told me I was "stupid" and should have learned that material in high school. Needless to say I never was so bold again.

Another experience that jerked me into college life was my human sexuality class, which was something like watching a pornography movie three days a week, and then discussing the importance of it to each of us, of course we were supposed to add personal experiences into the class lectures. It does not make one very comfortable when another student is discussing his/her sexual experiences and then asking for feedback. I remember the professor advocating free sexual behavior, something that is certainly not lacking in the university system. He also mentioned that being a virgin after 18 was not the most healthy of situations for most people.

As I write this it seems as though the main experiences at Fresno State that stand out in my mind have to do with sex — that is in the classroom. My and personal interviews. I was also carded everytime I stepped foot into the shops — thank goodness I had just turned 18, or the paper would have been a flop. I learned a lot writing that paper, but it was a rude awakening to the "outside" world, one that I do not believe I was ready for.

have a friend already in the house, or your dad is rich, you are in. But, if your boyfriend's ex-girlfriend is in the house do not bother going through rush.

I cannot say that fraternities and sororities are all bad, I had a great time and met a lot of people, but none of whom I still keep in touch with, nor have I break that trust (maybe I should have in Chemistry 151 though, I received an impressive "F," at least at Fresno I got a "C.") I was not scared to ask any of my professors a question or go see them during office hours. They were actually in their office, it wasn't their assistant.

Another amazing thing that happened to me when I transferred to Whitworth was that I was assigned a counselor. I could not believe some qualified person was going to help me make a decision on a career and guide me through my schedule. At Fresno State one just asks an upperclassman what the easiest classes are and goes from there. I finally had a purpose for taking certain classes.

Living on campus is something I did not experience until my last semester at Whitworth. I strongly regret not living on before (though I do regret the fines from contracts.) It is a great experience and a big part of college. The quality of people at Whitworth is high, and living on campus made me see that. There are people at Whitworth that I will keep in contact with for a long time, something I can't say about most of my friendships I developed at Fresno State.

I am not pushing for a job at the recruiting office, but I would strongly suggest Whitworth as a great school. I came here not knowing anything about the school or Washington. A friend I met in Alaska talked me into it because she needed a roommate. I asked her how I would pay for such an expensive school, she told me to just get up here and Bill Rusk would take care of everything. So I packed my car, told my mom everything was taken care of, and drove to Spokane.

Three years later, I'm ready for the working world.

Whitworth students enjoy the closeness of the dorm without the "cliques" of the sorority.

first English class in college I think the professor was a pervert. Maybe I am being too harsh, okay, he was very liberal. I was assigned my first research paper, the topic? Pornography in Fresno. Everyone else got something like the public park or the Fresno Zoo. When the deadline was a week away I finally got up the nerve to ask the professor how to go about writing the paper. He suggested that I visit the local pornography shops, see what they are like, talk to the people in the shops. No problem, I just won't tell my mother. When I went into the shops I could not look anyone in the eye, so I never got my up-close

The social life of a large university is always intriguing for the person who has never attended a big school, but it gets old. In fact, one semester was enough and I endured four. No, I am not an introvert, I love a good party, but the fraternity/sorority system (which is the main social scene) is definitely lacking something. During sorority rush, the girls screen you before inviting you to join their house. They ask you important questions like "Where did you get that outfit?" or "What does your dad do for a living and how much does he make?" When you leave they vote on you, using a scale of 1 to 10. If you had the desire to go back since transferring to Whitworth. I realize that some of the dormitories are stereotyped here, but not to the extent of isolation.

The first thing that impressed me at Whitworth was that the professor actually knew my name by the second day of class. The classes are so small, it gave me the incentive to try harder (everyone knows when you are a coaster). I also knew I could never cheat (something I have to admit I did a couple of times at Fresno State.) Here the professor was my friend, they actually walk out of the room during an exam! There is no way my conscience would let me

Whitworth battles 'subtle' racism

by Marcus Chan

Racism is alive in America today. It's alive in New York City's Howard Beach, when a gang of 11 white youths beat up three black men; one died under a passing car while trying to escape. It's alive in Forsyth County, Ga., when a busload of civil rights supporters were met with rocks, bottles and chants of "Go home, niggers!" from Klansmen and out-of-state zealots called Aryans, who pledge allegiance to Adolf Hitler. But, is racism alive on Whitworth's campus? And if so, is it a big problem?

According to Marcy James, a third year Black-American student at Whitworth, "Racism is a big problem here on campus if you're not white. If you are, you don't even see it or don't know about it."

Troy Nishikawa, a third year Asian-American student, agrees with James. "There's definitely racism on campus. A lot of it is subtle, but a lot of it is outright blatant."

For Nishikawa an example of blatant racism occurred last year in the lounge of the Baldwin-Jenkins dormitory. "Some guys were really drunk and I was in the lounge," said Nishikawa. "It was about 4 o'clock in the morning and these guys - they were football players - were saying all this stuff to me like they wanted to take me to Vietnam and hang me by my balls."

Although racism is nothing new to Nishikawa, the pain and anger is still there. "It hurts a lot," said Nishikawa. "It really hurts that these attitudes and feelings can come out of some really nice people."

An incident that stands out clearly in James' mind involved and it's so ingrained that it's taken for granted that this is the way it's supposed to be."

In dealing with racism on campus, James thinks that "most of the minorities here have taken up the attitude, 'Well, I've got to get over it; I've got to do what I've got to do.'"

It's like going to the south," said Howell, "If white people treat you nice, you consider that the exception. If they treat you bad, that is considered as the rule. Here, since it's so subtle, it's disarming because you're not expecting it. I'm not expecting it."

With the amazing persistence of American racism, the questions, where does it come from and has it changed, must be asked.

"When you look at the root of this country," said Howell, "It's based on capitalism. We will keep people suppressed because of capitalism. Racism is just a blatant attempt to keep other people from having access. For example, access to an education, access to jobs, access within society."

"I think racism has taken a different form, but it's still racism," said James. "They used to tell us that we couldn't drink out of a certain water fountain, and now they're going to tell us we can't have a certain job. What the difference? Racism is racism. Now maybe we can use the same bathroom, but we still can't live in the same neighborhood. It's all the same. I don't think it's much better, it's just different."

Throughout the United States, racism is being recognized as a serious problem. During Martin Luther King Day, it was recognized when President Ronald Reagan told a TV audience to be "totally intolerant of racism anywhere around you." It was also recognized at a church service in Atlanta honoring King when Richard Arrington, the black mayor of Birmingham, Ala. said that "racial progress has been at a standstill, and I'm inclined to say at a slight retreat." But is racism being recognized as a serious problem at Whitworth? And what direction is the school headed?

"Racism has to be addressed immediately here on campus," said Nishikawa. "This whole college has to address the issue because it is a Christian college, and it has the responsibility to set an example, and what kind of an example is this school setting?"

"I think people would like to think that racism is a thing of the past," said James. "They'd also like to think that we don't do that at a Christian school."

But as Nishikawa points out, racism is very much a thing of the present. "We have a million dollars invested in South Africa. Our money is almost always directly supporting their government, a clearly racist government, and last year the issue was brought up and the trustees' argument was that 'these companies are doing really well and we're getting money from them. If we sold these stocks, we'd lose this much money,' which is a poor excuse to stay invested in these companies, especially since we're a Christian college."

"Everyone says that being a good witness is being a good example, and I don't think this college is setting a good example at all," added Nishikawa.

As for the direction Whitworth is headed, Howell is optimistic. "I would say that the campus is making small strides. I'm not discouraged, I'm more encouraged. I see that rather than having a radical change, which may eventually produce a swing back, you would make a gradual change so that eventually the pluralism becomes such a part of the campus."

"If it had become such a part of the system (through gradual change), that if there had been a swing back, just the slightest swing back to racism, that even the whites would say 'this is uncomfortable for me,' and that they themselves would want to continue progress and keep things inclusive."

Howell added, "It's disappointing to think that after all these years, after all the marching, that no one will respect laws until their attitudes change. The laws only force the people to do what they don't want to do. It has negative reinforcement."

Then how are the attitudes changed? What can be done to combat racism?

"As a Whitworth community," said Nishikawa, "right away we need to start making statements on issues, especially the racism issue, because the Idaho thing (Aryan Nations) is just a few miles east of us. We should start making statements saying that we don't agree with this, we don't support them, and as a matter of fact, we want to throw them out."

"The change, in my opinion," said Howell, "has to start with education, because until a learner can see the worth in culture, they're always going to have a bias that 'mine is better.'"

Nishikawa agrees, "We have to knock down all the stereotypes, educate the people so they know that the stereotypes aren't true, and that's where the Black Student Union, the Asian-American Club, and all the other minority clubs need to take the responsibility in this community to educate the people."
