Student help sought as HJR 19 campaign begins

by Sally Mueller

Craig Grant, ASWC president, believes that nearly 50% of the student body will be involved in the ASWC campaign to pass House Joint Resolution 19 (HJR 19). The campaign to support passage of HJR 19, an amendment to the Washington state constitution, will allow the state to provide financial assistance to students enrolled in private schools, will kick off Wednesday, October 14. A number of Whitworth students who are willing to help with the campaign have volunteered to help.

HJR 19 is the product of efforts of the Washington Association of Independent Student Governments. WAASG was formed in 1968 by the students of private colleges throughout the state. The amendment was introduced and passed which allowed the state to give tuition credits to all Washington students attending private colleges within the state.

Financial Aid Officer Bill Rush said that during the 1971-72 school year students were eager to receive extra income. Rush believes that a tax cut on college students from the state organization is "incridible." Already 150 students have volunteered to help.

HJR 19 is important in that it will help to maintain private education in Washington. Presently the state spends $3,000 on every student in a public institution. Washington students who go to private colleges therefore save the state $28 million dollars, according to Governor Daniel Evans.

Bill Rush's tuition was last year last year while at state schools remained constant and this pattern is expected to continue. The end result of such factors is that fewer and fewer middle income students will be able to attend Whitworth and it will become a school for the "very rich and the very poor."

Both Grant and Rush feel that a private institution provides benefits which are not available in a public school. Rush feels that there is a need for a "family atmosphere in which students study. State institutions create an atmosphere which prevents religious discussion asking organizations and individuals in state schools."

Rush agrees: "I think that private education is more important to allow itself to be controlled by government. Consequently I am against public aid to private education. But don't confuse aid to private institutions with aid to students who go to public institutions."

Rush would like to see the state charge full tuition to state colleges and have all aid given to students, regardless of where they choose to go to school. This way the state schools would become more dependent upon enrollment and would be forced to be more creative. This would also save money, as about half of all students would be able to attend.

DeuPree feels that registration itself, Sept. 9, went very smoothly. The bulletin was available to all students before registering the two weekends before but other problems were solved with the help of the staff and other students.

Comments from students show that the bill payment process was a hassle simply because it took so long. Some possible improvements for next term's registration are having pre-scheduled, individual appointments and a type of "express line" for those without any questions on the financial obligations. According to DeuPree, the registration office "always at the drawing board."

At press time there were no statistics available on the number of students registered at Whitworth. One note of interest is that the men to women ratio is starting to balance out, although women still outnumber the men. The new freshman class has more men than ever before, there are a total of 80,000 in that phase of the project that Grant hopes to involve a large percentage of private students. It has been estimated that these efforts $60 million dollars can be reached.

As the election approaches there will be telephoning and canvassing. There are plans for fall term registration is viewed as a success by working with Whitworth locally are Marciel, a Spokane businessman, involving students in helping with a campaign and has heard of Whitworth being an incredible. Already 150 students have volunteered to help.

Passage of HJR 19 will help eliminate some of this student body's problems. The Washington Association of Independent Students is involved in a campaign to pass HJR 19, an amendment which will come in in the courts. It is expected that the amendment will come in with the voters in November.

Although several schools are members of WASSG, two schools, Whitworth and Seattle Pacific College (SPC) have done most of the work on the amendment. The present campaign is to be launched by Kathy McGinnis.

Grant says that the state organization working out of Olympia is as strong as the amendment is. "We have a strong campaign and has been led by a group of the state organization except what few terms 'immodest and ridiculous."

Working with Whitworth locally are St. George, Mount Vernon, and private high schools and Fort Wright College. Gonzaga University is involved in having a registration center and has heard of Whitworth being an incredible. Already 150 students have volunteered to help.

Registration endured: lines, heat, waiting

by Kathy McGinnis

Fall term registration is viewed as a success by Don DeuPree, registrar. More people appear to have the right beam, and less are receiving students dropping classes than in previous years.

Pre-registration was used at Whitworth again this year with approximately 70% of all students taking advantage of this process. To complete pre-registration, students could mail in their course selections or attend a meeting with the advisor at the off-campus registration sites.

These meetings took place along the West Coast from June 28 to August 7. Whitworth staff members making the trips were Glenn Pfeiler, admissions counselor; Russ Custer, Jim Hunt, Bill Johnson and Bill Cisson from the faculty. According to DeuPree, the meetings proved very helpful to entering freshmen and transfer students who were able to attend.

On Sept. 7 and 8 the field house was open for students to pick up their packets, pay their bills, and get ID cards. This was the first time this process of payment was used, so it caused some frustration and a lot of waiting. Loans and financial aid came in a little after the packets were picked up. They had to be available and deducted from the original bill. DeuPree noted that it is unfortunate that this procedure took so long; however, it was very valuable in that it allowed students to think about their finances and to have a better understanding of their financial situation.

DeuPree feels that registration itself, Sept. 9, went very smoothly. The bulletin was available to all students before registering the two weekends before but other problems were solved with the help of the staff and other students.

Passage of HJR 19 will help eliminate some of this student body's problems. This amendment which was involved in having prayer removed from public schools has set up a state organization to oppose the amendment on grounds that it will come too close to controlling church and state. Also against the amendment are fundamentalist church groups who are afraid that the money will go to the Catholics. Rusk terms these people "fanatical opposition."

Grant says that there are indications that those opposing the amendment will campaign largely through television scare tactics right before the election. He feels that most of those voting against the amendment will be "extremist fundamentalist protestant and lesser educated people who do not really understand what the issue is."

Basically though, the amendment seems to have wide public support. Rusk believes that people are fed up with public education and "the climate is right."

Polls indicated a majority of 52% favoring the amendment.

Correction

As the first issue got closer and closer to going to press, we have found that a few minor errors were in store for us and you. We would therefore like to warn you.

Warning: If you follow the dates under "Dates to Remember," you may be remembering all night. You'll be remembered as taking Thanksgiving vacation during Halloween.
LIKE MOTHER, LIKE DAUGHTER

When Mrs. Rita Oestman left last year to take a position with the President’s Exchange Program for the Arts, it was natural for Pamela Christensen to assume her mother’s role as ballet teacher at Whitworth. Christensen, capable and confident, began teaching here at the same rate as her mother. Until she graduated from Cheney High School in 1973, she only assisted with a few classes a week.

Although she has been involved in dance all her life, she didn’t become seriously about the art until she was in seventh grade. She began teaching pre-ballet at the Oestman studio and later came to Whitworth to assist her mother.

Gradually, she was seen more frequently on campus, as both a teaching assistant and a student. She returned this year to devote herself entirely to teaching, taking over the classes taught by her mother, who is now Mrs. Forrest W. Rogers and living in the east. Christensen is earning her teaching credential through experience rather than further schooling. As she explained, it’s hard to find a college where it’s possible to major in dance.

Ballet students at Whitworth haven’t seen a radical change in curriculum with the new teacher. Because Christensen has studied with her mother all her life, she knows her style and feels she teaches in the same manner. The continued popularity of the ballet and folk dance classes must mean students agree.

INDIAN GROUP SCHEDULED

White Roots of Peace, a group of native American Indians who will be on campus Oct. 6, will set up a tipi in front of the Student Center. They will perform a welcoming ceremony, a tribal song, and a dance.

The group, representing many Indian nations, is founded on an ancient tribal tradition that tells of the White Roots of Peace spreading in four directions from the Great Tree of the Great Peace. They consider their mission to be a much-needed exposure to real Indian culture and are a real source of information on native America.

LIBRARY MAKES MOVES

Recent changes in the library this summer, have provided a more functional and efficient facility for the students, according to Isaac Wong, head librarian. The most obvious change, says Wong, was to move the Card Catalogue from the lobby to the reference area upstairs. Indexes, such as the Reader’s Guide, are now located beside the microfilm.

Periodicals were also changed. All periodicals, regardless of year, are now arranged in alphabetical order. A-H is upstairs at the east end of the building, while I-Z is downstairs in stacks level 1.

In this change, periodicals of the last five years were upstairs at the east end, while older issues were in stack level 1. Wong stated that because of the split levels of the library, it made it impossible for all periodicals to be located in one place. He believed the changes would be more helpful and beneficial to the students.

Also moved was a reference desk from the lobby to the reference area upstairs. Associate Librarian Pervel Paxson says, “With the desk upstairs, I can meet the students’ needs better.”

“We are here so that we may be able to help any student who has trouble finding materials,” says Wong. “By arranging our reference materials more efficiently, though possibly confusing at first, and by making ourselves available to the students, the library should be more profitable to the student.”

When asked what was going to fill the vacancy in the lobby, Wong replied it would be reserved for student art display.

Wong also invites students, but particularly freshman to “adopt a librarian” for the semester. Adopting a librarian would give the student an opportunity to learn the ins and outs of using reference and research materials, card catalogues, etc. The student would have to promise that he or she would make use of the program of this nature would provide an adequate education in learning to use the library properly.

INTRODUCING: NEW FACULTY

Six new full-time faculty members joined the Whitworth staff this fall, and the Whitworthian tells all students to make every effort to know these people. Here’s a start:

Mary Ann Graff, psychology: Graff received her B.A. at Manchester in St. Paul, Minn., and her Ph.D. at the University of Minnesota, where she was also a part-time instructor of psychology, and as for Whitworth which brought her to a spring interview. For a week she met with the staff and students. Graff enjoys Whitworth for its climate, people, and goals of the college.

Peggy Johnson, education: Johnson attended many colleges including Whitman, University of Washington, UCSD and Cal State University at Northridge. She taught elementary education in Washington and California, and is in looking forward to teaching at the college level. Johnson feels that Whitworth has an excellent teaching program. She specializes in teaching those with reading and learning problems. The Johnsons wanted to move to the Northwest and feel that Spokane is beautiful.

Tom Savage, education: Savage earned his B.A. at Azusa Pacific College in Southern California. He received a 1964 teaching administration from Whittier College, and the other in education curriculum and instruction from the University of Washington. Savage taught in a private school system for five years, and taught the last seven years at the University of Washington. Savage feels that today’s state colleges are not being responsive to the students. Some colleges have lost their “sense of mission.” To Savage, Whitworth is an innocative college that is going somewhere.

Dale Bruner, religion: Bruner was born and raised in the Los Angeles area. He attended Occidental College there, and received his B.A. at Princeton. Dr. Bruner, is the assistant in the ministry of Divinity, and at the University of Hamburg in Germany, he received his Ph.D. He taught for five years at Union Theological Seminary in the Philippines and came to Whitworth basically because he was white, Whitworth chaplain and Ron Fraise, sociology professor Edward Arnold, math: Arnold did much of his undergraduate work at Albion University, but received all of his degrees at the University of Washington. For five years while earning his degrees, he did teacher work at the University of Washington. Arnold feels that Whitworth is more personal than the other small colleges, and that he be able to know more of the students. He also likes the wide variety in the scope of the college. Being one for fishing and the outdoors, Arnold likes the Spokane area.

WHERE HAVE ALL THE WORKERS GONE?

The Student Development Office has many listings of both fall and off-campus job available, but no one applying for them. There is everything from maintenance work, to clerical, to life guarding at the Y, to cooking pizzas at 2 a.m. You name it, and there is probably a job open in that field (well, maybe!)
Peterson prepares Development programs

by Jan Tokumoto

Full term welcomed Dr. William D. Peterson to the Whitworth staff as Vice President for Student Life and Director of Student Development. Peterson was selected from among 180 applicants in the national search process.

Prior to coming to Whitworth, Peterson was a faculty member of the College of Education at Purdue University. He received his undergraduate degree in social science from Wheaton College and went on to obtain his master's degree in college personnel and his doctorate in administration and higher education involves a multitude of responsibilities within the Whitworth community. He acts as the coordinator for the operation of Student Development. As part of his administrative responsibilities, he deals with staff development, the budget of the division and staff hiring. Peterson's staff consists primarily of the same individuals who were under the former Student Development directors Dave Bobo's supervision.

Another facet of Peterson's responsibilities deals with resident life. Shiblee Short, Director of resident life handles problems in dorm life with the assistance of resident counselors who provide feedback at meetings. Student Development is concerned with all aspects of dorm life except situations involving the maintenance department.

Tutoring is available in areas of course difficulty and also in skill building.

Freshmen disoriented

by Sue Coles

This year's freshman class of students was met by a host of orientation activities, designed, to acquaint the new students to life on the Whitworth campus. From the moment of their arrival on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 6 and 7, freshmen and other new students were kept occupied with meetings, entertainment and of course, dorm initiation.

Dinners were served at noon that Friday. After dinner, students learned about dorm competition in the Banana Split contest. McMillan Hall walked away with the prize—a banana mounted on a pedestal.

The next morning, parents of the new students were in an orientation meeting of their own. Students filed into the fieldhouse to get their ID cards and settle their financial obligations to the school. Lunch was a picnic in the Loop for parents, students, and faculty.

Rounding out the evening, Jim Stafford appeared in concert in Cowles Auditorium. Stafford sang many of his hit songs and also presented features from his summer television series.

Placement and career planning also are an important service of Student Development. Peterson stated that "the decrease in enrollment at Whitworth can be attributed to poor advising on the part of counselors of students who are selecting a college after getting out of high school. Poor advising often results in a student being enrolled in a college which does not suit his career needs." Student Development is equipped to assist students in vocational placement career and life planning.

Women's programs, foreign students, handicapped students and the Senior Scholar Program are other aspects of Student Development. Lillian Whitehouse heads these programs.

When asked about any immediate or long range goals, Peterson stated that he would like to see more faculty understanding of the student development model. He is also striving to increase the faculty's involvement with helping skills. Another goal to make students feel free to seek counseling. He wants to dispense with any method of stereotyping students and counselors.

One of Peterson's immediate impressions when arriving at Whitworth was it's size compared to Purdue. He was impressed with the minimal rules imposed on students living on campus as compared to the many rules observed at Purdue. He also noted the extent to which students are involved in exploring their faith and the freedom on campus for diversity in religion.

Student Development also concentrates on the area of counseling. Counseling which is available ranges from individual counseling to psychotherapy as well as group counseling. Peterson is active in counseling and enjoys contact with students.

Women's programs include student aid, foreign students, handicapped students, and the Senior Scholar Program. Lillian Whitehouse heads these programs.

Peterson was selected from among 180 applicants in the national search process.
EDITORIAL

by Kathy Pecka

Sometimes it seems there’s so many things wrong, there’s no way to begin combating them. Two women make attempts on Ford’s life in the space of a scant 17 days, there’s war in Angola and Lebanon, people and hotels are involved in the British trendy in the name of Christianity, and the amount of corruption exposed in our state staggering the imagination.

Those of you attending Dick Gregory’s Forum last Wednesday night heard chilling accusations concerning our government, ranging from organizing drug rings to arranging assassinations to tapping Joe Average’s phone and television. I feel manipulated, angry and sometimes helpless.

So what do we do? A thousand or so of us retreat to the almost proverbial pine-covered campus where it’s relatively safe. There haven’t been any assassination attempts on President Lindaman, no one in the neighborhood is starting to death, no FBI, CIA, KGB, ABC or whatever agents lurking among the pine trees. It’s easy to become isolated.

This isn’t the basic “get-off-your-buttocks-and-do-something-you-sapaticic-sline” lecture we’ve all had thrown at us with amazing regularity. I’m as sick as you are of hearing and reading about us being “the apathetic generation.” How, after the color and clan of student unrest in the 60’s, we’re pale pillars of convention.

We need to make our commitment count, in ways that have real meaning, even if they’re more subtle than in the past. To do that, we must be informed. Take advantage of our media wealth. Don’t be satisfied with a half hour of evening news. Find out what’s going on in the world, and most importantly, panel what you take in. That goes for campus issues, too. The Whitworthian fervently hopes to be right in the middle of whatever controversies await us this year. We expect you to fulfill your responsibilities, too, and evaluate responsibly the information we provide, decide where you stand and act accordingly.

TREES MAY STAND IN COUNTRY’S COURTS

(CPA)—Trees may follow women and minorities as the next group to be given protection under the law if the theory of a California law professor takes hold.

Christopher Stone has suggested that natural objects, such as trees, be given legal standing in courts. Attorneys could be appointed to the courts and granted the right to independent environment, such as attorneys would be appointed to defend a child. Any money awarded in damages would go to the benefit of the environment.

For instance, if a polluter were ordered to pay $10,000 in damages to a tree or stream, the money would go into a trust fund tended by a legal guardian. The money could be used to reforest a cleared area or restock a stream with fish.

Stone’s theory is gaining ground in legal circles. The attorney general of New Jersey has suggested that natural objects be given legal standing in legal circles. The attorney general of New Jersey has suggested that natural objects be given legal standing in courts.

TOO MUCH TV ROBS PEOPLE OF DREAMS

(CPS)—Losing the ability to dream can mean a lowering of one’s self-esteem and the will may be too many hours in front of a television set, according to psychologist Dr. Sager of the University of California National University Center for Continuing Education.

The report warns that excessive television watching may not only alienate the viewer from society but also seems to stimulate impulsive, aggressive behavior.

The report also suggested that losing the ability to dream can lead to a decreased sense of identity and financial outlay. Television programs, especially those in color, appear to be a cause of the increasing use of tranquillizers and barbiturates, the report concluded.

FBI SINKS TO YELLOW JOURNALISM

(CPS)–FBI documents made public recently indicate that the agency published at least two bogus college admission diagnostic tests in the past. One of them, the Armageddon Test, was distributed at Indiana University’s Bloomington campus, the other, the National Observer, at American University’s Eckerd college.

The newspapers were intended to expose the New Left, containing such erudite maxim as “War can only be abolished through war.”

Granted, sometimes it’s difficult to find channels for your convictions. But, it’s amazing how really committed people always seem to find some way to effectively express that commitment. Take the hunger strikers in Iran. It’s so easy to clinically describe it as “the hunger pangs,” and see it in terms of human beings wasting and killing each other. Is there anything you, as a single individual, can do? Find out. Fall term Pucus Days will center on hunger and there’s a great campus now, examining the problems in terms of defining ways to help.

Dare to really dedicate yourselves, to spend time worrying over more than what’s for dinner at SAGA and who’s playing at the dance satellite. Whitworth is an ideal community to activate your concern.

A note on policy: The Whitworthian will be delighted to have anyone disagree with anything printed, and welcome letters to the editor. We’ll print your letters, but remember to keep them brief. We also reserve the right to edit any libelous or obscene material.

TAX MONEY SLATED FOR FROGS, PIGS AND COMICS

(CPS)–Even while Americans tighten their belts to make it through hard times by cutting out non-essentials, Congress is spending a considerable amount of tax money to subsidize the pursuit of knowledge.

The Congressional Record recently listed several uses of tax money that Congress appropriated, including:

$6000 to study Polish bison eggs
$20,000 to study the blood groups of Polish Zlotnikas pigs
$71,000 to compile the history of comic books
$190,000 to study the smell given off by Australian aborigines.

APITUDE SCORES HIT NEW LOW

(CPS)—While tuition and the cost of living spiral higher and higher, one traditional statistical marker for students continues to fall: aptitude scores for college-bound seniors.

The Syracuse University Education Research Center reported that the average verbal SAT score fell 44 points and the average mathematical SAT score drop 30 points since 1963.

APITUDE SCORES HIT NEW LOW

(CPS)–While tuition and the cost of living spiral higher and higher, one traditional statistical marker for students continues to fall: aptitude scores for college-bound seniors.

In the steepest plunge in the last 11 years, average Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores for 1975 graduating high school seniors fell ten points on the verbal part of the test and eight points on the mathematical section below the average of 1974 graduates. The composite continued a downward trend that has seen the average verbal score fall 44 points and the average mathematical score drop 30 points since 1963.

The average verbal SAT score fell 44 points and the average mathematical SAT score dropped 30 points since 1963.

The SAT, according to the College Entrance Examination Board, is a standardized measure of developed reasoning and analytic ability. The tests are used by college admission boards and scholarship agencies to determine college courses.

Bruner shows Philippine concern

by C. Ann Hollifield

"I want to deposit my life deeply wherever I go," says Dale Bruner, Whitworth's new associate professor of religion. "I would be very, very happy to spend my life here.

Bruner, who with his wife and two sons, have just returned to the U.S. after spending ten years in the Philippines, is already enthused about Whitworth. "I really like the size of the college," he says, "and I've always loved the Pacific Northwest.

He came here through the efforts of his old friend Philippines Chaplain Ron White, and Academic Dean Duncan Ferguson, after leaving the missionary field last spring.

Bruner went to the Philippines in October 1964, after being invited to teach theology at the then new Theological Seminary at Palapala on the island of Luzon, the largest of the 7,000 Philippine islands. Palapala, a rural village about an hour's drive from Manila, is, as Dr. Bruner puts it, "the back of the stick", it is an area of conflicting cultures, where the technology of the new world is not without the ways of the old. "I remember seeing a small boy riding on the back of a water buffalo as he took the herd to the water hold, while at the same time a transistor radio that was blaring out John Denver's song 'Matthew'."

Originally from Los Angeles, California, Bruner attended Occidental College there, then transferred to Princeton seminary and finally did his doctorate work at the University of Hamburg, Germany. He spent four years in Germany and then went to the Philippines. Except for a few brief visits, he has spent the last fifteen years outside the U.S.

"It's something of a cultural shock to come back. "America" is a whole new universe. We didn't expect that Americans would feel like a foreign people."

Bruner, who describes himself as "very reticent", "this reporter would describe him as a warm and friendly person--admitted to having been dimmed.

Actually a very nervous the first week and a half of classes. A few weeks, in a conversation with a student, he said, "I remember having been too formal. I know that I've been too formal. too tense." But, he said, "I really want to deposit my life deeply wherever I go. Besides they didn't even bother to take me.

"I remember being asked by the priest of the town about what I thought of the first week and a half of classes. "I know that I've been too formal, too uptight, though I'm beginning to relax. I will sure be glad when I feel normal again."

Movie Review

by Mark Cutshall

People in the theatre were already screaming in loud voices that hadn't even been dimmed. Visions of hysteria imitating the drugstore roof of a forty-story race and fall like the Dow Jones. For nearly an hour the peanut-munching crowd had wrappet itself around an empty beer block before putting these books a head to watch a plastic shark that cost Hollywood $100,000.00 to bubble up people and scare the hell out of a small New England beach resort.

Actually a total of four separate shots (one live, three fake), were used in the filming of Jaws, though after two hours of smooth pop up out of the water devouring numerous human limbs you'd never guess. Bill Bailey's cinematography is so convincing, so lasting that by the end of the film a set of black, beauty eyes rising up over the floor shuffling from the lobby and out of the realm of believability. Hear those awful screenings of fish saying I'm asking you to do something--to try and see for yourself. "How did I ever let myself get sucked into seeing this?"

That question seems to be rather a common one these days. Through the first week in September it has been estimated that one American in every four has seen Jaws. Add to this that in its short four month life the film adaptation of Peter Benchley's best-selling novel has enjoyed box office receipts of $100,000,000 thus surpassing "The Godfather" as the biggest money-maker in film history.

Since when could one Carthagon (Great White Shark) form backed-Bobbins to take a back seat as the Average American Family's favorite form of entertainment? Answer: Beaver. Spielberg has put together a film that must rub shoulders with Gone With The Wind. "Citizen Kane" as a supreme technical achievement, Spielberg's camera never leaves the place where the shark is. One moment you are the audience who watches a crowd of people as they drive right off the water's surface. The effect is like looking through a porpoise's head that's half-way submerged in water. Then, abruptly you are the onlooker, watching through tangles of seaweed and keeping your eyes peeled for any suggestion of what is below.

Aside from the fish there are also other actors that surface in the film and since they made the credits and the former didn't they should probably be mentioned. Roy Scheider is the lurching, hulking, broody, the first major character in the film to confront the threat of a shark passing past in the open ocean. He consistently, throughout the picture broods with a conception that wants to run up and harpoon the mildly-mocking his citizen to do any more swimming, and an entrepreneur of what he believes is the only way that the subsequent low tourist trade will do to his fragile public image.

Robert Shaw as the gristy captain Quint who анау the smallest of the townspople with his own demand that it be raised to $10,000 ("For this you got the head, the tail, the whole damn thing... it's all there, all there..."") is the one you'd better take the screen than Schneider. At least Shaw can sink his own boat. He can also go of, flying willy-nilly, scolding townspeople with an inane "Oh, can sink his own boat. He can also go of, flying willy-nilly, scolding townspeople with an inane "Oh, can sink his own boat. He can also go of, flying willy-nilly, scolding townspeople with an inane "Oh..."

"...and leave and never be heard from again."

The Roman Catholic Church is one of the few organizations that has been willing or able to stand against Marcos in the Philippines, and thus the Church has much power that Marcos describes it as "the bone in the throat of Marcos." At one time, Marcos had led the American Catholic Church leader and the head of the A.C.C.Youth Ministry, arrested and world reaction was so strong that Marcos was forced to release, not only Daniels, but many other Church members as well. Since then, Marcos has left the Church alone.

Roman Catholic Bishops have been particularly outspoken in their criticism of Marcos, since their position makes them almost immune to retaliation. "I have been very proud of them for their courage in resisting Marcos," says Bruner, "the Church has been very courageous."

Parents' goals outlined

by Nancy Haught

Ever wonder what Dad was thinking as he gave you a check for college? What was Mom's mind while she did your laundry and labeled your clothes? Chances are they were thinking about how college would change you and how you would change the college.

You must have some idea of what you hope to gain from college: an opportunity to grow intellectually and emotionally, socially, a chance to get out of the house: a job, a husband. You know your expectations, but do you have any inkling of your parents' wishes?

While you were unpacking your things in the dorm, your folks were attending meetings for parents of new students. At one such session they were asked to write their replies to the question, "What do you expect your son or daughter to do from college?"

You might be interested in their answers. (Of the approximately 100 parents responding only two mentioned that age-old question for parents sending their children to college—"Job").

To print only the "best" replies is impossible, to print only a few is necessary. So, read on. You give us... Your Parents (representatively speaking) their Expectations. Their Expectations:

1. To learn to express himself effectively, especially in writing.
2. To be exposed to and challenged by as many areas of knowledge as possible.
3. To form a base and methodology for lifetime learning.
4. To form the beginnings of a value structure.

First, I want her to have a good experience in college and the world. Her individual growth is extremely important. It is far more valuable than grades and re-thought and changed where necessary. I want her to be a caring, loving, concerned person and responsible to and about others. I feel she must make several life-long friendships and I'm certain she will. I also want her to remain as individualistic as she has grown up to be. If she can continue the growing process throughout college and life always and remain open to new ideas and values and the ways of living and learning it will be all I can hope for.

An insight into another life style of community living in a whole new environment from the one she knows; independence; a continued desire to seek knowledge and develop the potential of the unique person she is.

A fuller understanding of who she is, a deeper relationship with God, developing the potential of the unique person she is.

An awareness of self. The self-confidence to function and to see herself as a person in which she finds herself. The ability to use her skills to reach whatever potential she has. The ability to contribute to the society around her and feel good about what she is doing. A deepening of her understanding of her faith and how it relates to everyday life.

Attainment of a general education to assist her in living in society. i.e., the "Basic Four" which include instruction in literature, languages, science, and mathematics. To prepare her for the responsibilities of citizenship. To enable her to make responsible decisions regarding her future. To enable her to live in and to adjust to the broader community. Personal, socializing, recreational, development and expansion of faith in relation to everyday living.

Social relationships, a husband, job skills.

Personal Christian growth! An academic education can be gotten elsewhere but this is the place to also grow as a person.

An independence of thought and action. An ability to think in new directions with confidence in who she is as a person and in relation to others close by (family, friends and society) and how she perceives others whom she learns to respect and love and operates in the world. We think she's pretty special and think you will too.

A basic knowledge of what has gone on in the world and how it relates to her, a sense of pride in heritage, enquired; their genuine warmth and loyalty, in their troubles, the communists capture the city before they escaped.

Picture the frenzied panic of thousands attempting to escape their city, sustained by fear and all their own awareness of the human element that is too often forgotten. As one girl explained to me, "We are so proud of our people, they can't even be proud of us."

Although I don't understand the Vietnamese war any more than I did before, I am aware of the human cost of war and the human consequences of war... The American people, divided in half... the communists teach the North to hate us." The Vietnamese are not the first refugees, neither will they be the last.
Can any good come out of Upper Darby?

by Cynthia Reynolds

"A better question," quips Joe Novenson, "is can anything come out of Upper Darby at all? I think I'm the only one to move away in ten years...."

In case you're wondering where Upper Darby is, it's a suburb of Philadelphia, Pa. If you're wondering who Joe Novenson is, he's one of two new assistants in the chaplain's office this year.

It is not so much where Novenson was born and lived that distinguishes him from others. It is his unique ability of developing real relationships with those he meets.

There is, for instance, his friendship with Whitworth's Chaplain Ron White. It began at Rider College in Trenton, N.J. when Novenson was a senior there and White was chaplain coordinator. Novenson, had at one time planned to go into radio and TV and radio. His undergraduate degree was in Speech Communications, but he felt he should be open about his career choice.

"Barbara's influence on my life came about, remember Novenson. "I really needed to know the Lord," he remembers. "They were engaged his junior year in college and married last May. Barbara's warm, deep smile tells you she's as eager as Joe to be involved in your life. Just recently she began work at the WTTA as Director of Physical Education for the physically handicapped."

...what other line of defense did we have against them? was just a nightmare. Singing a song about a thousand lecherous upper classmen. Yelling into a thousand mouths. What other line of defense did we have against them? was just a nightmare. Singing a song about a thousand lecherous upper classmen. Yelling into a thousand mouths. What other line of defense did we have against them? was just a nightmare.

As the day moved on I had a definite feeling knowing that I'm already planning for Upper Darby? what a pre man was. As we reached the dorm in sight that we were finally

by Debbie Estep

I'm an initiated freshman. Boy, am I initiate? My perception was arranged by two beauties called Serge and Bubbles and I'll tell you why they stopped at nothing. Even McMillan would have been proud to have them.

My initiation started at the break of dawn when the intercom crackled to life and we heard Serge's voice.

"ALL RIGHT YOU BALDWIN WOMEN! WE ARE BEING DISCOURTED BY THE ALDER PREP-MEN TODAY, LADIES. MOVE YOUR BEDS AND PUT THE WAR PAINT ON." No sooner had I asked what a pre man was when I looked out the window and saw 100 pre men. "A pre man, he's a man!" "White Christmas." Hearing Bubbles down the hall I quickly got dressed and hurried to front a line. Just as I reached the place I heard Serge bawl, "AVENGER!

And as if that wasn't bad enough she came ever, stood in front of me and yelled.

"WAKOWSKI, GET THAT CHEST OUT!"

"What chest?" I asked. But apparently she didn't hear me for already they were piling us off with premen. I won't go into the details of that meal but I will say that the worst torture in the world is to put a Woman with a preman.

As the day moved on I had a definite feeling of doom. Maybe in Basha had something to do with it. Or maybe the wild rumors of 50 freshmen disappearing had some effect. I really can't say. All I know is that the future looked good.

My worst fears were realized when Bubbles came and danced on my chest.

"OUTSIDE!" I didn't have enough clothes on to belong to a harem let alone go outside.

That evening was a nightmare. Singing a new song called "Good Girls" in front of a thousand lecherous upper classmen. Yelling into the night that we were BALDWIN WOMEN. Who cared at two in the morning? Oh the agony, oh the shame!

"Might be a fool but I thought for sure when we had the dorm in sight that we were finally initiated."

As we reached the dorm they lined us up and began stuffing dried apples and prunes in our mouths. What was the line of defense we did have but the bathroom?

Possibly in years to come they will abolish this form of human cruelty. Maybe the SFPC (Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Freshmen) will take part in ridding us of this terrible tradition. Maybe the FTA will protect us. All I know is that I'm already planning for next year.

Graff heads intramurals

by Mike Repeovich

This year's intramural program begins under the new directorship of Terry Graff. Graff is a graduate of MacMurray College in St. Paul, Minnesota where he received his degree in physical education and also played football.

After graduation he went on to play football for the Chicago Bears and the Charleston Hornets of the World Football League, retiring after the 1974 season. During that season Graff studied at the University of Minnesota working toward his masters degree in physical education.

A native of Appleton, Wisconsin, Graff comes to Whitworth with hopes of increasing participation and getting more co-ed programs going. One idea was to institute regular federation style touch football. But after meeting with the intramural representatives he has decided, due to popular demand, to stay with Philadelphia style.

A demonstration of the game will be given at halftime during tomorrow's Simon Fraser game by the Village team and a McMinnian team.

New Head Coach Karl Zeiger thinks its one of the best groups he has seen in his years at Whitworth. "We do have a lot of freshmen," said Zeiger. "I have high expectations, especially for Hafferkamp. I think we'll see a lot of individual improvement throughout the season with many of the guys. They've been working hard."

Last weekend three Pirate runners crossed the finish line before the next Alumni Doug Zittel on the newly laid out 4 mile course.

Brian Hafferkamp, a freshman from Salem, Oregon finished first with a time of 21:19, more than one minute before the next finisher, senior Warren Herman. Another freshman, Greg Pox from Indiana took third in the meet which was held on the Whitworth campus and area surrounding it.

Scoring will be by individual runner only in the men's and women's races, but team scores will be kept in the high school competition. More than a dozen teams are expected to compete, making this one of the most competitive high school meets in the state.

Individual favorite is Stanford runner Don Kardong, a member of the U.S. National team.

Whitworth graduate and new cross country coach Karl Zeiger cruising along in Alumni meet

by Dave Vaughn

After a convincing 18-28 victory over the Alumni last Saturday Whitworth's Cross Country team looked forward to the final annual Ankie Pel- luc Invitational tomorrow on campus.

Three divisions will make up the meet. An open two mile for women will begin at 9:30 a.m. A two and a half mile race for high school boys will start at 10:15 a.m. and at 11 a.m. the gun will go off for the four mile open collegiate men's event. All races begin and end at the Campanile.

Entrants to the women's race are expected from Whitworth, Spokane Falls Community College and Northwest Christian School. Nineteen teams are expected to send runners for the men's competition including those from the immediate area plus Yakima Valley College, Whitman, Simon Fraser University and Central Washington.

Pirates host Clansmen

by Tim Wynne

Tomorrow at 1 p.m., the Whitworth Pirates will clash with the Simon Fraser University Clansmen in the Pine Bowl. SFU comes off a 14-13 win over Chico State last Saturday, so the Pirates expect a strong challenge from the Clansmen. Two teams last met in 1972, when the Pirates prevailed, 26-21.

Size and speed are two of the major strengths of the Simon Fraser squad. Their offensive line averages over 215 lbs. per man, which is 20 lbs. heavier than the Pirates linemen.

SFU’s defense is led by sophomore linebacker Rich Jones. His Complete average as a freshman was over 56 per cent. Leading Clansmen receivers are Luis Passaglia and Maurice DeFranco.

Whitworth head coach Hugh Campbell hopes his deep back corps, Dave Curtis, Rae Hatch, Steve Mitchell, Doug Miller, Todd Spencer, Rick Spernavann and Larry Lynch, will be able to contain the SFU running attack.

The Clansmen defense holds some impressive credentials. Linebacker Glen Jackson, safety, Steve Kelley and cornerback Randy Graham all were named to last year’s All-Northwest team.

The Pirate offensive line, still short on experience, will work on strengthening their protection for the quarterbacks and blocking for the running attack.

Last week’s action

The Whitworth Pirates showing an exceptional amount of balance throughout their whole line up, completely dominated the Shippers game against Eastern 20-0 at Joe Albi stadium last Saturday.

Before a crowd of about 14,000, Hugh Campbell’s gridiron came out swimmin’ and shut off any Eastern Washington hopes of a touchdown. In fact, it was just before halftime that the Eagles could manage their initial first down.

Whitworth got on the scoreboard at 5:09 of the first quarter, when Brian O’Hara took an option pitch from Duane Matthews, put on a burst of speed as he scampered 51 yards into the endzone. Steve Mitchell tackled the extra point and the Pirates had a 7-0 lead going into the second quarter.

Matthews connected with wide receiver Doug Long on a quick out pass and Long eluded Withworth safety Steve Butler in the Pine Bowl. 14-0

Mathewson rolled up 369 yards rushing and passed for 199 yards.

The Whitworth defense was truly outstanding all night long as they held the Eagles to 50 yards net total. The Pirates were repeatedly sacking quarterbacks Karol Brandmann and Marco Begovich, to thwart any Eastern hopes of a passing attack at all.

Whitworth rolled up 356 yards rushing, 399 of it rushing. The Pirate QB’s connected on 16 of 21 passes for 179 yards.

Mathewson who started the game at quarterback looked exceptional at the helm and moved the team well. John Richardson had an outstanding game on defense at tackle. He was credited with eleven unassisted tackles to lead the Pirate "D" in that category.

However, it was strictly a superb team effort and Whitworth coaches and followers had to be pleased with what they saw of their team.

In the world of professional sports one season draws to a close while another is just beginning and soon we'll be snowballed with two seasons. I'd like to make some predictions beginning with baseball......first in the National League..... Cincinnati has had it clinched (or so long one might begin to wonder if they have lost their momentum. I don't think so, pride is involved here and the Reds have so much depth and talent. I'll stick my neck out and say the Reds in four over Pittsburgh, besides Pete Rose will have a chance to gain more favor with the fans....

In the American League, one race still goes on, a chance to win all. If the Orioles win the pennant, they'll have the world series going to Oakland once again.... how about a series MVP......I think Claudell Washington will star....

Now for some short predictions in pro football, think this will be the year for the Oakland Raiders to finally go all the way. You're probably saying now wait a minute this guy must be from the Bay Area and you know what, I am. But I'd rather see the 49'ers win it, I know Notbad, the A's are the best but losing to the Dallas Cowboys????...O.J.Simpson is going to have another super season but he might get hurt again......the WPL won't pay their players and the Miami Dolphin will have their three "superstars" back next year......

Late note: We have run into problems, as usual. In the first issue you will see everywhere in the mess I have lost the soccer club article......the team will be getting future coverage......this year's team captain Francis Tagbo is handling the coaching duties for a large group of us to be excited. The defense appears to be sound and an international front line should provide a lot of scoring punch.

Brad says "Hey" and Bob says "Hey" back.....Oh well guess you had to be there......
Students suffer in food stamp program crackdown

(CPS) - A change in food stamp eligibility requirements scheduled to take effect in many states this fall may cut thousands of students from the food stamp rolls, according to Agriculture Department officials.

An eligibility revision made early last year will bar students from middle and upper-class households from the food stamp program. New Agriculture Department regulations require that students whose parents claim them as income tax dependents be dropped from the program unless their parents are also receiving food stamps.

The ban applies to students more than 18 years old who attend any post-secondary institution and get more than half their income from a household with too much money to qualify for food stamps.

Accurate figures on how many students will be eliminated by the change in regulations are unavailable, according to department officials, but some non-government studies have shown that "many thousands" of students receive food stamps, officials added.

Although the eligibility change was sent to county and state administrators in February, difficulties in implementing the changes have forced many states to postpone any policy changes until this fall, department officials said.

Food stamp program administrators felt a crackdown was needed, according to Bob Welch, a food program supervisor, because "so many people claimed that college students were abusing the program. There was so much bad publicity about students that we wanted to do something to assure people that the needy are the people being served by the food stamp program."

Welch said the change was "one way of squelching the idea some people had that food stamps were being abused."

This year's change in eligibility is receiving less opposition than another Congressional restriction passed in 1971 which was designed to eliminate students from the program. That policy change, "written specifically to get at students and eliminate hipsters," according to department spokesmen, was struck down by the Supreme Court. The Court ruled that the restriction was too broad, and would cut groups other than students from the food stamp rolls as well.

Students who aren't claimed by their parents as dependents will still receive food stamps if they meet income qualifications. Currently anyone with an adjusted monthly income of $215 or less is eligible to receive food stamps. Scholarships are deductible if they go to meet educational expenses, and adjustments are made for medical costs, rent, child care and other expenses.

A $1500 limit is set on the amount of liquid and non-liquid assets a food stamp recipient could keep and continue to be eligible. Liquid assets are savings accounts, checking accounts or other readily convertible sources of income. Non-liquid assets could include luxury items, such as a boat, that could be converted into cash less easily.

Personal possessions such as a car or stereo are not counted as assets under eligibility requirements, however.

Students still eligible for food stamps could be left completely out in the cold if a bill introduced by Sen. James L. Buckley (R-NY) is passed. Buckley claimed that students at colleges and other post-secondary institutions are voluntarily unemployed. Going to school should not be considered a substitute for employment, he maintained. Buckley recommended that students be eliminated from the food stamp rolls altogether.

The bill is scheduled for hearings beginning in October, and according to Robert Ortega, a legislative assistant for Buckley, the "bill should not be dismissed" as another piece of legislation that will languish in Congress. Eliminating students from the food stamp rolls has become an "extremely popular" idea in Congress, he said, and warned that the response to the bill "should not be underestimated."

Whatever happened to Malo Chavez?

by Sally Mueller

The first week of school, Malo Chavez entered the life of the Whitworth community, then disappeared, leaving behind a few who met him disillusioned and confused.

Chavez was not what anyone would term a "typical" student. Once in a year, a young freshman who claimed affiliation with Niki Cruz, he was tall and husky, wore expensive clothes, dark glasses and a lot of cologne. He often carried a cassette recorder on which he played folk/rock and 50's music. He had a habit of spending and borrowing a lot of money and flushing $100 bills among his clothes.

Chavez borrowed at least $600 from various Whitworth students who have not been paid back. He allegedly wrote approximately $2000 worth of bad checks to Spokane area students who opened accounts at Pacific National Bank, according to police.

At the end of the first week of classes, Chavez had two Whitworth students drive him to the airport to catch a plane for Minneapolis, where he said he was going to sign a contract with Billy Graham and return to Spokane the following day. One of the students, who accompanied him wrote a check for $140 dollars to pay for his plane ticket because the airlines would not accept his check. That was the last anyone at Whitworth saw of Malo Chavez.

Most people who met Chavez recall having mixed feelings. "Here he was, an evangelist who worked with Niki Cruz. I though it should be a man of God for me. But I didn't like him, and I felt guilty not liking him," said one student.

Others had similar feelings. He was described as "coming on very strong, straight, obnoxious." The air was a lot of people and the air was a lot of people.

One student put her reaction this way. "I was really impressed with how Malo talked so straight, but the longer I was around him the more I thought that straight talk was his way to talk crooked.

There is no doubt that he had a powerful influence over others. Many students mentioned that "anything Malo asked people to do they did. He had an air of authority.

A few people had poor opinions of Chavez from the start. One said, "I just had a very negative impression of him. It was the son of a die-hard, one of those people, who just don't feel good about each other." A student who lived in Tiki, where Chavez stayed, said, "I thought the Lord and give me your money type.

Chavez was especially fond of females. He seemed, as one student said, to "make a special effort to get to know girls." He introduced him to a friend of mine who was male andMalo ignored him." He told several people that he was ready to get married and was looking for a wife.

Chavez said that he had been a member of Niki Cruz's street crew in New York City. Cruz is now a street minister after an encounter with David Wilkerson, an evangelist who worked in the inner city and is author of The Cross and the Switchblade. Chavez claimed that he was sent here by "his elders" to further educate himself. He told the Admission Office that immediately prior to coming here, he had been at Boys Town in Nebraska.

His registration card gives a New York home address. He registered for this year 100, he often made ethnic jokes and was "very aware of the ethnic factor."

Others comment that he seemed to know what to say in any situation or to. Round about him feel good, and that he would act differently in different situations. One friend remembers him commenting at one point about how much he liked Whitworth and that "people here have more of a white face to life." Some people are hopeful that Chavez will return, others fear that he is a con artist, and some just wonder what it all means. Attitudes vary.

from "I'm praying for Malo, what else can I do?" to "When a guy borrows so much money and doesn't show up for three weeks, there's something wrong."

Bill Peterson, Student Development director, is coordinating the effort to determine exactly how much money and how much money is involved. He finds the case intriguing, but does find it odd that "I'm spending most of my time on Malo, a non-student whom I never met."

Peterson is fascinated by a aspect of the situation more than any other. He wonders "What is it about the Whitworth community that makes us so susceptible to a person such as Malo?"

The college has no legal case against Chavez and Peterson said he does not think any of the students are anxious to take legal action. "The students would like to sit down with Malo and talk to him and find out where he is," said Peterson.

The only possibility for reimbursement that Peterson sees, is if the world as a community, assumes a share in the burden. A few people would hit by." He noted that it would help if anyone knew where Malo is would contact Student Development.

There is a legal aspect to the case, even if it does not involve the college. Businesses which have received bad checks from Chavez have contacted the Spokane Police Department and they now have someone on the case. A clerk at Harvey's in Northtown, one of the stores affected, remembers Chavez as "very charming and very funny" when he would not accept his check. She called the bank, and at that time he had some money for a moment so she accepted his check. "He was very nasty," she said, and that said that he was in a hurry to get back to his hotel because he had a class to attend.

The City Check Bureau of the Spokane Police Department has just been brought in on the case. So far it appears to be a check for the case that Chavez "established residency to get an account for a one or two day period, in which all the checks were written." The police are contacting the New York Police Department to see if they can establish positive identification of Chavez. If he is found, he will be charged with grand larceny.

Campus radio station nearing reality

by Jan Tokumoto

FM 91.5 from eleven noon to twelve midnight daily is the goal of Whitworth students involved in establishing an on-campus radio station. For the past six years, attempts to establish a radio station have not been successful due to a lack of interest.

The Radio Station Board of Control, which was set up by President's Council, governs the people involved in this project. Under the supervision of the vice president, Craig Craig, Malo and other students have been trying for the past year to get on the air.

"In June of 1974, a license application was submitted to the Federal Communication Commission (FCC) in the name of ABSC. This application was sent back because a license could not be given to student government. Presently, the application is being filled out by Herb Whitworth, an administrative assistant, overseeing the situation.

On October 24, the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees will be asked to make a decision on whether the station can exist. If it is confirmed that no problems will occur in getting that approval, the license application will be re-submitted to the FCC.

The next step will be for the government to issue a construction permit to build the radio station, and to buy equipment. A government inspector will then be sent to approve the radio station to go on the air.

Last year, the people involved with the radio station requested eleven thousand dollars for the purchasing of equipment. This request was turned down by the Finance Committee to $8139.90. Ploa and others will have this amount plus $1000 for the operation. This year's funds will be used for purchasing miscellaneous equipment and general operations. Not all the pieces of equipment can be purchased until the government approves the station.

Floa stated, "We and the President's Council want to see things get rolling," tentatively, if the radio station should "get going," at the beginning of spring semester, when the rest of the equipment will be purchased from Seattle.

Currently, there are 25 to 30 interested people volunteering their services in setting up the station. The station will be located in Room #5 in the HUB. It's hours are Tuesday and Thursday, 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. and Friday, 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. Floa gladly welcomes anyone who is interested in helping.

John Flosk is optimistic on radio stations progress.
Carrousel of events scheduled for homecoming

by Sue Coles

A formal dance and breakfast at the Sheraton-Spokane Hotel will highlight the annual Whitworth Homecoming festivities, Oct. 15-28. Kim Nicker, special events manager, has a schedule of events planned beginning with "The Last Night Show," and ending with a campus worship.

Starting off the week on Sat., Oct. 15, will be the "Carrousel," a variety show featuring 6-7 acts. The show is a dress-up affair, Nicker said. "I urge everyone to come to 'The Last Night Show,' because it's something that has never happened on campus before. I think everyone will enjoy it."

Rob Marlowe will perform at a coffee house from 5:30-8:30 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 16 in the HUB. This will follow the regularly scheduled campus worship.

Transfer students will meet for dinner in the HUB, on Monday, Oct. 17. The movie "Class of '44" will be shown at 7 p.m. in the Auditorium. The next day, transfer students and their families are invited to the Whitworth Hotel for the morning of Tuesday, Oct. 18. Breakfast will be served at the Hotel, and Nicker was anxious to let everyone know "no charge to students who pick them up in the student activities office." After the first 500 are gone, tickets will be available at the price of $2 in advance. $2.50 for students at the door and $1.50 for students by the show.

Following the concert will be a pep rally in front of the Auditorium. The show has been dubbed "A Pre-Victory Celebration." There will also be a reception for alumni at 9:30 p.m. in the Developmental Administration Building.

Dorms will compete in skits at SAGA, Tuesday, Oct. 21. The event has been named "Laughing and Bursting Out All Over." There will be prizes awarded to the winning skits. Visiting alumni will be involved in the skills as well as students.

Mark Rivers of KREM Radio will be the caller at "A Carrousel Dance," Wednesday evening, Oct. 22. A show group will supply the music, and there will be no admission charge.

"Making Something Beautiful" is the theme for the first-make taking place at 10 a.m., Thurs., Oct. 23, in the auditorium. Folker must have hundred ad

The annual music concert, this year named "A Carrousel of Music," will be at 8 p.m. Fri., Oct. 24, in the auditorium. Folker is hoping to have free of charge to students who pick them up in the student activities office. After the first 500 are gone, tickets will be available from the ticket office at the price of $2 advance, $2.50 for adults at the door and $1.50 for students by the show.

Following the concert will be a pep rally in front of the Auditorium. The show has been dubbed "A Pre-Victory Celebration." There will also be a reception for alumni at 9:30 p.m. in the Developmental Administration Building.

"Whitworth-Good Partners With Spokane."

This slogan could be seen on many billboards in the Spokane area during the official Whitworth College community fund drive week, Sept. 29-Oct. 5. The drive stressed the principle that Whitworth has enough, while being just as full of impact also turns helter-skelter in its focus. Davis' latest effort, while being just as full of interest, has never happened on campus before. I think everyone will enjoy it."

The drive was headed by John Thoresen, associate director of the Development department, and a staff of 82 volunteer workers from the community.

Although three-fourths of the projected goal has been reached, development director Ellen Pansecke said the drive is not over. Contributions will be sought until the end of the fiscal year.

A kick-off breakfast at the Sheraton-Spokane Hotel the morning of Sept. 23, signaled the start of the campaign. King Cole, who is credited with bringing Expo '74 to Spokane, was the great speaker at a progress report luncheon at the Rod notable documentary, Davis, as many might be unaware, produced "The Selling of the Pentagon." This was the controversial television essay of 1970 for which C.B.S. wound up getting its baton-popped by the House of Representatives. Folker is now in the process of drafting the budget for the fall movie schedule last year was $5000, this year it is less than half that. According to Davis, ticket prices have to go up if AWWC is to provide the same quality movies.

Ann Polker, AWWC movies manager, sets the ticket prices as well as selecting the movies themselves. To insure delivery, Polker must order within advance. She ordered this fall's movies last spring.

Other entertainment in the area can also affect movie attendance. A concert or big entertainment downtown can draw a lot of students away from a campus movie, Polker recalled one night when "there were three concerts in town, and nobody came."

The anticipated turnout helps determine the ticket price for any given movie. If a large crowd is expected, then the price can be lowered and the show before an event is made right back into the movie budget.

As an example, "The Sting," with a one dollar ticket price, grossed $22,000, while the actual cost was $1400. The rental of the movie totals $2465. This is the difference that must be made up by the admission price.

Polker is now in the process of drafting the spring movie schedule, she will welcome any suggestions, (care of SAC Headquarters) you have concerning the spring movies.

There is less money available for off-campus movies this year than there was last year, which means movies will cost more.

Native Americans seek status

by Ricardo Miller

"In the early dawn of Creation, our ancestors had no instructions on how to live, or what to wear. All we had, we got from Nature, the best teacher of all, for there is no need to the education from her. We respected Mother Earth, Brother Sun, and Grandmother Moon. You celebrate your American Bicentennial, 200 years of existence. Our Indian way of life has been proven over the thousands of years of living, and we are still here.

The words of Medicine Man Phillip Dees leave the spiritual message of the White Roots of Peace (WRP) behind them after their visit to Whitworth last weekend. The protest of the WRP movement, formed in 1969, is to bring awareness of Indian culture and traditions to Native American people, and to spread its ecological and conservationist beliefs all over the country.

More than a dozen Native Americans from many tribes are on a seven-week tour of western states. Included are Rarihokwats, a former Catholic priest who is editor of the major Indian newspaper, Akwekwe, as well as being a political science and philosophical leader, and Ellen Morven Camp, one of the main negotiators at Wounded Knee.

The WRP movement began "before the time of Columbus," and got its name from an ancient tradition which goes all the way back to the first United Nations. According to the legend, the People of the Longhouse gathered under the Tree of the Great Peace which had the White Roots of Peace spreading out in four directions to provide a path by which all peoples could find their way to peace together in the shade of the Great Peace.

Today, the movement strives getting back to the land and becoming Indians again. Rarihokwats said that people today have twisted word meanings, and the word Nature so that it seems to mean wild or primitive, something that must be changed when actually it is the most perfect thing we have from the Creator.

"The main problem concerning Native Americans is of status," said Rarihokwats. "The United States refuses to recognize of Indian sovereignty rights, and does not accept the fact that most Indian people do not consider themselves Americans, but rather choose to remain loyal to their own nation. Yet in the Constitution, it states that the U.S. may make treaties with Indian and other foreign nations. But your government will not uphold treaties that were made over 100 years ago. To become formally recognized, Native Americans must go through the country today, Sioux Tribe members wait in Washington D.C. trying to see President Ford. But for the past month, he has been "too busy to see them."

So other means must be employed to gain their recognition and this is where another problem comes in: poor and unbalanced coverage by the media. Phillip Dees, spiritual leader of the American Indian Movement is critical of the press. "When the WRP movement happened in 1972, the first thing that hit the papers was a picture of a young man with a gun, no one was concerned about the cause. We want stories on the 'why' of the protest, not what have they done."

Ellen Morven Camp complained about generalizations about the coverage of the deaths of two Philadelphians who were part of a paramilitary force conducting raids on the Pine Ridge Reservation against the Indians, who (it turned out) were unarmed. "But you never hear of the 10 Indians that have been killed there since January, and there have still be more arrests made, no trials."

According to Rarihokwats, the government is reducing the Indian to tribal leaders for two reasons. The first is a Domino Theory, if Ford meets with the Sioux members and agrees to uphold the treaty and restore all original terms, then all others will want the same thing. Secondly, some of the reservations are rich in mineral content, and some are excellent ranchland. The Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) rents out a lot of land to white ranchers who use it for their cattle and don't want to give it up. The BIA is also trying to buy some Nevada property for its oil resources. In each case, the Indian owners of the land receive only a nominal fee.

The Indian movement is not just a fad, in 1920, a branch of Iroquois went to the League of Nations to explain their grievances. A mild goal that unites all the native people all over the world, not just the American Indians, like the Eskimos of Canada and the Scandinavian Laplanders.

Indians must first become more aware of their own proud heritage, says Rarihokwats. They must become strong in their own way, growing up in the Indian culture, learning their own language and being proud of it. The emphasis is on the American Indian way of life, and giving understanding to both worlds.

Focus Days

HUNGER: What can we do?

by Leslie Patrick

What caused families in India to commit suicide together, and fathers to throw their bodies of the adults and children into rivers to drown? Why were people in India too weak to suicide together, and fathers to throw their bodies into the fire? What will be the cause of death for between 30 million and 100 million people in today's world?

Starvation. Death by starvation comes slowly, far too slowly for those who must die this way. It is the hundreds of thousands, millions of the earth's largest population that are in this wave of death.

The purpose of focusing on hunger is not to raise any unrealistic hopes to end hunger in the world, Novenson said, "Until the world wakes up and our Lord comes, there is the issue that will continually plague us." The emphasis is to offer students ways in which they can help.

Most people who are starving are not in the news media. They are only statistics and are never seen. Or heard. For that matter, except by the people around them who are also starving. "Hungry people can't stand up in front of crowds and yell, 'Hey, I'm dying!'" points out Chaplain's Assistant Joe Novenson.

This year, Whitworth students will be looking at the hungry. During Focus Days, students will learn that the American Indian, world hunger and the plight of the hungry in the light of the words of Jesus Christ. As Novenson said, "It's not just the face of the hungry child we have to look into, but also the face of our Lord who is calling us to feed them." The theme, "I was hungry..." comes from Matthew 25.

The week's activities will officially begin on Sunday night, with Rev. John Conner, leading campus-wide Frost Maintenance. In his talk, Conner will give a sermon entitled "They Didn't About the Work!" and reportedly plans to do some unique things.

Conner, Dr. Stanley Moneyham, and Robert Larson will be speaking at Forum this week. Conner, the Tucker Professor of Religion at Oregon State University, will speak on Tuesday, Thursday, Moneyham and Larson will continue speaking on the Campus-Wide Focus on hunger, Moneyham and Larson are from World Vision.

In an endeavor to present all sides of the issue, a series of three meetings with William Bell and Larson will be held in the Hill. Bell, a local who has been a Conference special speaker, will talk about what is economically and agriculturally feasible for us to give away. Larson, who has been a Conference special speaker, will talk the opposite side, speaking from the viewpoint of the starving bodies of the world who would be giving away. There will be opportunities for students to interact with each other and questions. Faculty-led seminars and filmstrips are also being slated.

A hunger steering committee, comprised of both students and faculty, has been working to make the Focus Days more than just a "flash-in-the-pan." They have designed a three-point program to make the focus on hunger an all-year project. The points are educating, gathering resources, and mobilizing the resources. Educating campus about hunger is beginning with Focus Days and will hopefully continue throughout the year.

The gathering and mobilization of resources is a major concern of the committee. They are working on the direction Whitworth should head once the resources are collected. The steering committee is looking into both local and international organizations involved in the hunger dollar. Their hope is to build a sister-relationship with some organization so students could also invest their time, energy, prayer, and love into relieving hunger in some area.

The program may extend itself enough to make the project continued. The committee is working with the sister-organization, Their goal will be similar to that of the Peace Corps: not to give up the cause, but to put some development so they can help themselves.

A booklet on Focus Days will be handed out at Forum on Thursday. It will include the activities that were still on the drawing board at time of publication.
College budget explained;

Editor's Note: An itemized budget of revenues and expenditures for fiscal year 1975-76 was carefully scrutinized by a Whitworth reporter. It is the Whitworthian's introduction to give students a look at where their money goes. This includes a breakdown of tuition and room and board fees. Hopefully ASWC fees and SAGA operations will be itemized and interpreted in future issues.

by Ted Remberger

College costs to students, according to President Edward B. Lindaman, will never go down. He explained, “As long as we stay within the same perimeter of other colleges of our kind we are being responsible to the students.”

Lindaman sees the current financial condition of Whitworth as "very, very optimistic. "We are slowly and surely closing the deficit gap of the college, the chief is the message." (See accumulated deficit graph). This is being accomplished by increases in gifts, bringing in student money, and controlling expenditures.

In the fiscal year 1974-75 ending June 30, Whitworth's expenditures did not exceed incoming revenues, so the college "broke even." And experienced a balanced budget. A deficit is realized when expenditures exceed incoming revenues. It was the first time since fiscal year 1965-66 that a deficit was not experienced.

It was the gift income last year which brought the college out of deficit spending. According to an official college publication, it was "nothing short of a miracle" that last year was a financially successful year. Last year's budget was over $200,000.

Even though last year was financially successful, Whitworth has an accumulated deficit of approximately 1.75 million dollars, according to Mike Goins, comptroller. Last year the college paid $116,000 in interest on that amount. The deficit accumulated between the years 1966 and 1975. (See graph.)

The primary reason for this accumulated deficit was the guaranteed tuition program instituted in 1966. Students were guaranteed the same tuition rate they paid as freshmen for all four years. Because of abnormal cost increases to the college, a large amount of tuition revenue was lost due to this program.

Under this guaranteed tuition rate, about 250 seniors are paying $175 less than the current rate. This amounts to over $200,000 in lost revenue this year. But since the program will be fundamentally discontinued by the end of the year, the college will be receiving over $300,000 more next year. Executive Vice-President David K. Winter stated that "though this wasn't the only reason for the accumulated deficit in the past nine years, lost income from the guaranteed tuition rate equals approximately the total accumulated deficit."

Eventually when the total accumulated deficit is paid off, it will release over $100,000 more each year to the college from interest payments on 1.75 million dollars. Added income from the defunct guaranteed tuition rate, plus the lack of these interest payments will provide a total of more than $300,000 each year to the college a substantial increase.

Forecasts for next year include a tuition and room and board increase. Students will be paying $2700 next year, a $225 increase over this year's $2725. Room and board costs will be increased from $1250 to $1350. Therefore, students will pay $3200 more than this year. This represents an increase of 9%, slightly below the current rate of inflation. However, the increase for the present year, (as discussed last year in Forum) was an extraordinary 19%. This brings the college into line with other colleges.

According to Mike Goins, comptroller, last year was the first time since 1965-66 that a deficit was not experienced.

Since students will continue to have costs increase throughout their academic careers, it is necessary to know where and how this money is being spent. In the chart below, across from expenditures is a breakdown of tuition dollars and percentages of tuition dollars for each department. The percentages represent a breakdown of day school tuition, only, which excludes night, summer and graduate tuition. Day school tuition accounts for 67.3% of all college revenue. The budget is put together and with more than three years expected use. (The six budgets come in this case the average dorm is Aren Hall, double room and a regular dorm. In this case the average dorm is Aren Hall, double room and a regular dorm. Because there are a variety of prices in room and board costs, Mike Goins used Aren figures as representative of most dorms.

Just as imminent as student cost increases, is the yearly development and approval of the college's budget. Each spring every department heads submits a budget for the coming year. As these budgets come into the business office the "asking" budget is put together.

The president calls his staff together for budget review meetings. During several of these meetings; each departments budget is presented by its respective staff member. For example the academic budget is presented by the vice-president of academic affairs. In this manner a "review and analysis is given of each dollar," states Lindaman. A decision is finally made by compromising on items which are out of line and providing appropriate funding for the student's priorities.

The budget proposal is then given to the finance committee, which is made up of Board of Trustees Members for more review and analysis.

In order for the school to follow a proposed budget prior to September registration, the budget is then tentatively approved in an August meeting. A final decision is made in October before the budget is presented to the entire board. Each fiscal year ends June 30. (The itemized budget below was approved by the trustees at a recent meeting.)

In this tuition breakdown, faculty, staff, administrative, and maintenance salaries account for 50% or $1431 of tuition. However, "faculty salaries are still well below those of many other colleges," Winter explained. He went on to say that the president of another college in our conference receives nearly double the salary of Whitworth's president.

Next to the tuition breakdown is a room and board breakdown, based on an average dorm. This is the case the average dorm is Aren Hall, double room and a meal plan. Because there are a variety of prices in room and board costs, Mike Goins used Aren figures as representative of most dorms.

Financial Situation Improving

1975-76 College Budget

Revenues

1. Tuition. This figure is based on an enrollment of 1300 full time students, plus night school, summer school, and graduate courses. 3,545,300

   Full time students only (1300) 2,881,000

2. Endowment. This represents the interest received on $3 million in endowment funds. The income received from this is partly offset by the interest on the $1.75 million that the college has borrowed in the last few years to cover the accumulated deficit. 196,000

3. Miscellaneous. Almost all of this income is the result of summer conferences and other uses of the campus by outside groups. 45,000

4. Gifts. This figure represents money given to the college's operating budget without any designation for use. Most of this money shall be given to students in the form of financial aid ($30,000, see expenditures item 9). It does not include an additional $150,000 received for special projects such as the Fieldhouse. 769,945

5. Auxiliary Enterprises. This item refers to room and board costs, and money received from the bookstore. It is offset by a similar item under expenditures which includes the college's payment to SAGA, costs in maintaining and repairing residence halls, and payments to publishers for the books in the bookstore. These two items (Aux. Debt Service and Aux. Enterprises) add up to the approximate income projected under this item. The item Aux. Debt Service (see expenditures item 9) represents payment to the government for residence hall mortgages. 1,363,900

6. Public Service. The only project currently under this category is the Ragged Ridge Outdoor Educational Center which is projected to provide this income to partially offset its cost listed under expenditures below. This is the first year the Ragged Ridge will be providing revenue to the school. 5,000

TOTAL REVENUES 5,564,145

Expenditures & Transfers

1. Instructional. This is the cost of instruction in the college. It includes a great deal more than this category. Here is included only academic departmental costs, and faculty and support salaries.

   a. Night School 61,930
   b. Summer School 62,200
d. Day School 1,429,170

   TOTAL 1,572,220

2. Library. Half of this cost is for books and other media; half is for salaries. 152,240

3. Student Services. This refers to a number of departments on campus. The registration office is actually a part of the instructional program. These figures include such things as salaries, office supplies and equipment, travel expenses, etc. Note that the financial aid figure only represents the administration of the office, not the amount given to the students, which appears in item 9.

   a. Registration 58,820
   b. Admissions 190,630
c. Financial Aid 34,380
d. Chaplain 33,750
e. Student Development 128,506
f. Health Center 36,235

   TOTAL 499,660

4. Operations and Maintenance. This includes equipment, salaries, and supplies for the upkeep of the campus and residence hall facilities.

   388,920

5. Administration. This includes the entire business office, academic vice president's office, executive vice president's office, student services, and president's office. It includes all the staff salaries as well as the supplies and equipment.

   279,600

6. Staff Benefits. Under this item is included health insurance for employees, disability insurance, sick leave, industrial insurance, unemployment compensation, social security and faculty tuition waivers.

   331,000

7. College Development. Within this office is the alumni department, public relations, grants, special projects, church relations director, and representatives seeking deferred gifts. They bring in the gifts and endowment income listed above as well as restricted gifts not indicated in the budget.

   315,000

8. General Institutional. This item represents costs for the telephone, computer, word processing center, accumulated deficit interest, institutional membership dues, student accounts receivable costs, graduation expenses, financial audit, and National Direct Student Loan contributions.

   309,900

9. Student Financial Aid. This is money from the college, and does not include federal or state money that is also provided for students. All financial aid money which the college donates, is taken from unrestricted gifts contributions. So, in effect unrestricted gifts compensate financial aid expenditures.

   530,000

10. Auxiliary Enterprises. This item is explained above under revenues item 5.

   TOTAL 1,010,735

11. Auxiliary Debt Transfer Service. See revenue item 9. Both of these items are not a part of the tuition breakdown because they come from room and board funds. It refers to residence hall mortgage payments.

   219,000

12. Merit Salary Pool. Other than faculty, all college employees including the administration received a $420 raise for the year. The president has $40,000 to provide employees with merit increases in addition to the $420 as recommended by department heads.

TOTAL 5,659,145

TOTAL DEFICIT 50,000
EDITORIAL

The 'why's': an editorial perspective

by Nancy Haught

You can't put a price tag on everything.

In the minds of some people the value of a liberal arts education in today's world is im-becoming imperitive for each of us to examine the "why's" of choosing Whitworth. We could all attend a state school for less money, why then do we keep returning?

The Whitworth offers an editorial perspective on this question, written from three viewpoints by three editors. We invite you to consider the arguments and do some thinking on your own and hopefully, have a better idea about your choice.

by Sue Coles

My decision to transfer to Whitworth this year was based on a number of things, but it comes down to the fact that Whitworth has about everything I wanted in a school. It's small, friendly, challenging, Christian, and it offers the course of study I need for my future career in public relations.

I attended a small community college in the Seattle-Tacoma area for two years. When I began to consider which college to complete my education, my parents strongly suggested a number of public colleges and universities which would have been easier on the pocketbook. I did apply to some of these schools, but it seemed to be each one of them had a major fault. The campus was too big, or the school too impersonal, whatever the problem, none of them were right for me.

Now friends at church told me about Whitworth. I began to look into Whitworth and I wasn't really expecting to go to school here. But the more I learned about the school, the more interested I became.

The final decision hinged on my financial situation. But the school was very generous and so, here I am! Whitworth has a lot to offer. Not only does it satisfy my academic needs, but it takes care of everything else too.

Women Concerned organize

by Judy James

At 9:30 p.m. on Thursdays Women Concerned meet at Judy James's apartment in Ballard. Women Concerned have had two meetings so far this year, which have involved brainstorming. The goal is to be a supportive group; we get together to talk about concerns of women, understanding women as themselves, formulating women's men, and how women relate to men.

James hopes to have a women's center on campus for college women and women coming back to school. Its purpose would be for "women of all different ages to come talk." "Women Concerned does not want to be considered a "women libbers or bra burners" but an organization concerned about women and their problems. They are hoping to have coffee houses this fall and workshops in the spring. They also want to offer more mini-courses for women including a self-defense course.

Men shouldn't feel left out. Women Concerned is open to men in their meetings or would like to see men start their own group. It believes one of the most important things is to encourage people to become involved, we need everyone's input."
BILLY EXTENDS AMNESTY TO DRAFT RESISTERS

(CUP/CPS)--A bill extending amnesty to all draft resisters and deserters who opposed the Vietnam War has been approved by the House Civil Liberties committee.

The proposed law would grant full amnesty to all soldiers who went AWOL and draft resisters willing to sign a sworn statement saying that the reason for their actions was a moral opposition to the Vietnam war.

The bill, approved by the sub-committee in a 4 to 1 vote, called for US citizens to be restored to anyone who declared that he left the country or renounced his citizenship against his will. It grants amnesty to any soldier who "disobeyed a direct order which would have led to the death of another human being.

The chairman of the House Civil Liberties committee, Robert Kastenmeier, said he believes there is a chance—although a slim one—that full Congress will approve the bill.

THE SHRINKING ASSEMBLY LINE

(CPS)--These are tough times in the Motor City, with car production crashing for all four major manufacturers, according to information supplied by the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association.

So far this year there have been more than a million fewer vehicles produced by American manufacturers. The largest slowdown was registered by General Motors, which assembled about 725,000 fewer cars this year than last year.

Chrysler cut back production by about one third in the same period, for the largest percentage production slowdown.

COLLEGE LOSES DRAWING POWER

(CPS)--More high school students are turning thumbs down on college these days.

The percentage of men graduating from high school who planned to go to college declined from 70% in October 1972 to 69% in October 1974, the College Board reports. The percentage of college-bound women remained the same—about 70%.

Similar results were found in a Purdue University study. Fewer high school students are enrolling in "college prep" type courses now and are instead taking vocational courses, according to survey results.

PILL PULLS IN DANGEROUS DRUG AWARD

(CPS)--Oral contraceptives won this month's dangerous drug competition, according to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). The agency said that women aged 40 to 44 who take the pill are 5.7 times more likely to have heart attacks as women who don't. For women between 30 and 29 years old, the risk of heart attacks triples with use of the pill.

The FDA has warned doctors, nurses and other health professionals of the danger and is telling them to warn patients about the dangers included in oral contraceptive packages.

HOUSEWIFE AND STUDENT WORTH THE SAME, REPORT SAYS

(CPS)--The typical housewife contributes as much to the economy of the US as the typical student, retiree or person in an institution, according to a recent Social Security Administration study called "The Economic Value of a Housewife."

There are 35.2 million women currently keeping house in the US. The Social Security Administration computed the value of their work on the physical or mechanical tasks they perform. The conclusion was that housework is valued at between $5500 and $7500 a year.

Before this study, the Social Security Administration used the average domestic's salary as the value of a housewife's services. Others occasionally throw in prostitutes' fees as part of the calculations.

A SPURT IN TIME

(PFS)--A 350-year-old statue of a boy urinating became a national historic monument recently in Belgium.

Local legend has it that the statue depicts a boy who saved the Brussels city hall from destruction with a well-aimed stream of urine on the fuse of a bomb.

The statue originally provided drinking water but is now a tourist attraction.

RHODES NO LONGER RESERVED FOR MEN

(CPS)--Applicants for the prestigious Rhodes Scholarships will no longer have to exhibit "the qualities of manhood" if a bill now before Britain's House of Commons secures passage in the next few weeks.

The awards have been reserved for men since they were established in 1902, based on a stipulation in the will of Cecil Rhodes, a British diamond millionaire and founder of the scholarships.

Pfemists have repeatedly criticized the awards for being openly discriminatory against women.

The Rhodes trustees award scholarships annually, with each scholarship providing about $5,000 a year for two years of study at Oxford University.

DRIVING, LIGHTING AND LYING

(PFS)--About 5% of the American public surveyed lied when asked if they do anything to conserve energy, according to the Federal Energy Administration (FEO).

In a recently conducted survey, the FEO asked questions about what Americans are doing to save fuel. Pollsters asked questions such as: "Are you using fewer lights?" or "Do you drive at 55 miles per hour?"

At the end of the interviews, pollsters asked, "Have you ever installed a thermidor in your automobile?" Five percent answered yes, FEO spokesmen said.

Thermidor, as in 'lobster thermidor', is a gourmet dish.

ALICE DOESN'T WORK HERE TODAY

(CPS)--Alice won't do anything on October 29 if the National Organization of Women pulls its national feminist strike together. The one-day strike, which NOW calls "Alice Doesn't..." is a show of "non-support" according to Cindy Clark, one of the strike leaders.

Clark said the response to the strike has been "fantastic" so far, with inquiries from women in the military and on Capitol Hill, nurses, business and professional women, factory workers and even men.

NOW members believe the feminist strike will show how much the country depends on women.

KISSING DISEASE ATTACKS FOOTBALL TEAM

(CPS)--The South Carolina State College's football team is off to a five-and-zero season this year. Seventy of the school's football players are suffering from mononucleosis.

The situation is "becoming serious and we're very concerned about it," according to Coach Jeffries. The coach did not say whether the illness is purely a locker room affliction.

KEEP TABS ON TABS, DOCTORS WARN

(CPS)--When you pull the tab off your aluminum can of beer or soda, don't immediately drop it into the can, two Chicago doctors warn. People who are intoxicated have been known to ingest the ring tabs and lose them to their stomachs or lungs.

To make matters worse, the ring tabs are usually made of aluminum which shows up faintly on x-rays according to doctors' reports in a July issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The procedure of dropping ring tabs into full cans of beer or soda was advised by environmentalists as a means of reducing litter and protecting wildlife. The Chicago doctors suggested that the tab be placed in a pocket or on a finger and later dropped through the slot of the can when empty.

KIAN ON KAMPUS

(CPS)--The Ku Klux Klan is organizing against this time of the campuses of several southern universities.

The organizer at the University of Alabama (UA), who believes that "America was founded by white people for the white man," said he has been delayed by calls and has signed at least 20 members.

Other organizers, he claimed, are working at Louisiana State University, Ole Miss and the University of Texas.

The new KKK is using different tactics and is more open organized as it will work through the political system, Don Black, the 22-year old UA organizer said.

At Alabama, University officials said they were concerned about Black's distribution of pamphlets in University dormitories, but claimed that there was no way to stop the flood of literature even though it violates University rules.

Three student government members sponsored a resolution in response to Black's efforts to be recognized by the University, calling on "all thinking persons to ignore Black and his organization."
Fiction Special: 'The Mongoose'

A short story by Pauline Gima

I stirred cream in my coffee, slowing the aoons to swwet the air, mingling with tasteless and indiscernible daylight filtered through the glass window, Hibiscus swayed on the curtain, and slowly in balance from branch to branch. Tropical laziness they call it. School was out and it felt good to sit and think of nothing special.

"Hey, Sarah!"

O bother, what does Jay want now? I dragged myself upward bumping the table edge and half uttered a curse. But as I stepped outside, anger vanished into the sudden brightness, which caused a momentary black dizziness. I uttered a curse. But as I vanished into the sudden brightness, which cast a momentary black dizziness, I covered my eyes and brushed past a mango branch hanging sleepily in the air.

"Where are you?"

"I'm back. Hurry."

I sighed and retraced my steps toward the back-yard wishing the sun would hide behind a cloud.

"It better be important," I grumbled underneath my breath.

My feet crunched on dry leaves and for a moment I regained my earlier mood. Fanning out toward the horizon, the green spread like a deep-blue blanket. An unhurried tradewind breeze rustled the banana leaves and circled the warmth around my body.

"Sarah!" He sounded exasperated.

Little brothers could really be a nuisance sometimes.

I looked down a hibiscus bush where the wild grass choked the air they breathed. He didn't turn at the sound of my approach. His eyes seemed fixed on something lying on the ground.

Forgetting the words I had meant to say, I leaned over his shoulder, Motionlessly, yet alive, Jay a wild mongoose, his red eyes darting fearfully at the grass, bearing hovering above him, a knoll down beside Jay, and remembered a day as a child I climbed on a stool and peered through the kitchen screen door to see, eye-to-eye, with the mongoose who had discovered our garbage. His hypnotic red eyes held the scrabbling white fur of a tense coil, he remained suspended within an otto whose sight he had dashed soundlessly into the tall weeds. We were living in the old house then, deep in the valley where we could see the hill and casually picked ripe grapes on the pathway.

In awe, I touched this wild creature and felt its lawny skin quiver. Within the soft flesh spread a warm something like a tense coil, he remained suspended within an otto whose sight he had dashed soundlessly into the tall weeds. We were living in the old house then, deep in the valley where we could see the hill and casually picked ripe grapes on the pathway.

But I must admit those small gauze-eyed letter-catchers definitely hold a constant trace of excitement, and my pulse went up slightly as I knelt to examine the contents (don't run in hard to stifle the cruel blow of an empty.) A narrow diagonal connected to corners of that tiny clear plate. Something was inside! A letter from HER! Highly unlikely as she lives on campus, and rarely writes.

Those long hours of practice paid off as I breathed through the combination, and noted the return address, LAW OFFICES OF MCPADDEN AND PARK. My father. Well, that's cool. He writes an interesting letter; usually something like "Enclosed are due forms for your loan. Love, Dad." Unfortunately, he followed form and began with "Here are a couple of items that will doubtlessly make your day." Warehouse Market sent me a coupon good for five three ounce packages of sliced luncheon meat at 30 cents a piece, and State Farm Insurance wrote that to see how I was getting along. Of course, since they were using the postage anyway, they took the opportunity to remind me of the $126.34 premium due October 20. Didn't just pay that! I'm paying three thousand dollars to find those gems in my mailbox, again?

I am. And in all honesty, I think it's worth it. What's involved here is the loss of the magic freshness of first encounters and the later relished sophistication of "knowing your way around." Now, in the final year, the reality of the point we've been building toward looms at us without the secure padding of another year or two.

Parachute training is almost over; the plane's warmest for the real jump. And while this is incredibly exciting, it's also definitely frightening. The increasing awareness of one's continuing loss of innocence strikes, and the daily realization of standing in line at BAGA, only to go in and hear about how bad the food is or what Jane's major and hometown are, begin to wear you down. The alternatives are wide open, and definitely my own, but what I don't need right now is some 'healthy input,' to "break up into small groups and discuss," or even another trip to the mailbox.

Editor takes new look at evangelism

by Ann Hellfield

Though certainly not the dynamic speaker that Dick Gregory is, Sharon Gallagher, editor of the Berkley Christian Coalition (B.C.C.) newspaper, Right On, has had some very relevant things to say about Christianity, evangelism, and their role in society today. She was on campus last Tuesday for Forum.

Right On, a radical Christian underground newspaper, was started in 1969 as part of the B.C.C., formerly known as the Christian World Liberation Front.

The B.C.C. is a co-op type organization that is rapidly evolving into a separate church. The name was changed because of the differences in personal convictions of people involved in it. They felt the name was not very appealing and that people might not relate to it.

At the time it was started, there were 30-40 underground papers in the Bay area, but the B.C.C. felt there was a need for a paper that would express the concerns they felt were left out. This paper was started to be a witness to the world.

When Sharon started working on the paper, she and her staff felt the movement needed more exposure. The paper was a part of the B.C.C. but they also feel they can be seen on their own.

Right On took on a new look at evangelism when they returned from a trip to India. The paper is being used to promote a different kind of evangelism that is not political but is concerned with the humanity of people.

In studying the Bible, Sharon said she found that the women's movement had a great influence on the church. The women's movement was not political, but was concerned with the humanity of people.

In speaking of India and the fall of man, Sharon said that the fall is the beginning of the kingdom of God. The fall is not the end of the world, but is the beginning of the kingdom of God.

In speaking of Christianity and the fall of man, Sharon said that the fall is not the end of the world, but is the beginning of the kingdom of God. The fall is not the end of the world, but is the beginning of the kingdom of God.

"Through Christianity we can give up the man-woman, no-you-think distinction and come together in Christ to serve one another equally. "...we all have been liberated."

Sharon said her belief that both men and women were created in the image of God. "There is neither man nor woman; for God created them both."

The last issue of Right On was devoted to the women's movement, and Sharon said that it was not the end of the world, but was an attempt to come together in Christ.

Asked if she thought the world was ready to make a change, Sharon said that she did not think it was. She said that the world is not ready to make a change, but is ready to make a change.

Another year at Camp Carnfleen. It's 5:30 a.m. on October 3, and I just returned from a long game at the dawn sky. I saw what they call the new moon": just a small sliver of the same.

I ask the new Whitworthian: are you finding this a positive time? Let me tell you, (though I would never insist that you listen), I will tomorrow to make your plane reservations for Thanksgiving. It took me a good year to find myself ALL here. And presently, there is no other place I'd rather flip the cakes. (That's brand new, folks, and taste like the best!)" or "drop my bat. I must be inspired or something, this quiet early morning hour!"

I have gone from South Warns first floor, of sterile environment, to a resurrected white pine chicken coop. I have found myself hiding in a study cubicle of the library, understanding the smooth and not-so-smooth rocks in the little volcanoes, The great and small fish and plaza of Saga to the healthiness of a good homo-mate coop in the room.

I am in love with this life and know that this is an idea of another era: it's not cool to be too happy these days.

What's the coop? Who is this Jehovah, anyway? My friends, who were small children, I might be around. Just because the bang that caused you to leave out of the corner of laying hens, that's no reason not to hook up a stove and build a bed. Old Ma Carter lived on the door there; she fed her chickens and had close to 15 in the coop at one time. She used to live alone in this old house which we now share four ways for cheap rent.

The first time I saw the coop out back was in early June, but when I opened the door, more as hell didn't happen. I just imagine the smell of, (excuse me), chicken coop. If you can imagine a chicken coop, then you are missing nothing. My friend Jo looked at me blankly. "You don't plan on living in that place, do you?"

I was looking around inside and a cooawh got in my eye, as I remember. And even though I had to reach down through the little shack, I could see a few spots behind the screen that showed that much was still left. The windows slid up and down in grooves. The floor was covered with 20 years accumulation of dead chickens and chickens' feet. So I left back and hay. I couldn't see much of it, but I knew it had potential.

I was locked out! She put her hand on her hips and slammed her fingers over her nose and said in an extreme nasal tone, "You are NOT thinking about living here? You walked out. I could hear her on the trail back to the house. I just stood there talking to myself so as to avoid inhaling the coop order, and said it aloud.

Skepticism was the initial response when she told people of my plans. The coop? Yes, the coop. I had picked up somewhere long ago this old idea that if I had a coop...

It started back with Mom and Dad, of course; as things usually do. I can remember being with big wide eyes, acting like that little train who almost ran out of breath trying to make it up that hill, that I just stayed up beside of it. I got so I had to make sure it was still there.

I was thinking when the train started rolling down the other side of the mountain. Then I could go to sleep.

I would fall off my bike into a big pile of leaves and come home scratched up and bummed out, more mad at my courtesy than anything else. Then Mom would comment that it was good in some way as I had fallen. At least I had a chance to see the leaves up close. Then she'd thank me for finding her black pearls out of sand-box.... again. I always did use a lot of sand-box.

The coop became a real hobby, I was often up at 6 on summer mornings, first with rake, then with shovel, then with a mowed stuffed with the brush, I must add, I did invade the intricate blindwork of several ropes. I am sorry for that, and can't justify it. I decided that any future crabtown residents, as long as they don't grow too big, can make a scat.

There's something almost holy about waving to a spider instead of squishing him.

HAPPY TRAILS

Part 6
David Ireland loves to tell a story. His stories are charming, sometimes sad, and they seem always to have a purpose. Refreshingly, his stories are also true. Those of you who heard Ireland speak at Pittcon Oct. 2 had a chance to hear some of his stories which are mostly based on his experiences with other people.

The author of Letters to an Unborn Child, Ireland is paralyzed from his head down to a terminal nerve disease. In spite of this, his stories show remarkable optimism in life and compassion for others. He recalls a man who came into his counseling office in California, saying, "I was the most depressed man I'd ever met," remembers-Ireland. "He and his wife weren't getting along. He'd been arrested for indecent exposure. His daughter was on drugs. It was a nameless and complex. I referred him to another counselor for psychotherapy. Before he went I told him, 'You know, I like you. You were a truthful, sincere man.'

Ireland believes strongly that man is created in the image of God, and the spirit of God in all of us is expressed and usable to function. He feels it's important to affirm good qualities in a person, gentleness, sincerity, honesty, "if we recognize that one quality (in a person) they know immediately if it's right and genuine and affirm it, just to try to convert them to an ideology," Ireland said. "Jesuss' encounters with the woman at the well as an example, 'Jesus affirmed her, I like to treat people as Jesus would.'"

His friend, Don Liebert, associate professor of sociology at Whitworth, was responsible for leading Ireland to Jesus. "All the things he'd (Liebert) been saying for weeks just kept going through my mind. I realized he was saying things I love me, 'He's okay. You're not in pain or suffering. Ireland's eyes were on the floor, his head down due to shame, "Ireland says. "The species of bird that has no feet," he repeats. "There couldn't be such a bird," she says, "and the species of bird that has no feet, 'a what?' she asks, "the species of bird that doesn't have a head, 'A what?'"

When asked about his own dealings with resentment, Ireland's eyes sparkle and he says, "Can I tell you a story?"

"One time I was in the hospital for a series of tests. I was in a great deal of suffering. But the tests didn't last seven days as planned, they lasted seven weeks. I was rather uncomfortable. Near the end of my stay's a neighbor came to see me, I was in a ward with people who were suffering from brain damage. My neighbor looked around and said, 'Well, David, I'm glad there are those who are worse off than you, you're no right to complain. You're no worse off than those poor blokes.'"

"I thought at the time that it sounded rather pious and religious, but didn't think about it much, in the morning I woke up so angry. I thought, I have a right to scream. It hurts. And all of these people have a right to scream, too. And those that were worse off than them have a right to scream, too. Jesus screamed. When the nails were ripping his flesh and he had all-over and was thirsty, He screamed. 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'"

"When Joyce came to see me that morning, I said, 'I feel so comforted by Jesus' scream. If I could, I'd tell you, I would get on the loud speaker here and tell everyone, 'It's okay to hurt, It's okay to scream. And for those who can't scream, I'll do it for you.'

"You don't choose to feel good or bad," Ireland says. "But you must trust in the sufficiency of being genuine."

Not long before Ireland was incapacitated he began preparing for another vocation outside of his teaching career. Just about the time he received his Master's the disease was rendering him incapable of teaching. He began counseling in the schools. "But what I really wanted to do was marriage counseling," Ireland says. So Ireland opened his office in his home, where his been practicing for eight years.

Ireland does not employ what he terms "traditional" methods in his marriage counseling. "I could spend a lot of time on the games they (couple) play with each other, but after a few months they would revert back to those games," he says. "People are usually dealing with deeper psychological problems, I focus on changing them as they change, their marriage changes."

He feels the church should be meeting these deep needs and problems, but all too often does not. "Psychotherapy is for the rich," he says. "The church is potentially the most powerful source for comforting, comforting, and healing the souls of the people."

For all his shortcomings, Ireland finds strength in the body of believers called the church. Many of his fellow members have offered him help and comfort. Ultimately, however, he finds strength in God. Concerning this God-given strength he has yet another story to tell.

"There is an old Marlon Brando movie where Brando portrays a drifter who plays the guitar. He comes into this town looking for work. Responding to a 'help wanted' sign in the window of a cafe he saunters in. A waitress working behind the counter begins to relate the story. 'Let's just say he was a dandy. He came in and said, 'I'll play the guitar, but I need more money.' Reluctantly the waitress listens. Brando says, 'I'll give you $5 a week for me to play.' Brando says, 'You obviously have never heard of a bird without feet.' 'A what?' she asks. 'The species of bird that has no feet,' he replies. 'There couldn't be such a bird,' she laughs. 'It wouldn't be able to land. That's right,' he says. 'From the time it leaves the nest, it just flies. If it gets tired, it just closes its eyes and trusts in the wind to sustain it. It sometimes floats lower and lower to the ground, but it always wakes up in time and, refreshed, it soars off free and high.-'Do it ever land?' asks the waitress. 'Yes,' replies Brando. 'But only once. And it doesn't know when it does.'"

Ireland looks pensively, 'I feel like that bird with no feet,' he says. 'I'm flying and when I get tired I just close my eyes and trust in God to sustain me. When I'm getting low somehow I open my eyes and God lifts me up and I soar again. Someday I'll land, but I don't know when and I won't know it when I do. I can't stop living.'

"Natsahi - Pines' Editors Chosen

Although the "Natsahi-Pines" publication has only a tentative name, the Publications Committee and selected editors are already working to make the publication a reality. The general format will consist of four editors: two production and graphic editors, one literary editor, and one photo editor. The editors will work as an integral team, supervised by the editor.

Three of the four editors have been chosen. Mary Kelley and Karen Powers will be production and graphic editors and Kathy Hamlyn will be literary editor. As office, publisher, staff, office materials, and a restricted budget are a few of the organizational problems facing the editors.

The "Natsahi-Pines" is a new creation and is a trial basis during this term. The publication will be distributed during spring semester.

Anyone interested in working on the staff should contact one of the editors or the Publications Committee.

Val Morris, new Student Services Manager.

MORRISON NAMED STUDENT SERVICES MANAGER

What is a Student Services Manager? One of those obscure, bureaucratic titles.

No, it's actually just what it says: one of the ASWC managers, responsible for providing information needed by Whitworth students. Val Morrison, Whitworth senior, is the manager of this newly created ASWC office. The office was created because of all the unknown answers - Morrison is there to find those answers.

Morrison has a wide range of information, always staying on top of things. She deals with social, academic, personal and community affairs. Morrison says, "I don't have all the answers, but I can usually find out or refer you to someone who can help." She noted that it's really important to get freshmen off on the right foot, so the ASWC needs to know what the new students are interested in. Anyone wanting to get involved in student government is urged to contact the student managers' office.

The major problem for the Student Services Office is that students don't know that it exists. Morrison needs questions, ideas and answers about what she can offer the student body. Any ideas about services or activities you would like to see initiated into the ASWC program are welcome.

Morrison looks forward to learning from her job and working with many people this year. She encourages students to help her and the entire ASWC office by taking advantage of this new program. Morrison can be found in the Student Managers' Office Monday through Thursday from 12 till 2 p.m., Saturday from 2 to 4 p.m., and in the SAC office on Friday from 8 till 10 a.m.

Due to the expense and quality of previous yearbooks, the Publications Committee has formed an alternate idea, a combination of yearbook and literary magazine. The 32-page publication will be theme oriented, and though the pages of candid and photo essays will be written by students and faculty members of Whitworth.

LISTED! TURN ON YOUR HEARING AID!!!

Trying to keep calm, I ask him the next set of questions.

IF I'M NOT LISTED WHY IS MY LETTER IN ICHABOD'S MAILBOX?

DUNNO.

COULD YOU GIVE IT TO ME?

WHY NOT?

YOU'RE NOT ICHABOD.

BUT THE LETTER'S ADDRESSED TO ME!!!

SO?

Realizing I'd finally met my match I decided to try a different tactic.

SIR, COULD YOUR PERSONNEL HAVE MADE A MISTAKE? AFTER ALL, THE LETTER'S AD­ DRESSED TO ME!

WE NEVER MAKE A MISTAKE!!!

BUT YOU PUT MY LETTER IN THE WRONG
BOX.

SO?

Losing my control I grabbed him by the collar and shouted.

GIVE ME MY LETTER!!!

SORRY LADY, HERE TAKE THIS AND GET OFF MY BACK.

Clutching the letter in my hot little hands I rushed outside and turned it over to find it was an advertisement for Rolaid's addressed to "occupant".

With madness, I decided to get even. I was going to get my letter if it took me the rest of my life.

Scurrying back to my dorm, I donned a trench coat and picked up a few of my non-essentials.

Crowbar, wrench, hammer, nails, blowgun, telephone booth, and my SW costume.

Seeing that no one was in sight I grabbed my crowbar and began prying the door of my mailbox.

Just as the hanger were beginning to spring a group of tough ICHABOD employees turned the corner and spied what I was doing. Quick as a flash I whipped out my telephone booth, jumped in, threw off my Super Whit costume and proceeded to defend the very mailbox I'd tried to break into. Coming to the conclusion that SAGA employees just aren't going to leave until dinner I slipped my telephone booth under my arm and left the building.

My next move was to put an ad in the "Flash" for a mailbox robber. The only reason I got was a short, wizard's little mag that couldn't have even seen my mailbox let alone reach it.

Giving up the robbery idea I came to the con­clusion that if you can't beat 'em, join 'em. With this in mind I hurried down to the "Costume Counter" and rented a post office uniform. Mak­ing one more purchase at the local grocery store I rushed home to try out my new plan.

Looking very official with a package under my arm I slipped into the post office, dropped off my parcel and waited for the mass exodus that would occur in about five minutes.

With post office employees streaming out of the office door I nonchalantly climbed through the window, grabbed my letter and climbed out again.

With a sigh of joy I sat under the trees and read my first letter from home. UTER BLISS!!!

Oh by the way, did I tell you what was in the package? Lindtanger cheese, naturally. I thought you'd guessed.

Culture growing on campus

by Marcia Kelley

A trip in the Loop on Oct. 27 was responsible. Contrary to wildlife rumors it was not another MTP (McMillan Theatrical Production). The target of responsibility to Tour Hall, student cultural events manager. As Cultural Events Manager he arranged for a group of native Indians, "White Roots of Peace" to settle on our campus.

A program for cultural events was developed last spring. Hall states, "For many years we have needed an awareness of cultural events which occur on campus. Unfortunately, there has been a lack of communications. Included is a lack of publicity of related on-campus events such as Whitworth's choir, bands and orchestra concerts.

Many people associate culture with pink-litend ballet dancers or a thrill-sopra soprano in an opera. Cultural events can qualify as both educational and entertaining. Sorry MTP, your "awes" interpretation doesn't quite cut the cake!

This year Hall is stressing "highest quality, not quantity." In addition to the trip incident there are other events scheduled. Included are three film festivals, plays, and a live radio show.

The three film festivals scheduled are Bogart, Hitchcock, and Garbo. November 6 the Bogart film festival will be rolling the favorites "Casablanca" and "African Queen." For those who love thrilling and chilling movies, Dec. 4 the Hitchcock film festival will be haunted by "Dial M for Murder" and "Rebecca." April 22 and 23 the great Greta Garbo film festival will be showing.

Other events include the Nov. 19 showing of " Syndicate," a multi-camera production. Nov. 24 Antonio Brico, world's greatest woman conductor, will lead our own Whitworth Orchestra. Other superb musical performances include a concert Feb. 12 of old music and instruments from the Renaissance. In January the play "Godspell" will be performed in Cowles Auditorium.

More yet! Feb. 27 the New Shakespeare Company will present a live radio play, "The Shadow," will be performed Feb. 18. The effects should be interesting, but watch out if you scare easily!

The first event scheduled is Oct. 15 at 8 p.m. in the auditorium. It will be the movie "Beauty and the Beast," a new French film and the opening example of French culture and French cinema.

Don't let the term "cultural events" scare you away. Anything has got to be more interesting than watching MTP stuff a SAGA fish into the mouth of someone who thinks he is a shark!

Pirates look to even record

by Tim Wysanske

Whitworth hosts the rugged Willamette Bearcats tomorrow, in a game which will be full of aggressive play.

Willamette, with a team record of 1-2, beat the Pirates 6-3 last year and both sides felt the effect of the game, as both sustained several injuries to key players.

The Salem ballclub is rich in talent and boasts the likes of Dave Lambert, Rod Rayne, and Joe Story. All three were All-Conference selections last year in their positions, and prove to be trouble for coach Hugh Campbell's gridders in 1975.

Willamette comes into the game after a strong showing last week against Colleges of Idaho. With attack浦 quarterback Brent Melby hitting on 12 of 18 aerials for 191 yards, the Bearcats handled the Cougars easily 23-6 and will be looking for win number two tomorrow.

The Pirates go into the game with an identical record of 1-2. Showing an exceptional amount of balance throughout its lineup, Whitworth needs to keep the Willamette passing game in check. Turnovers were costly for the Lutes last week.

The two teams traded touchdowns in the fourth quarter, and with three minutes left in the game, after Steve Poor scored from the one, the Pirates were in a position to take the lead. They stopped PLU for two downs but a third down pass for a first down, really hurt the Lutes as time was precious.

An intercepted pass by Pacific Lutheran on its own ten yard line, killed a potential Whitworth score and PLU had again thwarted a Pirate drive.

The Pirate's Matthews threw his second touchdown pass of the game at 7:39 of the third quarter, as he hit Doug Long for seven yards. Whitworth failed on a two point conversion attempt, so PLU still led 15-13.

The Pirates had four desperation passes to end the game, all to Nab the ball with less than a minute on the clock. However, all the passes could net was an 11 yard gain to receiver Craig Collings.

The Simon Fraser Clanmen handled the Whitworth Pirates with relative ease 27-7, last September 27th in the Pine Bowl. Led by classy sophomore quarterback Rick Jones, the Canadian team amassed 19 first downs in the contest, Jones hit 20 of 39 passes for 232 yards with Luis Pasqualia and Maurico Butler catching six passes each.

WPU held the Pirate rushing game down considerably, as Whitworth managed only a total of six yards rushing. However, Diane Matthews did pass for 150 yards, as he hit on 11 of 27 aerials.

Volleyballers get first win

by Gigi Dennis

At 8 p.m., October 7th, at the fieldhouse, the Whitworth women's volleyball team defeated Spokane Falls Community College in their first competition of the season.

The varsity squad, made up of Jane Finsterwald, Nancy Haugen, Leno Kelley, Karen Lyle, Teresa Roberts and Sally Bowell, exhibited strong offensive and defensive play. After a cold start in the first game, which they lost to SFUCC 15-13, Whitworth came back to win the second 15-1, to decide the outcome of the match, a third game was played.

Spokane Falls goog an early lead, but the Whitworth team, behind the powerful blocking of Haugen and Bowell, caught up and soon led 12-5. The score evened up 13-13 and Kelley delivered two final serves to win the game 15-13, and thus the match. The win was attributed to the good setting of Lyle and Roberts and the many well placed spikes.

Spokane Falls Community College brought a junior varsity team, so a squad consisting of Sue Bouchet, Tessa Zachert, Beth Hillis, Mary Steele, Mary Stone and Linda Zengor played a match prior to the varsity scrimmage, at 7 p.m. The Whitworth team handedly won 15-13, 15-6.

Karen Lyle (ironically, a transfer student from Spokane Falls) said, "the crowd support was fantastic, knowing that they are backing you really helps." She also felt that the "team's unity with Christ was a definite asset."
Women's sports hit by cultural trends

by Chris Bauer

Women competing on the same team as men in collegiate athletics? It has happened at other colleges across the nation but not at Whitworth, at least not now anyway. I'm not saying I am against it or if it is done to happen but with current trends it may be a possibility in the future.

Women's athletics with men has been a growing issue for the past several years. Job discrimination and equal pay were major topics of controversy, and still are. But the women in America is slowly blending in and getting equal rights.

Sports are for everyone and now the culture of our world is demanding that women be a part of something men have been involved in for years. For example, professional baseball, playing on sports teams and having a career in the league.

Terry Graff has participated with the best in the world of sports. The recent history of the women's sports program at Whitworth shows the positive steps that are being taken. In 1970 women only participated in volleyball, basketball and tennis. They played in the Pine League which consisted of some schools in the surrounding area.

Since 1970, track, cross country and swimming have been added to the program, a new league the Inland Valley Conference has been formed and an increase in financial support has been substantial.

This year the women's volleyball, basketball and tennis will play Whitbank, Northwest Nazirine, College of Idaho and Gonzaga. Swimming cross country and track will compete in a league against competition, but in the Region 9 of the AIAW.

The most significant boost given the women has been the financial aid. Their operating budget is steadily increasing over the last three years and financial aid has doubled since last year.

"Women's equality with men has been added to the program, a new league the Inland Valley Conference has been formed and an increase in financial support has been substantial," added Borrevik.

Borrevik commented, "We are not being non-supportive of the men's programs, we still want it to be real, vital and active. It is our goal to have the best experience for all athletes."

Theoretically when a men's team travels to Caldwell, Idaho they will spend a certain amount of money for meals, motel and travel. When the same number of women makes similar trips they should be spending the same amount. There will have to be spending the night in the back of the van or all night trips just because they are a women's team.

Women's sports are slowly rising to the surface but I think it will be a long time before they are at the same level as men. There are changes going on and I think they are positive. We still are going to face difficulties as if there aren't some now. The male dominated sports world is complaining that their money is being swiped around. Where will they get support? In the future the problem might be: Can she play on the men's team? A problem the courts are already facing in little league.

Whitworth is keeping with the cultural trend, growth will continue and quality will increase, problems will arise and they will be solved but no matter what happens women will be competing and that's alright!"
Soccer club getting feet off ground

by Steve Weber

Soccer, the up and coming sport at Whitworth, is on its way. After a few problems at the beginning, things are working out well for the team. Now the only worry is the squad has to get back on the winning side.

The team, in its second year of existence, ran into the problem of where financial support was to come from. Everything is under control now though, since the school decided to support the team. What some members of the Whitworth Soccer Club really would like to see though, is for the school to take the team on as a varsity sport.

With that problem out of the way all the team has to do is concentrate on playing soccer. There are quite a few new players this year along with returning players from last year's team. Among those returning are Ted Kovel, Bob Davis, Clay Walker, Jerry Nnabu, Ken Eaker, Olu Pashley-Idde, Tim Locas, Steve Walker, Gerry Geobom, Brad Lund and the coach Francis Tagbo.

Tagbo, a long time soccer player from Nigeria, has a good knowledge of the game, which should help the squad this year. Last year Tagbo was elected team captain and also to the Northwest All-Star team. He, like many other players, is back on the winning side since the team has been playing the game.

The team has also taken on the Sandpoint Soccer Club easily defeating them 7-0. Jerry Nnabu starred in this game as he scored four of the seven Whitworth goals.

The first game of the season was against a Spokane prep school, St. George's. Whitworth played beautifully in this game won 5-0.

With eleven games left on the schedule, Whitworth has a long way to go to the championship. But close at hand is Oct. 11 and 12 when the club travels to Whitman on Saturday and then Whitman comes here on Sunday.

"Yes, Virginia, there is a Homecoming game"

By Linda Sharman

Two days after Whitman knocked Whitworth for fellowing next Saturday's Homecoming game, the Pirates are back in business. After scores of long distance phone calls from coast to coast looking for substitutes, seconded special funds to fly a team to Spokane and weighing the odds of playing an uncoached opponent, Whitworth has its Homecoming game back.

Whitworth officials announced late Wednesday that St. John's, University, Collegeville, Minn., the conference leader in the powerful Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference, has agreed to bring Campus football team, the Johnnies were conference champions last year, but now have two guards.

The process was a complicated one. Locating a team in the first place seemed impossible. After St. John's was contacted and agreed to consider playing, Campbell polled his team for their reaction to playing on short notice against an unknown, highly touted team. Their response was affirmative, which gave college officials the go-ahead to seriously pursue the matchup.

The hardest part, of course, was raising the money for plane fare. Whitworth officials said they received assistance from Whitman College, which decided to cancel due to heavy injuries to a thin squad toward the nearly $7,000 plane fare tab. In addition, a number of friends of the college from the inland Empire and beyond responded with donations toward the amount.

"I'm sure it is the same for St. John's," said Seely,: "I hope neither team is embarrassed by the lack of the usual scouting and preparation. I know their conference to be an outstanding one and would expect them to be the challenge of the season for us."

St. John's is an all-male Catholic university with an enrollment of 1,500. Their football team, the Johnnies, were conference champions last year, but suffered heavy graduation losses.

He said that the Bums people did not have Elston's experience or the political plant, explains security changeover.

Elston has raised his guards dealt with Whitworth through their downtown headquarters.

Another advantage of the new system is that the guards deal directly with the college. The Bums guards dealt with Whitworth through routine checks of the steam heating systems in dorms and classroom buildings. The guards also spend a lot of time just looking and unlocking doors. For example, classroom buildings must be locked and checked several times each evening for night school people.

Bob Elston, a prepaid security guard, also worked for Burns. He likes his job is about the same, but he feels that students are paying more attention to campus security. He said, "Parking is better and so are the heavy footed drivers."

As a result, the new force does. Elston explained that local laws require all security personnel to have private investigator licenses, but there are no other special requirements.

"I also said that the Burns people did not have the authority to give tickets to students on campus, but that the new force does. "I would rather just warn students than give them tickets," he said.

Elston's experience with the National Guard and with a riot squad helped him to get a job with Burns, and he worked for two years as a guard at Whitworth. Burns laid him off when Whitworth dropped their service. He applied to Whitworth and received a position on the new force.

Elston explained that local laws require all security personnel to have private investigator licenses, but there are no other special requirements.

He also said that the Burns people did not have the authority to give tickets to students on campus, but that the new force does. "I would rather just warn students than give them tickets," he said.

Along this line, Seely said, "We are only as good as each student on campus," and that "no program is effective unless we work together."
January term features five travel options

by Sally Mueller

Jan term doesn't have to mean a return to the Whitneyian campus the regular class. The college is offering five study tours for students who want to experience learning beyond the classroom.

Tours include two within the United States and three to foreign countries. There will be a tour stationed in San Francisco with Thomm Taverner of the music department, three weeks in Washington, D.C., with political science professor William Been, a London drama program with Albert Gundersen speech and theatre professor, a tour of Young Life with sociology professor Dan Hicks and Ronald Prace, sociology professor, and a trip of East Asia with Dan Stanford, political science professor.

The San Francisco trip will involve attending concerts at Berkeley and Stanford, performances of the San Francisco Symphony, and other area groups. The group will attend concerts with discussions before and after the performances. Students will also take in concerts of their own. This tour still has space available and is open to all students. The cost will be about $210 plus transportation. The group will spend one month in the San Francisco area.

Ben's has taken two groups to Washington, D.C. in past years as part of a course "Inside the System." The three-week trip includes sightseeing and meeting with government officials and their officers and their homes. The goal is to expose students to as much detail in the short length of time available. The cost of transportation and a special trip will be $500. Weekend trips to New York City and Williamsburg, Va. are planned.

"There are brochures from other colleges available and is open to all of the church. but this is not by church cause most college.

Whitworth's board. "There are trusts other area groups. The group will attend concerts on their own. This tour still has space available.

The biology trip, headed by Hicks, goes to Guatemala every other year. Students are required to complete a year on research they collect during the month. Hicks did graduate work in the tropics, so adds special expertise to the tour.

The East Asia tour is full and has already started having preliminary meetings. There are nineteen students on the six-week tour, which will look into the future of social and international relations in Hong Kong, Japan, and Korea. They will go to the national universities, and study under the guidance of their own professors. The tour will be held in the Orient. The group will have a talk with someone involved in the future of the country, and, it is a well-experienced tour leader.

Students will set out for Guatemalan intent on studying either sociology, primarily in the urban regions, or biology in the rural areas. The tour will include a visit to the president of Guatemala, the national university, and a national park. The group will travel by plane to Guatemala every other year. Students are required to complete a year on research they collect during the month. Hicks did graduate work in the tropics, so adds special expertise to the tour.

In addition to tours offered through Whitworth, there are brochures from other colleges which allow Whitworth students to take part in their programs. These can be obtained from Roland Winter in the registration office.

Board of trustees arrive for annual fall meet

by Kathy Peck

Have you heard? They got here yesterday. You must have seen them by now—now you, they come twice a year. Better be careful while they are here, you wouldn't want them to see us as we really are.

Who are they? The Board of Trustees, and they arrived yesterday for their annual fall trustees meeting. In an interview with David K. Winter, executive vice-president, The Whitworthian discussed the trustees and their relationship to the college, faculty and students. Winter stressed the importance of keeping the trustees as people and not thinking of them as a separate, all-powerful entity.

The trustees are the legal owners of the college and are ultimately responsible for it. They are liable in any lawsuits affecting the college.

The college's relationship with the Presbyterian Church is not one of legal ownership, but a "covenant relationship" which according to Winter, gives the college freedom to develop and a "stronger relationship with the church than any other Presbyterian college in the country." There are several trustees who are members of the church, but this is not by mandate, our board in self-purposing, Winter said this is a mandate, the church, because most have church-appointed boards.

Winter spoke highly of the personal quality of Whitworth's board. "There wouldn't be many colleges in the country with boards as strong as ours in terms of ability and alluteness." They are deeply involved with the college and know more about the college than other boards of most other colleges do." The responsibility of board members is a time commitment, because they do much more than meet twice yearly. The board set up the Whitworth Foundation, which deals with real estate and college. They recently hired a full-time person to work for the college in those areas. The college itself could never have hired a staff person to fill that job.

Albert Arend, who began his 51st year on the board of trustees, will be made a life member this year.

One example of the caliber of people serving on the board is Davis Weynheuser, chairman of the Student Life Committee. From Yacoma, he is one of the more influential members of the famous Weynheuser family. His reason on the board here is "an enormous time commitment for an obviously busy man." He is also on the boards of Fuller Theological Seminary and Young Life and he travels constantly on behalf of the three institutions he serves.

Winter credits him with an exceptional understanding of the process model of decision making, which operates on now. The board's Student Life Committee has to first approve the changeover from the old dorm system to the present one.

Another board member, Albert Arend, is beginning his fiftieth year on the board and will be confirmed as a life member this fall. His commitment to the college has been outstanding. During the Depression, he "almost single-handedly kept this college in operation" by bringing meat from the market to the college for students to eat.

There are 42 elected board members who serve three-year terms and then are up for re-election. There are also life members, whose number varies. Life members are trustees who have served long terms and who are always respected, so they are given life member status. There are five life members on the current board.

The board operates in several sub-committees, including the Executive Committee, Academic Affairs, Buildings and Grounds, Honorary Degrees, Development, Finance, Student Life and Christian Life. Issues before the board first go through committees, then are presented to the entire board for action. There is a faculty and student input on the committees.

Yesterday, the committees met, and today is the meeting of the entire board, which is usually a day for committees reports.

Asked about board/student relationships, Winter said, "Particularly at Whitworth, we need an informal relationship...we don't really know how to go about it."

In the past, there have been "Take a Trustee to Lunch" programs, where trustees dine with students at SAGA for lunch. Winter said in any case, trustees will eat with the students at least once, and this should be "an opportunity to share and develop relationships, not a gripe session.

Tim is the big problem in developing trustee/student relationships. The board meets are a three-day commitment which is difficult enough for some members to manage, and if it is lengthened so that social relationships can develop, it might make the three days involved expand to the point of impracticality.

Winter said that in the board's Student Life Committee, there is a good mix of students and board members, "at least in the most sensitive or critical area of student life, there's a good chance for relationships." There are several student members on this committee, so that the board members can get student input on the basic level.

If students see board meetings going on in dorm lounges, they should feel free to drop in and listen, said Winter, except if the board is in executive session.
Faculty, alum Bloxham views a changed Whitworth

by Lynn Becker

In what directions does Whitworth really point its students? Whitworth alum and English professor Laura Bloxham has a special perspective.

"Whitworth has always been dedicated to a humanistically centered education with a particular emphasis on Christian development. But where quality in the classroom was once the main concern, changes in the past years have been toward total development and the school's humanistic Christian concern has made classroom learning more relative to the entire learning process," she said in a recent interview.

Bloxham, who attended Whitworth from 1965 until 1969, was part of many of the conditions which prompted changes made in the last five years. Bloxham feels the questions asked by her graduating class had much effect on those changes, brought about by the new administration the year after she graduated.

Graduating from Whitworth in English, she attended graduate school at Washington State where she received her Masters degree and Ph.D. She taught English classes there during her six year stay. She has returned to Whitworth as an assistant English professor, replacing Leonard Oakland during his year long sabbatical. She is teaching Freshman writing, Introduction to Literature, and Advanced English Writing.

While attending Whitworth, she was deeply involved in politics and student government. Recalling her participation as a draft counselor during 1968 when draft resistance was at its peak, Bloxham recalls, "All of us on the counseling staff had been staunch, but we wanted information alternatives provided for everyone. The program was well worth it, as the war came closer to the students and we began to lose friends and relatives.

Bloxham is also very much involved in women's concerns. She is attending the Women Concerned moments on campus and has spent much time in the past speaking at women's conferences.

"I see a need for Whitworth women, especially fresh and sophomore, to be more aware of what they can do with themselves. I also see a lot of junior and senior women making decisions towards goals that weren't considered when I was a student."

She is interested in designing a summer workshop with returning women who could share their perspective on where Whitworth has brought them and where they are as women today. Bloxham stated that there are presently 30 schools with women's studies programs ranging from loose courses to graduate study.

"I would like to see Women's Studies as an area of concentration here at Whitworth, and feel that more coordination is needed to make this possible," she stated.

Expressing her views on the overall changes in student attitudes over the years, Bloxham says, "Students are now returning to the attitudes of the fifties in terms of internal growth. They see themselves more as individuals than as a generation seeking answers."

Bloxham feels that she is in the right place to help develop this attitude. "In the English field, people are driven to share books and ideas more than in any other field."

It has been six years since Bloxham has been a part of Whitworth and she feels that the changes have enabled her to appreciate the school much more. "I don't think I could have returned to teach at Whitworth if I hadn't maintained its high academic standards and if students were still involved in the same petty concerns."

Where is the college going? "To me, the offfcampus requirement and the recruitment of outside Forum speakers indicate the necessity for a humanistic approach to the outside world. "Bloxham sees Whitworth making a bigger effort to be an integral part of society, realizing that each individual decision that one makes effects someone else.

Bloxham has remained politically concerned, having recently been involved in the African Drought Relief Fund and support programs for Black colleges. "Through the years, I haven't lost my political idealism but I'm best able to interact with people as individuals and in the classroom, I try to be an example of what I believe in."

Laura Bloxham will be using her experience and interest in women's studies to teach a Jan Term course entitled, "British Women Writers."

English professor and alumna Laura Bloxham was campus activist.
FRISBEE FRENZY GRIPS PSYCHIATRIST

(CPS)- What is likely to be the definitive work on the frisbee has been compiled by a Grove, CA practicing psychiatrist.

In a 221-page treatise, Dr. Stancll Johnson explores the history of the saucer, as well as frisbee aerodynamics, turbulence in flight and medical problems for frisbee players.

Johnson's interest in the frisbee goes beyond the book, however. He has written Forest Lawn Memorial Parks and Mortuaries requesting that upon death, his body be cremated and mixed with the finest grade raw industrial polyethylene to make 25 high-quality, professional model frisbees.

Frisbee, however, has only agreed to the cremation.

BLUE JEAN BLUES

(CPS)-Blue Jean aficionados are paying more at the market these days. In the past year, the price of a pair of Levi's has doubled.

Increased consumer demand for blue jeans has created a shortage of cotton, the major ingredient in denim, the Levi Strauss company reports. And the shortage of cotton, aided by inflation, has jacked up the cost of blue jeans.

Company officials don't anticipate that a higher price tag will keep customers away. "There's no end in sight," said one Levi Strauss employee, referring to the sales potential of blue jeans.

The jean look is so popular that Levi Strauss has expanded its sportswear line to include jumpers, skirts, trenches, bathing suits, and more recently—denim tuxedos.

ON CAMPUS

ASWC SETS QUESTIONING MEETING

An informative meeting on student government will be held on October 27, 1975 at 7:30 in the Hep Chambers. The purpose of this meeting is to give students an opportunity to ask questions about student government operations. The questions will be decided by the ASWC exec's and all books will be open for student inspection.

This type of meeting will be held monthly and it is hoped that they will clear up any questions the students may have.

WOMEN IN MINISTRY SEMINAR SCHEDULED

Dorothy Donnelly, C.S.J., will be visiting Whitworth's campus Tuesday, Oct. 30, speaking on the future of women in the ministry.

Donnelly holds a M.A. and a Ph. D. from Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C. and a T. D. from the Pacific School of Religion at the Graduate Theological Union, (G.T.U.) Berkeley. She is a full time member of the faculty of the Jesuit School of Theology. She has authored books in the area of leadership training and human communication. Her current writings deal with team ministry and prison ministry.

Donnelly will be speaking on campus all day. Her schedule will be available through the Chaplain's office.

STUDY REPORTS FEW GAINS FOR WOMEN FACULTY MEMBERS

(CPS)- While the proportion of women on college and university faculties across the country has leched up over the last six years, their professional status has remained much the same—significantly below that of their male colleagues.

Recent findings were contained in a recent survey of UC faculty members prepared by Everett Ladd and Seymour Lipset for the Chronicle of Higher Education.

The two researchers noted that the proportion of women faculty members has increased from 19% to 21% since 1969, with women occupying nearly one third of the faculty positions held by those under 30 years old.

Nonetheless, Ladd and Lipset reported that women faculty members:

—spend more time teaching than men: earn less than men; —publish less, exhibit less interest in research and receive less support for research than men;
—show a striking pattern of segregation in terms of their rank, where they teach and what they teach.

"By all objective measures," the researchers concluded, "the female professorate is a deprived group, vis-a-vis male academics.

Study reports few gains for women faculty members.

FLASHER!!! Early Friday morning as the Whitworthian was being put to bed, staff artist Randy Mohr was defending himself from exaco-knife attack by a crazed editor. In course of said defense, he expended a large garbage can over his head.

Garbage fell profusely. Fortunately, so did the melted chocolate milkshake, the remains of which were quietly reposing on the bottom of the can.

Mohr's comment as he trudged dripping from the room: "Gawd, I feelucky."
Guest editorial: Activism remembered

by Dr. G. William Benz

My first experience in college teaching was during the sixties, a time of great excitement and frustration on most college campuses. To my mind, the "student movement" of these years had a profound and positive impact that qualitatively has affected our society, such as women and minority liberation, reform in higher education, reaction to the Vietnam war, and the ecology movement, to name a few.

I'll grant the negative consequences of the student activist quite readily. I know that there was too much of a propensity for violence, irresponsibility, and even self-righteous attitudes toward the "establishment" at large. But a point needs to be stressed. Vietnam, as the student activist movement, did not become large until the late sixties. The students had become involved. They cared and in their involvement they reflected all the same things. Large numbers of students weren't content just to philosophize about the issues, or exchange abstract ideas.

Many students went beyond these dimensions, unfortunately, sometimes in place of them, to arrive at a very important conclusion that amounted to a revelation of sorts: ideas have, or at least are, consequences. These consequences are not only secondarily beginning to turn for others making commitments and becoming involved in something outside of their own microcosms.

For some, it was merely a fad, the "in" thing. For a few, it was a way of escaping their pressures. Many didn't respond at all. But for many others, and a rather sizable number at that, the turn to social and political activism was because they could by their actions not only demonstrate their convictions but could in fact make a difference - involvement could help to bring about the consequences desired.

I don't know all the reasons why that activism is no longer with us, I suppose in some ways it is still but as a part shadow of its former self. But, to the relief of most college faculties and administrators, the students have returned to their former rather realistic and passive selves. I don't miss the heavily charged atmosphere of crises, tension, and confrontation that bothered most of the members of the academic community during these years - it certainly was not conducive to great amounts of academic freedom.

However, for me, recalling those days of the sixties still evokes warm memories. The union of示范itors, both students and faculty, as they wrestled with issues from the perspectives of involvement, and the willingness to take risks for principles - all gave college a new and exciting dimension that it would like to see again.

Surely I could do more than I am to encourage this new involvement on the Whitworth campus. Students should experience what a caring activism and involvement in the issues of our global society can do to give meaning to the ideas and conceptual framework they are learning about in college.

The many on this campus that profess a Christian faith should see this as a necessary dimension of that commitment. But everyone should see it as a responsibility of our humanity. We live in a world that desperately needs caring, thoughtful and wise men and women who are willing to put it on the line for what they believe. To partake of a rather famous advocate of revolution - the point is not to talk about the world, but rather to change it!

I am Randy Kerston, the one who introduced the sewage resolution last week. Yes, it was my baby. Doing an area of concentration in Environmental Science and Urbanism, I have come to feel that we are not doing our job on the side of the Whitworthian, and the ignorance of the student body probably, probably, probably, probably, to that famous Whitworth apathy. (See last week letter to the editor.)

To the editor,

I guess that it is normal for the aggressive people on this campus to be stepped on by those few who run the political scene at Whitworth. My case is against considering such people as the "establishment" on the side of the Whitworthian, and the ignorance of the student body probably, probably, probably, probably, to that famous Whitworth apathy. (See last week letter to the editor.)

Well the resolution was finally passed in an amended form which will be included in the environmental impact statement. This is what I mean by taking a stand.

I am a junior majoring in Environmental Science and Urbanism, and I have come to understand that the issues of pollution and its impact on the environment are critical.

Let's make a deal

by Cynthia Reynolds

Let's make a deal.

It's lucky for you, you passed this way today. I traded you this lovely rock for that beef stew you're having for dinner.

Oh, well, I'll give you this precious leaf pressed under the rock for some of the meat. Or, I could offer you a bread, um, uh, condiments. It needs only a few repairs, some new pockets, the elec­ tric oven, a good washing. I have had it a long time, and the lining gave up quite awhile ago but for a few potatoes! Some gravy! Goodbye.

Here comes someone. Maybe for my bottles—Hallo! This is a lucky break for you. I have here some valuable bottles. I'm saving some for a special customer—but worthless! Oh, no! And all I ask is some fresh water and a piece of bread. I—no don't!

Hey you! Wanna trade a childhood of cock­ roaches and poverty for a life of a little vision, for one yes, for one bite of something real.

Listen, you people! I have something to give. Something! Those broken pieces of my life I call us to fight the good fight. He's called us to be successful. He's called us to be faithful.

One of God's faithful in the world hunger situation is Stanley Mooneyham, president of World Vision, Inc. and the second Focus Days' speaker. World Vision is an international humanitarian relief agency. Mooneyham believes in tackling the world hunger problem on a broad front. Therefore, World Vision has long-term aid programs, ongoing educational programs and vocational training, as well as sudden disaster relief.

Although World Vision is a practical service agency, political stress still exists in its involvement in third world countries.

"If you put in a well (in an underdeveloped country), that doesn't change governmental structure. World Vision has decided, however, to support people rather than revolutionary causes," says Mooneyham. "It was a difficult decision for the agency to arrive at. "It takes longer this way. But as the standard of living is raised they (the people in underdeveloped countries) will become agents of change in their society."

In American society, which Mooneyham described as a "throw-away society", the standard of living needs to be challenged.

"If managed properly both human resources and natural resources in this country could be utilized to changed the world. This problem of hunger is not God's judgement. It's our misuse."

In his personal life, Mooneyham struggles with music. "My family has made some cut­ back, and changes, but we've still got a long way to go," he feels cutbacks of consumption should be gradual rather than immediate. A change of attitude should come first, then action. "Attitudes are much more important and longer lasting than fat solutions," he says.

These attitudes must serve as the spring­ board to action. "If words were edible the hungry would be fed," declared Mooneyham at Thursday's Forum. "The books, reports, and articles written are extensive." But at some point action on these words must be taken.

Mooneyham gave Whitworth students seven considerations for action. Among them were increased food production in hungry nations and control of population. Mooneyham encourages emergency relief, however, for the third world family plight. With no social security benefits a couple must have at least one son to take care of them in their old age. A high infant mortality rate exists and is compensated for by a family having five or six children to insure three or four making it to adulthood.

One of Mooneyham's considerations involves the government. He is in favor of a food policy being established internationally. Senator Mark Hatfield (Or.) is sponsoring a current congres­ sional resolution on the "right to food" issue. Students are urged to write U.S. Senate, Washing­ ton, D.C. 20510 to support this resolution.

Emergency relief should continue, urges Mooneyham. But awareness levels should be raised on a long term basis. "Poverty is not a short-term situation." Emergency relief should continue, urges Mooneyham. But awareness levels should be raised on a long term basis. "Poverty is not a short-term situation."

While much of the world is starving, America can give their time and money on diets and overseas. Mooneyham stresses adjusting our lifestyles to a more modest level. "Ask yourself, 'Are you supporting a famine by your lifestyle?'" offers Mooneyham.

Finally, he calls for practicing Christian compassion. "Motivation must be more than humanitarian, it must be because of Christ's love."

Bob Larson, journalist for World Vision, who accompanied Mooneyham to Whitworth agrees that Christ's love should make us want to reach out to a starving person with food and compassion. But the choice is ours, "It's a conscious choice not to be involved," says Larson.

Getting involved can constitute a variety of actions. Students are urged to contact Joe Novocom, chaplain's assistant, if they have made the choice for action against world hunger.

World hunger problem brought to campus

by Cynthia Reynolds

Most of us have seen the pictures of emaci­ gated children with bloated stomachs and mothers with bone-dry breasts holding endless babies. Most of us have turned the page. It isn't that we aren't affected by the pictures. It's just that to become emotionally involved in a picture helps no one. We need to know more. This fall's Focus Days on hunger gave us more.

Rev. John Conner, campus minister at the Oregon State University, began the informal week with a "Simulation Experience." At this "banquet" Conner's objective was to demon­ strate the unbalanced distribution of animal pro­ tein in the world. Assisting Conner and offering another perspective was William Bell, a ranch owner.

"The world is in critical condition," says Conner soberly. "But," he adds smiling, "I still have hope. Look how much change has occurred in our world so far on important issues like women's roles."

Slow progress and temporary setbacks do not deter Conner. "God has called us to win the war. He's called us to fight the good fight. He's called us to be successful. He's called us to be faithful."

One of God's faithful in the world hunger situation is Stanley Mooneyham, president of World Vision, Inc. and the second Focus Days' speaker. World Vision is an international humanitarian relief agency. Mooneyham believes in tackling the world hunger problem on a broad front. Therefore, World Vision has long-term aid programs, ongoing educational programs and vocational training, as well as sudden disaster relief.

Although World Vision is a practical service agency, political stress still exists in its involvement in third world countries.

"If you put in a well (in an underdeveloped country), that doesn't change governmental structure. World Vision has decided, however, to support people rather than revolutionary causes," says Mooneyham. "It was a difficult decision for the agency to arrive at. "It takes longer this way. But as the standard of living is raised they (the people in underdeveloped countries) will become agents of change in their society."

In American society, which Mooneyham described as a "throw-away society", the standard of living needs to be challenged.

"If managed properly both human resources and natural resources in this country could be utilized to changed the world. This problem of hunger is not God's judgement. It's our misuse."

In his personal life, Mooneyham struggles with music. "My family has made some cut­ back, and changes, but we've still got a long way to go," he feels cutbacks of consumption should be gradual rather than immediate. A change of attitude should come first, then action. "Attitudes are much more important and longer lasting than fat solutions," he says.

These attitudes must serve as the spring­ board to action. "If words were edible the hungry would be fed," declared Mooneyham at Thursday's Forum. "The books, reports, and articles written are extensive." But at some point action on these words must be taken.
Simulation dinner illustrates world food inequities

by Anna Hollifield

As part of the World Hunger Focus days on campus last week, John Conner, minister of higher education at Oregon State University, directed "Hunger dinner," in which 160 people participated.

Participants randomly drew cards indicating at which continent's table they would sit.

But as the other continents continually asked to address North America, it was observed that the people seated at the American table looked more like Christians. Chaplain Ron White, who was seated at the table described in the feeling he had, "I felt they were isolated even though we were in the center of the room. I felt as though I had to keep looking over my shoulder. We were the only rich and I felt threatened."

Another member of the American table commented on the while trading with the poorer countries, "Although we had plenty of food ourselves," she said, "we weren't concerned with how much we could keep for ourselves."

Finally Conner called a halt to the trading and with ultralight food was given to the people. Dinner consisted of jaloynay, salami, cold roast beef, lettuce and potato salad. Surprisingly, it was noticed that at the Asian table, everyone was extremely careful not to take more than their fair share of the food. This was a fact that it was a grab-what-you want-system.

But despite the sharing and trading, there was still not enough food to satisfy all 65 members of the Asian table. The ambassador of the Asian table stated that Asia would kidnap the North American ambassador. Upon her came McMillan to bring the center of the Asian tables and gagged.

Negotiations then opened with a substitute ambassador for North America. Much to the irritation of the Asian ambassador, this ambassador sat quietly in the back of the room in an effort to eat until the food was negotiated away. After several offers, Asia agreed to return the North American ambassador in return for two full plates.

A short time later, the Asian table was approached, by North America in the persons of: 1. A man of the mutual desire to have free food; to give the condition that Asia realized that "the reason you're poor is because you don't work."

This caused a miniature war in Asia as half the people wanted to accept the food, while the other half wanted to return it under those conditions. The place was removed and "everyone settled down again."

Soon after this the American ambassador visited Asia and told them to return to the entire room that the European Christians were donating two plates of food to Asia. Asia cheered them loudly.

Later we learned that the European ambassador had been very much opposed to giving the food away, "I was really upset with the European Christians," he said, "I learned how much each person would get and then I realized they would have to cancel the World Vision programs. But when it came time to give it, it was very important for me to march along beside them and loudly proclaim our generosity to the world so that I could use it for political leverage."

Not to be outdone on the Christian theme, Ron White appeared in Asia again to distribute napkins with the words "God loves you" written on them.

This caused an outburst among the Asians, The hypocrisy of giving starving people religion while they were famished was overwhelming. The worst part, was that the realization that America used this approach all the time with religious political systems and social structures.

But while America was distributing its religious tracts to Asia, in a move of pure poetic justice, an African table wondered over and stole one of America's pies. Asia cheered Africa.

The rest of the dinner was peaceful, it was one of the most memorable dinners that emotions began to rise again. The following are some comments made at this time:

One person who was seated at the European table mentioned that "even though Europe had plenty for our needs, we felt that North America had the responsibility to feed Europe." Another member of the American table commented, "I would not feel the least bit guilty about stealing North America's pie, because they had so much."

These reactions gave us insight into the feelings and actions of things that really do occur in the third world. And another comment, made by the African ambassador, "We too are the political man for the people of the world. In speaking of his reaction to the pie stealing incident he said, "I didn't want my people to steal the pie, but they did it anyway. After all the negotiations I was afraid to do something 'bad.' I was too committed to deadlines."

The dinner gave participants a new insight into world problems. They got a view of world hunger policy, that did not come across over and influence of North America. No doubt it will be a long time before it is forgotten.

Alumni compare Whitworth then and now

by Pauline Gima

You may find it fascinating to sit on the steps of McMillan, the oldest building on campus, you begin to wonder about all the different people that must have passed that in years. What memories of people, events, and feelings would sit, if one returning were to gaze at old building today? And what would he feel about the changes that have taken place?

"It takes a totally different understanding of what it was like then," he explained, "There was an intimacy and friendship in a Christian environment in which we could grow. While the thing that I really remember about Whitworth is, I knew every kid on the campus. I made lasting friends and we get together now there is still there is a strong emotional and spiritual tie with the college."

"There appears to be a general agreement among alumni, that it was the people at Whitworth, who really made the campus, that shaped the kind of impact the college had on them," Michael Hussey, class of '68 and now assistant principal of Paul Valley Junior High, pointed out by saying, "The outstanding aspect of the college was its faculty. You don't often hear a lot since they were all so good. They were dedicated people, especially with the kind of pay they got."

Rodkey mentions that during those troubled years in the 40's "many faculty went months without pay."

"During the years that Hussey attended Whitworth, chapel was held in Ballard, at which people had an assigned seat. He reflects, "At that time it was good, I remember going to Ballard until I got out. There were times I wish I had gone to a state school since Whitworth didn't allow dancing. But if I could always go somewhere else. The days at Whitworth were some of the more wonderful times of my life."

Whitworth, over the years, has grown in size from 10 students in 1947, 380 in 1955 to 1,400 today. While with such a problem of retaining a close community, such as one that Rodkey experienced, became more difficult to maintain. Many changes came with less structure, more diversity, and an emphasis on decision making process.

Hussey sees the changes at Whitworth as being for the better, since the emphasis that it shouldn't lose its Christian influence. "I got a real fine educations at Whitworth," he relates, "but I excel at the times. The curriculum must fit the times."

As an educator, Hussey is concerned with the kind of teachers that Whitworth has today. He impresses with students coming out of Whitworth. They seem to have a real breadth of understanding and concern for humanity.

Rodkey attributes much of the changes at Whitworth to the change in the voting age, "At the time I went to college students couldn't vote and mom and dad paid all. There was more pressure by parents toward the college to control campus life. The change of the voting age has drastically changed this and Whitworth has reckoned with that fact."

Other alumni have agreed with Rodkey and Hussey in their positive response to what Whitworth is doing today. Dr. Arnold Stedman, class of '55 and professor at Eastern Oregon State College, responded, "It's fantastic, because with the movement of changing times we must help students be more sensitive. Dorm decisions are good because that's what they have to do in life."

However, changes always bring about mixed feelings. Mark Sladem, class of '71 and now a teacher at Meld Middle School, relates what the situation was like during those fascinating years, and the doubts that arose. "The Vietnam war was a big issue then. There was a lot of guilt. They were really searching, I know a lot of alumni who gave up their Christian faith. But I didn't want to be others that makes me feel stupid."

Sladem feels that his experiences at Whitworth were good for him at the time, but he is concerned about what he feels is the secularization of the school. "I came to Whitworth because it was a Christian college. However, I felt that there were too much emphasis on learning to solve problems through courses without using Christ as the center."

He added, "Whitworth is going to have to take a stand so that the college knows this is a Christian college first and then a liberal arts college." He also felt that there was a need for more fundamental Christian truths to deal with the world.

Today we as we pass the steps of McMillan we take us with us the faces of people. It is here, it is the things that will remember and cherish the most. Those alumni that will be celebrating homecoming with us will probably agree, "It was the people and the times we laughed and cried together, that have and always will stay with me."
Comic Jimmy Walker has own identity; not ‘J.J.’

by Kathy Peck

Many people expected ‘KID DYN-O-MITE!!!’ last Thursday, when Jimmy Walker of television’s ‘Good Times’ was supposed on stage in Whit- cow’s Cowles Auditorium. Instead they got an adult comedian, and later, in a press conference, a quiet, mature Jimmy Walker. Expectations of the comedian have been set by a problem he faces everywhere. ‘To a lot of people, I would be a boring person in person, because they are so used to seeing.’ ‘J.J.’ this. ‘Even in my stage thing, it may be a little heavy than what people are used to seeing.’

‘the humor I try to do is clean, original and funny.’

Describing his comedy as ‘adult’ and ‘mature’ doesn’t mean off-color. Talking about how he started his comedy he said, ‘The humor I try to do is clean, original and funny. Those are my pre-requisites for anything.’

After the show, he answered questions about everything from show business to education to politics. Thirty-odd people, mostly Whitworth students, gathered in his hotel room to listen as he riffed about the fifth or sixth time. ‘This gets show gathering is something he likes to do after every show. ‘I like to rap with the people, see what you have to say.’

Walker rejects the Hollywood social scene. ‘I don’t think the whole party thing is bull,- shit. It’s the same phony people—the people that four or five years ago said you weren’t shit, those are the cats that are sayin’ you’re terrific right now. I never had any real desire to go to parties because it’s all bullshit, man. I like to stay home. Walker grew up in the southern Bronx and agreed that this may have given him a special perspective on the Hollywood lifestyle.

Jodaphonic continues work on copy

I sang as I scrubbed. After I washed and scrubbed, I went over and around and under the cabinets to get a warm burst of clear sun on my face. (O.K., so I’m romantic. Somebody has to be, I don’t want to miss these things. There is still time to be romantic in. There is our garden, outside the copy that requires hours of work by someone who loved it. That’s romanticism, isn’t it?)

One night around midnight I drove state’s camper out to the Whitworth dump. There was country western drawl on the radio. I cracked up as I thought about how strange this was—out looking for a couch that needed recycling. A copy couch, whatever that was. Once I got the couch in, I could hang the pictures and I’d be finished.

I saw a couch. Turned upside down and backwards, half covered by a big door, climbed the junk and rolled the couch up the hill. I must’ve been hunched over like that, as it looked much bigger than the couch than it did in that pile, it’s a Big couch. No mustard, but under two quilts, no one has noticed how long they are sitting. While they are sitting, they forget that they are sitting in an old box, because the copy doesn’t smell anymore.

My friends were so patient. We had been up to the Whitworth dump. There was country western drawl on the radio. I cracked up as I thought about how strange this was—out looking for a couch that needed recycling. A copy couch, whatever that was. Once I got the couch in, I could hang the pictures and I’d be finished.

For no friend, who knows me well, ever had the heart to say that my plans are too far fetched. That includes my family as well. Mom’s chuggin’ train always made it up and over.

Why try to put the brakes on someone’s dreams? We are all alike people of such good change. Someday soon I hope to see the West from a saddle. And maybe someday my copy will be a cabin. No matter what I do, I walk through any door with optimism, I can.”

The sun’s up now. It’s a low 35 degrees; and I’m sitting out by the side of my friend. My legs are cold, but I feel good or terrific or something. Finding a word to express a mood is often difficult.

And morning will always come to me this way, if I come up to open my foots with the brake.

Academic Affairs waives Core 350 requirement again

by Ricardo Miller

Of all the classes offered here, the Core Program shows off Whitworth to its best advantage. Combining the basics of religion, philosophy and science into three different classes, it has been touted as the best courses that could be taught at any college. But now, because of affecting Core 350, the whole program may go through some sweeping changes.

All three Core classes used to be required courses, but for the second year in a row, the Academic Affairs Council has waived Core 350 for juniors and seniors. So, not only will the class of '76-'77 not need it to graduate, but also the class of '76-'77.

The main problem with Core 350 is finding enough teachers to staff it. Some professors would rather stick to what they know best and not go outside their field to teach anything else, much less a difficult course like Core. Professors are a real battle, too. Those who are willing to take the challenge don't have the time to detract from their regular courses, and there is not enough money to hire any people to lighten their load.

There are also problems concerning the structure of the 350 course itself. The question is if it should be a straight science course or include some religion or philosophy or both. An argument against this is that it would be hard to pinpoint the main objective of the course. And of course, different professors have different ways of teaching, and may conflict on the course focus. The teaching staff has already gone through some changes. It started out with five professors from five different departments, but has now dwindled down to only one professor, Dr. Hicks, who is the whole staff. Presently, he teaches Core 350 as a night course.

There are a number of different routes that the Core program could take. The whole program would have to be restructured. One idea is squeezing 350 into the other two Core classes. Another idea is to add one other class on that way there would be Core 150, 250, 350, and 450, all required courses.

But nothing can happen until a committee is set up to deal with the problem. Duncan Ferguson, academic dean, will have to assign a 350 task force, made up of students, faculty and administration. Student Alex McIntosh, a member of the Academic Affairs Council, stressed the need for student involvement in the program. "If a student wants to be on the task force, he or she should first see Dr. DewPree, and then go see Duncan." Alex also noted that without this show of interest from students, there will be no task force, and the whole program will start all over again.

Whatever happens, there's no question of Core 350 simply being dropped from the class schedule. Each course is divided into what Dr. Hicks called the three major areas of life: Core 150-Religion, Core 250-Philosophy, Core 350-Science. Without 350, the other two are incomplete. "Living in a technically dominated society without some understanding about how science affects daily life is a terrible mistake." And that's why we really need Core 350.

Soccer consists of eleven players on one team trying to put a ball through a goal. This is the reason the Whitworth Soccer Club has it's rough spots.

The fact that it takes eleven players is a problem for the team. Last Sunday, Whitworth was scheduled to travel to Pullman and play Wsu but, only ten players were willing to go. The team had to forfeit the game putting their standing in the league at one win, four losses.

At a meeting last Monday, called to discuss the current situation of the team, many players expressed views that there is no discipline or organization in the club. Some members were ready to end the season now, others felt it would be worthwhile to continue for the rest of the season. After discussing the problem for about an hour the team decided to try to re-organize the club.

Prances Ta'gbo, player-coach, said that he didn't have the time or money it takes to lead the team. Because of this the team devised a new way of running the team. The club appointed Tim Lucas as General Manager, who would take care of all business matters. Clayton Walkes was chosen team captain and is in charge of running the team in practice and in games.

Ta'gbo stated that his team puts in 15 to 16 hours a week between the club and the league, instead of all of these duties.

Women’s sports

The women’s volleyball team will meet Northwest Nazarene at 10:30 tomorrow morning in the fieldhouse. Whitworth’s overall record is 3-1, but in their conference record it is 1-0.

The teams last match was on Tuesday against Washington State University in Graves gym. Whitworth showed great team work leading in the first game at 15-11, but a series of scoreless closed the game to 16-14 with WSU the victor. The second game was dominated by WSU with a final score of 10-2.

Tomorrow, the Whitworth campus will be the scene of the Whitworth Invitational cross country meet. The high school competition will begin at 10 a.m. with the colleges following at 11:30. There are nine high school teams entered and eight colleges.

The past two weekends have some high moments and some low for the club. Two weeks ago when they played Whitman on both Saturday and Sunday, the team looked like a different team from day to day. On Saturday, Whitman the team never got warmed up and ended up losing three to two. The next day Whitman came to Whitworth. The club passed the ball much better and whipped Whitman, winning four to one.

Last weekend Whitworth hosted the University of Idaho on Saturday and then were to travel to WSU on Sunday, but forfeited. The game on Saturday was a disaster for Whitworth, they lost two to one. There was no organization between the players. As the player-coach of the University of Idaho put it, “You guys have really good potential, but there is just no discipline.”

According to many members of the club, the season from now on is going to be different. Organization and discipline are going to be stressed with a goal of having a good time.

Entrants will be Flathead Valley Club of Kalispell, Montana; Northern Idaho, Seattle University, Spokane Community College. University of Puget Sound, Western Washington, and Whitworth.

The Whitworth cross country team will be going to Kailua, Montana to the University of Idaho and to Green Lake Park in Seattle on November 20th. To the Razorbacks, sponsored by Seattle Pacific.

The women’s team has had three meets and their coach, Peggy Warren, feels they’ve been doing very well, “but that there’s always room for improvement.”

Due to minor injuries and the members varied schedules, there are problems with training hours. Warren feels her top runners, Cindy Chone, Janice Dore and Jill Straty are improving right on schedule.

The women’s basketball team will meet Northwest Nazarene on November 14th. Whitworth’s overall record is 4-1, with a conference record of 3-1.
Intramural activities increase, meet tomorrow

by Mike Reporich

In men's intramural football, South Warren continued its winning ways by beating Alder 4-0. Brad Strappage ran for one touchdown and passed for one second one.

Goodsell and Carlson played a hard fought game and ended up in a tie. Neither team was able to score so the outcome was determined on overtime.

Mark Jensen scored twice to lead Stewart over McMillan B 4-0. Village beat McMillan A 5-0.

In the girl's intramural football, West Warren remained undefeated by beating South Warren 8-0. Judy Senter scored to Sally Bowdell for the only score after the ball game behind the leader by beating Ballard 2-0.

Washington scored five touchdowns, in their game against East. They gave them their second win of the year. Ballard in an Monday afternoon game scored the only touchdowns of the day to defeat Jenkins 2-0.

Cross country is scheduled for tomorrow, with the men starting at 9:00 and the women at 9:30. The race consists of five miles. The men running a two mile course and the women one mile. Prizes will be awarded to the top three individual winners as well as the top three teams.

Tim Eaton won the individual championship and Cross country is scheduled for tomorrow, with the men starting at 9:00 and the women at 9:30. The race consists of five miles. The men running a two mile course and the women one mile. Prizes will be awarded to the top three individual winners as well as the top three teams.

Eaton finished the course in 2 hrs. 15 min. and was followed by Steve Crabb in 2nd at 2 hrs. 20 min. and Mike Wilczek in 3rd at 2 hrs. 30 min. Carlson was followed by Alder in 2nd, Stewart in 3rd, and Washington in 4th in the team championship. Prizes were given to the top three individual finishes and to the top team.

Other activities

Men's and women's; singles, doubles, and mixed doubles badminton begins today in the gym. Tournament bridge will also get underway today with participants selecting the time and place to play. A schedule for the badminton and bridge match-ups will be pinned up in the intramural office located in the gym or from your intramural representative.

The intramural tennis consisting of men's advanced singles, intermediate singles, novice singles, advance doubles, intermediate doubles, and women's novice singles and intermediate singles will finish their semifinal matches today and tomorrow, with the finals being held Sunday.

The intramural golf tournament, held at Wandermore golf course on Sunday October 15th, was won by Keith McMillen with a net score of 72. Bill DPont placed second with a 72 and was followed by Bob Putman in third with a 76, with Goodsell winning the team championship.

The individual winner was determined by the blind bogey system. After everyone had tee'd off, a man scored a 70 and was chosen and the person with the net score closest to it won. In this case the blind bogey was 74.

Symposium focuses on athletic values

by Susan Park

A series of lectures and discussions focusing on the role of athletics began here Tuesday as part of the Symposium. The first lecture of the Symposium is to investigate the values in intercollegiate athletics in liberal arts colleges. This week we're focusing on all colleges in general. Next week will be specifically stressed on Whitworth alone.

Borrevich believes this is going to take Whitworth's good athletic program and make it even better. "Sometimes the athletic department is isolated from the campus. It's a part of it but it's a part of the rest of the college."

These meetings are giving Whitworth students an opportunity to express different views and opinions about athletics at Whitworth and at other colleges. The Tuesday and Thursday Forum speakers were chosen to present a variety of different views and issues in athletics.

Rev. Donn Mooonaw started things off Tuesday. He left many students eager to get more deeply involved in this program. He's excited about life, and held people's interest with his enthusiasm. His audience appeared anxious to hear what he had to say and was soon captivated by his concern for athletics.

The greatest experiences in Mooonaw's life have been through competitive sports. He realizes that there's a good side and a bad side to competition. He loves good and is thankful for the things he's been able to learn through sports.

"The bad thing about competitive sports is that the serious athlete tends to put too much stress on the game. He's going to forget that he's just playing the game for enjoyment. He's life is greatly affected by this halo of competition. He begins to base his self-worth on whether he wins or loses."

"As an individual on a worldly basis, he doesn't want to show any sign of weakness or falling. He needs no one. He feels he can make it alone.""Moomaw thinks that people get so involved in the competitiveness of the game that they have nothing to live for but the game. You can go overboard and destroy the purpose."

"He's saying competition can either make you or break you.

Moomaw thinks "It's beautiful when an athlete will put out 100%, but there's no need to stand the pain and still give it more. It gives a person a great sense of pride. He's saying the athlete does not have to perform for the proud spectator cheering for victory. It brings all walks of men closer together."

"The spectatorial attitudes contribute a lot to the game. Some of the conversations spoken by some of the fans in the stands is pure garbage. It's not right!" No one has any right to sit there and pass judgement on everyone. We, as parents, need to develop a positive attitude about the game, just as the athletes do. Athletics need good fan support and positive attitudes can relieve a lot of tension.

"Another thing that needs to be banned is the term 'lock' used in reference to a woman athlete. Women are doing great in sports and should continue to demand equal rights."

"Bea Gorson (Indiana University women's basketball coach) agrees with Moomaw. "Competitive athletics help by bringing people together."

Moomaw hopes to see scholarships given equally, instead of males getting the larger ones.

"Dea Gorson (Indiana University women's basketball coach) agrees with Moomaw. "Competitive athletics help by bringing people together."

Moomaw believes that some athletes get so involved in the competitiveness of the game that they have nothing to live for but the game. "You can go overboard and destroy the purpose."

"He's saying competition can either make you or break you."

Moomaw thinks "It's beautiful when an athlete will put out 100% but there's no need to stand the pain and still give it more. It gives a person a great sense of pride. He's saying the athlete does not have to perform for the proud spectator cheering for victory. It brings all walks of men closer together."

"The spectatorial attitudes contribute a lot to the game. Some of the conversations spoken by some of the fans in the stands is pure garbage. It's not right!" No one has any right to sit there and pass judgement on everyone. We, as parents, need to develop a positive attitude about the game, just as the athletes do. Athletics need good fan support and positive attitudes can relieve a lot of tension.

"Another thing that needs to be banned is the term 'lock' used in reference to a woman athlete. Women are doing great in sports and should continue to demand equal rights."

"Bea Gorson (Indiana University women's basketball coach) agrees with Moomaw. "Competitive athletics help by bringing people together."

Moomaw believes that some athletes get so involved in the competitiveness of the game that they have nothing to live for but the game. "You can go overboard and destroy the purpose."

"He's saying competition can either make you or break you."

College receives grant; Dixon Hall slated for improvement

by Lynn Becker

Whitworth, continually in the process of growing and expanding, will soon be in the process of renovating one of its most used buildings, Dixon Hall. The money for this project, a $40,000 grant, is coming from the Arthur Vining Davis Foundation of Miami, Florida.

Under the supervision of College President Edward B. Lindemann; Dr. Duncan Ferguson, academic dean; and coordinated by Dr. Hugh Johnston, development research associate and Clarence Seeley, superintendent of buildings and grounds, the building will be improved by the installation of new lighting, furniture and carpeting, which will help mute excess sound.

This work is strongly supported by Lindeman, who declared, “I personally have felt that the renovation of Dixon Hall is one of the more important projects facing us.”

According to Ferguson, the condition of a building goes in cycles and needs a major renovation every 15 to 25 years, and Dixon Hall, dedicated in 1951 and Whitworth’s first permanent building to be used exclusively for classes, is at the end of its cycle. The Fine Arts building is another structure needing attention and although the halls have yet appraised, negotiations still continue in this area.

The Arthur Vining Davis Foundation supports projects for higher education, as a result of a visit by the executive director of the foundation and a proposal that was prepared in July, Whitworth is the recipient of the foundation’s first grant to its first year by Lynn Becker.

The process will begin with a meeting of all persons involved. Then an extensive questionnaire to establish a priority list of needs will be distributed to the faculty and support staffs and to all of this information will be compiled and given to a professional consultant whose fee is also included in the overall budget.

Whitworth should receive the grant by January 1, 1976 but the actual renovation will not take place until mid-May when repair work will be less a hindrance to Dixon Hall’s usual bustle.

Victor Marchetti urges CIA reform in campus talk

by Rick Grandy

Victor Marchetti, ex-CIA officer, stressed the need for drastic reform of the CIA in his Forum presentation Monday night, Oct. 27.

Marchetti was a CIA officer for 14 years and is the co-author of a book (with co-author John Marks), “The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence,” about the CIA and some of his experiences with it.

In the name of national security the CIA has withheld portions of this book. It is advertised as the first book in American history to be censored before publication. Where the CIA has made cuts, the book indicates with phrases like “34 LINES DELETED.”

You got that same sort of feeling when you talk with Marchetti. He says that there are some things he can’t write legally or morally, talk about. He is under CIA censorship for the rest of his working life.

The CIA began in 1947 as the Office of Strategic Services. Its creator, President Harry Truman, and an organization that would gather information and keep the country advised on foreign affairs.

It was formed in the British tradition. Marchetti said, “an elitist outfit, the first line of defense, and it still retains that sort of attitude and that sort of aura.”

One major problem with the CIA, Marchetti said, is that about two-thirds of its budget go toward the “clandestine services.” He said that this section of the CIA is useless and should be totally eliminated.

Whitworth’s relationship with the Davis Foundation is just one of its many connections with contributors. The cultivation of such relationships is, as the case in point, not only an asset but a necessity to Whitworth’s continued growth.

Ferguson emphasized that the $40,000 could disappear very fast if distributed in the wrong way. Decisions on the management of the grant are being made by all of the faculty and support staff who are users of Dixon Hall. These decisions will be arrived at through a long, thorough process.

The idea that the CIA gets a lot of its information through its “clandestine services” is a myth, according to Marchetti. He said, “We are not on top of the world, we get most of our information from technology.”

Marchetti thinks the CIA should shift to its original mission of gathering and analyzing information. When the CIA does that, Marchetti says it is “the single most effective” organization of its kind.

“Now is the time to split the CIA up,” Marchetti said. “Keep what’s good and throw away what’s bad. And do the same thing with the FBI.”

At times Marchetti portrayed the CIA as an unmanageable organization. Partly because the CIA is highly “organization,” often the Director himself didn’t know what was happening at the bottom, Marchetti said.

Another of Marchetti’s allegations was that there is too much secrecy surrounding the CIA, and that they are trying to hide information from the American public, not from the enemy. “Five days after the U-2 program started the Soviet Union knew about it,” he said.

There are about 60 federal agencies involved in intelligence, Marchetti said. But the CIA is unique in that it performs “clandestine” operations, while the other agencies stick to gathering information.

The CIA has become the secret weapon of presidents, according to Marchetti. They like having the power of the CIA, a power which they can often use without the knowledge of Congress. “No president should be allowed to have that type of weapon.”
The failure of HJR 19 and passing of initiative 316 on the death penalty were the two election issues that had Whitworth talking after Tuesday's election.

Students put many hours into work on HJR 19, only to see it defeated by approximately 9,000 votes in Spokane County. The consequence of HJR 19's failure is that Whitworth students who are residents of Washington will still lack financial help from the state.

Initiative 316 was the only state issue which voters passed. Whitworth College President Lindeman was among those opposing 316, but Washington voters approved the measure by more than a 2 to 1 margin.

In addition to HJR 19, voters defeated a proposed corporate business tax to finance education, a proposed judicial reform, a proposed board to fix legislative salaries, and a referendum on the method of filling vacancies in the U.S. Senate.

All three city council members voted in for Spokane are all newcomers to the council. The two challengers for positions on the District 81 school board defeated the two incumbents. The county commissioner up for re-election retained his seat.

In the state race to fill an unexpired term for Secretary of State, Republican Bruce Chapman, who had been appointed by Gov. Evans, won over Democrat Kay Anderson.

Nearly 50 Whitworth students are participating in a fact and living experiment next Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

The students will start fast Tuesday afternoon and break fast Thursday morning. During this time they will be encouraged not to return to their rooms and will sleep in the HUB both nights. This educational fast is organized by the Hunger Task Force.

"The purpose," said Sue Morrison, task force member, "is to gain an awareness of what it's like not only to be hungry, but to live where you have no home and no privacy."

One student who attends Campus Worship said, "It's a good thing to have, it reaches those people who don't want to go to church or don't like church services. You have to keep going to be a part of it." Another student stated, "I just went to my first Campus Worship service the other week and I was impressed by it. I think everyone should go to a service at least once, just to experience it."

Campus Worship planning for next semester has already begun. Suggestions are encouraged and can be given to Chaplain's office or to people on the Campus Worship Committee. Stevens stressed the importance of the Campus Worship Committee which meets every Tuesday.

There are upcoming off campus speakers scheduled for Campus Worship this month. On November 9, Ray Knott, minister and legislator from Montana, will be speaking. John Fisher, Christian song writer, will be here on November 23.
Theme dorms living up to goals

by Leslie Patrick

The enthusiasm for theme living among residents of the Village dorms is contagious. "For a theme dorm to go and be what it’s meant to be, it requires commitment," remarked Rich Gingrich, resident counselor of the Village theme dorms, which include Akili, Tiki, Shalom, Keola, and the Green Village. "And the degree of commitment varies with the individual, the majority of students living in the theme dorms are serious about making things work.

Chars, the Senior Men and Women dorm, is involved in making the transition from college to the outside world easier. As Jane Campbell, a resident of Chars, said, "There’s no other place we’re able to get this instruction on the outside."

Via seminars every other Sunday, the seniors are learning things like how to shop for insurance, how to finance a home, and what records to keep for income tax. The speakers are people from the community chosen by students.

It has been observed that there isn’t as much commitment to the theme on the other dorms. This may be due to the fact that the course offerings are limited, according to Campbell. "Everyone is achieving what they individually want. You don’t look at the theme (seminars) you’re not interested in."

The seniors have a common need to study more and share anxieties about moving into the working world. The bond of being seniors helps unite the dorm, and provides a quiet place where they can study more effectively.

Students of the Community Service dorm, housed in Shalom, are helping the community by working in volunteer positions. At the beginning of this semester, they were given two weeks to find jobs. One of the stipulations was that they couldn’t choose anything they had done before.

Some people had trouble getting jobs. To aid them in their projects, the dorm utilized Dorm Decision Day to tour various agencies in Spokane. Though the field trip was helpful, Sheryl Greek, who is living in Shalom, commented that "A lot of us felt like we were looking out a zoo – looking down on people, observing them."

A major goal of the students is to create a community within the dorm. There has been some difficulty in accomplishing this because the students are active in so many extracurricular activities, including their jobs, that they are rarely found in the dorm. Greek said, "We’re helping the community, but we’re not able to establish one of our own."

Dr. Liebert and Karen Dalton lead the dorm’s class. Once a week, the students get together to share experiences and advice concerning community service. It was hoped that the students would become a community service resource center so that the campus could come to; as yet, this hasn’t happened.

The Alternative Lifestyles dorm, Hoyoh, is composed of mostly sophomores and juniors. They are satisfied with their class; the teachers are involved and they’re having good discussions. They are researching such alternative lifestyles as living in the country as opposed to living in a suburb. Each student is involved in an independent study project with a professor.

The resident advisor of Hoyoh, Wynne Akana, said, "The whole experience is not just the class; it’s the cooking..." The students eat meals at the dorm, taking turns cooking and cleaning up. This has caused a few problems because each student came to the dorm with a different idea of what an "alternative lifestyle" is. There are both vegetarians and meat-eaters so the cooks must take both in consideration. Akana commented, "If I make chilli, I’ll make a meatless and chilli with meat."

Several days beforehand, persons scheduled to cook shop for provisions they’ll need. The dorm has a checking account and belongs to the Warehouse Market as well as the Store. They are attempting to serve "healthy" food (Lo, no preserved and high in nutritional value.)

One of their main goals is to maximize the quality of life and minimize its cost by becoming more consumer-conscious. They are trying to conserve money, energy and resources.

The goal of the Twentieth Century History dorm is to investigate current events and their historic roots. The students and counselor, Kurt Hunt and other speakers, will look at the history and themes of this country – including Asian, African, and Native American society, developments in science, the fall of nationalism, and positivism.

The Creative Writing theme dorm, Tiki, is "a really tight dorm," according to Kathy Humlyn, one of the residents there. "People are free to share their poetry with others in the dorm. They are creating an atmosphere in which people who like to write are in close contact with each other; there is freedom to be critical as well as affirmative.

There must be trust among the members of the writing dorm because they share their work in class as well as with their friends. Under the instruction of Barbara Sandal, the students look at each other’s work (mostly poetry and short stories), give feedback, and explore the works of well-known writers. Each student writes on a contract basis, made by arrangement with Sandal.

Koehler Gallery remembers professor

by Kathy McGinnis

A new addition to the Whitworth Art Department is the Koehler Gallery and Library. The art gallery, located in the Fine Arts building, was formerly known as "The Box Gallery." It was named in memory of John G. Koehler after his death last May.

Koehler was an art instructor at Whitworth and had been instrumental in founding the art department. He taught courses in art, crafts, and photography and was also a former head of the department.

After his death, friends and former students donated money and books to the memorial fund with which the reference library was started this fall. Furniture was donated by the art department faculty, and the general faculty helped with other projects in the room, such as finishing cabinets.

The nucleus of the library consists of many books from Mr. and Mrs. Koehler’s own collection. New books are added often. They cover a wide variety of subjects: painting, art history, individual artists, design, architecture, ceramics and photography. The library also subscribes to several magazines in the area.

The library of prints includes the works of famous artists from Rembrandt to Picasso. The library also houses a collection of over 9,000 slides, which students may view and art faculty may borrow. Ceramics and paintings are also included.

Since this is a reference library, only art faculty members are allowed to check out the materials. This helps most of the books, prints and slides in the library at all times, available for student use.

The Koehler Gallery has continuous showings throughout the year. Its main purpose is for the student shows, put on by each art major in his senior year. The faculty will also put on a show, as well as other artists, by invitation of the art department.

The current display in the stickleyib show put on by Adela Gallagher, assistant professor of home economics and Roland Wurster, a retired Whitworth registrar.

The gallery was opened this fall with a showing of Koehler’s own work. It ran through September to mid-October.

The Koehler Gallery and Library are now open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. every weekday. It is an interesting stop for anyone with an appreciation of art.
To the Editor,

The passage of Initiative 316, the re-statement of the death penalty penalty Tuesday by Washington voters has shocked and angered many people on the Whitworth campus. The residents of Calvin Hall have voiced their protest (see letter to the editor).

There is no statistical evidence to support the claim that the threat of death will retard crime growth, even though some say that people with suicidal tendencies will commit less crime in order to be taken out of circulation.

What's important here is that in our intellectual, ruthless and angry rage we do not think of the moral and psychological implications. We are in an unthinking, inhuman and uncivil manner to stem the tide of lawlessness.

I don't believe the death penalty is the answer. We've read in a magazine that will deter all would be murderers and rapists. But I believe what I and the citizens voting for Initiative 316 have in common is our goal—we are all, or should be, working toward a workable system of justice. This system has not been created effectively, but it is the only system we have got at present. We have been tried in a court of law and have known the real facts of our state.

In conversations with my parents and members of their generation, this frustration is evident. They have no idea and hear of convicted murderers and rapists being set free and they that anger them. These are people who have cherished a life-long respect for a belief in our laws, and when they see these laws seemingly flouted, they are ready to try anything to stem the tide of lawlessness.

To the Editor,

It is important, I feel, to acknowledge the significant response that Whitworth stu­ dents made in response to HJR 19. Because of the effort of dozens of Whitworth students, as well as the work of many concerned community people, Spokane County showed a great deal more support for HJR 19 than the rest of the state.

Tacoma, an urban community roughly the same size as Spokane, with two large pri­ vate colleges and two parochial school dis­ tricts, voted in support of HJR 19 by only 35% compared with Spokane's 45%.

There remains two alternate plans for con­ tinuing the fight to change the Constitution:

1) There has been considerable energy expressed in preparing the state for a con­ stitutional convention in the next few years. There are many opportunities for the constitutional convention for colleges in particular.

2) Pass another bill through the legisla­ ture, this time limiting it to post-secondary education.

We must continue to seek remedies for our existing state Constitution, for the poten­ tial assistance is too great not to. The camp­aign for HJR 19 has shown our strong feeling and some aspects of the issues remain on our state. We need now to show our resili­ ency by continuing the pressure on every front, by actively engaging every alternative.

To the Editor:

The American flag, as a symbol of our corporate identity, has long embodied ideals of freedom, justice and individual expression. Through America's tumultuous changes, the flag has inspired us to work together for a realization of democratic ideals.

Many of us still remember the political turmoil of the sixties that accompanied a growing disillusionment and impatience with structures that perpetuated injustices and valued the state above the liberties of the individual. As a symbol of this, the American flag was left to fly after dark, shreds, half-upside-down or even burned, depending on the occasion. Some protec­ tors were tried in a court of law for showing disrespect toward our flag and our country.

To hang the flag upside-down was not new to the revolution of the sixties. For ships sail­ ing the seas, the flag hanging away was a symbol of distress; an indication that help was needed in an emergency situation.

Some of you may have seen the flag hang­ ing from Calvin Hall's balcony. Calvin wishes this to be an expression of our love, concern and anxiety for our country, it's people and the many other cultures and environments we encounter as we travel.

Recent election results have reinstated the death penalty by hanging with a 75% majority vote. This is only one indication of the issues of our day. Dick Gregory, Victor Marchetti and Focus Days have acquainted us with other challenges that we face. Our nation's guiding ideals are dain­ ing away. Many of the Christian values of com­ passion, justice and freedom are no longer oper­ ating in the present political and social structures of the United States. Whitworth, as an establish­ed and respected institution in Spokane, neg­ lects to discuss and evaluate these issues. Those of us in Calvin Hall have also failed to be responsible. We have neglected our duty to study, oppression, hunger and racism that we have neglected to examine and decide upon crucial issues before us.

All of us are caught up in a flurry of activity and the challenges of tests and papers. Is this enabling us to effect change towards the things in which we believe?

To the Editor:

CORE 350 has been cancelled due to lack of interest. I congratulate the faculty who showed their interest in teaching it if perfect conditions could exist, but who were not willing to expend the energy when the perfect conditions did not occur. I congratulate the students body with their present concern for hunger, who won't face the reali­ zation that science and technology have been the primary factor in both the cause and probable solutions to the problem. And I congratulate the administration who, with their hands tied in the politics of the campus, did very little to make it. It was cancelled due to lack of interest.

When I arrived here at Whitworth in the fall of 1972 I was told the CORE program was a vital aspect of my liberal arts education. I believed it, I didn't know what CORE was. Flim. I can still recall Dr. Dilworth role playing Abraham. When I had completed CORE 250 the next spring I began to see a pattern: first I had dealt with the Judeo­Christian tradition in western civilization. The next stage was the development of rational thought and reactions to that. I understand the importance in both of these. They have been key elements in the development of my culture. But both have dropped me short of being able to deal with the technocratic and technological world that I face now. I don't see that Abraham has much to tell me about the complexities of science. The CORE program lost its future and moved toward justice issues that were cancelled.

Specifically CORE 350 was to deal with the pleasures and problems gained from science and technology, or it was to deal with the history of scientific thought and the relationships between religion and science. No one could make up their mind. For the past couple of years, as it has undergone a rapid decline,

Dr. Hicks has taught it under the title 'Quality of Life'. But people are more interested in where we've been than where we're going. So we'll have to wait for the next crisis to hit before we react. Perhaps we'll finally get hungry.

If people are under the illusion that social problems can be rectified without the use of science and technology, they can be ex­ tricated from them, it is all the more reason for CORE 350 to exist as part of the CORE program. I think it is time that the social sciences and humanities adopt a more dialogic stance that they are the ones who hold the key to solutions to our problems. They hold one of the keys.

The abundance of students on this campus toward enrolling in science courses because 'they are science oriented' is sickening. Especially when they come to search for quality of life without science.

NO HELP AT HOSPITALS

(CPS)--Rape victims often do not find a helping hand at their local hospitals, according to a new government-funded survey. In fact, many private hospitals refuse to examine and treat rape victims and others charge as much as $75 for the services.

The survey, conducted by the Center for Women Policy Studies, said that "most police officers have difficulty finding a hospital that will treat rape victims."

"Hospitals have exhibited both reluctance to provide medical testimony and disengagement toward rape victims," the report continued. Rape victims are often forced to wait for a long time in the hospital's crowded emergency room before they are examined.

The report also pointed out that police departments often do not have the technological capability to identify rapists. It further criticized prosecutors' offices for handling rape cases poorly and providing little assistance to the victims.

CAUTION: HEAVEN UNDER CONSTRUCTION

(CPS)--Construction of heaven will begin on Palm Sunday, April 11, 1976 in Springfield, MO.

Gold-brick streets wandering through a one-acre plot will lead past a fiberglass Jonah-swallowing whale and a 71-foot sphenoglaxis Jesus. Consecrationaries dressed like the children of Noah will walk the streets selling hot dogs and hamburgers.

Promotor Johnnie Hope plans to create a Bible Belt Disneyland by "making the themes of the Bible come alive through modern technology." Hope estimates that his Bible City will cost $20 million when completed in about five years.

That Disneyland touch has been guaranteed by hiring an ex-Disney engineer-architect to take charge of all construction. Among the exhibits already on the drawing board is a Tower of Babel, the Garden of Eden and an imaginary scene from heaven.

"The primary purpose is educational and inspirational," Hope said. "We'll be like an adventure."

Total for the year's net reserve $21,665.50

Total year's carryover $12,000.00
by Ted Romberger

After last year's confusing ASWC budget, it is finally back in order, says Craig Grant, ASWC President.

Grant said that after reviewing last year's budget, it was discovered to be four months behind in income and outgo accounts. "There was over $16,000 in cash and checks in the safe, which had never been deposited," Grant said. He said that was one of the reasons there were no funds left in the checking account last year.

This fall there's approximately $97,000 in the ASWC budget, according to ASWC Financial Vice President Brad Sprague. This amount includes $30,000 from the $50 fee students pay each semester, plus $37,000 carryover from last year's reserves. Last year's fiscal period ended August 31, 1975. At least $60,000 more will be shown in the budget at Spring when students will pay another $50 each.

The $37,000 from last year's budget includes $14,000 from the net reserve and $23,000 from dorms and clubs. The set reserve is all the money left over after all formal budgeting has taken place. Much of the reserve is held as funds already earmarked for a specific cause. An example is $8,000 earmarked for establishing a campus radio station. New programs already promised to students have "frozen" most of the net carryover reserve this year.

Funds coming into the budget, such as the $50 student fee paid each semester, are collected by the college's business office. The check is then deposited into a checking account in the Associated Students of Whitworth College. The bank used this year is Pacific National.

Dorm fees and unused funds from previously budgeted ASWC organizations total $25,000. Many dorms had reserve money left from last year, but rather than refunding it back to the students, it is kept and credited to this year's dorm funds. Each dorm keeps books on its own account. Stewart Hall had, as an example, $521 left over from last year.

Chartered organizations of ASWC may also have a part of their budget unused when the semester ends. Instead of putting the money back into the reserve, it is left as part of next semester's budget for that organization. An example is Women Concerned, a women's awareness' group. Last Spring they had a carryover totaling $121.72. As of today, there has been no further budgeting of the group.

During the summer, for the first time this year, ASWC gave faculty, non-interest bearing loans for purposes of faculty salaries with the $55,000 reserve. The loans, totaling $20,000, have been all paid back to the ASWC budget.

It is now being planned to end the ASWC fiscal year on May 31 instead of August 31. The way it is now, according to Sprague, is that money is paid in during the last part of the current fiscal year but not used until the next fiscal period. This creates problems with bookkeeping and budgeting. If it is approved by President's Council, it will eliminate some of these problems.

The ASWC budget, even before the funds are collected, is formulated at the end of Spring term for the next year. Each chartered organization submits a budget request for the coming year. These requests are then reviewed by the Budget Committee, which is made up of the ASWC President, Financial Vice President, four President's Council members and five other students chosen from the student body at large.

After hearing and discussing each budget request, the committee decides on a proposed budget. The proposed budget is brought before the entire President's Council for final approval. Though most of the accounts receive an approved budget in the Spring, there are some ASWC committees which have their budget approved until the next fall. See section C, page 6.

The three ASWC executive officers receive payment of 6% of their entire budget this amount is $1,608.75 each for the year. In addition, each has the option to receive college credit for their labor, while fulfilling the responsibilities for that position," as stated in the Constitution.

The ASWC President receives the same scholarship as the executive vice president. In addition, he receives a $500 expense allowance to perform his duties while in office. This may include such things as taking a college guest out to dinner.

Along with the $100 paid each year by the students, a $15 Piedhouse fee. This revenue amounting to over $16,000, is collected directly for student activities in the Piedhouse. The fee must stay at $7.50 each semester and is not included in the total ASWC budget.

"Phenomenal": Mohr or less

Walking in the crisp air he comes to the building. Stopping a moment, the passerby suddenly notices a somber look. For the first time in his life, the young man starts to think what it means to be a human being.

"Phenomenal" Mohr is attempting to get to the ditto machine to publish his science fiction fanzine, "Phenomenal". How do you explain a fanzine to a security psychiatrist who has a flashlight shining in your eye? Can he be caught plants in the window by the campus security patrol?

Phenomenal Mohr is a science fiction fanzine, one of Mohr's biggest interests. Science fiction has attracted him since the third grade. As an art major, he has contributed several drawings to various fanzines in addition to letters published. One of his drawings will appear in the fanzine "Out World", possibly in November.

Mohr has written and published two editions of "Phenomenal". He plans to have more soon. The third edition will focus on H. P. Lovecraft, a science fiction supernatural horror story writer.

Included in Mohr's publications are the sections, "Phenomenal Thesis", "General Phenomenal", "Phenomenal Science Fiction", "Phenomenal Letter", and "Phenomenal Consumption". All are written in a funny, humorous style befitting the theme of the fanzine. The four editions are available for 50 cents each and are not included in the total ASWC budget.

Tragedy, comedy, it’s all here in fall play

by Cynthia Reynolds

Hamlet is mad. No one can understand why. Just because his uncle killed his father, thereby usurping Denmark from its rightful heir (Hamlet), and married his mother is no reason why he should be acting in such a strange manner.

In Shakespeare’s Hamlet, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, two old friends of Hamlet’s are commissioned by the new King to spy on him. Most of their time, however, is spent waiting backstage for one small entrance. They are destined to view from the corner of their eyes overwhelming circumstances that dwarf them nearer and nearer to an irreversible fate. And while they wait, they play.

“Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead,” a play by Tom Stoppard, reveals in all its comedy and pathos the waiting and playing of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

“Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead” is Whitworth’s fall drama production. The play will run from November 14 through 16, Friday through Sunday nights. Al Gunderson, director, is exultant about the production.

“This is probably the greatest contemporary play,” he says excitedly. “It’s a tough play, but the cast is outstanding.”

One of the reasons Gunderson chose “Rosencrantz and Guildenstern” was because of the talent he knew was available at Whitworth. That talent, in the leading roles, consists of Les Schloetel as Rosencrantz and Jean Sherard as Guildenstern.

“They are on stage continually. At the end of a rehearsal they are exhausted,” remarks Gunderson.

Gunderson also lauds the talent in the freshmen of his cast, Dirk Stratton, who plays the Player, does remarkably well with a demanding role.

Even those with one line, like Carol Winiacki, playing Ophelia and the Tragedians, Bruce Bingham, Joel Walker, Douglas Wunderlich and Bradley Elias, with no lines, have been at every rehearsal. There is, points out Gunderson, “...unique strength in teamwork.”

That strength is needed for the 16 hours a week of rehearsing the cast must currently devote to the play. Also in the play are: Robin Wales, as Alfred, Timothy Ramsey as Hamlet; Frank Hey, as Claudius, Toni Boggan as Gertrude, and Howard Rick Smith as Polonius. Art Krug is the assistant director, Scott Shaw the stage manager.

“Their lines have been memorized since three weeks ago, the rehearsal began,” says Gunderson. “Now is what I call my refinement period.”

Working also on refinement are Mark Danielson, set designer, and Ruth Peterson, costume designer. Peterson is working hard to create authentic Shakespearean costumes. Danielson is working hard to create an authentic non-Shakespearean set. It is a unit set with different levels, says Gunderson. “It violates Aristotle’s unities as he set down in the Poetics.”

The set requires the audience’s imagination. It is not designed after a certain time period because Gunderson wants the audience to realize that time and space are not elements in this play.

Comedy, bordering on absurdity, however, is an element. Stoppard in his “Author’s Notes” is very emphatic that the play is meant to be funny. Whatever philosophical meanings have been attached to it, Stoppard still contends it is a comedy and should be enjoyed.

Rosencrantz, for instance, sums up the tragic plight of Hamlet like this:

“...your father, whom you love, dies; you are his heir; you come back to find that hardly was the corpse cold before your young brother popped onto his throne and into his sheets, thereby compelling both legal and natural practice. Now why exactly are you behaving in his extraordinary manner?”

“Through all its absurdity,” reflects Gunderson, “and it is absurd, (the play) speaks about death and lack of relationship.”

The main point of the play, as may be deduced from the title, is death. insists Guildenstern, “Death is not anything. It’s the absence of presence, nothing more... the endless time of never coming back.... a gap you can’t see, and when the wind blows through it, it makes no sound.”

In a seemingly never ending dialogue with Rosencrantz to establish some sort of meaning, Guildenstern cries out, “We have not been... picked up... to be abandoned... to find our own way... We are entitled to some direction.”

This is not a usual play,” says Gunderson. “It is a play within a play within a play within a play.”

This depth is another reason why Gunderson chose “Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.” He feels educational theater can be significant for today, “Part of the role of a liberal arts college is to make students aware of great literature.”

This fall’s production may not only expose students to a play for the first time, but may also inspire them to take another look at Hamlet. Gunderson says he sees Hamlet more clearly as a result of “Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.”

Rosencrantz’s enigmatic comment, however, on Hamlet’s madness may or may not be all that clarifying:

“A compulsion towards philosophical introspection is his chief characteristic, it may put it like that. It does not mean... anything at all, which may or may not be a kind of madness.”

It is strongly recommended that you see “Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead.” And between any philosophical conclusions you may arrive at—don’t forget to laugh.

Dark Stratton portrays the Player, leader of a band of scruffy Tragedians in the fall play which opens a three day run next Friday. Admission is free to Whitworth students.
"I think there's a resemblance between Rosencrantz and Guildenstern and everyone. They're more or less 'Everyman.' I think it's hard for anyone not to identify with the humanness of the characters." Les Schloetel, playing Rosencrantz.

"This play is a near-religious experience. It reaches inside your head and exposes a lot of sensitive spots: who are we, where are we going and finally, who? Some heavy questions I have to deal with a lot (especially at Whitworth), followed by some heavy answers. This play ain't no lightweight!" John Sherrard, playing Guildenstern.

Health Center provides variety of services

by Thomas Krausse

"I think Whitworth's health center has sufficient facilities to handle a particular student's illness," says staff physician Richard Nemne.

Dr. Nemne commented that the purpose of Schunnacher Health Center is to act as an insurance company, because most people are not sick enough to be in a hospital. One common misperception is that poor health is that they stay in their dorms, where adequate care is not available.

The infirmary accommodates 14 patients, which includes the overflow room used only in emergency situations. Dr. Nemne Gestrole Winiford, head nurse of both the infirmary and the health center, explained that a doctor's order is needed for them to stay in their dorms, where adequate care is not available.

However, the health center lacks therapeutic supplies such as a whirlpool machine and a hair dryer. Winiford is currently looking for a donor because the price of the equipment is prohibitive. The health center loans out crutches and orthopedic equipment for $6, which is $2 more than the average. They don't loan out hot water bottles, ice bags, steam inhalers, basins, or heating pads. Medicines range from $1-10 depending on the type. Allergy and other shots prescribed by a student's own doctor can be given to you for $25 cents, while flu shots cost $1.75. Dr. Nemne stated "There is an adequate supply of medicine on hand at reasonable prices."

The center won't provide excuse slips for being ill. Winiford said "we feel that the students are responsible for getting their work done on time. But the instructor can certify the health center to verify the illness."

A health record is on file in the main office of the center which includes past medical history, emotional problems, and allergies. "If this wasn't on file, the personnel couldn't help you if an emergency arose," according to R.N. Beverly Lord. She continued, "Many Whitworth students report recent killings and the "Dallas Massacre" files, but doctors use these instead of asking individual questions."

Intrauterine devices (I.U.D.) and birth control pills are available for students. Dr. Nemne explained the purpose of the device by saying, "When this is placed into the uterus, a mild inflammation occurs, either killing the sperm, or making the environment unfavorable to the embryo." He continued "There are side effects that might harm the person or the baby if the I.U.D. isn't properly used. They are perforation of the uterine wall, spontaneous expulsion, or excessive menstrual bleeding."

Many girls ask what the effects of birth control pills are and Dr. Nemne remarked, "If a woman is taking the pill, she could suffer nausea, migraine headaches, and breast tenderness." Females who say the pill successfully might encounter temporary infertility, or cloting in the arteries feeding the brain called a hemorhagic stroke.

Every Wednesday night Planned Parenthood holds meetings in one of the examination rooms whose existence is disguised, counseling advice is given to newbies, and child care techniques taught. If you are interested in the clinics, make an appointment with Planned Parenthood by calling 335-9747.

The center is open from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., seven days a week. A nurse is on duty during the night if an emergency arises. On weekends, the health center is on call basis between 8 a.m. and 10 p.m., after 3 p.m. a nurse is stationed at the desk.

The new center was constructed in 1970 because the original health center located in Found Hall lacked sufficient facilities to handle patients.

All students are obligated to fill out an insurance claim form and send all bills to the school's insurance company, United Pacific Life. The Company provides student accident insurance and sickness expense insurance for $3 which covers all the fall term through the summer term.

The insurance doesn't cover injuries covered by the Workmen Compensation Law, dental care, repair or replacement of eye glasses or contact, suicide or accidental medical care resulting from childbirth, or miscarriage.

Highly touted Freedom Train a 'disappointment'

by Ann Hollifield

The American Freedom Train, present in Spokane from Oct. 26-29 was a disappointment. Built up by publicity to be the ultimate experience in American History, it was my opinion that it is greatly lacking in quality. Judging from what I have said, the event was shared by many other visitors.

The train is 24 cars long, the longest passenger train in use today. The display section consists of ten exhibits cars, through which visitors are moved on conveyor belts, and two glass cars. The glass cars contain a replica of the Liberty Bell twice the size of the original, A Lunar Rover, a map of the route taken by the freedom Train across the nation and several old cars and engines. Pulling the whole train is an old coal-oil steam engine.

The tour through the main section of the train takes 25 minutes. At the rate the passenger busses move, it is impossible to see all the things in each car, and those things that one does see is barely labeled beyond a bare statement of what the object is and whether or not it is authentic.

The first car in the train is full of relics of the Revolutionary War. Among the exhibits in this section are authentic weapons, a 1756 edition of "Poor Richard's Almanac," George Washington's copy of the original draft of the Constitution, his handwriting in the margins, and several excellent replicas of historic relics. Visitors are not given time to see everything in this car as in the entire train.

The second car was dedicated to America's achievements in exploration and expansion, and it was here that I encountered the first major flaw in the organization of the train.

This car directly follows the Revolutionary War and the first exhibit is a Lunar Module mock-up. Alan Shepard's space suit and some lunar rocks. This display is then followed by articles that once belonged to 19th century emigrants. Maybe Dr. Cunningham missed something, but that's not the way he teaches history. Also noticeably lacking in a car dedicated to exploration and expansion is any mention of the westward movement. It was never, in fact, mentioned in the train at all.

It was found when reading the guide book a necessary purchase since there is no one around to answer questions about relics are rotated on and off display. According to the guide book, some of the things mentioned here are valuable, and when asked, are sometimes available. This report is somewhat surprising, how that something as important as the westward movement would ever be taken off display, especially in view of some of the "trash" that was on display.

Among some of the other unpleasant surprises awaiting visitors, especially history buffs, is the fact that in the whole train a total space of about six feet and seven relics, all of which are things that used to belong to Lincoln, is given to the Civil War. No mention of the war itself is made, nor is there any mention of World War I or Vietnam.

The World War II exhibits, represented entirely in the person of FDR, was given the same space as the Civil War. All of this was in the "conflicts and resolutions" car.

Also in that car was the barest mention of the civil rights movement; a section dedicated to JFK, though beyond one small photograph no mention of his assassination is made, and a few of Gerald Ford's belongings. This last is the most ironic of all. It is a very indirect way of hinting at what is the probably the greatest political conflict in American History: Watergate.

In a ridiculous contrast to these minor treatments of major historical events, the American Freedom Train gives over an entire car out of a ten car train to sports. Additionally the exhibit is well done, but none-the-less, giving one tenth of a train ostensibly dedicated to American history to professional athletes, makes this reporter question our priorities.

But to the credit of the train, the Revolutionary War is well represented, the Fine Arts exhibit of minerals are very good, and the sports section, though over-done, is well put together.

It is difficult to put 200 years of history into ten railroad cars, but it is my opinion, and of several people interviewed, that the American Freedom train is definitely in need of help.
The misty magician at the steam plant seems to have gathered the uper hand in the battle for thermal balance. The radiator stands erect in the sunny evening: a gusher of heat surges up the empty pipes. Determined not to wear longjohns to bed this night, I throw open the valve, enabling the squashed coils to devour any warmth that might happen along. The door slams on the frigid dark, and I’m off in search of a hot annoy, a warm stool, and a cold beer.

For those in search of similar surroundings, let me mention a couple of possibilities (note all the following spots are in Idaho, out of consideration for those readers under 19.)

First, located in downtown Spirit Lake, we have the White Horse Saloon. An ever-smiling sheriff greets you on the street and prepares you for the authentic western decor within. Matt DillONS might have bellyed up for a shot of red eye (on his day off, of course) and bought Kilty a Horsehead twistie. Revealing pictures line the walls above the poker table where Diamond Jim draws to a royal flush, then abandons the lawn barber as he winked at him. Friday and Saturday nights swing with the sounds of Clarence Creekwater and the Tennessee Stoolbusters (or reasonable tangibles) as fries and burgers alloys to the country sounds. Hard drinks are available, as are football and pool if the atmosphere calls you.

If you’re headed for Coeur d’Alene, use the restroom at Wild Bill’s Saloon (support, found a couple miles east of the Lake, right on the highway. They offer Coins on the line (or red head (top)) and live music on the weekends, I’ve never hit the place on a Friday or Saturday night, but the historical displays warrant a look around no matter what night you’re there.

Once in Coeur d’Alene, my "n trial" suggestion is the Happy Days Tavern, one half block north of the theatre (the theatre’s on Alderman). The name won’t bowl you over, but then neither will anything inside. It’s the local, quite college aged bar. They serve live music, and rarely have a crowd. They do open in a place where you don’t have to about to be heard. Pool, football, and ping-pong present something to do while you discuss detected or the South Warren calendar. Let however you take it, it’s not the El Patio.

And then, very early the next morning...

I find my challenge has been accepted. Arrghh! My McDonald’s All Beef Roundup coupon ignited spontaneously in the 170 degree air, and I smell my eyebrows sing as I struggle to open the window. The paint delists form the walls. Without hesitation, I bring my open book to the widening world of the hall, will to my bed, and paint for a breeze.

The magician triumphs.
Jodaphonic finds warmth in Winter

"These roses under my window make no reference to former roses or to better ones: they are for what they are, they exist with God today. There is no time to them. There is simply the rose, it is perfect in every moment of its existence. Before a leaf bud has burst, its whole life acts, in the full blown flower there is no more, in the leafless root there is no less. Its nature is satisfied, and it satisfies nature in all moments alike. But man postpones or remembers, he does not live in the present, but with reveried eye laments the past, or heedless of the riches that surround him, stands on tiptoe to foresee the future. He cannot be happy and strong until he too lives with the nature in the present, above time."

—Emerson

Jack Frost came. Coldness is seeping into our shoes. We find as we try a variety of color, all look green and grey.

Most people just say, "Jah that Jack," and turn up their thermostats, as he leaves their Whitworth walkways silver, and frozen crystals on their ten speeds.

As the weather changes, we change. We are trying to bloom regardless of our lack of warm rays. Books don't keep us as warm these days. We take no time in which to rejoice. We seem to be already where we are going, instead of where we are. Look at the tree. Don't look too long if it causes you embarrassment, but if you never get embarrassed, feel the tree. It isn't going anywhere. It is dedicated to standing.

How little time we spend, just standing. We don't spend enough time sky gazing. As you need this, chances are that you are on borrowed time again. Make it your time. Find a place and be with yourself. Work on warmth.

The clouds above are so fascinating to me. They are being PINK and LIGHT and they are being clouds; and clouds float, hover or pour, but you will never find one walking like a man.

Yet we seem to need to be everything we are not. If you stop and think about it, you are the best you in the world.

Want to stay warm this winter?
Integrate school with life. Don't wait until vacation to be warm. There is no fireplace in every room here at Camp Carefree, but there is abundant warmth, inside oneself. If one stops to wait and listen.

It is hard to feel any warmth on your way to class. Your feet are wet, and you are so mad this time she dented your right front fender. You study your designated black walkway. Other people are passing, your head is down. You are already where you are going, in your mind.

The girl passing on the walkway is hurting, very badly. She has been at Whitworth for two months, and is very cold and empty.

The kid with the thick blue coat is cold. His room is cold. His roommate is cold. He finds no warmth between Saga and his mailbox, which is also empty.

You walk faster. The cold stays with you.

Want to stay warm this winter?
Go outside and wander. Dedicate an hour to wandering. Take a day, if you can. Brainstorm, observe, live, listen; be warm. Feel all the joy that could very possibly lie dormant until spring break if we don't claim it.

The pink and frosty clouds are very rapidly turning grey. Hovering now, and soon they will be pouring. I smile and know that the cold is in temperature only. My friends remember. We are patient. We put on our long underwear and know that what is here, now is what we have to work with.

And I am warm.

The apartment ritual; how to sign a lease that lets you sleep

(CPS)-It's a slow, hot trudge up a long flight of stairs at the end of the first of what could be many days of apartment hunting. At least the sign downstairs didn't say "No animals or student." Head, feet and hand pounding in unison, you're on your way to being the last manager's door of the day.

Then, suddenly, there it is: the ideal apartment, a very paltry $100-a-month slumlow to your door. Come on in, the lease is up. While your landlord's property manager is run through the sign, the landlord-tenant scrutiny begins. You're probably not the first person to view the property. The landlord-tenant scrutiny is finished before you even notice what legal and financial potential you've lost for the next 12 months. But after all, what are a few rights in return for no cockroaches?

In your state, see your local tenant's union (or other organizations, 1346 Connecticut Ave, Washington, D.C. 20036). The insecurity deposit, To prevent your landlord from becoming your landlord's permanent bank deposit, try to include in your lease stipulations of your security deposit contract. Even if you move, you may still pay rent even if they're left in the apartment, in 20 states a tenant can be evicted in retaliation for reporting a housing code violation.

For info about the specific dearth of rights in your state, contact your local tenant's union (or other organizations, 1346 Connecticut Ave, Washington, D.C. 20036). The insecurity deposit. To prevent your landlord from becoming your landlord's permanent bank deposit, try to include in your lease stipulations of your security deposit contract. Even if you move, you may still pay rent even if they're left in the apartment, in 20 states a tenant can be evicted in retaliation for reporting a housing code violation.

1. The ball and chain lease. Contrary to popular belief, you do have the right to enjoy your apartment. Even with the current housing shortage in some college communities, you should file a judicial action, not a lease for involuntary confinement. Nevertheless, you'll probably find clauses which prohibit parties, stereo, garbage, pets, air conditioners, remodeling, renting and other things that people usually associate with home. If some point the protection of your landlord's privacy somehow out of the picture.

Aside from signing away your life-style, you may also be asked to unwillingly give up other legal rights. In fact, in the fine-print legal jargon may be clauses which give your landlord the right to enter your apartment at any time, to lock you out, or to seize your belongings and charge you late payment of rent. Under many other clauses you also agree not to pay your attorney's fees if he wins your case. You can appoint an attorney on your behalf to plead guilty.

Here's one Orwellian gobbleygook from a lease: "We reserve the obligation to the Tenant to pay rent hereunder,... shall in anywise be affected, impaired or excused because the landlord is unable to supply or is delayed in supplying any service or is delayed in making any repairs, alterations, additions,装饰ations or decorations." Translation: you must pay rent even if the landlord doesn't provide heat, electricity, repairs or any other service he promised, quite a switch from the universal consumer axiom that you don't pay for what you don't receive.

2. The insecurity deposit. To prevent your security deposit from becoming your landlord's permanent bank deposit, try to include in your lease stipulations of your security deposit contract. Even if you move, you may still pay rent even if they're left in the apartment, in 20 states a tenant can be evicted in retaliation for reporting a housing code violation.

So only pay for your own toilets in the wall after finals, make sure you and your landlord inspect the place before you move in and make a written inventory of all damage. If he refuses to take your tour, take along a disinterested witness with an inventory notebook and get the landlord a copy. After legally shaky, such tactics have a "don't tread on me" effect which can prove valuable.

For more clues try using the model inventory checklist and security deposit contract available free from the Sacramento County Consumer Protection Bureau, 816 H St., Sacramento, CA 95814. The model agreement resulted from a survey of landlords in the Sacramento area who had lost an estimated $1.7 million in security deposits, half the money had been charged for late payment of rent.

Confusing what many students know from experience, the Consumer Protection Board of California has become "an incredible right!

3. The lease of least resistance. Although negotiating may be traumatic you should try to change your lease before you sign it rather than rely on long ago expensive legal action to vindicate you. In many places, local law hasn't yet caught up with basic human rights or the Constitution. Remember that any lease changes your landlord agrees to, as well as an evicting or repairs he's promised to make, should be written in the contract and initialed by both of you.

One factor in your favor: most landlords don't write their own lease, they just take whatever the local landlord happens to pass by to curry. To take this view, they may know they're giving you an option that isn't exactly how. With some knowledge of your housing law (or better yet a group of tenants) can win such a few rights and survive until capitalism is officially declared dead.

One last tactic or symbolic protest, depending on your negotiating skills and the extent of your landlord's vigilance, Is to present your landlord with your own inventory checklist and security deposit contract and have him sign it. The professor's salary is up or down each year, depending upon the size of the enrollment, whereas a student's contract might get more money from the government. A private school also depends upon its trustees to find contributions from churches and business.

Winter said that the trustees are working harder than ever. "Our trustees are more involved now than they were, say, five years ago. We couldn't get away with anything if we tried," he added with a smile.

Unlike other schools, Whitworth tries to keep in close contact with its trustees in an effort to maintain a close working relationship between the Board members and the Administration," Winter said.

And it seems to work for Whitworth; the trustees are actively involved in the student life of the campus, both on and off campus. Age has little to do with how involved one is; Dave Weyerhaeuser, Weyerhaeuser Lumber is a young man who must fly in from the east for board meetings and frequently does, giving him his most valuable gifts, his life and new outlook.

Mrs. Dorothy Dixon, widow of the man for whom Dixon Hall is named works almost unconsciously for Whitworth, and is responsible for most of the lounge furniture in the dorms.

The older trustees feel very good about the changes Whitworth has gone through, said Winter and are especially proud that Whitworth's goal of keeping a close student-teacher relationship is maintained. Winter said that he was astounded by how hard the trustees work and how much they support the school, and is saddened that the students have so little idea of their activities.

Pirates host Cats in biggie

By Tim Wyssak

The Whitworth Pirates head into the conference "Biggie" tomorrow, as they tangle with the League leading Linfield College Wildcats in the Pine Bowl. Both are coming off big wins, with the Bucs shellacking Lewis and Clark, 37-0, while Whitworth pulled out a squeaker in the final seconds 20-19. Now that's even!

Easy win over LC

Last week the Pirates rolled over hapless Lewis and Clark as a trio of quarterbacks passed for nearly 500 yards. Drake Conti, Dave Wilson and John Custer alternated at the helm, and along with sophomore running back Mike Heron who gained 83 yards rushing, they led the Whitworth offense. Gary Rasmussen scored two touchdowns, while Craig Collins caught six passes for 99 yards and one touchdown to lead the receivers.

Whitworth's defense was outstanding again, as it notched its third shutout of the year.

Against L & C the "D" picked off seven passes with Rick Spelman and Dave Curtis getting two apiece, while Todd "Whiskey" Spencer, Doug Miller and Kelly Archer got one each.

Women volleyballers beat EWSC twice

Last Tuesday, the women's volleyball team played Eastern Washington State in the Fieldhouse. There were two matches both an "A" and "B" teams.

The Whitworth "B" team, consisting of Sue Boschetti, Terry Haffart, Beth Roll, Mary Riddle, Mary Shadle and Linda Green, won its first match with games of 15-13 and 16-14. They played very well, with good setting and hitting.

The "A" team: Jane Finsterwald, Nancy Haugen, Lynn Kelley, Karan Lyle, Teresa Roberts and Sally Showell, also won their match. Whitworth won the first game 15-3, but lost the second 15-19. They came back to win the third game 15-8. Their hitting was excellent and their serving was very consistent. There were lots of long rallies and the team worked together well.

Immediate enrollment

The Washington State University Tournament is coming up on the weekend of the 14th in Pullman, but they have two home games before that. They host Whitman on November 8th and Gonzaga U. on November 11th.

Senior careers in short

Tomorrow's Linfield game in the final home game of the year and for 14 seniors it will be their final appearance at home in a Whitworth uniform. I want to mention a little about the senior, some have received considerable coverage in the past while others have not. So I wish this to be a chance for them to be recognized.

Band Hatch (19) - a transfer from SPCC and graduate of Central Valley. He has been a starter this year at defensive back and has picked off two passes. He also is used as a kick return specialist.

Dave Curtis (15) - played against Whitworth for EWSC before transferring here. He is a starter at defensive back where he has intercepted two passes this year.

Larry Evaveti (19) - decided to go out for the team after starring on the basketball team. He was working his way into more playing time but unfortunately injured the ligaments in his leg.

Rich Staret (27) - carries a reckless attitude onto the field where he pursues the opposing quarterback from his defensive end position. Lokes to each that quarterback.

Tom Colihan (28) - this is his first year on the team. Has been a top track performer for Whitworth in the last three years. They use him for the deep threat!

Gary Rasmussen (31) - been a starter for the last two years after transferring from SPCC. Also a graduate of Central Valley. He holds the Whitworth record for longest reception, set last year against Eastern.

Brian O'Hara (23) - certainly must be considered a pro prospect. He has been the Pirates leading rusher for the last two years but has been bothered by an ankle injury this year. O'Hara is very quick off the line and a definite breakaway threat.

Roy Minnesuck (34) - compliments the running of his fellow Canadian. He usually is called upon to get the tough yards especially around the goal line.

Steve Boschetti (34) - is the biggest Whitworth player and is not slow for his size. Usually gives the opposing center a tough time up the middle on defense.

Dave Ward (55) - transferred from UP and now is a starter at linebacker. The graduate of Shadle Park in a hard hitter and in on most of the action.

Mark Mills (49) - transferred from Wenatchee Junior College last year and now is a starter on the defensive line.

John Mauch (73) - also a transfer from Wenatchee and is a graduate of Lewis and Clark. He has been seeing a lot of action in the offensive line.

Greg Bohler (79) - has been on the team for three years but hasn't seen much action except on the special teams.

Craig Collins (85) - has seen a lot of action this year after transferring from Wenatchee. He has scored 3 and had his best game last week against LC.
South clinches men's title, West meets Goodsell for women's

by Mike Repovich

The intramural football season will wind up this Sunday with South Warren assured of taking the men's championship, West Warren will meet Goodsell in their season finals and for the women's championship.

In last week's action, South Warren won its sixth straight game and eliminated the Village, 4-5. Goodsell women won twice beating Baldwin 8-0 and East Warren 10-0. In a make-up game, to set up their championship match against West.

South Warren scored twice in the first half and hung on to beat Village while the Goodsell romping were led by Judy Senter's three touchdowns.

In other games Goodsell men after first half, were able to overpower Stewart 8-0 on three touchdown passes by Bill Durkin and a run by John Klingelhofer.

McMillan "A" led by touchdowns from Jim Chase and Jon Schuyba defeated After 4-2. Carlson beat McMillan "B" 2-0 in the other game.

East Warren literally gave West Warren their sixth victory by fortifying. Ballard beat Jenkins 4-0 and Washington ran over South Warren 10-0.

Faculty wins meet

The faculty cross country teams combining Terry Graff, Vanessa Lerry, Peggy Warner, Mark Smith and Karl Zeiger won the team championship in the intramural meet held two weeks ago. South Warren took second in the team championship.

The Zags took an early lead but two goals from Jerry Nnanabu, and one each from Clayton N. and Steve Weber of the Pirates sloshed on to victory by 2-0. The Pirates earlier this year.

Willamette's Dan Hall finished first for the individual championship in Salina but Pacific Lutheran took the team title ahead of Pacific and Linfield. Brian Haffercamp finished eighth for the Pirate's top runner. Other Pirate finishers were Dick Day, 20th; Greg Fox, 25th; Tim Docheff, 35th; Steve Weber, 40th; and Warren Herman, 45th. Herman, who has been one of the Pirate's top runners all season, was sick with the flu, which hurt his chances of finishing higher.

Haffercamp leads harriers

After finishing fifth in the Northwest Conference Championship last weekend, Whitworth harriers compete for the District #1 title tomorrow in Bellingham's Lake Padden Park. This will be the last race for the team unless, of course, of some of them qualify for the national race next week held in Salina, Kansas.

The faculty cross country team, consisting of Terry Graff, Vanessa Lerry, Peggy Warner, Mike Repovich, and Karl Zeiger won the team championship.

The men's team was able to overpower Simon Frasier, Eastern Washington State, Central Washington, Western Washington, Pacific Lutheran and Whitman, for the team title, while the faculty women lead with 10 points. Women's meet.

Whitworth's young team, made up of mostly freshmen, finished ahead of three of those. Lewis and Clark and Whitman, beat the Pirates earlier this year.

Coach Karl Zeiger was pleased with the performance last week and the improvement of most of his runner's times. As far as tomorrow is concerned he said, "I'm looking forward to some good individual performances in the district meet. As a team we'll do our best but in this race each runner is trying to qualify for a berth in the national race. Brian Haffercamp should have a pretty good chance of qualifying."

Other teams involved in the district #1 race tomorrow are Eastern Washington State, Central Washington, Western Washington, P.L.U. and Simon Fraser.

Weather can't stop club improvement

by Steve Weber

Just like the postal service, the Whitworth Soccer Club isn't hindered by rain, nor snow.

Two weeks ago, the Pirates sloshed on to a muddy field for a match against Gonzaga University and played a beautiful game despite the weather. That Saturday morning the Club played in a mixture of rain and snow and near freezing temperatures. They managed to ignore the elements and won the match 4-1.

The Zags took an early lead but two goals from Jerry Nnanabu, and one each from Clayton N. and Bob Patten were more than enough for the win.

After the homecoming victory in foul weather, Whitworth was ready to face a tough Washing-

National fast observance planned

by Lynn Becker

In the midst of forums, coffeehouses, lectures and simulation dinner on world hunger, have you found yourself in frustration, asking, "Well, what can I do?"

The opportunity has come to make a personal commitment and to do something tangible in alleviating world hunger. Monday, November 24, has been set aside by ASWC for "Past for the Hungry," a fast initiated through Congress, is not a religious fast, but primarily a fast organized to create a greater awareness of hunger in the world.

Through flags, college administration, and ASWC funding, every meal card holder, in forfeiting three meals, will be donating $1.60.

Out of the whole pie, 50% of our state’s collected amount will go into our own state food banks, and 25% of this amount will be donated to the Spokane Food Bank, which needs support at this time. Eastern Washington farmers have donated approximately $49,000 worth of wheat and the remaining 25% of our donations will go to the transportation of this seven and one half train car loads of wheat to the west coast.

Meal cards can be turned in at Saga on November 33, the Sunday night before the fast. For those students on the 14 meal plan, three meals will be taken off. Meal cards can then be picked up the next day at Saga. If you are leaving early for Thanksgiving vacation, give your meal card to a friend who can turn it in for you. If you are going on a meal vacation, you may pick up your card at the Chaplin’s Office.

Even off-campus students may participate in this fast by donating the money they would normally spend on a day’s worth of the hungry. Make checks payable to “Past for the Hungry” and mail them to: East 224 Sharp Spokane, Wa. 99202

Your questions may be answered by calling (509) 227-8913. You may also deposit your checks at any Old National Bank branch, depositing it in the “Past for the Hungry” account.

Rape center presents program

by Ann Holfield

With the increase of rape here in Spokane and the recent coverage as the problem in national news magazines, a new consciousness of the problem of rape has come to the Whitworth campus. Last Tuesday evening, Arlene Green, a social worker, from the Spokane Rape Crisis Center, spoke to a group of about 40 to 50 women from Baldwin-Jenkins halls on the various aspects of rape.

The Spokane Crisis Center was started a year and a half ago, in April. In the 18 months since it opened, the Spokane branch helped approximately 200 clients, which is estimated that only one out of every thirteen women report the crime, and of those not all seek the Rape Crisis Center for help. That, perhaps, gives the reader some idea of the high incidence of this most commonly committed violent crime, in the Spokane area.

The Spokane Rape Crisis Center is part of a nation wide network of organizations dedicated to the prevention of rape and to helping the victims when rape occurs. They deal not only with rape but with all types of sex crimes. The Spokane center is manned by a staff of four, three of which are social workers. The staff consists of four members aiding EDM-RAPE.

The Rape Centers program consists of two phases: counseling and responding to the needs of the victim, and education of the police and public to the problem.

The policy of the center is to believe the victim no matter what. They are available with support and legal, medical and personal advice for as long as the victim needs them. The staff attempts to help the victim and her family overcome the trauma entailed by the crime, and to help them to return to normal life.

The second phase of the program, education, has been extremely successful. In the year and a half since their arrival in Spokane, the Crisis Center estimates that they have reached over 10,000 people. Their educational program includes instruction in how to help others to deal with the crime, being responsible to the victim and gather the information necessary for a capture and possible conviction.

The legal aspects of rape are not as bad, at least in Washington, as they are in many other states. "It’s not as traumatic to go to court today as it used to be," Green said. "I think the judges in Spokane are very aware of the problem and are doing a much better job of conviction."

Recently, new rape laws were passed in Washington. It is now illegal for a defense attorney to bring up the victim’s past unless it is directly involved in the case, as in the instance of having previously and consensual sex with the defendant. There are now three degrees of rapes. First degree rape is rape that includes the use of a weapon, physical force, breaking and entering, kidnapping or other felonious crimes. A 20 year sentence with a three year mandatory prison term is the penalty for conviction of first degree rape. Second degree rape carries a ten year prison sentence and third degree, five years.

Student government seeks openness, informality

by Sally Mueller

A campaign to open up student government has become a central concern of Presidents Council and student government officers. The actions that are being taken in this campaign were discussed at a meeting of ASWC, 10 and 17 at Presidents Council meetings, along with other concerns.

The attempt to open up government has three aspects. A step that has already been taken concerns making it easier for students to introduce resolutions to Presidents Council. Any student who has a concern will have room to introduce resolutions to Presidents Council. Any student who has a concern will have room to introduce resolutions to Presidents Council. Any student who has a concern will have room to introduce resolutions to Presidents Council.

The second action is to hold banquets inviting the students as well as to operations of the college. The first banquet for Warren Hall and marked students was held last Tuesday night. Other banquets will be held in December, Kevin Rudolph, vice president of ASWC told Presidents Council that the purpose of the dinner is to "talk and listen with the administration. We feel that students have a right to know about the side of Whitworth that they never see now."

If the four all-campus dinners go well, ASWC plans to hold a meeting every month to focus on an institutional issue, open to the first 150 students who sign up.

A third action is a questionaire designed by Craig Grant, ASWC president, to try to define what the values of students are and how they want things run.

"We want to hold down meetings and give students enough information so that they can make intelligent input," she said. The questionaire will also ask the students feel about the performance of student body officers, their dorm president, and the administration.

Next semester, there are plans to rotate Presidents Council meetings to various dorms to make the meetings more available to students. Grant hopes that as a result of these efforts more students will get involved and offer additional ideas for opening student government to students demands and wishes.

Also discussed at the November 10 meeting were several resolutions. A resolution to support the National Day of Fasting by donating funds to CHRP, an organization involved in the battle against hunger, for every student who participates in the fast was approved. Presidents Council will match the $1.60 given by Saga and the administration to bring the total collected for each student who participates to $3.60.

In another response to an international issue, the council voted to send a letter to the president of Uruguay expressing sympathy for the welfare of June Artola, a member of the World Student Christian Federation, who has been arrested and tortured by the government of Uruguay. Supporters of the resolution told the council that the letter would be given attention, because Latin American governments see students as possessing much power.

Pending for the Points, this year’s alternative to an annual, was approved. The extra money received will allow the staff to include slightly more color in the final year magazine.

Change of the Athletic Fee to the Intercollegiate Activity Fee was also approved at the meeting. The $6.00 fee, paid by students at the beginning of the year, will now be divided into two accounts, one for club sports and other intramurals and one for academically related activities. The resolution as on call as a bylaw by council members and faculty to determine how the money should be allocated. The hockey club and Mock Democratic Convention have already requested money from these funds.
INTERN POSITIONS AVAILABLE WITH STATE

Olympia—If you are a junior, senior or graduate student looking to expand your educational experiences or have a desire to become involved in practical application of textbook theories, an internship with a unit of local government in Washington State may be of great benefit to you.

The Intern Clearinghouse, a program coordinated through the Washington State Office of Community Development, currently lists 50 positions with local jurisdictions throughout the state for Winter Quarter/Spring Semester placement.

The positions include a wide variety of fields and locations and present an opportunity for students to take a first hand look at the workings of government at all levels.

Examples of positions are administrative assistant posts with agencies in Auburn and Seattle; human resource and physical planning responsibilities with agencies in Colville, Everett, Port Townsend and Walla Walla; juvenile court counseling in Franklin and Kispay counties; and positions with police departments in the central portion of the state.

Some positions are salaried. Others are volunteer. All are offered on a credit generating basis depending on institutional/departamental policy.

Applications, available from your school’s Placement Office, should be completed and returned to Chris Holden at OOD, 106 Insurance Building, Olympia, Washington, 98504. OOD forwards resumes to local government offices with interest openings.

Deadline for application is November 19, 1975 in order that placement for Winter Quarter can be made. Call OOD’s toll free information number, 1-800-562-5677, if you have any questions about the program or application procedure.

MOCK DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION SLATED FOR MARCH

A Mock Democratic Convention is in the planning stages, aimed for the spring of 1976. March 12-14, colleges (both state and private) will send delegations to Gonzaga University to the convention, which is so far being sponsored by Whitworth and G.U.

Several important political figures are being considered as speakers, and since there are so many Democratic presidential candidates, it is expected that some of them will also attend.

A very successful MDC was held four years ago, also at G.U., with Whitworth students holding many key positions. With the uncertainty of the current convention because of the numerous presidential candidates, next year’s convention can be no less exciting.

Anyone who is interested should contact Craig Grant, ASWC President or sign up in the political science department or in student activities. It is possible to get 15 credit for it.

TROUBLE IN TEMPE

(CPS)—Arizona State University student Rich Hall veered off the interstate and narrowly, suffered a head-on collision and narrowly escaped a jail term for possession of marijuana.

Hall’s troubles began when he drove his bicycle on a campus street while trying to avoid a puddle of water. Campus police officer was watching and slapped the speech major with a ticket for “failure to follow a bike path.”

Hall ignored the ticket, thinking the police would forget about the matter. He was wrong. Three weeks later, Hall was jailed by a local police officer. It was the campus police, armed with a warrant for his arrest.

The campus police drove Hall to the local police station in Tempe where he was booked with failure to obey a citation. After he was told to empty his pockets, Hall pulled out the small amount of marijuana, sending the campus police into a frenzy.

“They acted like they had just busted the Tempe connection,” said the local police. “They looked at the ASU cops as if to say, ‘you’re not going to bust him for that, are you?’ But they did—apparently the first dope collar the campus force had made in some time.

“The ASU cops booked me for possession but they had to ask someone at the jail how to spell marijuana,” Hall said.

Funds Needed for Accident Victim

A fund to cover hospital costs for a Spokane high school student injured July 21 in a diving accident has been formed, The Tim Morton Rehabilitation Fund will help Shadle Park’s best all-around athlete, who is now listed as a quadriplegic at the University of Washington’s Neurological Center in Seattle, and is making incredible progress.

The physical therapy charges are $7,000 per month, and Morton will need at least another 60 days of therapy. Although the Crippled Children’s Society has agreed to pay for all therapy after October 1, Morton family is still left with a $10,000 debt.

Morton’s father is a former Whitworth student. Any contributions—no matter how small—can be made at any Old National Bank Branch.

LOWER PHOSPHATES DON’T LOWER ALGAE

(CPS)—The phosphate ban instituted in Indiana in 1974 has not lowered phosphate levels in Indiana water sufficiently to kill algae, according to John Bell, associate professor of civil engineering at Purdue University. Bell argued that phosphate detergents should be allowed back in the market in the state.

Bell claimed that the proper place to remove phosphates from water is at sewage treatment plants. Bell said when an inexpensive method of removing phosphates from water is developed it will be more profitable to do it at a sewage treatment plant than banning all phosphate detergents.

All the news staff members and production help are employed by the Whitworthian Publishing Company. The Whitworthian is an official publication of the students of Whitworth College and is produced twice monthly, except during vacations, by students. Circulation is 1,500. Opinions expressed are those of the writer and do not necessarily reflect the views of The Whitworthian or the Whitworth Student Council. The Whitworthian does not guarantee products advertised. Letters to the editor should be no longer than 250 words, typed, and received by the Friday previous to publication.
To the Editor:

Due to an oversight on my part during the interview, the members of the Worship Committee were not mentioned individually in the Nov. 7 article on Campus Worship.

I would like to now recognize those people, they are the backbone of our worship experience: Joyce Kissinger, Leslie Vogel, Debbie Fuller, Kollin Winterer, Shean Bond, Barry Andrews, Harlon Betts, Dean Warner, Kaleo Walau.

We should all be really grateful for their ongoing, weekly efforts to provide the campus community the possibility for meaningful worship each Sunday.

To the Editor:

In a few days we will be driving and flying to reunite with our families to celebrate Thanksgiving. Craig R. Jordan will not. At 11:36 last Saturday Mr. Jordan, a 17 year old black youth, was fatally shot in the back by the Spokane Police. Officer John Moore responded to a burglary call on the East side of Spokane. He shot the youth after he thought the youth was going to shoot at him. The only thing in Craig Jordan's hand was a glove. One would have to ask how Craig could possibly have even appeared to fire at Officer Moore since Craig's back was facing him. Officer Moore's bullet struck "Jordan in the back, went through his heart, bounced off a bone and lodged in his abdomen".

Jack Webb will never include a racial murder in Adam-12, but that was what happened. The black community in Spokane in one of its rare moments of solidarity have forcefully asked that an independent investigatory body be made up to investigate this situation that would be composed of news reporter, clergyman, a businessman and an attorney.

I strongly urge our three new council people elect to take a strong moral leadership in this issue as we can be assured that those now in power will not. There are many irregularities here: the Jordan family was not notified of the death until the next morning, four hours after the investigation was completed. There are many reports from black citizens that police officers pull guns on them for such routine matters as a traffic ticket.

Officer Moore is still commissioned to investigate and other charges of racism in the police department. Officer Moore should be put on temporary suspension and if he has violated the law he should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

Our is a world that fascinates itself by watching hours of police violence on T.V. We are sending our police to be an army against the citizens and not for it. Shows such as "S.W.A.T." do nothing less than honor fascist ideological concepts of a population that is endangered, and must wage war against the enemy. In 1970 the enemy was Jewish, in 1975 it is black. We are a country whose national security is endangered by an increasing romanticized and violent police force. After 200 years the revolution is needed now more than ever.

RECYCLE YOUR PAPER—SAVE A TREE

Sophomore Tim Anderson and Junior Nancy Schenkel are responsible for the green recycling boxes (soon to be replaced by barrels) seen around campus. Paid for five hours a week by the A.S.W.C., Anderson and Schenkel generally spend closer to fifteen collecting the recyclables and taking them to the Spokane Recycling Center.

The A.S.W.C. has allotted about $300 for the purpose of recycling. It goes toward the salaries, paint for the containers, and transportation costs (the money received from the recycling center is also used for this). The A.S.W.C. funding ends on December 1 and at that time, the program will be re-evaluated.

Approximately 4,650 pounds of paper have been recycled this year, which means 43 trees have been saved. Anderson is hoping that the entire Whitworth community will get involved in an effort to make the recycling program complete. As he commented, "We've made it so easy to throw (things) away and so difficult to re-use."

Food service woes: the saga of Saga

by Ted Romberger

Have you ever wondered why there is only a $4.80 price difference between the 20 meal plan and 14 meal plan tickets? If you have, you are not alone. In fact, Dowd said that the college hires an outside food service corporation because the school feels it should devote itself to the academic needs of the students, and not get involved with the problems of food catering. He also said that Saga can get better food prices than a small college could because it buys in volumes.

Dowd said the company's profit philosophy is "not to make a killing," but to plan for long term goals with a realistic amount of profit. He said the company makes about 26% profit nationally.

As a business, Saga Food Service is hired by the school to provide all food services on the college's campus. Dowd said the college hires an outside food service corporation because the school feels it should devote itself to the academic needs of the students, and not get involved with the problems of food catering. He also said that Saga can get better food prices than a small college could because it buys in volumes.

The three year contract, which expires next year, is in conflict with the Student Co-op, according to Dowd. Last year the HUD Snack Bar, also operated by Saga, lost $3,000 Dowd. He said it would have been $4,800 if Expo '74 had not been going on. At the same time the Co-op was started, ABC was given oral consent by the Saga manager that it could operate, said Jean Reil, snack bar manager. Dowd says there needs to be an agreement between both sides as to what the Co-op is allowed to sell.

The Co-op isn't the only reason, he said, that the HUD Snack Bar is losing money. Dowd said that research has been done to determine how to make the Snack Bar more efficient and self-supporting. He said any losses incurred at the Snack Bar are added into the student's meal costs. To be successful, he said, the Snack Bar needs to cater to 25-50 people an hour. At present, 30 people an hour use the facility now, he said.

Bell said there has been a proposal submitted to the HUD Board of Control to remodel the HUD under the existing laws. It approved by the HUD Board of Control, it will be submitted to President's Council for approval.

Also a part of the Saga contract is their upkeep and maintenance of all fixed equipment (ovens, freezer storage, dishwashers, etc.). Dowd said that all fixed equipment is supplied by the school. China and silverware houses are supplied by Saga. At the HUD, Saga pays 10% of the Snack Bar and Leavitt Dining Hall for its food costs. Leavitt Dining Hall is renting free except for maintenance costs.

Gray said a really good Saga food doesn't "seem to taste good," in the dining atmosphere. He always goes to the cafeteria for good food in a restaurant atmosphere; it would "seem to taste better. Monotony breakers such as picnics, home style lunches and meals at the College are \

Gray is responsible for providing a daily menu. He said the Saga menu is not as starchy because the non-starchy items are too expensive to maintain a continuous supply list. Dowd said that sweet potato is too expensive to have each day and still remain within the food budget.

Despite the old facilities, morale is very good among the employees, according to Ted Christian, student employee manager. The dining hall employs about 120 students, each averaging about 6-7 hours a week. He said student employees are paid jointly by the college and Saga.

Among the improvements needed, Dowd said, is more needed facilities in a larger space for catering and banquets. The faculty dining hall has been outgrown, he said. He said most groups are between 60-100 people and present facilities don't accommodate the larger groups comfortably.

Dowd said possibilities in the other campus buildings to provide a solution to this need include Warren Lounge, Baldwin-Jenkins Lounge, faculty lounge, conference room, and the blue carpet area in the HUD. He said a complete remodeling of Leavitt Dining Hall is not feasible since the building is too old.

Successful year planned for music dept.

by Marcia Kelley

What is Crescendo? Who is Handel? These words are as common to all music students as pizza and Lendaman to Whitworth students. Understanding the "Who, What and Where's" of music is not necessary to appreciate and enjoy one of Whitworth's finest resources, the music department.

Included in the music department is the Jazz Ensemble, under the direction of Dr. John Evans, better known as "Doc." The Whitworth Jazz Ensemble appeared in "The Late Night Show" during homecoming week. Their recent practice includes Swing Band, Riki Kinton and modern materials as "Alone," made popular by the group Blood, Sweat and Tears.

Music major Chuck Laird has developed a more casual approach to jazz. Laird has initiated the group "Friday at Six" which will perform at 6 p.m. on Fridays (naturally) in the HUD. "Friday at Six" is composed of thirteen music students who are also in the Jazz Ensemble. Laird said Friday at Six will be similar to a coffee-house. Come and relax after a week of school work. "Bring a cup of coffee or come and dance!

Sunday, Dec. 1 at 4 p.m. in the Opera House, Dr. Thomas Tavenor will direct Handel's masterpiece the "Messiah." Whitworth choir and chorus singers, numbering 180, will combine with Maltby Community Church choir and soloists. The Massed choir of 500 will feature choruses and soloists. Come early to hear Whitworth's Madrigal Singers perform in the lobby of the Opera House.

The Madrigal Singers are a select group of eighteen Whitworth music students. Most of the music they perform comes from the Renaissance era, but they also perform some modern music. Directed by Dr. Thomas Tavenor, the group is composed of nine women and nine men.

Unknown or unnoticed by Whitworth students is the college Orchestra led by Sister Xavier Mary Conshal, a former Whitworth student who is also director of the school's Concert Band. The orchestra is composed of string instruments, the Symphony orchestra is virtually unknown. This smaller group accompanies the choir and will be included in the orchestra performing the "Messiah.

November 28 in Cowles Auditorium at 8 p.m. The orchestra will perform a program under the direction of Antonio Brigo, world renowned conductor. Student director Anne Cowles, violinist in both Whitworth's Orchestra and Symphony, states, "We are all very excited! It is a real privilege to have someone who has conducted the National Symphony."

The program includes soloist Paul Roland, one of the foremost violinists in the United States today. Both are combined into a great opportunity which Whitworth students should attend and enjoy.

The Concert Band performed several weeks earlier in Forum. The band, under the direction of Evans placed both classical and contemporary music. The Concert Band and Jazz Ensemble are planning an international tour.

December 9 at 8 p.m. in Cowles Auditorium, Concert Band, Jazz Ensemble and Madrigal Singers will perform a joint concert. They will be performing music of Americans and Christmas.

Remember, you don't need a background in music to enjoy these events. Now that you are aware of the events sponsored by the Music Department, please attend.
Women Concerned Column
Female awareness best rape prevention tactic

by Liz Peterson

Every ten minutes a rape is committed.

Rape is the most commonly committed violent crime and the least reported. It is estimated that only one out of every ten women raped report it.

There are many myths about rape. This serious and frightening crime is an ever-growing problem and we need to know the facts in order to deal with it.

A number of the common misbeliefs about rape are "women ask for it", "only sick or insane men rape", "only strangers rape", "any woman can prevent rape", "she really wants to", "rape is a sexual act", "it won't happen to me", "it only happens to other types of women".

The myths about rape are social commentaries on a woman's place in an ancient society, a society where she had no legal, social or human rights. Even though the status of women has changed from possession to person, the myths still remain.

It is true that any behavior of a woman can be misconstrued as being "provocative".

It is also true that most rapists are distinguishable from " sane" men and in about 60% of all rape cases, the victim and the rapist are friends, relatives or acquaintances.

Extreme violence is used or threatened in most rapes and many involve two or more rapists. Close to 75% of rapes are planned. Rape is a hostile and aggressive act and rape victims come from social and economic classes, races and ages. A high proportion of rapes occur in the victim's home.

Within the Spokane community, the Spokane Rape Crisis Network provides information about rape, what to do if it happens to you and where to go. The Rape Crisis Network can supply referrals, counseling, support service, crime victims counseling and party reporting. They have a 24-hour crisis phone, 624-RAPE. When reporting a rape to the police the number to call is 456-2233.

A patrol officer will be sent to wherever the victim is. The officer will take a brief report and can provide transportation to the hospital if necessary. Most of the officers in Spokane are sensitive to the victims feelings.

In order to better your chances of protecting yourself against being raped, you must first realize that it can and might happen to you. According to authorities, there are several precautions a woman can take to protect herself.

There are a number of dangerous places where rapists have been known to wait for victims. More than half of all rapes either begin or end in the streets.

Rapists choose the most vulnerable victims and are discouraged if there are several women together out and about. They know that rapists prefer easy prey and there is tremendous strength in numbers.

When you are going somewhere alone plan ahead to know exactly where you are going and let at least one trusted friend know.

Most rapes occur at night but not all of them. The element of surprise is a rapist's best offense.

Whenever you are walking on streets, stay close to the curb. At night, always try to choose a well lighted area and stay away from streets with a lot of bars. If you are on an unlighted street walk in the middle of the street until you reach a well lit street to walk on. Walk briskly and confidently. You must give the impression that you know where you are going, with no hesitation or worry about getting there. Don't look as though you are daydreaming. Don't look vulnerable, look aggressive and strong.

The clothes you are wearing are important because if you are attired it is virtually impossible to run in tight confining dresses or slacks or platforms or clogs. If you are confronted with a situation in which you are restricted by your shoes, don't hesitate to kick them off and run barefoot.

If you think you are being followed, cross the street. Grill, yell and pound on the door. The police are there to help you. If you see a car following you make it faster than crying "Rape" or "Help, help."

When going to your car always have your keys ready in your hand. They can be a useful weapon against a would-be attacker. Always check the back of your car before entering it. Don't loiter around your car after you've checked it, get in right away. Park as close as possible to your home or business where you are headed. Lock your doors while you are in the car and when you park it. Try not to park in dark or deserted streets or parking lots.

You must plan ahead. Self-protection starts by thinking out how you would respond to an attack. After you have taken the precautions of staying away from dangerous places as much as possible, you must try to keep calm. It may sound almost impossible considering the situation but you might be able to think fast enough to get away if you can stay cool.

If the rapist has a weapon it is extremely dangerous to physically attempt to resist him. If he has a weapon that you are sure he will use it. Try talking to him. Use words that make him see you as a person being taken advantage of this might deter him. Unless you are trained in self defense attempting to fight with him could result in your getting killed.

Remember what he looks like, what he is wearing. How tall he is, color of his hair and exactly what he says to you. Most rapists have raped before and they often have a certain set of words almost like a script they use, so remembering what he said can help in finding him.

If he is unarmed your chances of getting away are much better. You must remember what he expects you to submit. He does not expect you to physically harm him. Catching him off guard for an instant could be the chance you need to run.

Common articles such as purses, combs, brushes, keys, a book or newspaper can be used to stun your attacker long enough for you to run. It you get an opportunity to do so, scream as loud as you can. That means really let loose a blood curdling scream. Don't whimper or cry, yell and scream out forcefully and sound serious.

When you strike out at a rapist aim for vulnerable areas like his face, eyes, nose and neck. They are very easily hurt and can possibly disable an attacker long enough for you to get away. Screeching across his face with these sharp articles or holding a crumpled newspaper across his nose will stun him.

The idea of kicking him in the groin is an overrated means of self-defense. If you kick an attacker, he won't kick back. If he knows the area he will protect and the least likely for you to successfully hit. It will only infuriate him further.

Another tactic that has been a little more successful has been acting crazy. Smile, laugh or say incoherent phrases. In this way, he will not be able to keep his guard up long enough for you to get away. If he is drunk he may try to follow you, throw stones or throw rocks. If he does, simply yell and run.

If an opportunity arises for you to get away, get away. Use whatever the cost to the rapist is, take it. He feels there is nothing wrong with him violating you and hurting you, possibly believing that you can't hesitate. If you have a chance to get away take it, don't just get off guard. If you do, he might follow you and waylay you at a later time.

There are numerous types of things a woman can carry with her if she plans to be walking alone at night. The Purun or air horn is a device that projects an ear-splitting noise that might frighten off an attacker. It can usually be purchased at hardware stores. Most women have been known to stagger and frighten off attackers, too. Mace, though it can be very effective, is very often dangerous to the user and it is unpredictable.

According to the law, in defending your self you can use force equal to the force of your attacker. Excessive force can result in your being prosecuted on criminal charges.

In the same way you have been told what to do and how to prepare yourself for fires and natural disasters you must think ahead to the pos­ sibility of being raped. It is better to think it over now than to find out later. Thinking of this crime will not make it happen to you, but it may save you.

Avoid the dangerous places and plan ahead. You may never use that knowledge but it is well worth having.
Play review

Play stresses comedy, skips philosophy

by Cynthia Reynolds

Last weekend's production of "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead," was not presented as an intensely philosophical play. It was presented as a comedy, and in that respect it was a success.

Comedy is not easy to facilitate on the stage, but Sherard's direction, assisted by Arthur Krug, the evening was one of amusement. Timing, which is of prime importance in comedy, was nicely achieved by most of the cast. Some difficult lines that require precise timing, (as in the question-quest game between Rosencrantz and Guildenstern), were smoothly delivered. Lines spoken on top of one another produced a hilarious effect and avoided sounding stilted.

The play's effectiveness relied heavily on its two main characters, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, to carry it. Les Schreiber was excellent as Rosencrantz. He was so consistent in his character that he seemed not to be working at doing so. He allowed the audience to relax and believe him. In the role he was both delightfully stupid and distantly sharp.

Jean Sherard tried hard to carry his share of the load. The two chief roles were exhausting ones (they are on stage nearly the whole performance) and the burden began to show in Sherard's performance. He achieved an excellent air of casualness with Guildenstern, however, and offered a definite contrast to his companion.

Dirk Straton, as the Player, was convincing. His presence and mannerisms (learned for the play from a ballet student) gave him the egocentric air of a man who has to "come on" because he is always "on." Straton's voice took on a monotone during some of his lengthy monologues, but the antics of his Tragedians in the backgrounds. This scruffy band of actors brought interest and an air of genuine reality to the whole performance.

The costumes in the production were outstanding in both design and workmanship. It was obvious a great deal of work was invested in the entire production.

The production was effective comedy. If you, out, you enjoyed an evening of light entertainment. Those who view Stoppard's play with a more serious eye, though, may have been disappointed. Most of the powerful satires, if possible, were smoothed out in the play about death, direction, and relationships were overshadowed by the humorous approach.

Stoppard intended the play to be funny and to be enjoyed. But a playwright doesn't waste words. What Stoppard has to say about "everyman" in "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead" is not a laughing matter.
Hunger vigil strikes appetite for awareness

by Katherine Bobb

What is it like to be hungry and have no privacy? That was the question postured by students recently faced this question by fasting and living in the HUB for two days. Organized through the Chaplain's Office by the Hunger Task Force, the Hunger Vigil was neither a religious fast or a demonstration. It was a chance for students to work on their own questions about hunger, poverty, and alternate life styles.

At the first group meeting Tuesday evening, Joe Novenson, chaplain's assistant who helped organize the vigil, said, "Some wanted to share some of their expectations. Some wanted group support to help them fast. A few wanted to experience the lack of privacy and living with fewer possessions. Some thought it would be a good idea for them to try."

One student later wrote, "I wanted to see if I could be friendly and keep up my relations with people while being hungry. It isn't easy, it takes strength..."

Joe Novenson told the participants that while they would be going to their usual classes and activities, they were asked not to return to their rooms. They were to go to all meals but limit themselves to water. "Hot, cold, or regular," he said, "as one girl put it.

The group was not there to make people feel guilty about eating, but some observers said that it made them feel more aware of the hunger problem because they knew that people on campus were going without food. Participants knew they would be eating again, but realized that many people don't have this assurance.

At the second group meeting, students were asked to express some of their feelings on how the fast was affecting them. Some mentioned the positive effects of fasting and said they felt better than usual by not eating for a change. Others noticed a slight light-headedness, appetite towards studies, and a constant hunger.

Two girls had gone off-campus shopping, and said they realized how much eating is a part of our lives by counting the number of restaurants along Division St., and noticing people buying fast foods. One person said, "Most of all I have been hit hard by now preoccupied with food out culture."

As they broke fast Thursday morning, many were surprised at how good food tasted after going only two days without it. Reactions of participants at the end of the fast were varied. One student wrote, "I didn't like not being able to eat, even after I was hungry, I was preoccupied with food because I knew that I couldn't, or wouldn't be able to eat if I wanted to."

Another said, "This fast has had a huge effect on my values, people are important...belongings aren't."

Most people in the group came away from the vigil with a heightened concern for the world hunger problem. As one girl said, "I never thought, when I stopped my drinking bag over the blue shag rug in the HUB, that I wouldn't eat If I wanted to."

The information includes circulation figures for the individual publications, format, editor's name, requirements, preferences, pay scale, whether or not the magazine is open to freelancers and sometimes comments on the reliability of a particular market.

For a beginner, the book offers useful "how-to" advice in a profanity section, which is smaller than the table of contents lead a reader to believe. The section, titled "Freelance Writing," gives instruction on using the Writer's Market, how to prepare and submit manuscripts and general advice to budding writers.

It's important, at least for beginners, to understand and best use the information in the book, which contains listings of book publishers, play producers, author's agents and greeting card markets as well as periodicals.

While the preface is well-written and contains practical advice, its tone in a little heavy-handed, almost condescending, Jacobs is encouraging to novice writers, however, and (in a remarkable difference from usual advice) suggests that beginning writers try top markets first, then only if their work isn't accepted, go to smaller markets. He makes this suggestion as an idea that an agent in essential to get published in a well-known publication.

He also makes the sound point that writers shouldn't be too snobbish, or consider themselves "above" writing for magazines of a less than literary nature like "confessions" or "quality" fiction. Instead, writers would be wise to research the needs or preferences of a particular publication and make a decision. Confessions are published sans bylines, some established writers earn extra bucks this way.

There are two basic ways to use the book. One is with an already written piece in mind, searching for the listings for a suitable market. Choose several that seem appropriate, then get several issues of each magazine and study them for style. Rank them in order of suitability, then submit your manuscript to the first. If it's snubbed, keep going down the list.

The second way is to scan the listings for inspiration—the needs or preferences of a particular publication may trigger an idea in your mind for an article or story. When you consider your writing with a certain editor's needs in mind, your chances of publication increases greatly.

At $12.50, the book's price may seem steep, especially for college students. But it's truly a bargain for anyone interested in writing...
Thanksgiving fiction: 'A Special Sharing'

by Pauline Gims

"Oh, Timmy, look at the big turkey! I never thought they got that big!" She wet her lips as the perfectly browned turkey with sweet juice running down its sides was laid in the center of the table.

"Jodi, look over there. Corn on the cob with butter on it," he emphasized the word butter and jumped up and down in delight.

Through the window they could see each dish, heated with steaming food, sitting on the white-laced tablecloth, around the turkey which sat plumped like a king surveying his contented subjects. The boundaries of that beautiful kingdom were marked with white china plates, with an endless circle of served green beans. Laid from the candlestick, standpikarcked in the crystal goblets, reflected from the silver knives and forks, and bounced into millions of crossed rays upon the china.

Jodi watched the people settle into wide­armed, contented chairs and unfold napkins onto their laps. Her eyes widened as the knife cut into the tender meat which she could almost taste melting in her mouth.

"It's getting cold," Timmy pulled the collar of his coat closer to his neck.

Jodi rubbed away the fog her breath had formed on the window and glanced one final glance at the cozy gathering. With finality, they were leaving Mr. Burn's chicken farm on the other side of town where they bought their weekly supply of eggs. The two miles home was spent in silence as Jodi tried to keep her head off the cold. Jodi hugged her shoulders together and thrust tight fists into her coat pocket. Unfortunately, the right pocket had a hole, but she remained determined. As the shadowing flames in the fireside and the pitcher of hot cider beside the steaming potatoes.

They passed the small shops and Chip's Grocery Store. After turning left they entered more clumps of houses. There were no street lights along these remote winding roads. Across the early evening sky, tiny fakes began to dot and pale in the air. Jodi tried to grab as many as she could, but they disappeared magically in her hands.

"Mama said she would have a surprise for us when we get home," Jodi skipped across the road in anticipation. She knew that they didn't have much, not since the bread had been sold, but she knew Mama would prepare something special for Thanksgiving.

Finally they came to an unpaved road that led away from the town into a silent wooded area. Timmy saw a corn they had lighted a lone light breaking the gloom to invite them to enter the threshold upon which it shone. There was a warmth that grew larger and was a simple light for the two travelers, and within seconds they burst upon that threshold into the arms and kiss beneath of Mama.

"Now, children wash your hands and get ready for dinner. Later this evening we will meet some friends who will share our meal.

"But Mama, who would come?" Timmy glanced puzzled at the wooden table set for three. He also secretly wondered if they would have enough food for everyone. Guiltily he kept that thought to himself. Mama just smiled and told them to hurry.

The table was set with Mama's blue china. Store-bought paper napkins were folded neatly beside each plate with a shiny fork on each. His light flickered from a pair of tall candles in the center of the table. A small fire crackled near them, and Jodi thought it couldn't be nicer than the big fire and large table they had seen earlier that evening. Snow flurried past the window, tucking the earth to sleep beneath a white blanket.

Although they had no crystal goblets, sparkling cups set by each plate filled with sweet­cold milk. A freshly baked loaf of brown bread, each with a fragrant satisfaction to all hungry eyes. Plum puddings cut like flowers were scattered amidst tomatoes and lettuce. And beside the bread spread a platter of small corn-on-the­cobs, with a slab of butter, enough for all.

"Corn with butter just like at the big house except better," it was better for Timmy because he would get to eat these. Then Mama brought in a tray with a turkey the third size of the one they had seen through the window. But neither seemed to notice in their unbelief that they too had a turkey in the order of their table serving, perhaps, a more meager kingdom but no less candlestick.

Their best heads for a simple prayer expressing the gratitude to the One who had made this all possible. After grace had been said, Timmy and Jodi knew that this was their first of a meal which the Garmon's who live in the big house had more to be thankful for. Money, they have big­ger and more things?"

"Sometimes, Timmy, it is those who have less that have more to be thankful for because they understand the little things that make life pleasant. Perhaps you will understand better when we meet our friends," Timmy and Jodi regained puzzled, however, and wondered who and where the guests would arrive.

Finally each beamed a satisfied sigh and pushed away empty plates that had been filled at least once. "But Mama, I suddenly remembered, we don't have enough food left for the guests."

"Don't worry, I've saved enough. But now you must put on your coats so we can meet our friends at the Big Pine." Mama directed the remnants of the loaf into a bag which was filled with half­ripened corn and radishes that had grown in their own garden.

The children were excited with the thought of seeing through the newly fallen snow, although they wondered who would eat half­green corn. Traveling into the wooded hill, the left behind perfectly formed footprints that startled the naked shrubbery that was the full moon revealed. The Big Pine stood alone in the center of a small clearing, and Jodi looked around anxiously to spy any of their friends, but not a shadow moved.

"Where are they, Mama?"

"First we must lay the table," And Mama scurried to it, eyeing the corn on the ground, and spread it on the snowy cloth. "We just wait and let our friends come un­disturbed."

She motioned the children to sit on the far side of the clearing. Timmy and Jodi had begun to understand, and it wasn't long before a few magpies and sparrows alighted to peck at the crumbs. As if the evening were enchanted, a young doe emerged from the shadows into the moonlit clearing nibbling radishes in her path.

The three allowed the bouquet to continue undisturbed while various wild creatures made cutaneous movements at the sound of the fire. This was a special moment when we meet our friends.

Author Jonathan Kozol presented his educational philosophy in 'Teacher's Corner'.

"At the beginning of this talk, Kozol had warned his audience "not to try to take notes," He mentioned that he had outlined and then stated that "I've determined that when I make a speech, I'm going to make it so screwed up, that you're never going to be able to get enough information for all those statements."

If that was his object, then it was one of the few things he succeeded in doing. Not only did his listeners not get "enough information for all those little Roman numerals," they didn't get much information at all. Those points that he did manage to make were so disjointed and dispersed by stories that most were lost or disconnected in the confusion.

Kozol centered his talk on the theme that "the future of public schools in political indoctrination." He spoke of public education as 12 years of mandatory self­deification and self­degenerateization. He claimed that public schools emphasized progress rather than values, like truth, justice and equality.

He also spoke on the need for racial and educational equality. "Schools are programmed to train and educate students in such a way that they will fulfill the parents' role in society. The children of wealthy parents are well­educated and become socially respectable. The children of poor parents are trained to fulfill their parents' role as the servants of society."

My journalistic contribution this week is admittedly somewhat lacking. I've struggled with a variety of topics and approaches ranging from the death of Presidents and Generalists to an Idaho law which breaks ties in elections by drawing the winner's name from a hat.

But the product has only been a call from the Sierra Club about wasting paper. The fact is, I'm not the one who's on the horn.

More importantly, I'm not alone. The library and HUB are filled with confused whispers that reveal a disturbing despondency. The talk is being made by the faculty, many of whom struggle to get classes and, for this column and for classes, simply isn't here.

A subtle conspiracy? Perhaps, if the conspirators print the schedule. The fact is we're past due the break that is just now starting. The Thanksgiving fire truck shows up just in time to molest the ashes. To be effective within the Whitworth Fall Semester schedule, the Pilgrims should have actressed a month ago. As it stands, their celebration presents only a dangerous illusion.

Anticipated for weeks as the save-all for classes deteriorating in the stagnant melancholy that precedes it, Thanksgiving rarely produces much more than guilt and frustration. Thoughts of unfulfilled term papers and late assignments getting later untwist well-stuffed stomachs; family and home town friends provide irresistible alternatives to well-intended hours of study.

I realize the Thanksgiving break makes for a nice, well-organized calendar, it provides a solid, acceptable excuse for "freeing the masses." But is the Puritan work ethic still our shining standard? To throw the drowning man a line because he's drowning, not because it's time for him to come out of the pool, respond to human need rather than the cold order of a calendar.

Understand, however, that I'm not suggesting classes and Saga press a turkey on Thanksgiving. Let that holiday stand, as a holiday. Let me eat Mom's pumpkin pie for a place mat. What I am suggesting is another break, about four weeks ago. Let us jump prior to the breaking point, instead of sending us home in pieces.

THE WHITWORTHIAN NOVEMBER 21, 1975
Gridders claim NWC title tie

by Tim Wyssak

WHITWORTH 20, EASTERN 0

In a game that showed an outstanding team effort, the Pirates whipped the Eagles badly. Offensive statistics showed 369 yards total for Whitworth and 56 net total for Eastern. Touchdowns by Brian O'Hara on a 51 yard run, and Doug Long on a 20 yard pass from Diane Matthews were the only touchdowns in the game. Steve Wilson also got in the scoring act as he kicked two field goals in the contest.

SIMON FRASER 27, WHITWORTH 7

The Canadian team handled the Pirates with relative ease as they stopped the Buc rushing game, and on offense quarterback Rich Jones hit 29 of 32 passes for 323 yards to lead his team to victory.

A 49 yard touchdown pass from Matthews to Long was the only scoring that the Bucs could manage.

PACIFIC LUTHERAN 22, WHITWORTH 20

In a thrilling league opener, the Bucs had some costly turnovers that hurt them tremendously. A blocked punt led directly to a PLU score, while an interception on PLU's ten yard line killed another Whitworth drive.

Matthews threw two touchdowns. One to tight end Leo Esker in the first quarter, and another to Long in the third quarter covering seven yards. Steve Pool also scored on a one yard plunge.

WHITWORTH 13, WILLAMETTE 12

The Pirates evoned their season mark at 2-2 against the Bearcats, as the Whit "D" was outstanding again. Linebacker Kelly Archer racked up 20 tackles, including one for a yardloss, and Rand Hatch picked off an errant Willamette pass to set up Roger Wilson's game winning field goal of 31 yards.

Wilson kicked two field goals in the contest.

WHITWORTH 25, PACIFIC 0

The defense was again outstanding as it held the Boxers to only 68 yards rushing and 88 passing. Buc defenders also picked off four passes.

But it was the Pirate passing attack that killed Pacific as quarterbacks Matthews, John Chrom and Steve Wilson combined for 19 of 33 pass completions and 387 yards.

Roy Minnuck scored two touchdowns on runs of two and one yards, while Gary Rasmussen also scored on passes of 68 and 51 yards. Long caught another touchdown to give him four on the year thus far.

The Pirate offensive line was fabulous as they gave their quarterbacks plenty of time to find the open Pirate receivers.

WHITWORTH WON BY FORFEIT OVER WHITMAN

The "Shockers" cancelled their scheduled game with Whitman as they had too many team injuries to field a full roster. So Pirate officials and student went out looking for a game and found a midwestern powerhouse in St. John's University.

ST. JOHN'S 7, WHITWORTH 2

In a rain soaked homecoming game, the Pirates and the Johnnies struggled through a hard fought football game.

The game was an example of two excellent football teams hitting heads under adverse conditions and having to rely on the "big" play.

Whitworth only gave up one score but all it could manage was a Steve Wilson field goal.

SPORTS

Activities end, all-star teams named

by Mike Repovich

The intramural program is winding down as the winter season winds down. The basketball tournament is still going on and the co-ed volleyball also continues.

Tennis Results

Chaplain Rose White and John Maki captured the men's advanced doubles championship and White also won the advanced singles championship.

Mark Fredrick of E. Warren won the men's intermediate singles and Dean Freeman of Millin the novice championship. Chris Call and Jim Peterson of Carlson took the intermediate doubles championship.

Football All-Star Team

Although intramural football ended its regular season play, with W. Warren and E. Warren winning their respective leagues, an all-star team for men and women was chosen by the officials.

The men's team consisted of Brad Sprague, Mark Lichly, Pat Inrav and Dave Barnes of South Warren, Rob Siverly, Bruce Bingham and Rich Hawks of Carlson, Pete Glanter, Chris Bauer and Kevin Rudolph of Village, Jeff Yinger, Ken Young, and Larry Beeken of Goodsell.

Dan Kriddle of Alder, Mark Jensen of Stewart, and Jon Kohayashi of McMullan A. The alternates selected are Pete Bloomquist of Alder, Marty Johnson of McMullan B, Bill Barnes of Carlson and Ray Mayes of S. Warren.

The women's team consisted of Lori Lyford, Kaile Murphy and Sue Poland of W. Warren, Sally Stовell and Judy Senter of Goodsell, Nancy Mitchell and Marc Peterson of Washington, Gigi Dennis of E. Warren, Rosanne Hanson and Colia Siffet of Ballard and Karen Lyle of S. Warren.

The alternates are Carol Witbeck of W. Warren, Vanessa Leroy of E. Warren, Nancy Hober of Washington and Dee Dee Diesten of Goodsell.

The all-star officials were Pete Glanter and Brad Sprague for the men and Rick Smith and Sue Dale for the women.

Up Coming Events

Intramural swimming will take place this Sunday at Conings and bowling is scheduled for Dec. 7 at the Lilac Lanes at 1 p.m. There will be two individual divisions in bowling, A and B, plus a team championship. Teams will consist of two members and one member's score will be dropped.

The one-on-one basketball competition will take place starting Nov. 20th and will be held during half time of all home basketball games. It will be sponsored by Dr. Peppe.

WHITWORTH 37, LEWIS AND CLARK 0

Strictly no contest as a trio of quarterbacks passed for almost 300 yards, and the defense picked up its third shutout of the year.

Sophomore running back Mike Heron gained 82 yards rushing, while Craig Collins grabbed six passes for 106 yards. Gary Rasmussen also picked up two touchdowns.

Pirate defenders picked off seven Lewis and Clark seniors.

WHITWORTH 21, LINFIELD 14

A game where the Bucs put together an excellent offensive show, as well as defensive gem.

Quarterback Steve Wilson had an outstanding game as he hit Doug Long for two touchdowns, one with only 1:29 left in the game. Long nabbed eight passes for 121 yards and established himself as the premier receiver in the Northwest Conference.

Rick Speelman picked off a pass on the Linfield three yard line, and ran in for a touchdown in the first quarter.

Rand Hatch had two interceptions and Chuck Collings nabbed one. Collins' set up the game winning Wilson-Long pass for 17 yards.

The win pulls the Bucs into a three way tie for first place with PLU and Linfield.

WHITWORTH 42, COLLEGE OF IDAHO 24

Quarterback Matthews threw for five touchdowns-four in the fourth quarter- as the Bucs came from behind victory. Long caught seven passes for 207 yards and three touchdowns breaking the school record for pass receptions with 31.

This was completed for the season for the Pirates and their record was a fine 7-3.

Campus sports briefs

by Chris Bauer

I think most people on campus are well aware of the accident the men's cross country team had on the way to the district meet in Bel­lingham a couple of weeks ago. Fortunately no one was seriously injured. They were extremely lucky! Just take a look at the van parked out by the maintenance building.

I would like to stir up a little thought about the travel arrangements for our athletic teams. Are we providing the safest means? It would certainly be a tragic happening if we carelessly lost some athletes because we were stingy on the budget or trying to get somewhere in too much of a hurry.

I don't know if there have been any inci­dents that have been close calls but I don't think we should wait until the worst happens. I would like to encourage a second look.

Whitworth has a hockey team and it should be a good one! There has been an interest in the past couple of years and finally this year one has been organized, under club status.

Tom Powell, who is also works in the train­ing room, is the club president and coach. There are two teams divided into rookie and advanced which are open to anyone interested, both men and women.

The club's biggest concern right now is money. They have been allotted $200 for an initial investment in the equipment which was bought at cost locally. The players provide their own skates, sticks, helmets and most pay for ice time at the Coliseum where practices are held.

The team practices twice a week at the Coliseum which charges $2.50 per hour for ice time. The advanced team has scheduled 22 home games to be played either at the Coliseum or the Ice-Arena on Francis. The rookie league schedule is not definite but they will play in the Spokane recreation league.

Women roundballers begin

by Susan Park

Whitworth is in for an exciting season with the 1975-76 women's basketball team. Sixteen women, coached by Jean Anderson, are presently working out.

Nine of the women are returning from last year. Five of these were starters. "We shouldn't have to worry about experience," says Anderson. "Not only do we have returning women with knowledge of the game but we also have a lot of new ladies that have had previous experiences as high school players or as transfer students."

"We have a difficult schedule ahead of us."

Wrestlers open season with takedown tournament

by Dave Vaughn

Whitworth wrestlers begin their season tomorrow in Coeur d'Alene at the North Idaho Takedown Tournament. Each Pirate wrestler will wrestle in 2-5 matches in the annual all-day affair.

Coach Mark Kondo is optimistic about his grapplers this season as six veterans return from the fourth place Northwest Conference team of last year. They are Paul Miller, third in the conference last year; Bob Kroeger, second in the conference; Greg Veber; Pat Bruce; Tom Hammel and Riley Wilson. Wilson, in his second season on the Pirate mat, compiled a 16-3 record and should have an even better year this winter. Footballers John Miller and Rick Dundas will battle for the top spot in the heavyweight class while Don Chadwick should help in the upper weights.

The Pirates will wrestle two time National Junior College Champion North Idaho College twice along with tenth place NAIA finisher Eastern Washington State. All together the Bucs will compete in 18 dual matches and a total of six tournaments during the season, three before Christmas.

Riemcke looks at season with optimism

by Chris Bauer

The Whitworth men's varsity basketball team begins their 1975-76 season next Friday night when they host Carroll College of Montana.

Coach Cal Riemcke looks to the opening of the season with "guarded optimism." The squad is small this year, only 10 on both the varsity and junior varsity teams, but according to Riemcke they are strong in three areas.

"The team is small, but Riemcke feels they are a "blue-green." "We are going to play on eight or nine players," he said "and all are going to see a lot of playing time."

"The second area that characterizes this team will be their strong defensive play. We hope to change a lot of turnovers with the players we've got," Riemcke said.

The other area of strength comes from the experience of the players in knowing the system. Riemcke said "We will use the set offensive plays in the rebound situations and fastbreak off the turnovers."

Right now the eight players that are expected to see the most action are Dave Tikker, Gary Brandt, Sam Branch, Jeff Webster, Mike Jarrett, Paul Tikker, Chris Roberts and Ken Young. All played on last year's team except for Young.

The Pirate team will play a 24 game schedule and a tournament at Eastern Washington during the Christmas vacation.

Northwest Conference play gets under way January 8 in Walla Walla with the first conference home game January 15 against Linfield. The conference favorite this year again should be Lewis and Clark. They have eight returning from their championship team of last year and have also added three top junior college transfers.

Coach Riemcke thinks his squad will offer competition in the conference and can be optimistic because Whitworth was one of two teams that knocked off Lewis and Clark last year.

A point of interest about the upcoming season is that Gonzaga will play their first game at Whitworth on January 3. In the past they have not wanted to play here because of our infamous Graves Gym. Central Washington will play here December 16, for the first time since the Pirates dropped out of the EVC O conference.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Ausmeyer,

In response to your inquiries of Nov. 1, 1975 we have no record of an Albert Ausmeyer ever being enrolled at Whitworth College. We did, however, find the enclosed form and bills in your son's file. Please fill out the J-19 form and return it to us as soon as possible so that we can complete our files.

We have also enclosed a copy of the bills your son has incurred. Please make the check out to Whitworth College and send it immediately. Thank you for your interest. We are sorry that we had no record of your son. Hope you find him.

Sincerely,
J.J. Slocum

SB-1: Crime reform bill sparks controversy

(CTS)—There are those who say that law and order are just code words for repression and bigotry. This is a dangerous nonsense. Law and order are words for goodness and decency, the only way to attack crime in America is with a new law that attack our people without pity. President Richard Nixon, introducing the original draft of Senate Bill 1, March 14, 1972.

Imagines a law that could put the New York Times editors who received the Pentagon Papers in jail for seven years but only virtually all the Watergate criminals because they had merely shown that their illegal acts were officially authorized. Imagine that you have captured one of the many controversial features of the Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1975, commonly known as SB 1.

SB 1, now under consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee under the leadership of John McClellan (D-Ark), was originally intended to update and return the US Criminal Code. Instead, the massive bill would leave the American public with a legacy of the Nixon "law and order" administration.

Under the proposed code, the death penalty would be restored for treason, sabotage and murder under a wide variety of circumstances.

The 1968 anti-riot law, which makes it a crime to cause injuries to life or property in furtherance of a riot, would be restored. A "riot" could involve as few as ten people who create a "grave danger of imminently causing" damage to property. But at the same time, a person could be convicted for committing a crime that was provoked or incited by a police officer, in this case, the "provision of a riot" provision does not apply to the police officers. The burden would be on the defendant to prove the "unlawful entrapment" by that agent.

Under SB 1, possession for the slightest amount of marijuana, a conviction of 30 days or/$1,000 fine. For a second offense, the jail term jumps to six months.

The federal anti-riot law authority would be greatly expanded. The government could impose a " juniography" outside without court approval and direct telephone, companies and landowners to cooperate "forthwhile and at their own peril" with the wiretappers.

The insanity defense in a trial would be greatly limited under the act.

The only answer, insist the ACLU and other critics, is a complete scrapping of SB 1.

Alternative publication 'Points' to success

by Sue Coles

The first edition of the Points, Whitworth's new publication, will be released for the first time to the campus community on the first day of spring term. This is the latest progress report from Kathy Hamlyn, editor-in-chief of the Points.

Hamlyn described the first issue of the Points as a 32-page publication combining literature, graphics, photography and all things literary. Materials used the first issue were contributed by students and faculty members. Hamlyn sees this as an opportunity for members of the campus community to express themselves.

A need for flexibility aided the selection of the title, the Points. Hamlyn explained that this allows for a wide variety of subjects which may be changed every semester. She indicated that the Points will be themed oriented, the first issue will reflect fall semester.

Despite an appearance of probable success, all has not been smooth sailing for the publication. The staff has become aware of a lack of campus acceptance of the Points, before the community has even seen the first issue. It has taken quite awhile to encourage people to submit their work for publication.

At the present time, there is an urgent need for contributions of photographic work. Hamlyn indicated that the most urgently needed photos are of events that occurred on campus during fall semester. She would like to encourage anyone who has pictures to submit their work for publication.

The Points staff consists of Hamlyn, literary editor; Mary Kelly and Karen Powers, production and graphics editors; Gary Reynolds, business and ads manager; and Tim Eaton, advisor. The position of photo editor is vacant at the present time.

The Points was originated as an alternative to the old Natchi-Pines yearbook, as a result of a growing lack of interest in the publication of the yearbook over the years.

In addition, the Points is a less expensive publication than the Natchi-Pines. The total cost of the yearbook is estimated at $11,000 per year, whereas the cost of publishing one issue of the Points total $2475.
HIGH-POWERED HOT DOGS

(CPS)—A high-powered hot dog shot at a Michigan youth group in an area hospital early in October, Michigan state police reported.

Troopers said that Todd Sexton and a younger brother were coming home from hunting when Todd's brother removed the pellets from a 12-gauge shotgun shell and replaced them with a wrench. Then he shot Todd in the leg.

Troopers said the hot dog bullet broke the skin in two places. Sexton was treated and released at a hospital.

No charges were filed against the younger brother.

GUINEA PIGS IN PRISON

(CPS/LNS)—Prisoners are the cheapest human guinea pigs for drug and medical research companies, according to the report of a University of Pennsylvania economist.

Professor Peter Meyer claims that medical researchers prefer to hire prisoners because they can pay them as little as ten cents an hour. The earnings for experimenting companies amount to $25 per day per prisoner. The report says that many prisoners, participating in drug research, is the only way they can earn money.

BAD COFFEE NOT ILLEGAL

(CPS)—A wedge of coffee is always a disappointment, but most people's reaction is simply to grumble and find another place to buy it.

But a Suffolk County, NY judge was so upset that his coffee was weak, that he allegedly had the vendor brought to his chambers in handcuffs and threatened to revoke his license unless he stopped watering down the coffee.

As a result of this incident, a state commission has recommended that the judge, William M. Perry, be dismissed. The vendor has sued him for $10 million.

The incident began when the judge sent out for two containers of coffee from a truck stationed outside traffic court in Hauppauge, NY. Ten minutes later, police officers ordered the vendor to come to the judge's chambers to see about the coffee "because it was so terrible." The vendor claimed that he had been taken through the building in handcuffs to his great embarrassment.

SAT SCORE SKID SPURS STUDY

(CPS)—Baffled by a steady decline in Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores over the last 15 years, the test's administrators formed a panel recently to study reasons for the decline.

The College Entrance Examination Board (CEEB), which designs the test, is guessing that the reasons might include the types of students taking the tests, what high schools are doing or not doing, and societal changes over the last decade that may have affected high school students taking the tests, what high schools are doing or not doing.

A spokesman for CEEB asserted that "research efforts to date convince us that there is nothing basically wrong with the test." But scores on the 800-point exam, which is administered to high school seniors, have dropped 44 points on the verbal and 30 points on the math sections since 1960.

DOG DIPLOMACY

(CPS)—The US diplomatic corps shifted into high gear recently to settle a dispute that could have "international consequences" and unshackle the future of US relations with Barbados, according to Barbados Ambassador Waldo Emerson-Ramsay.

The problem is Emerson-Ramsay's German shepherd, the dog had bitten eight people in the last four years in Pathan, NY. The city's mayor has ordered that the dog be kept leashed and in a pen to prevent it from injuring anyone.

Emerson-Ramsay, in a letter to the mayor, Secretary Henry Kissinger and US Attorney General Edward Levi, said, "The mind boggles at the tragic calamitous consequences of a personal nature which naturally flow from such liberation. And this consideration beaks of the possible international consequences."

A US Mission official entered the fray in November to reach a settlement short of nuclear holocaust.

The week that God didn’t want a Whitworthian

by Kathy Pecku

It all looked good on paper. We would have the last Whitworthian of the semester on Dec. 6, early enough to give the Whitworth staff a small respite this hectic week.

How easily theories die. The root of our problem was Thanksgiving. Yes, innocuous little Thanksgiving. Where else can it be said that the Pilgrim feast on the table was marked by a sense of wisdom, decided to wait about them until they were due at the table.

I believe with Gilder it is chiefly the common sense and conservation instincts of non-intellectual Americans who are retarding the fashionable movement of environmentalism.

One wonders when these well-intentioned ladies pull down the rafters of civilization—what will they offer in its stead? 1984 here we come.

I wish with Gilder that the differences between the sexes are not seen as an evil that must be overcome by the male—woman stereotype. Women are women, and so are men. Until society acknowledges this, women will find themselves in an impossible rut.

Edgar Hayes

Health Education and Welfare department

I am not against women achieving equal status, however, I am against forced hiring. If I make it, I want to make it on my merit, not because someone has been passed saying I have to be hired or else.

In her early writings Margaret Mead told of her experiences with primitive tribes dominated by women. Although Margaret Mead described these tribes as extremely degrading to women, she held that they provided good models to emulate.

In his book Sexual Suicide, George Gilder noted that it is an historically and anthropologically established fact that when men are deprived of a dominant role in society they leave behind them becoming predators.

Gilder says that men might be entirely eliminated from the structure of civilization, however, he claims, it would be required of a police state to supervise the men, and a child care state to manage the children.

In spite of espousing a belief in "human liberation" these ladies seem bent on demasculizing the American man. Perhaps we could homogenize our children, creating the unsex society, but do we really want that?

I have to come to an awareness that a bill has been introduced into the U.S. Senate, the purpose of which is to revise and reform the United States Criminal Code. An honest effort deserves the help of all people.

We have found that the real purpose of the bill is not to deal effectively with crime, but rather to perpetuate governmental secrecy and stifle legitimate protest.

Under many provisions of this bill the following activities could be considered as criminal offenses:

1. Victor Marchetti’s Whitworth Forum concerning the CIA and its role in the Vietnam War

2. Dick Gregory’s offers to reveal many of the covert activities of our government.

3. The release and publication of the Pentagon Papers

4. Involvement in peaceful anti-war demonstrations, which the following activities could be considered to be legally justifiable:

1. The actions of such government officials as an Ehrlichman, Halderman, and Mitchell, as well as those people working under their supervision. This provision would insulate such officials from the full authority of the courts by effectively divorcing personal responsibility from official action. In short, government officials would have the right to break the law.

2. The widespread violation of many U.S. citizens’ personal privacy by such "surveillance organizations as the CIA, FBI, and the NSA.

Obviously, this bill poses a serious threat to many of our basic civil liberties. If we are to maintain our freedom and the quality of life that we have enjoyed, we must be alert. Any concern with preventing the passage of S-71 may contact:

Travel options vary as students head home

by Leslie Patrick

The Great Christmas Escape is about to begin. With the onslaught of finals, Whitworth students are frantically finalizing plans for rides home, utilizing cars, buses, trains, and planes.

Most students are riding home in private cars. Many others wish they were, as evidenced by the piles of "ride wanted" cards hung on the rideboard. Located in the Hub behind the post office, the ride board is a good source for getting rides or riders. More creative "ride wanted" signs can be spotted tacked up just about everywhere on campus. The majority of students who still need rides are going to Southern California.

Students who are extremely anxious to get home for the holidays are opting to fly. Most plane tickets were almost full by the end of October, but some seats are still available.

Travel agents do not expect flights to book solid in advance. Some places usually open, local travel agencies could aid the prospective passenger in getting a flight. However, it will be almost impossible to get reservations for the departure time of your choice.

The bus is the least expensive public transportation available, though not exactly the most comfortable. Tickets can be purchased ahead of time for a particular destination, but, unlike reservation, they do not secure a seat. When buses fill and there are very few people who didn't get seats, the bus station arranges for another bus. There is usually about an hour delay (depending on the availability of buses and drivers) when this occurs.

For only one dollar, shuttle service is available to the bus and train station, and the airport. It will be running December 17-19 and January 4-6. Those who want to take advantage of the shuttle should contact SAC and let them know the times of their departure and arrival in Spokane.

Examination of Revolution values set for spring

by Sue Coles

You've heard of recycling paper, recycling aluminum...but recycling your revolution? Wait a minute, where did that come from?

Strange as it may sound, that is precisely what is being planned for spring at Whitworth. "Recycling the Revolution," explained Marshall Turner, one of the students involved in the planning stage, is a "multi-level examination of the values of the American Revolution and the degree to which they have been realized in the 200 year history of the United States."

For 10 days during spring term, Whitworth will set aside time for critical analysis of the direction our nation has taken. Turner said that the academic affairs committee has approved a moderation of normal academic loads for 10 days, at the specific discretion of the instructors involved.

"Recycling the Revolution" is scheduled to begin on Monday, Feb. 26 and will continue through Saturday, March 8. The 10 day period will feature guest speakers, a film series, and presentations by Whitworth performing groups, among other things.

Although at press time, no speaker has confirmed speaking invitations on campus, those invited to lecture and lead discussions include Mr. McCord, president of Princeton Theological Seminary; Vonne Deloria, Native American political scientist and analyst; Peter Davies, producer of the movie "Hearts and Mind"; Dr. Solomon, professor of the Enlightenment at the University of California at Berkeley, and Congresswoman Andrew Young, who was at one time an assistant to the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and who is also an ordained Congregational pastor.

The film series will include the musical comedy "1776," "Hearts and Minds," and "2001: A Space Odyssey," among others.

Turner stated, "The chief goal of the activity is to involve the Whitworth faculty, staff, administration and students in significant discussions of American values, the development of realistic alternatives for concerned individuals to be involved in the direction our nation may take in the future, and models for the function of our global community."

He added that many faculty members are already involved in making "Recycling the Revolution" what he called "one of the most significant educational experiences in Whitworth's history." At the present time, there are very few students involved in planning the program.

Maximum student involvement at all levels is a major goal for those planning the experience, which includes David Winter, executive vice president and academic dean. They are particularly interested in the involvement of students at all level of their academic majors. During the week, specific times have been allotted to departmental meetings which would include all faculty and majors.

Turner said that they also hope to provide a collaborative environment throughout the week to further generate student and community interest. This will include performances by the Reader's Theater, Drama Chorus, Concert Band and Conductor Concert, as well as nightly meals at Saga reflecting the various ethnic heritages that make up the American population.

Tentative plans for the last day include a day-long fair in the field house presenting alternatives for employment and volunteer services.

Turner concluded by saying, "Students should challenge the faculty in their major field to integrate the issues dealt with in "Recycling the Revolution" with their curriculum offered in the area of their major.

Students interested in assisting in the planning stage may contact Professor Jim Hunt in the History department.
Budget deficit: spring concerts cancelled

Jeff Hanson, ASWC Concerts Manager, has announced plans to cancel all remaining concerts for the year. A recent meeting between ASWC and Spokane City officials, he charged, "was a complete misrepresentation of the Spokane market." Hanson said the Spokane market was going to attend the concerts in spite of the deficit.

Dr. Mary Ann Graff and her husband Terry, and Peggy and Jerry Johnson will share their feelings about making decisions and plans that benefit wives' careers and other related matters, in Forum next Thursday called "Changing Roles in a Changing Society."

This Forum is a reaction/response to an article in the November 23 Spokesman Review in which both the Graffs and the Johnsons were misrepresented in their favor.

One thousand youngsters recently invaded Whitworth's art department, using their imagination and enthusiasm to create their own pottery for Christmas gifts according to Peter Hunner, coordinator of the project.

Three cases in the HUB were set up earlier this week to display a few of the masterpieces.

The project, aptly called Children's Pottery Workshop, was sponsored by Whitworth's art department November 14, 15, and 16. Sixteen art students and teachers helped the three to twelve year olds in their work, Hunner said.

Hunner said he got the idea of a children's workshop while in Copenhagen last summer. A department store he had visited, specializing in quality gifts, used the idea as a means of sales promotion.

The main reason for the big success, Hunner said, was because of the large amount of publicity. Both Spokane papers, several TV and radio stations, plus Whitworth's public relations office publicized the event.

Hunner said the workshop stressed the experience of creating with clay, rather than the product itself. The pottery will be on display until Saturday afternoon, December 5, when the children will return for their art work.

Coordinated with the children's art display Saturday is the Whitworth students' Christmas art sale. The sale will be donated to the Spokane Food Bank.

Hanson attributes this to the day of the week - working about $1350, leaving a deficit of $3389.75.

This year Hanson tried something different by getting artists to sign contracts well in advance, thus he didn't foresee any extra costs in addition to initial fees.

In order to alleviate the budget deficit, Sprague intends to establish better communications between the ASWC and the President's Council. He stated, "We are going to try to get information on the budget outlay quicker with regards to the monthly payrolls."

With all the bills coming in, it is increasingly difficult to determine how much the Social Budget will go into the red. According to Hanson, it is every manager's goal to speed all the money allocated for concerts. It was only a few weeks ago, he said, that he found he had a substantial deficit.

"In order to break even with a concert," Hanson declared, "you have to determine the amount of students who will attend and multiply that by ticket price. You have to have tickets at a price that can charge outrageous prices if you want to stay out of the red."

An example is the Jim Stafford show. Hanson predicted from the success of that show, that 30% of the student body would attend the concerts.

Whitworth celebrates Christmas with Messiah concert

by Liz Peterson

"The Messiah," a Christmas Concert composed by George Frederick Handel, will be presented by Whitworth College and the Spokane Christian Coalition at 4 p.m. Sunday, December 7 in Spokane's Opera House.

Whitworth's Dr. Milton Johnson will be directing 350 singers in the Messiah choir and orchestra. Two hundred members of Whitworth's choir, chorus and Oratorio Society will be singing along with 150 members of churches and schools from the Spokane area. Forty-three groups besides Whitworth will be represented in "The Messiah."

Handel's "Messiah" has been a success from the beginning. So many tickets were sold for the first performance in Dublin in 1742, that notices were published in the newspapers begging the ladies not wear their hoop skirts to the concert and the men to leave their swords at home, so that as many people as possible could fit into the auditorium.

According to contemporary reports, no one who heard the first performance remained unmoved. Even Handel himself was awestricken by his creation. "The Messiah" has been universally acknowledged to be one of the greatest masterpieces of musical literature ever composed. Handel wrote the Messiah in 23 days working day and night, and when he finished the manuscript he said "I think God has visited me."

In the Messiah, the "Hallelujah Chorus" is well known for its impact on audiences. During the first London performance, the audience was so carried away by the power of the "Hallelujah Chorus" that they stood up together as though on pre-arranged signal, and remained standing until the conclusion of this section. Ever since then, audiences the world over have expressed similar respect; rising at the beginning of the Chorus and remaining standing until the conclusion.

Handel's orchestration includes oboes, bassoons, trumpets, timpani, strings and a harpsichord. This year's orchestra is comprised of selected members of the Whitworth College community symphony and first chair players from the Spokane Symphony.

Johnson has been directing "Messiah" concerts since 1942 and is very enthusiastic about doing it again. "I'm excited about the performance. The faculty and students have given a tremendous response."

The concert lasts one and one half hours. General admission is $2 and students are encouraged to attend. "I find the Messiah not only rewarding musically, but an inspiring, renewing expression of the Christian faith," Johnson commented.

I am a student at Whitworth. I have eight o'clock classes, Forum, sleepy one o'clock classes, and a one o'clock class. I take advantage of the "bargains" at the book store.

I study long hours, or else I'm working at the library. I make for almost every eight o'clock class. It means I have to get up at 6:30 because there are two of us using the bathrooms.

And if we want breakfast, usually oatmeal because it's cheap, we fix ourselves. It means one o'clock classes are sleepy not because I tied one on with a box in And, but because it had been a week since we had said more than "hello. Where are things? See you later," and we decided last night to talk until midnight.

It means I check my mail box not for checks from Mom and Dad or goodie-boxes from Grandma, but for memos from Phil telling us we qualify for another loan.

It means I hassle the business office not because they charged Daddy for the eat cinnamon rolls, but because I checked the mail boxes in 10 minutes and they won't give me my mother's paycheck unless I bring a note from home.

It means I eat cinnamon rolls because this particular gymning we overslept until 7:30 and the closed. We grabbed each other's books and had to find each other and get them. And most of all, even though I have to have something else for breakfast besides or I'll turn into a crab.

It means we work-study checks the business office so carefully "promises" somewhere around the 10th of the month are not for potato chips, red flannel hash, pizza, but for the rent, utilities, car payment, doctor bill, food and other "basics," and all due or needed by the 1st of the month.

It means the spasmodic pressure of temporal relationships is gone, but the challenge of developing and nurturing a permanent relationship is ever-present.

As finals week draws near, it seems only appropriate to make mention of the oh-my-gosh, final-days-are-coming, mind-set. This mindset seems to affect various individuals at various levels of determination, nervousness, pressure, frustration, guilt and amount of sleep experienced during the last two weeks.

Talking to different students, it becomes obvious that there is a fairly common attitude towards finals week:

1. "Frightened, pressured, frustrating..."
2. "...serious..." "...draining, exhausting..."
3. "...kinds scary..." "...crazy..."
4. "...coming too fast, not prepared..." and "...close to everyone in joint misery..."

Tried and true methods of studying are as diverse as the people studying. Most people agree that the best way to study for finals is to start and study as much as possible. It is at the crumpling point that the methods become rather individual.

Somehow we're often stigmatized by other students. They look at a married couple and see two bodies with one head. A head they can't possibly relate to. Many couples, especially those who have been single in a dorm, are feeling isolated and cut off from their friends.

Those couples in the married student housing often feel isolated from each other. While in one sense they are a community, in another they are developing different lifestyles.

Until last year, not much effort had been made to organize married students. Jim and Susie Thomas (Cypress Lane Apartments) organized several potluck dinners last year. From these larger meetings groups of three or four couples united for decoration, prayer, or whatever they felt as a group they needed.

This year married students have their own representative to President's Council, Pete Hunner. Hunner feels married students have a right to be represented, since they pay student body fees, as same single students.

"We're just in a different living situation," he says.

Hunner represents all married students, not just those in Cypress Lane Apartments. The same of the university halls used to be "Ball and Chain." It was changed to Cypress Lane when complaints were made to the administration charging that "Ball and Chain" was demeaning to marriage and left a degrading impression.

This apartment complex, (as I use the term loosely) are old army barracks from World War II (some argue). They're draughty and small, but their cheap price is a suitable compensation. For a two bedroom apartment it costs $47 a month, no extras.

Huntsman says on a list of 40 proposed improvements. The dorm student housing is number 38. This is fine with him though, since new facilities would mean more than doubled rent.

Financial pressures are heavy on most married students. Often one partner attends school while the other works to put him or her through. Hunner finds living on campus does not prepare couples for the realities of society. "If they get an apartment here they think they're making it in the world. But paying $4 for a place to live is not making it in the world."

In an attempt to prepare students considering marriage the college has offered seminars to educate them in some of the realities of getting married.

Dealing with the realities of married life after the fact, are Neal and Marcia Blankenship, RC's in Stewart. They have started a series of workshops for married couples. These workshops are intended to be educational rather than therapeutic, says Blankenship.

Right now the couples involved are working on styles of communication and clarification of values. Psych Jargon aside, the workshops are designed to help the participants grow and change as people and as couples.

There are 250 married daytime students on campus. 250 people going to school, struggling, living out their goals and aspirations, just the same as all the other students.

Except they're married.

'Finals: A survey' by Pete Hunner

Habits range from the more conservative method of giving up at midnight, going to bed and doing the best you can, to the more dramatic methods of the all-nighter-all-dayer with a continuously full coffee pot, the memory-association method of sleeping with one's notes under one's pillow and the tension free method of sleeping through finals hours. As one committed soul stated, "We must bear down, dig in, get to it, and take what comes."

During this intensified study period, the average student tends to become increasingly possessive with wife or girlfriend. Reasons on the list are: "nothing and everything. Indulgences are very liberating during this period, as exemplified by the favorite food breaks: banana splits, hot fudge sundaes, mud pie, chocolate milkshakes and french fries."

Most people, according to this reporter's poll, seem to daydream, at the same time they are studying. About: relationships, home, pretty girls, causes they're involved in, and the college calls they're receiving back at the dorm, and the "absurdity of the incompleteness of the material involved in the way we study here at Whitworth."
Christmas symbolism ignores God’s message

by Joe Novenson

Christmas has come to mean everything and it therefore is newly coming to mean nothing.

For this is a marvelously versatile holiday that may easily be adjusted to the celebration of any relatively respected virtue, such as “love,” “joy,” “peace,” “etc.” The unfortunate result of the massive co-op of this holiday is that “Christmas” has rather appropriately been rephrased as “X-mas” . . . (you fill in the X).

In the name of festivity, we encase our favorite virtue or cause in the pomp and celebration of this rather hollow holiday.

In elementary school, I can clearly recall gleefully listening to my teacher tell the wonderful tale of the three wise men who carefully examined an elephant in an attempt to discover its nature and composition.

The first never ventured beyond the tail and, therefore, concluded it to be a snake. The second of this brilliant trio wrapped his arms about the elephant’s leg and decisively concluded it to be a tree. Finally, the third man of wisdom discovered the elephant’s side and arrived at the irrevocable conclusion that he stood in front of a wall.

I remember bounding to my feet, hand waving in the air, saying, “But teacher, none of them saw the elephant.” Perhaps I have learned little since those days, but I seek only to repeat the lesson I learned then within these words.

For those whose eyes have never seen beyond the fruit of this joyous holiday (love, joy, peace, etc.) to the roots of its meaning, have never dealt with the immense reality that “God Has Come.”

For that’s the truth of elephantine proportions we seem to artificiately avoid.

It is true that the weeping of this babe in the manger will turn to the joyful cries of a man whose heart burns for “peace, joy, and love.” But that is not the only meaning of Christmas for it is far too confining. For Christmas is not a cause or a principle. It is the God who has come with flesh on.

Oh, how much easier it is to deal with a concept. It’s cold, empty and only as threatening as your own mind will permit. But Jesus is a person, God on earth, grace with skin on. You must deal with Him. To ignore Him, is to swallow in the same folly as the blind wise men.

Rejoice and celebrate, for the impossible has happened, God has come to you in Christ. In a mystery beyond comprehension, the babe of Bethlehem is the saviour of mankind. He has plummed into reality and history and we will never be the same.

If only He were an ideal, a concept, or a philosophy. Christmas could remain the dubious tool of the celebrant instead of the confronting joyous remembrance of God entering our lives.

The manger will soon be empty, the cross drenched in blood, the tomb will be hollow forever and we will whisper faintly, “I wish we understood.”

God's message. Christmas is not a cause or a principle. It is the God who has come with flesh on.

What’s being touted by Bruce Springsteen’s “Born to Run” may not be the milestone album of rock in the 1970’s that both Time and Newsweek magazines blow it up to be, but it certainly has to rank as a rare example of supreme effort in contemporary music that deserves more serious treatment than a million $4.49 special-of-the-week or a Sunday poot-pooching from A.M. radio’s Casey Cashin.

What’s being previewed by the Rolling Stone, the Kama of the rock world, as nothing short of “magnificent” could have been nothing more than a glossy nostalgic re-make of the brand of monophonic rock and roll that propelled the Chuck Berrys and the Little Richards to fame.

What’s being belittled by the New Yorker magazine through that review of Springsteen’s two previous albums (both “bombs” until just recently), and this latest release.

The result: rock has a brand new king at least through the New Year at which time the crown will be handed back to Elton John who, by then, will have come out with his usual, monthly gold disc. Bruce Springsteen will still look like Bob Dylan and a handful of people will make a whole lot of money.

Always remember that the money came from a hungry youth culture back home hopping on an apple cart overdose for a kind of music they could dance to, something you could scoosh out and even eat with your hands, and not be worried how you looked because eating was so good.

What’s good about “Born to Run” is that it reminds us of how rock music used to sound in its youth, in the 60’s and into the early 60’s; with a beat that throbbed and that didn’t give up, or dissolve into the 18 and 20 minute improvisations we’ve heard from a past decade of hard bands, Iron Butterfly, Deep Purple, etc.

In “Born to Run” we come back to the standard one-four-five chord progression which doesn’t take a lot of figuring out to enjoy. It’s easy and fun to listen to. And isn’t that what rock’s supposed to do to us, to make us feel good with a nice melody that’s simple enough to remember so we can hum it later when the record’s out of our reach, our drama.

Springsteen has given guts to rock.

Besides catching the tune we might even understand half the words somehow beneath the electric paraphernalia that part of a story about human life, their tragedy, their dream.

For one who doesn’t smoke rarely drinks, and abhors the use of any drug beyond an aspirin, Springsteen is a man of characters, a man who aren’t exactly polished products from a finishing school.

They are the frayed and stranded lives of people who grew up with back in Arkby, New Jersey, who scuffed up their days down on the boardwalk and barked at high school education.

All of their important learning came at night, when cars rolled out on midnight turnpikes. There the only things lighting up the avenues were pimps and the dim reflections of lesser personages of an adolescent social standing.

The highway’s journeyed with broken heroes On a last chance pesticide Everyday’s out on the road tonight But there’s no place left to hide.

With “Born to Run” Bruce Springsteen has come out of hiding. He is not the next Elvis Presley made overnight. To admit this so soon in a career would only be premature and typical of the kind of mind-set people at William Morris can imagine that they’ve got enough bucks in their pocket to make their entreprenuring fantasies come true.

He may be a "flash in the pan" to some, but for the moment at least Bruce Springsteen has put some of the guts back into rock. He’s reopened the wound of pop music that has been healed since the departure of the Beatles six years ago. Bruce Springsteen and the rest of rock need a chance to prove themselves and “Born to Run” has given both this chance.

Springsteen gives guts to rock

Borrevik resigns, cites 'personal reasons'*

by Chris Bauer

Last week Dr. Borrevik submitted his letter of resignation to the college effective August 31, 1975. He will be stepping down from his position as Director of Athletics which he has held since 1972.

During his time at Whitworth, Dr. Borrevik had an extensive and varied background in physical education and administration. In addition to teaching and coaching at the junior high, high school and community college levels, he was head coach of the Whitworth wrestling team for two years before joining the University of Oregon staff in 1967. At U of O, he was involved in internal teacher supervision, coordination of graduate studies, summer workshops and clinics, and various committees.

Borrevik cites "personal reasons" for leaving the college but feels he is "committed to the direction of the college." "I still have faith in the institution, the people here, and feel there is a lot of potential for the college."*

*"I feel there has been much personal growth in my years here" Borrevik added.

There has also been a lot of growth for the college in the area of athletics since Borrevik first came here.

- Dr. Ross Cutter, member of the physical education department and tennis coach, sees three areas where Borrevik has made major contributions:
  1. He has been influential in the recent development of the fieldhouse, where Borrevik first arrived it was only a covering for a dirt floor.
  2. He has helped increase the women's athletic program, more sports, increased money allotment and more participation are evidences of this.
  3. He has initiated the idea of club sports, which include rugby, soccer, volleyball and hockey.

Within the physical education department the head of the department Dr. Jean Anderson feels Borrevik has been instrumental in two areas, the revising of the P.E. major and institutionalizing of the basketball league. This means a student must "demonstrate an understanding of the importance of physical activity to each individual and its relation to the present and future well-being of each person."

The selection process for a new athletic director has begun and it will take some time before that final decision will be made. (Ed note: Duncan Ferguson, academic dean, is heading the selection, but the lateness of this writer to complete this article he was unable to be contacted for more details.)

GRAPPLERS TRAVEL TO YAKIMA

Tomorrow in Yakima the Whitworth wrestling team will compete in the annual all-day Yakima Invitational Tournament. Coach Mark Kondo will take eight wrestlers as the Pirates ready themselves for the dual meet season starting in January.

Two weeks ago five Pirate wrestlers took part in the North Idaho Take Down Tournament held in Coeur d'Alene. Kondo placed Greg Yehia and Rob Krogner won two and lost two each while Pat Brice won one and lost a pair.

Kondo's wrestlers will compete in just one more tournament before Christmas vacation, the Eastern Washington State College Invitational next Saturday, December 13.

After vacation the Pirates start again on January 8th with Simon Frazier here. That will be followed by the Northwest Conference Tournament February 21 in McMinnville, Oregon.

Hoosters start fast with narrow wins, host L.C. State tonight

by Tim Wyssake

The Whitworth College hoops escaped with two narrow wins over Carroll College of Montana and Eastern Washington in their opening contests of the 75-76 season.

Against Carroll the Bucs held off the visiting team in the waning moments to post a 67-64 win.

A 53% shooting from the floor and a perfect 5-5 from the line aided the Pirates to their win. They also held a decided 33-23 rebound edge.

Jeff Webster and Dave Tikker paced Whitworth scoring with 14 apiece, while Gary Rasmussen and Sam Braschchipped in with 12 and 11 respectively.

Big Win Over Eastern

Whitworth came out "smokin'" against the Eagles and when the horn sounded to end the game, Carl Rasmussen's midrangers had neatly tucked away a 69-67 win-the first Buc win over Eastern in five years.

It was a strong team effort for the Pirates as four players finished in double figures and two others had eight apiece.

An uncontested lay up by Braschch 1:05, proved to be the clincher as it pushed the Whitworth lead to four points.

But, Ron Cox-Eastern's Mr. Everything-came back with a bucket to narrow the gap, and set the stage for a wild and woolly final minute.

Eastern, fired up six shots in this span and didn't connect on one of them. A costly turnover hurt them, but it was superb team "D" by the Whits that provided the win.

A jump ball between Pirate Brasch and Eastern's Randy Dyer under the screaming Eagles hoop with one second left, closed out the game and brought pandemonium to Whitworth's fieldhouse.

The Bucs were led by Brasch's 16 counters, but he was adequately backed up by Mike Jarrett's 15, Dave Tikker's 12, and Paul Tikker's 10.

Cox led all scorers as the husky junior center poured in 30 points and picked off a game high 13 rebounds. Branch and Brasch hit the Buc boardwork with nine and eight respectively.

Tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the fieldhouse, Whitworth will host the undefeated Karriors from Lewis-Clark State.

Carlson, West claim intramural swim title

by Mike Repovich

The intramural team swimming championship was won by Carlson. They picked up 100 points for their first place finish and Alder received 75 points for their second place finish.

Warren Herman representing Town and Dave McIn of Alder shared the men's individual swimming championship honors and received 50 points apiece. Dan Snodgrass of Alder received 30 points for third and Dave Chungian of Carlson 15 points for fourth place.

West Warren won the women's swimming championship with 101 points. Second and third place were tied with 90 and 88 points apiece. Dan Snodgrass of Alder received 30 points for third and Dave Chungian of Carlson 15 points for fourth place.

Joan Roll won the women's individual championship by taking firsts in the 100 yd., free style, 100 yd., individual medley, 50 yd. butterfly, and a third in the 50 yard backstroke. Diane Osgood was second with two firsts and a second, with Leslie Patrick coming in third, with a first and a second.

Dr. Pepper sponsors tourney

The Dr. Pepper one-on-one basketball tournament was previewed during half time of the Eastern game last Monday. The first round will begin this Friday during half time of the varsity's game against Lewis-Clark State.

You can still enter the Dr. Pepper sponsored basketball contest by signing up in the intramural office in the HUB.

You can win $100 and an unlisted number of other prizes. One of the fifteen men in the fieldhouse will win a bonus of $100.

The final team event of the semester, bowling, will be held this Sunday at the Lilac Lanes at 1 p.m.

It's time to start thinking about which intramural events you want to enter during Jan Term.

The five man Jan. Term basketball will be held on Wednesday nights starting Jan. 12. Single elimination play will include two rounds for men and one round for women.

Three on three basketball for men and women will be held Saturdays, starting Jan. 10, in the field house from 10 a.m. to noon. Floor hockey will begin on Monday nights, starting Jan. 12. Single elimination table tennis will also begin on Monday, Jan. 12. The entries for the three events are due Thursday Jan. 8.

The free throw contest is scheduled for two Saturdays, Jan 17 and 24. Entries will be made at the Fieldhouse Sat. morning.

Wrestling is on Saturday Jan. 17 at 1 p.m., entries are due Wednesday Jan. 14, Indoor Track and Field will be on Saturday Jan. 24 at 1 p.m, entries will be made in the fieldhouse.

Tuition hike not as extreme as rumored

by Susan Colea

Tuition and room and board costs are going up next year, but not by the rumored figure of $900. The fact is, student expenses will only be increased by a total of $325, or 8 per cent of this year's costs. Tuition will rise $225, from $975 to $1200, while room and board will go from $1250 to $1350, an increase of $100.

The increase was decided upon last spring at the annual budget meeting, said Dr. David K. Winter, Whitworth's executive vice-president, and it was announced to students in an article on the college budget which appeared in The Whitworthian. Winter emphasized that the increase is a yearly result of inflation. He remarked that the increase was originally set for 7 per cent, but with the improvement in the country's economy that figure was reduced to 8 per cent.

Winter stated that while these expenses are rising, they are going up less than the increase in the entire college budget. This year's budget was set at approximately 5.8 million dollars, while the projected budget for next year is approximately 6.2 million dollars, an increase of 10 per cent. Winter said they hope to make up the other 2 per cent through increased gifts to the college. He added that Whitworth is still about $200 less expensive to attend than many of the elite private colleges in the East, Midwest and California.

This year's seniors are the last group of students to be on the old system of guaranteed tuition; some are paying as little as $775 a semester. This system was abolished when it began to cost the college too much money. This year the cost the college $200,000 to continue the system for those who had enrolled under it four years ago. "Guaranteed tuition rate meant that we had a commitment to those people, and we intend to keep our share of the commitment," Winter stated. Next year there will be very few students still on the system.

On Feb. 24, Winter will speak at a student dinner concerning the entire college budget, including tuition. This dinner will give students the opportunity to ask questions and to express their feelings on the matter of the budget.

Winter described last year as a "catch-up year" in the budget. There had been major deficits, therefore the annual increase for this year was set at 18 per cent. Next year there is a projected deficit of $200,000. Winter said the college is striving to have a balanced budget for two years. In order to do this, he said, the budget would be down during the first year, but the second year would see it come even.

A good student understanding of the budget is important to Winter. He said he would like students to feel free to ask questions about any part of the college budget. He stated, "I'd be very pleased to meet with any group of any group to discuss the budget."

Heat failure proves fatal to plants

by Debbie Hex

The biology department suffered a tremendous loss the night of Feb. 4 when the greenhouse light failed to go on causing the death of 400 to 500 species of exotic plants.

Nicolinej Gray, Associate Professor of Biology, arrived early the following morning to discover that "it was just a mass of ice inside."

The pilot light went out in the furnace pumps stopping the flow of hot water through the greenhouse. The temperature dropped to nearly 20 degrees so that when the automatic sprinkling system went on at 6 a.m., the water froze on the plants, seriously damaging some and killing even more.

Mrs. Gray estimates that over 90% of the plants in the greenhouse were lost at a cost of approximately $1000.

Among the lost plants were orchids, bromeliads, a coffee tree, and a large jade tree. The greenhouse was built in 1960 and many of the plants were old. According to Mrs. Gray, "it will take a long time to get a collection of plants like that again."

Because insurance didn't cover the plant loss, money for replacement has come from past plant sales while the biology department has had many students to volunteer plant sales.

Many exotic plants were lost in the biology department greenhouse due to a power failure last week.
Letters to the Editor

Editor's Note

The Whitworthian received this letter last week and although we do not know Mark Terry, after much deliberation, decided to print it to stimulate thought and discussion.

Dear Editor,

I send this knowing that most likely this letter will not be published. However, my intention is the same as Scottish Bishop Gordon Grant's words, "I cannot view the state of people outside the Church, with excessive optimism, since only in the Catholic Church can we be found both fullness of truth and the means necessary to salvation...If it is not right to leave the pagans to their good faith, nor to consider the other religions and the other churches as more or less equivalent to the Catholic Church."

I have discovered that if I argue with a person long enough, the argument always leads to this question, "Can I be saved in any church?" I tell them the same as I'm telling you now: "No one can be saved except in the Catholic Church."

This dogma is evidently not an easy doctrine to hold and defend, especially to non-Catholics. In very few people even want to talk about it, and, even more so, there is plenty of evidence of the existence of an official, though never avowed, policy of suppressing it.

And so we begin another semester. It's only two weeks old and already most of us are wearing looking looks that tell we're snowed under. Some of us are wearing glasses, others looking a little farther to graduation.

The semester will present us with many options for involvement, particularly involvement in campus decisions, as student elections will be coming up soon. The Whitworthian will provide as extensive coverage as possible of the campaign, the differing views of the candidates and the election itself. We hope that there will be no excuse for anyone not to be informed on the issues confronting student government.

Private Schools Still Healthy, Report Says

(CPS) - A study conducted by Howard Bowen, a crack economist of higher education, claims that the widely held belief that private colleges are in trouble is based on "evidence that is circular and inconsistent with that of the past 20 years." After surveying 100 colleges for the report commissioned by the Association of American Colleges, Bowen found that the "lightness" at some campuses along with instances of decreased enrollment. The report also observes stepped up competition between private and public colleges for students. But rather than ringing the death knell for private education, the report has a hopeful outlook for private education.

But the report doesn't paint an entirely rosy picture of private education. Researchers found that 27 of the 100 schools surveyed were in "serious distress." However, the report's authors stress they aren't suggesting that 27 percent of all private colleges were on the road to extinction on the basis of this sample.

Ness concluded that private schools will continue to need federal aid in spite of the overall health of private education. "There is a delicate balance," he said "and it would not take much to tip the curve downward. That would be a serious blow to American higher education."

Her and that so important is the unity of this ecclesiastical body that only those remaining within this unity can profit by the sacraments of the Church unto salvation, and they alone can receive an eternal recompense for their almsgiving, their other works of Christian piety and the devotions of the Church. No one, let his almsgiving be as great as it may, no one, even if he pour out his blood for the Name of Christ, can be saved, unless he remain within the bosom and unity of the Catholic Church."

I challenge the editors (if they have any backbone at all) to print this. If this letter does not get published, I hope and pray that it will have an effect upon you.

To Jesus through Mary, J.M. Mark Terry

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

(CPS) - The surprise in the apple sauce surprise case which took first place in the cooking contest was dried earthworms. For concocting the best recipe using dried earthworms, a Minnesota woman won $500 and a place in the North American Barn Bait Bake-off.

The bait farms sponsored the contest to promote the use of earthworms as a protein substitute in human food. The company claims that up to 72 percent of the worms' dry weight is pure protein.

Some university professors think the idea of insects for human consumption would be nutritionally valuable because they contain proteins, fats and carbohydrates. But the exoskeletons could present a problem, an Iowa State University professor said. "I don't believe human beings could digest it.

Another Iowa State professor noted that North American Indians used to eat grasshoppers and other people ate grubs, but said he doubted modern Americans would adapt the idea of eating insects readily.

"A much more practical solution is not to go out and catch the earthworm, deep fat fry them and eat them whole, but to extract the chitin from them and put that in other parts of the diet as a supplement.

AND THE GRAND CANYON IS JUST ANOTHER RAVINE

(LNS-CPS) - Nelson Rockefeller, a man who should know, hailed capitalism as "the greatest and most productive system mankind has created," before the National Association of Manufacturers. "In a modest way," he added, "I have been a beneficiary" of American capitalism.
Work study: do-it-yourself financial aid

Remember the days when mowing lawns brought weekend spending money? Those days are not necessarily gone. Student development has a variety of work-study jobs available both on campus and off, according to Bob Huber, director of student placement and career planning.

Although a position mowing lawns is usually reserved for the summer (when there are lawns to mow), Huber says, "there are many others to choose from: including library aid, teacher aide, home needs, counseling assistants, work-study positions at the YMCA, receptionists, and others who need help with community observance; the bus, and the week-end bus driver, and more."

Work-study positions are not all designed to provide spending money. They often become part of a student's education.

Those who have applied for on-campus jobs and found they are mostly filled should not be discouraged. According to Huber, many of these positions are easier to reach than might be expected. He suggests car pools to places of employment downtown, or the bus, since most jobs are near or on the bus route.

One such job is at the Community Mental Health Center, located only a block from the bus stop. Students are hired as telephonists for the Crisis Services, a 24-hour "hotline" for the community. Telephonists attend a four-week training period, one session a week, for which work-study students are paid. During that time participants must begin observation, monitoring phone calls and giving aid to the patient.

Students who have a desire to work in a certain field but find there are no work-study jobs available may work with Huber to create a "position." He will help students to write a proposal for a position with an employer never considered before.

Often students are not aware that they qualify for a work-study job. "Basically, work-study is the difference between your financial aid offer and your financial need," says Huber. Students should contact Huber or the Financial Aid office if there is a doubt that they qualify for a work-study position.

Financial aid: how it works, how to get it

by Marcia Kelley

The theory that athletic scholarships devalue our financial aid budget is a fallacy. At Whitworth, $100,000 is consumed by academic scholarships. This is three-fifths of the total college aid budget of $530,000 for the 1975-76 year. Other aids include veteran aid, music scholarships and others.

Whitworth's financial aid fund comes from donated money. For a student to receive aid, three forms must be completed. These include Whitworth's financial aid application, the Parent's Confidential Statement (PCS), and the Federal Educational Opportunity Grant (FEDS) forms. These can all be obtained from the financial aid office.

There are four types of financial aid, including scholarships, grants, loans, and work study. A combination packet of aid is usually offered to the student. According to Bill Rusk of Whitworth's Financial Aid Office, packets for next year should be released within the next few weeks.

The Basic Educational Opportunity Grant is available to students who come from a lower income family. All students may apply. There is no academic requirement to receive this government aid. Grants do not need to be repaid.

A common loan offered is the National Direct Student Loan (NDSL). Repayment of this loan begins nine months after a student no longer attends college at least as a half-time student. The repayment period, having a 3% interest rate, cannot last more than ten years. The NDSL is granted according to a student's financial need.

The Federal Insured Student Loan (FISL) is available to all college students. Nine months after the student is no longer at least a half-time student, repayment must begin with a 7% interest rate. These loans may be obtained from banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions.

This year it was possible for a student with no family financial assistance and limited academic standing to receive $3,170 in aid. Basic Educational Opportunity Grant, $1,400, Washington State Need Grant, $570, and National Direct Student Loan, $1,000.

Bill Rusk, Whitworth Financial Aid Office, states, "Theoretically everyone is paying their own way." This includes financial aid students who receive money from government grants, loans and scholarships. No one is paying for another student's financial aid. College scholarships come from donated money.

This year Whitworth's tuition, room and board bill was $3,000. Next year's bill will rise $1,500 to $4,200. It is Whitworth's policy that fewer students should be financially well taken care of instead of poorly spreading the aid money to many. The scholarship fund is not expected to increase. However, more students are becoming eligible for government aid such as the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant. Therefore, in tuition should not seriously cripple the financial aid student.

More government support toward higher education has enabled more students with low incomes and low academic standing to attend college. A high percentage of students receive financial aid. In addition, others are interested in aid but do not bother to apply. It's not difficult to apply and may really pay off.

Bill Rusk, director of financial aid, says aid offer packets will be out in a few weeks.

SAGA ANNOUNCES NUTRITION PROGRAM

Whitworth's SAGA Food Service Director Ally Dowd has announced plans to sponsor a program to promote nutrition concern on campus.

The program will be called "Nutrition Awareness" and according to Dowd, "the purpose of the program will be three-fold. First, to create an awareness of the four basic food groups; second, to show what food labels are included in each of these four groups; and third, to increase awareness of the portions from each group that a person should eat to maintain a nutritionally sound diet."

Stan Gray, food service manager, will be in charge of the program, which will include informational posters. Dowd and Gray are teaching a class in biotechnology this semester.

Both Dowd and Gray urge students with suggestions for "Nutrition Awareness" to see them, or write ideas on the bulletin boards in the foyer of the dining hall.

CINEMA OFFERINGS PREVIEWED

Tonight at 8 p.m., ASWC presents the Hitchcock Film Festival--a fancy way to say they're showing two Alfred Hitchcock films. One of them is the classic "Dial M for Murder." One young Whitworth woman commented "I'll scare the pucky out of you, so be sure to bring plenty of Kleenex. The Hitchcock chaser to "Dial M" is "Psycho."

To go along with the "Recycling the Revolution" theme, the movie "1776" will show at 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 27. "1776" is a colorful musical production by Peter Hunt showing the forefathers fighting through the time of the revolution. From the mania of Bicentennialism, is nothing sacred?

The next night, Feb. 29, at 8 p.m., "Little Big Man" comes to Cowles Auditorium. Of course anybody who is anybody has seen this movie at least once. It stars Dustin Hoffman, Fay Dunaway, and Chief Dan George (the Indian featured in the giant film at the U.S. Pavilion during Expo). Hoffman, as Jack Crabb, plays roles as an adopted Indian brave, mule Skinner, Big Chief and Godfather. The last survivor of Custer's last stand--in one movie. It's a riot.

THE PRESS BOX

WHITWORTH'S OWN BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION DUE NEXT WEEK

"Recycling the Revolution," Whitworth's Bicentennial Celebration will get into full swing next week. Activities are scheduled to begin Thursday, February 26 and will continue through Sunday, March 7. A variety of radios, films, lectures, concerts, dinners and faculty/student seminars will be part of the celebration.

The design of the week is chronological. America's history and the nation's historical values will be explored from Thursday, February 26 to Tuesday, March 4 and, the future possibilities of America and the student's future are the topic for Friday, March 5 to Sunday, March 7.

Highlights of the two-week celebration will include an afternoon with Dr. Barre Tolkan, an English theme dinner and departmental meetings. Tolkan, professor of English and Folklore at the University of Oregon and noted folklorist and musician, will be on hand Sunday, February 29 at 3 p.m. in the Little Theatre to share his perspectives on current folklore and folktongues.

To acquaint students with the contributions of various ethnic groups, special meals and accompanying fact sheets will be available at SAGA throughout the week. Among them will be the English theme dinner. Dress will be formal as the meal will be followed by a Commencement Concert in the HUB.

Films to be featured in accordance with the themes of past, present and future will include: "1776," "Little Big Man," "Hearts and Minds," and "2001: A Space Odyssey." Also to be screened is a social science film festival on Fridays through March 5.

Forums will be presented throughout the week featuring speakers including Dr. William Silliman, Professor of History, UC Berkeley; Dr. Alan Baker, Vice-President, Seattle First National Bank; Vio DeGoris, author and speaker on native American rights; and Dr. James McCoy, President of Princeton Theological Seminary. On Tuesday, March 3, Whitworth faculty members will present a special Forum entitled "The Conquest of America." At the same Forum, members of the music and speech department will perform a concert band and reading of "A Lincoln Christmas" by Dr. Richard Geary.

The theme of God and America will be a part of Campus Worship during the Revolution Week. With Bishop Van Whiteley speaking on "God's New Israel: The Kingdom of God and America and "A Nation with the Soul of a Church."

More information concerning details of specific activities will soon be available in flyers and posters.
Washington D.C.

Politics and sights highlight capitol experience

by Ann Hollifield

During January Dr. William Benz, associate professor of political science, a group of 17 other students and I went to Washington D.C. for a political science experience that included everything from ogling the hookers on the New York City streets, to going to church with President Ford.

We arrived in D.C. individually or in groups of two or three, on January 10th, after having enjoyed an extra week of vacation. The first few days of the trip were spent getting sorted out and settled in various private homes where we were staying. They were also spent plumbing the depths of the "famous Bill the Walking Tour of Washington D.C.," a standard which included all the major memorials, hit and run glances at the Smithsonian museums, the National Gallery of Art, the Capitol, and the White House.

In between playing tourist, we managed to talk with some government officials, like the U.S. representative to the World Hunger Conference, Dr. Daugherty, and to the Assistant Press Master General, who informed us that "Aunt Minnie" will be paying 20 cents postage for a first class letter by the 1980's.

Two hours were also spent sitting in on the Supreme Court before among the maroon velvet hangings, marble pillars, solemn justices, military men, and lawyers and dead silence, sat the inconspicuous sight of a moonlit football jersey, and two long haired guys in dirty, faded overalls.

One of the discoveries made the first week, by three of us on the same night, was that Washington D.C. is not the place to be alone at night. After growing anxious and considerable searching, this reporter was fortunate enough to meet up with her roommate five minutes before the train the next morning unrefined panic set in. Because of missed rides, the other two adventurers were not so lucky.

Cheryl Gardner spent an hour in the poorly lighted Mall area alone, before finally catching the bus that took her out of the Virginia suburb where she was staying. She then spent another three hours shacking. Tom Krause arrived at the hotel where he was staying, three hours late, 22 dollars cab fare poorer and considerably shaken, just as Benz and the Reverend Bill Tunica—a Wharton graduate and the eastern coordinator for the trip—were starting into the city to look for him.

At the end of the week the group voted to go to New York City on Friday, rather than wait until the following week as originally planned. Our first sight of New York City was the World Trade Center Towers, rising above the jagged skyline, one minute through the thick, evil smelling, yellow fog that hovered over the city.

Our first introduction to the city, was seeing a hooker in full regalia leaning against a bar. The general consensus was to stop and take a picture of her and ignore us and a few minutes later we arrived at our "hotel" located right off of Times Square, in the heart of New York's porno district.

The first evening in the city, everyone went out of the company of us to the Broadway plays located three blocks away. Much of the night, too, was spent jestling the crowds under the bright lights of "Great White Way"—Times Square.

Perhaps the most striking thing about New York, besides its endless valley of people, culture, and smells, is the dramatic difference between the rich and poor. This was shown us in Times Square of 5th Ave. and in a dark little shop on a side street in Greenwich Village. But the most dramatic difference was found on Times Square/Broadway.

On our second evening in New York as four of us headed off to our second Broadway play, we rounded a corner off Times Square and found an old man unflinching against the side of a building for lack of a place to go. Four hours later we emerged from the theatre onto the same street to find the entire road blocked from cross street to cross street and from curb to curb—with chauffured limousines.

Another thing we discovered in both New York and D.C. was that people—no matter where they are—are friendly and helpful. We had but to pull out a map, to have someone stop and ask us where we were and if they could help us with something.

But there was another side to this coin as well, it could be seen in the faces of the store owners in New York as they followed you around the shops or stood outside the door and dared anyone to try and rip them off.

On the Monday following our return to D.C., half of the group attended the Congressional church service at National Presbyterian Church. Among the notables in the congregation were President Ford, John Glenn, a few members of the Ford family and countless Secret Service—easily identifiable by their earphones and their refusal to pray, sing, or take communion.

Later that same day, the group took part in the Angels Rally on the east steps of the capitol. Among the speakers were Bella Abzug and Al Sharpton. In a story in the next day it was stated that "it was obvious that the demonstrators were veterans of the Vietnam protest.

After Congress went into session, there were more people available to talk with us and our academic pursuits were no longer time consuming. Among those with whom we spoke were several legislative aides and assistants, the Deputy Director of CIA intelligence in Asia, Kissinger's right hand man in Middle East affairs, and countless others from all professions and positions. On the lighter side, however, came side excursions to Williamsburg, Mount Vernon, and Arlington National Cemetery.

Perhaps the most exciting thing we saw was the House override Ford's veto of a NEW bill and the passing of the Tunney Amendment which off funds to Angola, both of which were voted on within two hours of each other.

At any given moment on the floor of either house in Congress, there are a minimum of members present. But whenever a major vote comes up the fun begins. Bells start ringing, the subways and elevators are closed to the public, the tally boards flash on, the members pour in and the noise level skyrockets. The tension grows as the count goes up and the time limit goes down. The Gallery leans forward in unison to see how their favorite congressman voted, and if the vote passes by a wide margin, the member's chair, the Gallery leans back and sighs in relief, the floor empties again and everyone settles back to wait for the next vote.

Much of our time was spent on our own, pursuing whatever area of politics that most interested us. For some that meant spending all their time at campaign headquarters and the AFA, for others it meant spending time with the Congressional chaplains, and for all of us it meant a good time.

Of all the thousands of different crazy tales that could be told of the D.C. trip, the crowning glory, the craziest incident of all, came when none other than Bill Benz was caught off guard and left his attaché case and overcoat sitting in the Capitol rotunda. Before he remembered him, the Capitol security guards had cleared the rotunda, and called in a bomb squad to open it. Benz was greatly cold when he went to claim them, with the news that he had wasted $2,000 of taxpayer's money, through carelessness.

Each member of the group that went back to D.C. has an entirely different story to tell of the expedition. Whatever we did or did not get out of the trip educationally, whatever the political implications, we all believe that anyone would say that we didn't-at the very least-have a good time.
Survival on the Orient Express

by Doug Cooley

The young Chinese in Hong Kong talk about the mainland-Taiwan issue, and think Taiwan is living in the past, and also that they desire communist control. They can accept it. The Chinese were just more into being Chinese—a kind of pride or ethnic unity. Out of Hong Kong, the Chinese can go over and back across the Red Chinese border without too much trouble. (Though it was observed that the trains going over were more full than those returning.) Some of the group rode the train to the last stop before the border and got off to get into the mountains of communist China—for what’s worth.

Four hours on a northbound plane (with a short stop in Taipei) set the “study tour” in South Korea. The group spent two days in Seoul, the big city, and found it a little less crowded and little more spread out than other Asian cities. The streets were still crazy, though Korean soldiers are more affable than the other Asians.

In Taegu, the third largest city, accommodations were in other student’s homes where the U.S. students proceeded not to take a bath for four days—to hot running water. Also in these homes, they were turned on to kimchi—at every meal. Kimchi is a hot pickled cabbage with lots of red pepper. All the kimchi was being tired and toured out, caused mild distress.

The group visited “pun-mun-jum,” the demilitarized zone where the U.N. guards the border between South and North Korea. It was rather an ominous tour; they had a military briefing on how to look and behave in front of the North Korean soldier. On each side of the intermingling U.N. forces were the respective South and North Korean military. They compete over who can shoot the highest flag, or gun tower, or microphones.

The Koreans the Whitworthians talked to very much wanted to see the country. There was serious about helping and living for Korea and Koreans. The country has been a playground for either American or Chinese, and Koreans are interested in realizing their own culture.

The group took four days in Hawaii to catch their breath and spend some time returning to the Pine Grove Paradise. However, Betsy Brownlee stayed in Japan to study, and Majorie Huber refused to leave Hawaii.

Pauline thought that traveling in the Far East could not at all be compared with going to Europe. “Europe is Western, but Asia has a different mind setting. Compared with Americans, Asian people seem quiet and composed. Even when they’re loud, they’re soft loud, not boisterous like Americans. But because Asians are less for emotions, they’re more to figure out. Also Asian glow with a greater sense of community, such as Koreans waiting in line. Korea and Korean culture rather than an American emphasis on independence and individuality. Nor do Americans have the sensitivity that tradition, like Asian tradition, offers.”

They listened to “Colombo” laden Japanese on T.V. while they munched tempora.

They bumped into Indians, Australians, Americans, British, Europeans and of course Chinese, studying in Japan.

They dared to cross the streets in Taiwan, and lived to tell about it.

They ate kimchi and kimchi and kimchi in South Korea, and barely lived to tell about that.

“Their” were 17 Whitworthians, or former Whitworthians, (plus senior citizen Marjorie Huber) flying MacPolo and discovering Far East Asia together and for themselves. Although Americans they stuck out like the smell by the campanile, they were spared some of the typical tourist illusions. They lived with Asian families or at YMCA’s or low-cost hotels, usually away from the tourist circuits. They left Dec. 27, and returned six weeks later. In an interview with Pauline Gils, here’s how they Jan tenned the Orient.

For the first two weeks they did Japan, and did it in transit. Traveling by bus or trolley or train, and dragging their own luggage, they stopped at Tokyo, Hiroshima, Ube, Kyoto, and Kobe. Japan is modern and dresses in Western inscriptions, “Akihabara” or “Machi” grow there. Girls wear jeans. It’s easy to tune in John Deeveer or the “Carpenters.” (The “Carpenters” are the rage throughout Asia.) The Japanese say it’s the rapid modernization or listening to American music as being Western. They insist they maintain their Asian distinction.

The Japanese affection for sanitation impressed the Whitworth folk. The Japanese were clean people, never did they deal. All the cars were well kept, the streets always cleaned. The economizing of space also personally impressed them—for instance when they tried to plop their American buns into Japanese bus seats. In the small shops there is space for only two or three customers. You buy, not browse. Through-out the Far East, every public spot of space is used.

During the trip they found that Asians eat mostly rice and fish, or fish and rice. Breakfast is the big meal of the day.

Though schedules, lectures, and appointments directed the group, everybody went their own way when they could. The people, Mark Chow, Nathan Jones, Peter Q. Robb, Libby Kopczynski, Marjorie Huber, Alan Fancher, Joan Reifenerger, Edna Ruby, Pauline Gils, Scott Ballentine and Margaret Emera, under Dr. Dan Sanford, had signed up for Pelli. Sci. 300-Study Tour: Value and Style in East Asia with diverse intentions—for the art, for tasting new culture, for business interests, for future study, for the hell of it. Part of the design of the trip was for one to learn to get around in a foreign country by oneself.

With Taiwan came the zap of culture shock. The group stayed in a dusty, musty hotel in the city of Taipei or it was Taipei is the center of everything on the island. And according to Gima, Taipei “is crazy.” What people on the buses, the cars and the motorcycles (seillions of motorcycles) bicycled for room to move. Street crossing is suicidal.

Industrial pollution and dirt thrive in Taipei. Economic development now has greater priority than the environment. So being, our friends had to boil their water, listened to rats run through their rooms at night, and ended up spending more money to guarantee they indigued in uncontaminated food. "A lot of people came away with a bad attitude about Taiwan," said Gils.

Taipei was whirled away tooling embassies, meeting diplomats, visiting universities, and throwing firecrackers out the hotel windows. The group spent two days in the National Museum looking at the artifacts of ancient Chinese dynasties. The Chinese students impressed the Whitworthians with their seriousness. The students got up at five to study three hours before breakfast.

In the countryside, outside of Taipei, the Chinese still farm the fields by hand, with sticks and water buffalo. In the mountains hanging on the side of cliffs, one-room huts stand. The people looked happy.

The Chinese struck the Whitworthians as more loud and aggressive and pushy—especially in open market selling and bargaining. Oh... and in the marketplaces, besides all those weird looking gourds and peppers, you can shop for meat from tanks of live fish and eel and snakes.

The Taiwan people still believe in their right to maintain Taiwan. The People’s Republic of China established in the 1946 communist revolution that divided China. It is a common issue, common dream, common tension among the Chinese to unite China. The success and power of the Chinese communists discourage any real possibility of Taiwan reacquiring the rest of China. Today Taiwan breaks off trade relations with any nation recognizing the People’s Republic as a legitimate nation. The fall of Vietnam is felt to be the fault of the U.S., yet the Chinese sympathize with America. The continued success of communist expansion was a demoralizing blow to Taiwan.

After Taiwan the Whitworth delegation took in the Red Chinese, where they thought Hong Kong might resemble New York, hut Hong Kong’s was a colony port controlled by the British. The duty-free trade attracts everyone. Hong Kong is 90% Chinese, foreigners are all around, as well as pornography, drugs, and other illicit excitement. Our friends stayed at the local YMCA and for seven days searched the city to find the secret meaning of “MADE IN HONG KONG.”
San Francisco

City life enriches growth and change

by Ricardo Miller

For the first time in 21 years of waiting, I spent a month feeling as though I was actually doing something worth the word "life," living, not existing, taking part instead of always watching from the sidelines, waiting for the Big Something to happen.

During Jan-term, I lived in San Francisco, so close to being on my own as Whittworth would let me, which is considerable. Now, that may not seem like much to you—"worldly creatures" but for me, it was my first chance to escape, really after a life of pampered existence, where one always sounds like an ungrateful, wretched and first-class heel at the slightest hint of wanting to cross the street alone, just to see if it's possible to do it without getting hit. And I am trying very hard not to complain; I just wanted the chance to get hit by a cable-car, instead of a pine tree.

Naturally the school had everything already set up—one of the many services cheerfully provided by the staff and management for just a small fee (our tuition and their salaries). They find you a place to stay, some sort of work to keep you busy and make you feel career-oriented, remind you whether or not you care that God does exist (even in remote, forsaken corners like the Bay Area), and leave you with a marked map and a fond farewell; after that, you're on your own.

Well, not entirely on your own, my two roommates (yes, two; I took whatever was on sale) were from school and there were close to 30 other Whittworthians scattered around the three cities living in similar conditions.

A residence club is an odd thing—I've never heard of it before or since S.F.; it's sort of a cross between a boarding house and an apartment house. Like a boarding house, you rent rooms (which have their own bathrooms), and eat together downstairs in the dining room; but, similar to an apartment house, you rent for long-term contracts (no less than a month), and there are all kinds of people staying there—mean, real people, with real problems.

We were sort of a novelty there, they had never met anyone quite like us before, and the circle was too small for us to escape, really after a life of pampered existence, one of the many who are afloat, San Francisco is the sun on the edge of a universe where all cultural worlds revolve. But the real difference lies not in foreigners and city sights, but in the very crowds around which everything is centered—it's the people that make San Francisco what it is.

It is truly a transient town, I met only a few real natives of the Bay Area, the madraining majority had either been there less than two years or were just "passing through."

I knew San Francisco would lessen my ignorance and naivete, I was surprised at the extent to which it did. I knew that in learning everything I could, I would change, and I did.

But I didn't know that I would still be the same person, just a different or development to find out that I was. And it was an unpleasant shock to find out how hard it was to return here, a hard adjustment, fighting against myself to fit back into the mold and all of the games. I'm not one of them anymore, as much in returning as in did in a month of being gone, I used to be myself, but I'm just a different person now. I'm not one of them anymore.

San Francisco was the time of my life because that's what it was—a time.
Guatemala

Social contrasts apparent south of border

by Mark Anderson

A group of Whitworth biology students, after January in Guatemala, brought back (in addition to things like plants and fish) some new insights into the relationship between the political and economic reality of the country. These insights seem to fit a pattern that is repeated throughout Latin America, but which is not often acknowledged in the West.

Not only is Guatemala a land where literally every environment is easily studied, but also the people are very willing to prove your hypothesis correct. For example, the whitest, richest Guatemalan man I met was a farmer. He said that his family had been farming the same piece of land for generations. He lived in a country where the majority of the population is peasant, and yet he managed to support a family of five on his income from the land. This is not uncommon. In fact, the majority of the population in Guatemala lives on the land. The majority of the country's economic output comes from agriculture. The only major exceptions are the large-scale sugar cane plantations in the south. The rest of the country's economic output comes from the large number of small farmers and small businesses.

The work done on these plantations comprises 70% of the total male population, and is apart from the small number of small plantings. Being a nation fundamentally based on agriculture, all manufactured products have been imported, and at the relatively high cost of their production, can only be afforded by the rich.

For example the rich Guatemalan can afford a new car every year, while the peasant continues to rely on the mule and the ox-cart, and even food provisioning is still done by the mule.

In view of the unattainability of such a life, most were impressed by the peasants apparent life of simplicity, and happiness, or the "viva allegre" as one person put it. The typical Guatemalan peasant that I met was imbued with a religious sentiment that permeates every aspect of his life. He is very religious, and at no official religion, the vast majority claim to be Roman Catholi cs, and practice other Guatemalan peasant, they found is imbued with much of the peasant's social and political consciousness.

"Agape" is the first word that came to mind when I thought about the peasant. Agape is the Greek word for love. It is a universal concept that permeates every aspect of life in Guatemala. The peasant is not only a farmer, but also a religious person. The peasant is not only a farmer, but also a member of the church. The peasant is not only a farmer, but also a member of the family. The peasant is not only a farmer, but also a member of the community.

Consider this apparent happiness, some wondered whether it should be afforded, with, and "improved" along the materialistic line usually thought of. In fact many of the Guatemalans themselves explicitly stated that they wanted nothing to do with advanced technology. They preferred their simple life, their work, their family, and their community. These are the people of Guatemala, and they are happy with their way of life.

An analysis of Senate Bill One

My fellow Americans, you are under arrest

(APR-31)-nf a moment, the entire anti-war movement, if it was not illegal, is illegal. An estimated thousands of students were given prison sentences of up to fifteen years, or possibly even the death sentence.

If Senate Bill One, the controversial criminal code reform bill now sitting in the Senate Judiciary Committee, had been enacted ten years ago, that is exactly what would have happened.

The sanctions laid down by SB-I, put together under the Nixon law-and-order administration, encompass so much, in wording that is so vague, that virtually any political act or statement aimed against the government could be construed as being in violation of some provision of that code.

From the start, the new criminal code was clearly contrived in response to the anti-war movement, by Nixon Attorney Generals Kleindienst and Mitchell. By examining this bill in its context within the administration of the sixties, it becomes clear just how far the influence of Nixon and Mitchell has extended, and how far their attempt at major social change.

For example, the new criminal code would expand the Inceint to riot statute which funds the celebrated Chicago Conspiracy trial. The seven defendants in that trial were convicted on charges which the government failed to prove they had crossed a state line with a gun, and were therefore guilty of riot.

But under SB-1, the government could have ignored that detail. The government would only have to prove that the defendants had used an instrument to plan the event that later had become a riot. The seven Chicago defendants could be found convicted and given three-year jail sentences.

Moreover some felt, as do certain Guatemalan church people and revolutionaries, that these people lack the social consciousness needed to achieve the few improvements (agricultural and economical) that they would like. One student went purposely to study the possibility of "human promotion," in connection with the program "Agape" of the Guatemalan Presbyterian Church. "Agape" is the attempt to improve the agricultural and economical base of the country, but it becomes largely involved with the peasants a social and political consciousness.

"Agape's" approach, he reports, is not to tell the people how or what is needed for development, but to ask them as a group what they would like to do, and allow them to realize their own plans.

One specific problem, for example, was the predicament of being forced to sell corn at low prices by an immediate need of certain items. "Agape" was able to provide credit for these and the storing of the grain until the price of corn went up.

Steps such as these are being taken, but there remain other limitations yet to be broken. Education in general focus as one of the inhibiting factors to agricultural and economical development. Only about 10,000 new graduates from the sixth grade, and seven out of 1000 graduates from universities, which are centralized and set, thus lacking creativity, experimentation, and connection with outside scholarship.

Furthermore, a "riot" is defined in the bill as the act of "notifying ten or more people, that by violent and tumultuous conduct, creates a grave danger of injury or damage to persons or property." But what is "tumultuous conduct" and what constitutes danger to property? Shouting chants while trampling the grass in a park?

Draft board decisions, the destruction of draft records, the encouragement of draft resistance—all of which took place during the anti-war years—can constitute "impairing the military effectiveness of the United States, bringing a sentence of three to thirty years and a $100,000 fine."

Another provision of the bill punishes by a one-year jail term the obstruction of any "official proceeding" through noise, violence, "or any means." What "other means?" Passing out leaflets?

Under SB-1, Daniel Ellsberg could have been charged with a crime of notifying ten or more people that "by violent and tumultuous conduct, creates a grave danger of injury or damage to persons or property." And what is "tumultuous conduct" and what constitutes danger to property? Shouting chants while trampling the grass in a park?

Jan term hectic for intramural sports

by Steve Weber

January term at Whitworth took many students to a variety of far-off places. If anything, the number of other students across campus to the fieldhouse to participation in the intramural program increased.

The schedule for intramurals was very complex during January and as a result much of the competition is still continuing. According to Cindy Pfaffenhoff, an assistant in the Intramural Office, the intramural activity was so intense and rushed that it discouraged many students from participating.

Basketball, the main focus in intramurals during January, was run on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursday evenings. It was difficult for most students to devote this much time to the event. As a result there were many forfeits for the events scheduled to occur.

Terry Graf, director of the intramural program, stated that the reason there were so many forfeits is that most don't get the encouragement needed from their team representatives. He said that the intramural representatives from each team should try to install an interest in the dorm.

Graf cited two representatives who are doing a good job in getting their dorms to participate, Randy Clemens of Arlington and Bruce Haferkamp of South Warren. Most of all though, Graf would like to see individuals take an interest in Intramurals and come to the office to find out what is happening.

January term brought new events to the intramural schedule. In the past, three on five basketball was the extent of intramurals for Jan term, but this past term included five on five basketball, wrestling, an indoor track meet, one on one basketball, a free throw contest, volleyball and a ping pong tournament. Because there were so many events time ran out and some intramurals are now finishing. The events that are concluded are wrestling, the indoor track meet and the free throw contest.

Five on five basketball will be concluded on Sunday with the Carlson "A" team playing the team from Town in its second game of a double elimination match. Carlson lost the first game but expects to make a comeback and tie the match up at one game a piece.

The indoor track meet was won by a team from Stewart that overpowered all other teams easily. McMillian took the wrestling trophy, also by a large margin. The last event that had concluded at press time was the free throw contest. South Warren hooped enough to win for the men's division and West Warren came through for the women.

After January the total intramural point leaders remain the same as last fall. Carlson is still out in front in the men's division with McMillian coming up closely in second. West Warren leads the women's field by a large margin with Goodsell the closest contender.

This spring will bring a cutback of activities because of the lack of involvement that has been shown by students. For instance, volleyball will be dropped during the Spring to get more students involved in Intramural and floor hockey. Other events are chess, pool, co-ed bowling, weight lifting, tennis, softball, par three golf and an outdoor track and field meet.

Graf said he would appreciate having students drop by his office with any comments or just to talk about the Intramural program this spring. He has high hopes about the way it looks now. As Pfaffenhoff said, the Intramural program this spring is "smaller but more solid.'

Baseballers prepare for U of I

Attitude key to succes

by Dave Vaughn

After two weeks of 'official' indoor practice under their belts, Whitworth baseballers continue to prepare for the upcoming season by starting their season opener doubleheader with the University of Idaho in Moscow.

Having one of the best indoor baseball facilities in the Northwest makes it possible for the Pirates to work on their skills almost every facet of the game. But most players agree that a lot of the work is being done on the diamond and are anxious to get outside.

Coach "Spike" Grosvenor's Pirates return 13 lettermen from last year's fourth place Northwest Conference Club, including six starters and all the pitchers. In fact the Pirates have the "most experienced deep" pitching staff since Grosvenor has been at Whitworth.

"We have right now six pitchers who are capable of winning every time out on the mound and three more who have that potential," said Grosvenor. But the key to how the Bucs do this season in terms of winning and losing will depend upon three things. How the team produces at the plate, how the pitching staff works with the infield and, deep," said Grosvenor.

Thirty-five players are out for the 20 varsity positions and those not making the club will play a twenty game junior varsity schedule. Of the 35, two are seniors, twelve are juniors, six are sophomores and fourteen freshmen round out the squad.

The Pirates will play a 32-game schedule with just eight home games. They'll be involved in a tournament with the U. of Washington, Seattle U., CWSC, and EWSC during the spring break and will finish with a crucial four game series in the Portland area on May 1 and 2, unless, hopefully, they qualify for a District I play-off spot.

NCAA Convention avoids split

(CPS)—For awhile it looked as though the big daddy of collegiate sports, the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), might split wide open at its annual convention in mid-January.

Delegates representing seven major NCAA conferences and 20 independent universities threatened to secede if their proposal for a "super division" was not approved. Super division proponents were asking the NCAA to add another division to the three already operating to accommodate the large super-powers.

The big football schools are becoming increasingly nervous over the way the NCAA membership has reduced scholarship limits, staff sizes and team sizes at the expense of major college football. The super division would have given them greater power in deciding recruiting and scholarship policy.

In the end, the big schools had to settle for a committee to study the proposal. Most of the smaller schools were unhappy that the plan wasn't "killed in the bud," but glad to see the giants not gain anymore control over college football.

Heated debate also surrounded another proposal which would have required future athletic scholarships to be awarded on a modified need basis. Proposers of the need proposal appealed to the cost consciousness of the convention delegates. Opponents claimed that the plan would only convince college sports heroes that athletic ability was no longer worth rewarding. The proposal was finally defeated in a roll-call vote.

Impressive. That's the best way to describe the work done by Coach Jean Anderson, who melded together 15 girls into a solid basketball team, one that Whitworth can be proud of. With just four games remaining in the regular season, the women are 9-3 on the season, 4-1 in conference play. The only conference loss was a 57-45 defeat at the hands of Gonzaga earlier this month.

I think the women have really put things together as the season is drawing to a close. After losing their first game January 10 to Eastern Washington State College, the Pirate women won their next seven straight, defeating University of Idaho, College of Idaho, Northwest Nazarene, Blue Mountains College, and Whitman College on the road and big win over Spokane Falls Community College and Carroll College in the Pirates home court. The winning streak came to an abrupt halt with losses at the hands of powerful Flathead Valley Community College (by school of last year) and University of Montana. Both losses were played at Kalispell.

The girls lost their next two games, dropping a close contest to University of Idaho (the only loss for Whitworth on their own court) and the loss to Gonzaga. The girls got back on the winning track by downing Montana 62-41 a week ago, and added a 49-39 win Wednesday evening, that loss dealt to Eastern Washington State College. That win was a long time in coming as it's the first Whitworth victory over Eastern in three years.

Tonight is a big night for the women's team as they host Northwest Nazarene in a conference game. Whitworth is only one game behind league-leading Gonzaga, the Pirates' foe Tuesday night at the fieldhouse. Tomorrow night finds Flathead (PVCC) going to visit a in-a-non-conference tilt. It's on for a story that Eastern couldn't mount a 72-43 loss at the hands of PVCC earlier this month, the Whitworthians would love nothing more than to turn the tables.

Tonight's game with Northwest Nazarene should really be a close and most exciting game. I say that not as the typical sportswriter pre-game comment, but in all sincerity. Northwest lost a close game (46-39) to Whitworth in their first meeting at Nampa. It's a must win for Whitworth.

I think the women can bet that it's going to be a great game. So if you're looking for real excitement, I mean excitement, you don't want to miss the big games this weekend. It's free, it's fun to watch, and it sure helps the team to have that support. Go to the games this weekend. I'm sure you'll be glad you did!

Pirates split home games

by Tim Wysaski

The Whitworth Pirates turned the trick against Pacific University's Bucs last Friday at home, for a narrow 46-45 win.

It was the second time that the Bucs have knocked off Pacific, since Cal Riemke's hoopsters defeated the Bucs by fifteen earlier this month.

Whitworth battled from a nine point deficit in the second half to post the win. Using a patient offense and aggressive defense throughout the entire contest, the hustling Pirates finally grabbed the lead with 25 seconds remaining, as Sam Brasch canned a jumper to vault Whitworth to a 46-45 margin.

Pacific then elected to stall for the last shot, and with two seconds left the Bucs got off an attempt. But, the shot missed its mark and the Bucs were on their way to their first conference victory.

The visiting Bucs must have thought there was a lid on the hoop in the final eight minutes as they went scoreless and enabled the Bucs to catch them.

It was a pleasing win for Whitworth since the Pirates have had bad luck all year long, and seem to falter coming down the stretch in close ballgames.

Brasch paced the Whitworth scoring, as the slick forward pumped in 16 points, while Dave Tikker had 11.

Pacific's Walt Reason, grabbed game scoring honors as he hit for 17 markers.

Whitworth walked the plank with Eastern's Screamin' Eagles for the entire game last Monday, but fell two points short as Eastern came away with a 71-69 win.

The loss drops the Pirates to 9-15 thus far on the season.

Eastern and the Bucs tied up in one of those "classic" basketball games, and after the last second ticked off both teams knew they had been in a real thriller.

The Eagles started fast as they broke to a 7-2 lead, but the "lighting Bucs" were to be denied as they battled back to square the score at 37 apiece heading into the locker room.

That's when all the excitement started. Through the first few minutes of the second half, the teams traded buckets and it wasn't until 13:17 that Eastern could mount a serious lead at 52-46.

But, the Pirates, sparked by reserve Chris Roberts, kept fighting back and when Doug Long splatted a jumper with 5:15, things were deadlocked at 60.

The Eagles then ran off seven unanswered points to take a commanding lead with time running short.

Whitworth didn't die though, as Paul Tikker and Mike Jarrett hit two free throws each, to bring the score to 71-69 with 15 seconds left.

However, that's when it all ended for the Pirates as the Eagles held on for the close win.

Sam Brasch led Whitworth with 16 points while Roberts and Long had 13 apiece.

Gary Brandt picked off nine caroms to lead in the rebounding department.

Gary Brandt outshines opposition in basketball action last weekend. The Pirates topped Pacific U. 46-45 before falling 61-59 to EWSC.

Second half rally sparks big win

by Chuck Laird

Marjorie Graves came off the bench midway through the second half and sparked a rally that carried the Whitworth Pirates women to a 25-20 victory over the "Eagles" from Eastern Washington State College at the Fieldhouse Wednesday night.

The first half was a see-saw battle with both teams trading baskets early in the game. Both Whitworth and Eastern showed menacing zone defenses, forcing numerous turnovers and long outside shots all game long. The largest lead held by either team was 6 points at 6:57 when Whitworth took an 16-12 command. Sophomore guard Sue Anzotighe scored 8 points in the first half to boost the Pirate women in early scoring. However, Eastern came back to tie the score at 10 points at half-time, riding the hot hand of freshman guard Arlene Sunday.

The second half started off very similar to the opening one, each team exchanging baskets. But just 3 minutes into the second half, Eastern threw up a tenacious full court press and rattled off 6 unanswered points to take a 30-24 lead. However, the Whitworthians trimmed away at the lead and tied the score at 32 when freshman forward Marvol Putzier sank 2 shots on a shooting foul. The foul cost Eastern dearly as it took forward Sylvia Liedel out of the game with over nine minutes left in the game. The Pirate women then played very well using an alert defense and a breakaway offense. Putzier put Whitworth on top to stay after breaking open a conference guard Marvee Graves. After that, the Eagles couldn't keep pace with the hustling Pirates. Led by the excellent head-up play of Graves and the superb scoring and rebounding of Putzier, Whitworth outscored Eastern 17-4 before the Eagles scored twice just before the buzzer after the game was well out of reach. Credit should also be given to Ramona Mendoza, Whitworth's fine senior starting guard for a fine performance. It was a sweet win for Coach Jean Anderson, avenging a 45-42 loss in the first game of the year at Cheney.

Marvol Putzier lead all scorers with 16 points, 12 of those coming in the second half. After scoring only 2 points in the first half, Mendoza added 8 more in the final stanza to give her a total of 10 points on the evening. Anzotighe also added 10 points for the Pirate women. Pounding out the rest of the scoring, Graves had 5, Jill Strait had 4, and both Julie Johnson and Cathy Acker tallied 2 points each. Joanna Laidon and Lynn Kelner saw action but did not score.

For Eastern, the leading scorer was Heidi Potter, with 8 points. Sunday added 7, while Sylvia Liedel was held to just 4 points, well below her 14 point average. Whitworth shot 33% from both the floor and the line, while Eastern could only hit 8 out of 30 shots from the floor for a lackluster 22%. They made 1 of 2 free throws for 50%.

Officials for the game were Jim Ringwood and Chuck Jungblut. Tonight Whitworth hosts Northwest Nazarene Wednesday night host Flathead Valley Community College. Game time is 5:30 at the Fieldhouse.

Wrestlers eye conference tourney

by Mike Repovich

Whitworth wrestlers had the talent to better their 5-1-1 record of last year, but have only been able to compile a dual meet record of 3-11 this season. They have been hampered during the course of the season by injuries and inability to put together a full team at any one match.

Last Saturday the team finished their regular season with an open tournament match at North Idaho College. Wrestlers from North Idaho, University of Montana, Gonzaga, and many unattached wrestlers came.

Rob Kroeger led the Whitworth team at the open meet with four wins and no losses. Paul Miller was 4-2 on the afternoon. Tom Hammond was 3-1 and Ken Ashlock was 0-3 before he was forced to stop because of a back injury. Riley Wilson was 3-2, but he faced the toughest competition of the day in the 190 lb. class.

Coach Mark Kondo's team is now pointing toward the conference tournament to be held tomorrow at Linfield College in McMinnville, Oregon.

"We could conceivably put four guys in the finals of the conference tournament, Miller, Ashlock, Kroeger and Wilson," said Kondo. Kondo expects Miller to make it to the finals of the tournament in the 142 lb. class, although he is just coming off a leg injury. He has 22 duals this year and is only two shy of the Whitworth record of 24 in a season set by him in the 74-75 season. His timing isn't as sharp as usual because of the injury, but he will be tough to beat after placing third in conference as a freshman last year.

Pour on the coal

The first railways reached the Northwest in the early eighties. Passengers were ecstatic of the brave and adventurous types. Their journals remarked at the buffalo herds, the Indians, the vastness of the prairies, the incredible mountains.

One man wrote of the Montana coal deposits that often lay right on the earth's surface. Smoke clouds marked the spontaneously ignited fires that seemed to burn perpetually and little noticed.

No steam locomotives trail their dark plumes today but the coal still lies beneath the prairies by the billions of tons. Scientists estimate that it could meet the nation's energy needs for 500 years is done.

An energy crisis is now upon us. Power plants fueled by surface-mined Western coal represent a practical, immediate solution. Such plants are planned and, although they include every environmental safeguard, their existence is being seriously threatened by anti-power forces. Public understanding of the urgency of the situation and support of plant construction without further delay is essential.

Academic Council approves new policies

by Susan Coles

A revision in the Core program, the establishment of a policy concerning participation in commencement, and a change in the Forum grading system are among the proposals approved by the Academic Affairs Council during the months of January and February. At its most recent meeting, the council approved the official name change of the Political Science department to Political Studies.

The major revision of the Core program was passed at the Jan. 13 meeting of the council. Formerly the entire Core program was made up of Core 150, 250, 350, 450. The original Core 450 was dropped from the curriculum several years ago, and Core 350 has been dropped, leaving the science department the responsibility of offering the Core 350 courses, and a new, optional Core 450 has been approved. The new Core 450 course will have a limited enrollment and will be open to seniors only.

As it stands now, Core 450 would be planned by a permanent team of six to eight faculty members, and would be taught by teams of two on a rotating basis. In this manner, every team member will be able to teach Core 450 but every third semester, but would still be involved in planning the course and as a resource to students. The course will basically be designed to help a student clarify his position on vital concerns. The first Core 450 course will be offered to 30 students during fall term 1976. Students who choose to complete the Core 150-250-350-450 sequence will be given some kind of individual recognition.

Also approved at the meeting was a policy concerning participation in commencement. It was decided that students will be allowed to participate in the Commencement on the condition that the student is lacking no more than four full courses to complete his or her degree requirements and has established a plan to complete all work by the end of the following fall term.

Academic dean Duncan Furmanon.

The grading system for Forum was changed from this year's Pass/Fail system to Pass/No Credit at the council's Feb. 17 meeting. The new system will take effect next year, after the council has clarified Forum attendance policies and its relationship to graduation requirements.

The Academic Calendar for 1976-77 was also approved at the Feb. 17 meeting. The calendar includes two days in October set aside for faculty development. Students will have these days off as a break. Faculty Development Days are scheduled for Oct. 11 and 12.

The Academic Affairs Council meets every other week and is responsible for the entire academic program at Whitworth.

'Points' gets budget approval, seeks spring staff

Applicants are being sought for positions on this semester's issues of Points, Whitworth's alternative publication, according to Nancy Haught, Chairperson of the Publications Committee. Monday is the deadline for applications to staff the publication, which just received budget approval.

"Whitworth College has known, in the past, the traditional yearbook. Last spring, out of negative response from the students, emerged the Points, an alternative to the traditional journalistic format," says Haught.

The decision not to have a yearbook was made at the end of the 1974-75 school year by the President's Council. There was little interest from students. The Points staff published a different product for Whitworth, resembling a literary magazine.

The President's Council has approved a $420 budget for Points. The magazine will contain eight more pages than last semester. There will be one patron page, not three pages of ads as in the last semester's edition. Totally, the staff has 10 more pages with which to work.

Since Points has been published and distributed various reactions have formulated. Some feel it has stepped far from the Whitworth annual idea. They miss the pictures of athletic and campus events, friends, and the senior mug shot.

President's Council's approval of the Points budget is final. There is a stipulation that before final approval, the Publications Committee must submit a realistic idea of the actual make-up of the publication, which must include senior pictures. If this mock-up is approved, the budget will be given final approval.

Because of criticism of the fall Points, the spring issue "will be a combination of an annual and a yearbook," states Haught, hopefully combining the best of both forms of publication.

One student stated, "You could tell it took a lot of time and effort, really a quality publication. But, it probably should be either an annual or a magazine."

A limiting factor for last semester's publication was the lack of staff. Production work on Points was mainly handled by the editors, Mary Kelley and Karen Powers, production editors, Josh Lewis and Vicki Becvar, photography editors, and Kathy Hansen, literature editor. Others include Tim Eaton, advisor, Gary Reynolds, business and ad manager, Peggy Hard and Pam Geedes, staff.

Staff members of Points may receive one-quarter or one-half credit. Four editor jobs are available, editor-in-chief, literary, photo and production managers. Interested students should contact Haught, or may pick up applications from SAC or The Whitworthian. The deadline for applications is Monday. All applications should be turned in to Haught by then.

The Publications Committee would like your ideas and criticisms concerning Points. If you would like to express your views contact Haught or attend the next meeting, Monday at 7:30 in The Whitworthian office.

Nancy Haught, Publications Committee chairman.
The dark side of the reverend Moon

by Allen Rabinowitz (CPS)

"They never leave you alone for one minute of the day," a former热带河 Moonie woman at the University of Texas. "I was beginning to forget who I was after five days of this. They break down every day a bit. I replaced it with their own beliefs, you've never had and saw the human side of Moon."

"They" are followers of the Reverend Sun Myung Moon, founder and leader of the Unification Church. It may seem absurd that a man who told Richard Nixon to "hang in there," is likely to call his critics messengers of Satan—but at least communists—could gain the massive following that Moon has. But it is happening. In the three years since he came here from his native South Korea, Moon has amassed 30,000 young American "Moonies" and has become a multimillionaire in the process.

Outage against the Unification Church has been growing, growing from the tremendous wealth and on the "brainwashing" of American young people. Critics in Congress have spoken up. A national anti-Moon organization called Citizens Engaged in Reuniting Families has a membership of 200 people among whose children have entered Moon's fold.

The only ones who know for certain what goes on in the Unification Church are those who put themselves through it. It is debatable whether the actions of the Church's leaders or their programs are more reprehensible. But one thing is clear: Sun Myung Moon's followers are extremely serious about their beliefs. The Unification Church has also become a political force in some countries, including the United States, where it has won elections in several states.

"Father," as his followers call him, lives on an estate of $500,000 on the Hudson River, tax-free, since it is owned by a religious institution.
Dear Editor,

Last Saturday night during Dr. Hunt's introduction to "Little Big Man," we were disgusted by the adulation and respect displayed by the audience. Certainly such conduct was far more suitable for a high school or junior high school assembly than for a college age level group. We willingly grant that Saturday night is usually a time for entertainment and that the introduction was over-extended, but none-the-less we should hope that all ages will be able to control themselves longer to extend common courtesy to a speaker. And does our education have to stop Friday evening at 5 p.m.? Those who took the time to listen to Dr. Hunt know that his address contained many pertinent facts which helped to enrich the movie and lend understanding to much of the action.

We would like to congratulate Dr. Hunt on his astute handling of the situation, and feel that the student body owes him an apology.

The Mark Terry who authored last issue's controversial letter concerning Catholicism is not the Mark Terry who lives in Calvisio, and The Whitworthian apologizes for any problems Whitworth's Mark Terry may have experienced.

To the Editor:

It was interesting to me that Mark Terry, in his letter of February 20, nowhere quoted the Bible to support his claim that I cannot get heaven except through the Roman Catholic Church. All that he quoted was the words of three of four men, as human as you or I, and therefore as susceptible to sin. I cannot believe in the infallibility of the pope when I remember the fallings and crimes of these "princes" who don't dare to speak of infallibility until 1870.

I would urge Mr. Terry to open his heart and search the Bible to find what says about this matter. The "True Church" is built on Jesus Christ, and its members are those who confess Him as Savior and Lord. According to the Word of God, I merely have to trust and believe in the Lord, and accept Him as my Savior. I do not need to trust in tradition, rituals, sacraments, or the words of man to be saved.

See you in heaven.
/s/ Louise Klineman

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the article on Catholicism since I am Catholic and would like to clarify a few things. First of all, I felt that the article was stupidly insensitive and was written solely on the basis of religious prejudice.

Scottish Bishop Gordon Gray is considered to be a very old conservative man. However, even though his opinions may be biased, nowhere does he state that anyone other than Catholics will be damned to hell.

The nearest of the three Ex Cathedrals was written 535 years ago. During this time the Catholic Church, being almost all of what Christianity represents, contained the powerful statements to groups of people that the church never had to encounter from day to day. Since the church was not in contact with many of these people, strong, impetuous reprimands were issued to bring to the attention of those who were not acting out of ignorance, but rather defiance.

Next it is true that the Catholics have used strong language, as all other religions have in defense of their beliefs. Many fingers can be pointed to mistakes in the Catholic past, and budget for are given little, out-of-the-way space with 10 point headlines or no coverage at all. How many students skimmed through the last Whitworthian and completely overlooked "Re-Birth of the Revolution" because it was placed in the corner over the staff box and next to SADA's Nutrition Program. It is encouraging to see the Whitworthian make such a promise to provide information; however, is that the only purpose for existence?

And yet, the format of the past has not indicated such purpose. Few student activities receive real coverage; feature articles take precedence over news stories publicizing events of interest to the entire student body.

I question the priorities of the editorial staff in planning the Whitworthian. It seems to me that in many respects, the system used is only "another excuse for anyone not to be informed."

Dear Editor,

I was pleased to see that the Whitworthian has finally made a commitment to the students of Whitworth College in the Editorial printed on page two of the February 20th issue. "We hope that there will be a good reception to do so and to inform us on the issues confronting student government..." The Whitworthian pledges to do our part to provide information.

And yet, the format of the past has not indicated such purpose. Few student activities receive real coverage; feature articles take precedence over news stories publicizing events of interest to the entire student body.

Drinking on campus still an explosive issue

by Doug Cooley

Well friends, it’s time to crack that beer, sit back in your favorite beanbag, and read the WHIT which appeared on the back pages last week (April 11, 1975 was our last token tribute.) Oops, you might want to lock that door first.

According to policy in past, present, and foreseeable future, drinking alcohol is prohibited on the Whitworth campus. The Student Life Committee of the Board of Trustees arrived at this policy in the opinion that “enlightened decisions made by students can best be negotiated in an environment where the pressure to consume alcohol is absent.”

Yet students who want to drink, can drink anywhere as long as they creep and sneak. Drinking itself is not as much the student’s problem as it is the inconsistency and hypocrisy within Whitworth College. Some high-level officials among our governing Whitworth organizations actively weigh this issue.

Your friend and mine, Student Development—under Shirley Short and her RA (Advisory Committee)—directly carry the fight for reevaluation of the alcohol policy. Student Development, as we know too well, stresses human development through a system of personal and group decision making. But it all stops at the drinking decision. This glaring inconsistency causes RA’s to be uncomfortable and ineffective in enforcing the policy and in relationships with residents.

On Feb. 4, the RA’s drafted a three-page statement blaming pros and cons of continuing their KohoMt, submitted it to David Weverha and Bill Davis, board members on the issue. The committee will chew on this issue when they meet in April. The entire Board of Trustees then meets later in April, but it wouldn’t be wise for discussion of alcohol policy revision.

When Student Development dropped the issue as the board members were “shocked.” Readucation and facts about student life will take time to convey. Shirley Short mentioned that back in ’68, dancing was the transgression to teach.

Short says Student Development is trying to “act with personal and professional integrity, and as a rule toward maturity.” But she adds, “It’s misleading to think change is coming.”

Administration’s main man, Vice President and Academic Dean David Winter thinks alcohol is an “explosive issue when looked at,” not only for the college but for society. He recognizes a snowballing social problem with alcohol, yet believes personal education about the stuff should be part of the development process. The distance between students and staff over the policy has created a “bad situation.” Winter states about “times as divisive as dancing,” it’s more emotional.

The student’s plan for direct sessions with the Student Life Committee—a is Student Development—may allow them to at least get their swizzle sticks in the door. However, Winter thinks it will be difficult to convince the constituency, and only experience with drinking adds to human growth. He has “confidence we won’t have understanding on either (students or public supporters) side.” He conceives “current policy can’t last indefinitely.” Perhaps only until the Tricentennial.

ASWC President Craig Grant says “the critical issue is finance, there is no other way to interpret it.” Administration’s Development Office must raise $700,000 in gift money, which is usually applied to financial aid. Entertaining spirits other than holy ones on campus may offend some of our conservative, but rich donors. And as Whitworth has committed itself to no deficit spending, the next couple years, guess who’s going to take the hit. If we wish to drink, GrantGuesses our bill gets gossiped another five per cent. (Whitworth already drains the highest tuition in the state.)

Grant also says “we shouldn’t just consider policy changes because they’re uncomfortable for the staff (Student Development) to carry out.” It might be a “silly” issue anyway since a small percentage of people 21 or over, legal consumers in the state, dwell on campus. Of, he adds “the question we ask could we illegally drink? This all means nothing different, except that someday after you’ve graduated and all become missionaries, Whitworth Prohibition will be moderated. In the meantime you might consider if they look away our policy, why they’d take away the thrill of the game. So remember, ‘when you grab for gusto’ make sure the door is closed, or “when you say Bud,” don’t say it too loud.

Credit card blitz awaits graduating seniors

(CPS)—Dear Graduating Senior,

We would like to offer you a golden opportunity to spend your future income quickly and painlessly with a credit card. Price sample enclosed. Just complete the handy application and Handy sample enclosed.

Graduating seniors all over the country are now getting the credit card blitz as they prepare to enter the working, spending world. But even with solicitation like the one above, students still have to pass through the eye of the credit companies needle before they are entitled to trade a piece of plastic for goods and services.

There’s no doubt that sometime the prospective student-debtor is going to spend all his credit on his credit card in the sample enclosed. Credit card applications include about $600 in debts for every man, woman and child in the U.S. Merchants encourage the use of credit cards whenever possible. “My customers use credit cards so they can buy meals they can’t afford,” explains one retailer.

The credit card racket provides its debtors with those instant loans that everyone wants but some the end of the month. The bill collector will have his hand out. On the most common types of credit cards—gasoline, retail store and bank cards—the service is generally free if the bill is paid within 30 days. But once the first 30-day grace period is over, interest rates pile up to 12 and 18 percent annually. On travel and entertainment cards, annual fee is charged even if the card is not used.

Because of two new credit laws passed last year, the credit card situation has improved somewhat for potential debtors. Credit cards aren’t any easier to get but if you’re denied one, the credit report to the rejections (not in writing). If they have checked your credit rating with an independent agency, you have the right to find out what’s in it in the file that caused the adverse ruling. If there’s a mistake, the agency must go through the motions of re-investigating. And if the agency refuses to correct the error, you have the right to add your own version of the story to the file which must be given to all inquiring creditors.

Another triumph for debtors came with a new Federal Reserve Board regulation applying mainly to the bank cards. Previously, when someone paid for goods or services with a bank card and the merchandise or work was faulty, the customer had no recourse. The bill still had to be paid to the creditor, which was a hit. Now customers who pay who can withhold payment for bad merchandise or service. That’s a good reason for limiting the use of bank cards while traveling.

Women made some gains with the new credit laws although not as many as had been lobbied for by women’s groups. Creditors may no longer evaluate a woman’s credit potential on the basis of her husband’s credit ratings or may not the credit consider married people more credit-worthy than singles. Women’s credit-bearing intentions can no longer be scrutinized and part-time income as well as alimony and child support payments can be counted as part of income.

Financial wizards who know the value of a good credit rating have devised a few strategies for getting credit even as low-income students. Former banker Michael Phillips, who wrote The Seven Laws of Money, suggests opening a checking account with the largest amount of money possible even if it means borrowing a couple of days. Many bankers keep that first figure foremost in their minds when making the great credit decision.

Then, Phillips said, you need to have a job (being a student will do), an address and a checking account for one year. Try applying for a gasoline credit card, then a department store card. These are the easiest kinds of credit cards to get. Now, go for a national department store card and use it once or twice. Pay your bills promptly. Then, go for the bigger, the BankAmerica or MasterCharge.

Of course if you’re a student and you receive an invitation to get a bank card, forget the above strategy and go to the head of the line. Even if you don’t use the card, a zero balance from non-use is usually every bit as valuable for your credit rating as plenty of paid-up bills.

(CPS) — Sorority women at Oregon State University have been plagued with claims and appearances by an unidentified man known to Corvalis police as Diaper Man.

So far Diaper Man has been spotted wandering through three sorority houses and a clothing store wearing only a diaper. His telephone calls have included invitations to women to change his diapers.

The first sighting of the diaper draped exhibitionist was made shortly after Thanksgiving, when a woman inside an OSU sorority saw a man standing on a catwalk outside the house wearing only a diaper and holding a box of baby powder.

"We have reason to believe he is a college student," officers on the case speculated.

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS, PATIENT NOT SEEING EYE TO EYE

(CPS) — Albert Monk has a beef with the University of Texas because it lost one of his eyes.

Monk's eye was removed during surgery three years ago and was sent to the UT Health Service Center for tests. While at the center a technician tipped over a container and the eyeball rolled around a sink and disappeared down a drain. Monk tried to collect for the oversight but was rebuffed by a local court. Recently, however, he was given the right to sue for damages by the Texas Supreme Court. Monk says that the loss has caused him mental anguish and nervousness.

COURT RULES DORMIES MUST STAY

(CPS) — College students who are forced to live in college-owned housing will probably be stuck there awhile longer because of a recent Texas Supreme Court ruling.

The Texas high court ruled that Texas Women's University had the right to require all students under the age of 23 years to live in dorms because the rule is considered a valid educational tool.

The court found nothing untoward in the fact that the school had incurred a bond debt against its on-campus housing and obviously needed a full house in order to meet its financial obligations.

"On campus dormitory life," the court stated, "adds to the intellectual and emotional development of its students."

DIAPER CLOTHED CADGILED IN OREGON

(CPS) — Students scrambling for that one, last tuition payment often opt for panhandling, but a recent University of Washington study advises going about it scientifically.

The study found that the most successful begging method was the subtle smile, stoop-shouldered approach, with males approaching one or two females or a female approaching one or two males. A submissive, stoop-shouldered female hitting up one or two males who are eating proved to be especially rewarding, the study found. Families and male-female pairs should be avoided and begging is usually best in spring, according to the study.

BURGERS BEACHED IN HONG KONG

(CPS/PNS) — Ronald McDonald is doing some traveling these days, introducing the Big Mac to China. The burger bums are selling about 7000 hamburgers a day in Hong Kong while apple pies are going 1 1/2 faster than at any of the 3300 McDonald's scattered across the globe.

Daniel Ng, whose friends now call him the "Hamburger King of Hong Kong," claims that his franchise is doing better business than 90% of the American McDonald's.

Part of the reason for his success is that the Chinese have yet to catch on to making burgers. One English-language newspaper, however, is promoting the arrival of the golden arches, said that the competition is a "stringy, rubbery ball of hash cupsed in a bullet-hard bun that restaurants have the audacity to call a hamburger."

With the exceptions of the buns, all food for the Chinese McDonald's is imported from the US.

THE JOCK AND THE POMPOM

(CPS) — The federal law against sex discrimination called Title IX has been invoked on behalf of males, too, occasionally at the request of women's groups. The coordinator of the local National Organization of Women (NOW) education task force urged Oklahoma University (OU) officials to postpone trials for the pompom squad because it excluded clear violation of Title IX.

The NOW coordinator, Joanna Lee Morgan, said that failure to enable females to participate in the pompom squad "would jeopardize OU's federal funding."

The pompom squad is not funded directly by the university but uses its facilities. Morgan also claimed that the advertisements for the squad were in violation of Title IX. Advertisements were directed to "girls" and no mention of male participation was made.

TUNNEY, RUNNING HARD TO KEEP HIS SENATE SEAT, RACKED UP A $200,000 MAIL RALLY WITH A NEWSLETTER HE SENT TO 1.3 MILLION OF HIS CALIFORNIA CONSTITUENTS.

"The four pages note Tunney's name 64 times, and described him as a leader among first-term senators."

Newsletters of this sort are nothing new, and in almost every case the taxpayer picks the bill for mailing. Other congressional on the campaign trail have used the newsletter trick this year, including Sen. James Buckley (R-N.Y.) and Sen. Lowell P. Weicker (R-Conn.), who each mentioned their own names more than 30 times in their newsletters.

The Senate Ethics Committee recently decided to crack down after a fashion-on congressmen using free-mailing as a tool in their campaign bag of tricks. They have ruled that senators using their franking privilege for mailings can only use their own name or the pronoun "I" five times on a page. The new rule went into effect at the beginning of the year and doesn't affect Tunney's mailing.

Common Cause, the self-proclaimed public interest group, has been impressed with the Ethics Committee's "crack down." They have brought suit asking that free-mailing privilege be ruled unconstitutional in a federal court. They charge that the franking privilege allows senators and representatives to send out free mailings that are in fact no more than political propaganda.

PARENTS WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Following a student poll, Parents Weekend has been definitely scheduled for April 9, 10, and 11. Parents will be receiving invitations soon for the weekend that will include time for parents to meet faculty members and administration personnel. Students are asked to encourage their parents to attend.

INTERNERSHIP OPPORTUNITY ANNOUNCED

Fifty college students will be chosen to participate in the National Trust for Historic Preservation 12-week summer internship program this year.

Deadline for applications is March 5.

The Trust provides the summer internship, which pays students a salary of $3.96 per hour, to assure that students interested in preservation can gain practical working and learning experience through training in the various fields of historic preservation.

A broad range of opportunities is available in such fields as architectural history, architecture, art history, economics, history, horticulture, the humanities, journalism, landscape architecture, law, library sciences and planning.

Interns are placed with Trust member organizations, at Trust historic properties, or at the National Trust headquarters in Washington, D.C. The program runs from June 7 to August 27, 1976.

Summer interns are responsible for their own room and board and transportation costs, according to Patricia E. Williams, the Trust’s Community Education Coordinator.

Inquiries about this program should be addressed to: Community Education Coordinator, Division of Education Services, National Trust for Historic Preservation, 740-746 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

CYPRESS LANE PET POLICY QUESTIONED

Married students living in Cypress Lane are opposing the pet policy which has banned any new uncaged pets.

The pet policy says that no uncaged pets will be allowed in the residence halls and no new uncaged pets will be allowed in Cypress Lane.

Craig Grant, President Associated Students of Whitworth College, said, “As far as I’m concerned, this is the best policy.”

Marc Gronholz, Cypress Lane resident, spoke against the policy saying, “I don’t think it should apply to married student housing.”

According to Grant, two or three years ago pets were allowed on campus and “it turned out to be the worst decision.” Among the problems were ruined furniture, sick and dangerous snakes, and dogs. Eventually it became clear that the pet policy was not a good idea.

Gronholz feels the married students should be allowed to make their own campus residence policy for their homes. “This is the same as renting a house,” he said. “We shouldn’t have to have the same rules as the dorms.”

Pets are being phased out of Cypress Lane for different reasons, says Grant. For example, although some people have cordoned off areas where pets are dogs running around campus.

“The dogs that are running around are not from Rits and Chains,” said Gronholz. Most students with dogs in Cypress Lane have built fences in their yards for them.

Grant feels that “It is too small a community to allow anything like this.”

Gronholz has suggested a separate council made up of married students to handle complaints about pets with Cypress Lane. He feels the married students could deal with the pet issue in this way.

“If you start making exceptions,” Grant said, “you might as well not have any rules.”

However, he suggested Gronholz talk with the Student Affairs Council.

Folklorist Toelken debunks 'fakelore' heroes

by Kathy Pecka

If you attended last Sunday's presentation by Dr. Barre Toelken, folklorist, expecting to hear about Paul Bunyan, Johnny Appleseed and People (bill, you were for sure. According to Toelken, the professor at the University of Oregon, those characters are "fake heroes", products of a commercial world that had been asked to accept instead of our real folk heritage.

"We have tended to buy the thing that looks good," Toelken said to an audience of about 300. "Loggers don't tell Paul Bunyan stories. We've collected six Paul Bunyan stories from real loggers, and they're too obnoxious to repeat. Do we want stuff that can be read in third grade, or that tells real loggers?"

He pointed out that in the published Paul Bunyan stories, written in a professional manner, Bunyan is more representative of the logging companies than of the loggers. In one of the early stories, Bunyan reads the stars and acquires a kind of heavenly commission to go out and cut the forests to build homes for mankind. Then, just concerned about doing a job, a lot of hard work.

Toelken, who holds a Ph.D. in Medieval Literature, also expanded the truth about Johnny Appleseed. Appleseed was a man with an English accent, who shed his farm and decided to go out into the unknown, to spread apple seeds—if he didn't, we would have none.

"Real folklore is a study of what we do, say and sing in our own language, in our own culture and our own time. Folklore is the everyday life of the people, their possessions and their behavior and the way they relate to each other. Real loggers don't talk about 'cutting the forests to build homes for mankind.' They just concerned about doing a job, a lot of hard work."

Toelken said that there are many stories that many in the audience had sung as children (not in front of parents) and never realized were folklore stories. "Golly, glory, hallujah, teacher hit me with a ruler, so I shot her in the arm with a roller tangerine..." brought back many memories for this reporter, who is also guilty of singing "Redskin the Six-Gun Shooter," instead of "Redskin, the Red-Haired Reindeer."

A strength of both literature and folklore, said Toelken, is that a person can experience a wide range of things vicariously and doesn't then need to go out and do them, thus relieving tensions and frustrations.

Frontier folklore was accurate commentator on the realities of frontier life, not praises of grand enterprise as we have come to regard it. The stories of real hardships, Toelken asked the audience to imagine, would be told to young women, brought up to believe that cleanliness is next to Godliness, then having five women made of dirt. He sang "The Housewife's Lament," and the entire audience could appreciate the universality of the trials and the satisfaction of knowing that they wished it to be. This song was accurately descriptive of the way we feel about ourselves.

The program ended with a discussion of ethnic jokes. "Political harmony is universal," Toelken said. "Humor in the Dakotas and the United States is non-educational love, like cowboy songs. About ethnic jokes, Toelken made a pertinent comment. "Most cultures laugh at the things that still bother them in their nervous categories; race, sex, politics, here."

He ended with a statement that after his presentation, most attendees were a bit agrees with: "If you take the folklore out of any culture, by not studying and appreciating it, you take the soul out of that culture."

Ethnic meals give bicentennial flavor

by Marc Meddell

As a portion of the Recycling the Revolution week, Saga Foods has provided theme meals oriented around the various cultures represented in the American melting pot. The meals were coordinated by the Saga Food Committee in conjunction with Saga and members of the ethnic groups represented.

The main purpose of the theme meals was to provide an education and influence on our culture from the viewpoints of what America is made of. The meals were presented in a chronological fashion—from the early English settlers to present-day Americans—throughout the month for the future's future meal.

The events of the "Recycling the Revolution" were particularly well-attended and influential, showing our culture from the viewpoints of what America is made of. The meals were presented in a chronological fashion—from the early English settlers to present-day Americans—throughout the month for the future's future meal.

The theme meals were particularly well-attended and influential, showing our culture from the viewpoints of what America is made of. The meals were presented in a chronological fashion—from the early English settlers to present-day Americans—throughout the month for the future's future meal.

The directors of Saga Food Service were very happy to be involved in the bicentennial celebration. As Student Manager Ted Christian stated, "The meals were fun for us to do and it was a privilege to be involved in the Recycling of the Revolution." Saga Foods Director Allen Dowd feels similar sentiments saying, "We are happy to be involved in Whitworth community life to be able to provide extra events, such as theme meals." Manager Bob Crockett also felt it a privilege to provide "A real feel for ethnic flavor."

Student sentiments were also very positive. The majority of the students interviewed were particularly impressed with the English and African American meal themes, indicating a desire to "Pretty decent" to "Excellent." People were especially impressed with the variety of foods offered and the atmosphere of the dining hall.

Tomorrow night's Future's Meal is based upon opinions of what might and most likely will occur in the future. A questionaire is utilized to approximate the possibilities for changing the meal plan in the dining hall to an "America's Make-Up" plan. The questionaire is based upon the hunger situation—particularly utilizing foods which take less energy to produce than the tank, we would have none. The results are published in "The Daily Trojan" and the questionnaire is being distributed to all college students through the dining hall.

All in all, the theme meals have presented a huge part of what America is made of. A practical overview of the various cultures involved in America's make- up, present and future has been proffered. Quite a taste of where we are at.

"Recycling the Revolution"

Native American writer points up flaws in system

by Richard Miller

In order to attain a clear perspective of anything—a law, a person, even a country—you must first consider that thing’s past—its roots, culture, influences. And that is what we are supposed to be doing as we “Recycle the Revolution;” we must see where the United States has been before we can see where it’s going.

Author Vine Deloria (God is Red: Custer Died for Your Sins) was on campus recently to explain what the bicentennial means to the part of America not included in celebrating 200 years of existence—the Indians. And the grim picture he painted of the unfair treatment of Indians in the past was not contradicted by his bleak predictions of the non-Indians’ future.

“It is obvious that the white people cannot govern themselves,” said Deloria, explaining that the system no longer works because “the mystique of the western culture is gone.”

Deloria said that no longer do the institutions of America serve the people; it is the people who serve the institutions.

Deloria said that no longer do the institutions of America serve the people; it is the people who serve the institutions.

“Recycling is absurd when the very spirit you are recycling died five or six years after it began. We stand on the verge of a real revolution if we can find the guts to do it.”

Saying that the government has lost all contact with the people it’s supposed to serve, Deloria said he felt the very things that helped us organize the new country 200 years ago are rippling apart now.

“If you think you’re serious about “Recycling the Revolution,” you must be willing to tear away the instructions that no longer serve you. If you don’t, it will be harder in the next 200 years to recycle in the proper direction that should have been there initially.” He added that he doubted that this country would be in existence then.

Deloria said that the U.S.‘s main problem was the inadequacy of its leaders to serve the people.

“There isn’t a tribe in the whole world that is as poorly served or guided as New York City.”

When asked for any suggestions to help this country get back on its feet, Deloria replied, “First, vote out every incumbent you can find; really shake up the system.” He explained that the same forces that made Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson and John Adams the faces that turned up in Washington D.C. through-out different administrations, making the same mistakes they did before.

One of the main problems, explained Deloria, is that while Indian culture is steeped in tradition, the U.S. has only 200 years of experience yet continually tries to teach everyone how things should be done. And that is why 95% of Indians have been given such an unfair shake in the matter.

“The Indians in the 20th century is still so traditional that they are particularly vulnerable, as the world was the way it was in the beginning.”

He used as an example the fight against the Central Arizona Project that would take away thousands of acres of Indian land because of a planned dam. All of a sudden, the tribe gave their permission to have the dam built because the builders had agreed to change the name of the dam to the name of the tribe, the Indians to the whites, it was just another way of exploiting the Indian; but to the Indian, it was the highest way, traditionally honor of a tribe, and they interpreted it in the traditional way.

Deloria said that the main thing working against the country right now is the attitude of the people.

“I was of the generation that was against the political structure, willing to go out and fight against it.”

He said he felt that the younger generation to whom the future of the U.S. belongs is “a generation of no guts.”

“When people stand up and force an issue, then things move.”

Deloria also said that a basic problem was that we don’t ask the essential questions.

“We place over facts by celebrating famous battles. But we never ask—What is it to be an American at this time in history?”

If you treat your neighbor like you treat yourself, pretty soon you get to the point where if he doesn’t act or think like yourself, well by God go out and beat him till he does.

It dawned on me, one night during a Crafts class, that I had given a whole year in a gold mine and was thinking silver, and had found neither. All of a sudden it occurred to me when I realized that these are the days.

The art instructor demonstrated the art of weaving handkerchiefs, and I had believed that such an art really existed, since it was the bane of college laces. I followed weave by weave and listened to the lecture with a slight grin on my face. I pictured my father, sitting in front of a pile of business at the office and wondering what it would be like if we could trade places and he could sit in my Crafts class. He could throw his creativity towards a cabinet, and he could make a beautiful one. It was then that a wide smile jumped across my face. He would give anything to be in my shoes for an hour.

My shoes vary, depending on course of my activities, as a college girl, with a few shoes, and no place.

See the students in the Hub. Some are eating, or talking to, Some (most) are talking. The worried looks on their faces. See the students who give up twelve pages due tonight and the text book never made it to the book store. He is worried. The book store is sorry. He has not signed his name on his laundry. At least he can wear a clean shirt to his own funeral. He opens the door out of the Hub with his nose intact, and goes in.

Here comes another one, and she pours her coffee down the inside cover of her beautifully typed term paper. She has worked herself nearly to death! The paper was a big success. A whole day in the library, doing research on the development of the "Animal Catcher." The professor was so impressed that he was close to tears. She had obviously slept in her clothes. This poor student if only her parents knew that they may break loose and fall off or something. What is she thinking making sense to me when after all she said.

The years race past me and now and then.

The years race past me and now and then.
A would-be athlete's tale of woe

by Debbie Keister

I've always been interested in sports. In fact when I was a little girl I always wanted a football instead of a Barbie doll. I guess that explains my excitement when I learned the legislators had passed a bill requiring all sports to be co-ed. Roy, could I see possibilities with that?

Naturally when I heard about this I immediately decided to get involved, and began to plan my season. First off I would start easy by playing on the varsity football team and finally work up to my favorite pastime, Wrestling. I just couldn't wait to get started.

Accordingly I showed up for the first football practice of the year at seven the next morning. At seven-o-one my problems began. To start off the coach wouldn't believe me when I told him about the bill allowing girls to play boys. And when he finally did he called all the other guys into a huddle to discuss their next moves.

As they huddled I considered my strategy. I could either quit now or I could insist on separate locker rooms and my right to play. I decided to play and negotiate the locker rooms. Coming out of the huddle the coach came over, patted me on the back and said: "Smith, the league's decided to let you play on one condition. That we have separate locker rooms." I quickly told him that was great, grabbed the nearest equipment and dashed into the girl's locker room to get dressed.

Just as I was finishing tying my shoes I heard a knock at the door. I told them to come on in only to have this pint size water boy open the door.

WELL, WHAT IS IT?

COACH WANTS TO KNOW IF YOU HAVE AN ATHLETIC SUPPORTER.

WHAT DO YOU THINK I AM? SURE I HAVE. ALL MY FRIENDS ARE SITTING IN THE STANDS RIGHT NOW WAITING TO CHEER ME ON.

Blushing beet red, he mumbled something about telling the coach and ran out. Thinking I had handled that quite well I finished getting ready and walked out onto the field.

I won't go into details about that season. I will say, however, that I played on the line every game. In fact even if I do say so myself, I was the line, all 380 pounds of me. I've never seen people get so scared as when I walked onto the field. Why, even the goal posts shook.

I had a lot of fun playing football but I couldn't wait 'til basketball season started. There was something about those uniforms. Anyway, I signed up with the coach and was told by him that I wouldn't have to practice until after the first game as he wanted to keep me a secret from the pre-season scouts.

As the first game approached I began to get nervous. What if I didn't know what to do? What if I fouled out? What if I stepped on the referee?

Don't worry about it, the coach advised. When they see you running down the floor they'll be sure and move. Somewhat reassured I thanked him and put on my warm up over my uniform.

Hearing the warning whistle I rushed out of the locker room onto the floor. The ref tossed the ball and the game had begun. Luckily I caught the tip off and stroked it for the basket. It was to be the only two points I would make that year.

I had no problem making the basket it was just that I hadn't counted on all the running I'd have to do. You see after making the basket I ran halfway up the court and collapsed into the middle of it from exhaustion. And there I laid for the rest of the game. No one could lift me so the team dribbled around me all night. How embarrassing.

Deciding that basketball and I definitely did not mix I turned my talents to my favorite sport, Wrestling. The wrestling coach was glad to have me. He had talked with my football coach and couldn't wait to see me in action.

I beat every guy on the team. All I had to do was threaten to sit on them and they'd forfeit.

I really was quite pleased with myself. Unfortunately there was one obstacle that I had to overcome. My weight. To be a wrestler you have to maintain a certain weight all season. I maintained a certain weight alright, 380 pounds. Unfortunately, I was too heavy for unlimted. I'd have to diet down. There went my wrestling career right out the window along with the scales.

I guess I just wasn't cut out for wrestling. But I'm not going to give up. Not by a long shot. I'm seriously considering swimming for next year. In fact I'm so into the Physics class I'm working on how much water I'd displace and if there would be enough left in the pool to swim in.

What can I say? At 380 pounds, you don't go in for horseback riding.

I'm compelled to comment on something I feel is truly unfair. Floor hockey has been canceled, and rightly so, due to the disappearance of three playing gloves used in the sport. It's a possibility that they have been misplaced or just stolen. This incident will bring an end to the season. Let's hope so. However, the all too unfortunate thing is that they were most likely ripped off. It's a shame that this sort of thing should happen at any campus. For this to be going on here at Whitworth is just a disgrace. As a college like Whitworth with the atmosphere and the theme of the college being what it is, I find it disheartening having such acts of vandalism occurring. In talking with Intramural (IM) director Terry Graff about his feelings, he also expressed deep concern and displeasure. Says Graff, "That's about $100. It's probably only one half of one percent of the people ruin it for everybody else."

As long as we're talking to Graff about Intramurals and complaints, something certainly has to be said about much of the rough treatment dealt to the students who have had the rough task of officiating these basketball games. The Intramural officials have had much abuse in the way of swearing and other unsportsmanlike conduct. Something is definitely wrong when "winning is all that matters, and anything that's in the way of winning should be fought and destroyed!" mean, what's going on? Is winning the only thing that matters, winning at all costs? I just challenge you to think about that before you cut out this sports editor and throw the paper away. If you play on any intramural sports while you go to school here, you had best learn to have a little bit of understanding. There's simply no room for the total abuse that has been given to the intramural rats. Graff warns that anything that is reported doing this will "be banned from any IM recreation from now on." I'm sure he's going to mean it. Graff added, "People don't realize that these officials are simply students, not professional referees. They are unappreciated for probably the toughest job on campus."

Yes Whitworth College, you do indeed have a hockey team. The Whitworth Ice Hockey Club is, in fact, leading the league, a league of six teams with other teams sponsored by such establishments as Cicero's, Goofy's and Uzzie's to name a few. These teams are 7-1 or the season. The hockey team plays every Wednesday night at 9:30 at the Spokane Sports Arena.

The Whitworth Rugby Club practices every Thursday night at 10 p.m. in the Fieldhouse. There are about 30-50 people trying out for the team, and the Rugby Club showed impressively by winning the Fairchild Invitational at Fairchild Air Force Base last Saturday. ... the women's lockers have finally been completed at the Fieldhouse. It will certainly be a big asset to have such excellent facilities available.

Wrestlers take second

by Mike Repovich

There were no individual firsts in the conference tournament, but a fine team effort gave the Pirate wrestlers' second place team finish, behind defending champions Pacific.

Whitworth entered only with two seconds, two thirds, and a fourth. Coach Mark Kondo was pleased with the team's performance and said, "They all did pretty well. We wrestled the best we did all year and each guy did as well as he could have. They really came through."

Steve Boscolet, assistant wrestling coach, cited strong performances from Paul Miller and Bob Kroeger as lifting the Pirates' team performance. Miller and Kroeger took second place in their divisions.

Tom Homaning placed third this year after not placing at all last year and had this to say about his performance, "I competed to the best of my ability. I was mentally and physically ready this year."

Miller repeated his second place finish of last year in the 142 lb. class, but said, "I felt I did okay, but not up to my capabilities. However, I accomplished one goal, to beat a kid who beat me before."

Northwest Nazarene win 52-37

Pirate women end season

by Chuck Laird

The slate of eight teams was set for the first round of the Northwest Collegiate Women's Sports Association B Division basketball tournament last night after Northwest Nazarene College grabbed the final birth with a win over Whitworth.

Northwest Nazarene tipped the Pirates from Whitworth by a 52-37 tally Wednesday night in Walla Walla to end the women's season with a 10-6 record for the year. Whitworth had the playoff game with NNC because the two teams tied for second place in the conference. Northwest Nazarene College grabbed the final birth with a win over Whitworth.
Brasch leads pirates to final season victories

Riemcke leaves a winner

The Whitworth College roundballers finished up its season with two conference wins over Willamette University and College of Idaho, to end up in a fifth place conference tie with six wins and eight losses. The Pirates overall mark was 11-15.

Against Willamette, the Pirates had to go in to overtime as the scrappy Bearcats battled back from six points down with two minutes to go in regulation play. But the Whitworth patience and consistency was too much for the visitors in the overtime as the Pirates coasted to an 88-80 win.

In the final game of the season, coach Carl Riemcke's Boomerangs put together one of their finest games against College of Idaho, as the "Whits," led by senior San Brasch, ran away with a 77-61 victory.

The visiting Coyotes had a hard time penetrating the tough Pirate defense and turnovers were a big factor in the Whitworth win. The Bucs capitalized on Idaho's mistakes and eliminated their own to earn the win. Brasch finished out his campaign in style as he scored 26 points in the final three games and nailed the boards for 26 rebounds. Just this past week he was honored with a first team All-District spot, while another senior Dave Tikker, was honorable mention.

That College of Idaho win marked the end of Coach Riemcke's 25 year coaching career, as he will step down as head basketball coach at Whitworth.

A special ceremony was held at halftime of the C of I game in Riemcke's honor. He was showered with many deserved compliments and presented special awards and praise for his excellence as a coach and his likable personality.

In his 26 year span he has amassed 385 wins against 290 losses. He was 84-98 in a seven year stint at Whitworth.

It was an extremely "hard luck" year for the Bucs, as they lost a lot of close games which could have turned their won-lost mark around. In fact, the Pirates lost 10 games by a total of 21 points.

The Pirates will be hit hard by graduation, but a few returnees who logged plenty of playing time will lead the Bucs in the 79-77 season.

Track meet next friday

by Dave Vaughn

After a month of daily workouts, Whitworth spakes look forward to their opening meet of the season next Friday, March 12 in the Martin Relays at Hillsdale's. It will be the first of nine meets for the men while the women have six more on schedule.

First year coaches Ann Tyler, Peggy War­ner and Karl Zelger are excited about the high plus team members on this year's team and are anxious to get the '76 season started.

Of all the events the distance races are where experience and depth lies. For the men Brian and Bruce Halfkink and Dick Day lead in those races. The Cindy Chapman, Beth Stevens and Janice Dings are strong contenders in the same for the women's team.

Distance coaches Warner and Zelger are pleased with the potential of their runners. "If we can stay away from illness and injury we should do well," said Warner. "We're working on conditioning so there won't be as many injuries which have hurt in the past."

Some of those returning for the Pirates in other events are Larry Lynch, 1975 District #1 and Northwest Conference Champion in the hurdles and Jerry Nakibou who ran 9.9 for 100 yards last season. Also returning are Chris Roberts in the high jump, Jim Lust in the sprint- and high jump, Jess Snyder, hammer and Dennis Dechert in the shot.

For the women there are several returnees. Some of those are Sandy Hobart, Liz Royds and Beth Murry in the middle distances, Dee Deesten, Sue Pollock and Rays in the hurdles, Claudia Smith and Kathy Lied in the sprints with Smith also competing in the long jump where she is one of the best in the conference.

Along with a few other returning lettermen from last year, "cooks" make up a good portion of the team. Transfer Lonnie Jasper in the 880 and Ray Bryant in the jumping events are just two of those who are expected to have good years in their first as a Pirate.

The events that are "hurting" according to coach Tyler are the weight events. "We have a few people in other events but no depth whatsoever in the weights," said Tyler. "And in the pole vault we have nobody. We would be willing to work with anyone who has an interest but so far there has been none."
Netters look to Hawaii

by Mark Mussler

Coach Ross Cutter has high expectations this year of his varsity netters. This season will be highlighted by a trip to Hawaii for the top eight players during Spring Vacation. While there, the team will compete against the University of Hawaii and several other schools in daily afternoon tournaments. Upon returning from the islands, Whitworth will open its season Saturday, April 3, at Gonzaga. The match will also be on the home court at 10 a.m. Returning letterees for the Pirates include Oly Pashley, Scott Ruzelle (from his freshman year after taking off last year), Carl Cutter, last year's MVP, Keith Haasman, and Brian Moore, Pete Lynch, a junior transfer student from the Los Angeles area is thinking of joining in the number one position. With five returning letterees, Coach Cutter hopes to improve on the third-place finish last year in the Northwest Conference. The toughest competition will probably come from Whitman, PLU, and Lewis and Clark, always competitive opponents. As well as the eight matches scheduled for Whitworth's courts, the season will close with the NAIA District Tournament on the Diamond Lakes. The Pirate netters have an exciting season ahead of them and will appreciate our support.

Intramural basketball over

by Steve Weber

With spring vacation still lingering in the future, many students are spending their free time in the on-campus intramural program, instead of waiting for the vacation to come.

Over the past couple of weeks the January events have come to a close; some personnel changes in the intramural office. It appears that the department is beginning to sort out the problems and improve their program.

Two new intramural people are now working with director Terry Graff. They are Bruce Halfaker, who is in charge of all intramural events. This year's Uije Gallo, the new schedule man. He is in charge of all event scheduling problems. He is happy to talk with anyone about their schedule difficulties as long as they come in early enough. It is difficult to change the schedule right before an event is supposed to take place, according to Graff.

Points' staff selected, production started

by Kathy Pecka

Whitworth's alternative to the traditional yearbook received final budget and format approval in President's Council this week. The publication this year is a continuation last semester's publication in staff organization, size and format.

The editorial staff was selected in a Publications Committee meeting held last week, and according to chairman Nancy Haight, Joshua Lewis will assume the position. Vicki Becvar, photography editor; Margaret Norton, literary editor; and Adam singer, advertising editor; will advise the staff.

This semester's staff organization includes one big difference from the last issue--an editor-in-chief. Last semester, there were four editors with equal responsibility. It was decided in Publications Committee that dividing responsibility is not the most efficient way to run a staff, so the policy was changed.

Senior pictures will be included at the request of President's Council. They will be printed on a large insert, and seniors are requested to submit their photographs by April 5. Otherwise, according to Lewis, "there is no way they can be included in Points."

The publication will be enlarged to 40 by 11. The photographs will be more student and event oriented than was true last year, according to Becvar. The staff will not be using a specific theme, and Norton hopes to include short stories, interviews, reflections on events, and satire as well as poetry.

Contributions of photos, artwork and literature are still being sought for the publication which "freely and democratically distributed to all students during the first two weeks of the term. Contributions must be in by April 14, and can be sent to the Points through campus mail or dropped off in SAC.

Mock Democratic Convention success for participants

by Ann Hollifield

After months of concentrated effort, countless late nights and plenty of worry, the 1976 Simulated Democratic Convention is over, and according to those who participated, it was not only a success, but a great time--as well.

The convention, held at Gonzaga University's Kennedy Pavilion, included approximately 250 college and high school students from Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. For most Whitworth students, it began Friday at 7 p.m., and was finally adjourned Saturday at 11:15 p.m. Between those two dates, some people slept 22, non-stop hours of lobbying, debating and politicking.

The first six hours of the convention were comprised of Standing Credentials, Rules and Platform Committee, and a Head Delegates meeting and state caucuses.

Of all the meetings held Friday, the Standing Platform Committee's proved to be the most difficult. And passed after two hours, the committee set the order of the day, the presentation of a plaque to former Washington Senator Clarence C. Dill, making him honorary Chairperson of the Convention.

So those issues that had been most debated in Committee--abortion, military spending and busings--also proved to be the most emotional issues on the floor. But the delegates on the whole proved far more liberal than the platform committee members--accepting abortion and anti-busing--measurers by far wider margins than they had previous considered. At this point, Jackson's supporters went to the floor to recess to Stateline, Idaho, which was undoubtedly a vote to accept all the amendments to the Platform in a body, and then begin debate of the individual minority reports.

Each state also put in a pitch for itself. Wyoming at one point described itself as "the home of cowboys and cattle." It also demanded that it be the state "that will have to welcome Ford here next January, and New Mexico, referred to itself so often as "The Sportsman's Paradise" that finally the chair recognized "the head delegate from the Sportsman's Paradise."

By the fourth ballot the convention had for the most part, split three ways between Church and Jackson. It was a three-way nomination, despite heavy Church support, with one minority vote going to Monty Python's Flying Circus, and two of New Mexico's delegates voting for a candidate who had not been nominated--Mickey Mouse.

Despite the fact that Jackson's people had thrown support behind Humphrey, when the Vice Presidential ballot began, many of Humphrey's supporters refused to support Jackson. At the same time Church's disappointed supporters started an anti-Jackson movement and threw their weight behind California's Governor Brown for the Vice Presidency. There were also small but powerful Carter/Udall factions. And those delegates who felt they couldn't support any of the more likely candidates chose to vote for such candidates as President Lindaman Woody Allen, "The Fon El," born Happy DAYS, El, Sanders of Kentucky Fried Chicken fame, "Hartle Brown and that old standby without which no convention would be a real convention-Mickey Mouse.

After two ballots, however, Governor Brown was given the Vice President nomination despite still opposition. Immediately the delegates began to leave paying little attention to the chair who was trying to get a vote to adjourn the Convention. Until 6:00, or to the various motions put to the floor to recess to Stateline, Idaho, which was undoubtedly where half of the delegates were heading anyway--those who weren't crawling off to bed.

During the next two days, whenever two Whitworth delegates encountered each other, almost all you could get out of either was talk of the convention. The general consensus was that everyone had a fantastic time, had learned a tremendous amount about the political process, and that the whole convention--with a presentation of the colors, and the entire convention--that those who weren't planning to go to the real one.
McIntosh emphasizes need for accessibility; Cochran sees need for greater communication

by Kathy Pecka

The two candidates facing Whitworth voters Friday for the office of Executive Vice President will be junior John Cochran and junior Alec McIntosh. But Sharp was eliminated in the pre-spring primary.

Cochran, a transfer student from Glendale Junior College in California, is a recreation major and is running for office out of a desire to take an active part in student government and "get things running for students," McIntosh, a pre-law major, has two motivations behind his candidacy. One, he thinks he can do a better job than his opposition and two, he is very concerned about the lack of participation by students in government and feels he has some solutions.

Cochran's qualifications include experience as a high school student officer and freshmen class president in junior college. He has been a HUS manager this year and is president of Stewart Hall. McIntosh has been a member of Academic Affairs Council for two years, served on the Recreation Facilities Board of Control and numerous task forces, including Issues, Competency and Core. He has also been involved in President's Council.

When asked about his personal qualifications—why he feels he's the best man for the job—Cochran replied, "I can relate to everybody on campus. My friends are diversified and I don't cater to any specific group." McIntosh's answer to the same question was "I've been preparing myself for office in student government." He went on to explain that he's taken classes geared to the same question was "President's Council handles a budget of over $120,000 yearly and feels that students don't have enough say about the use of that money, so these positions remained unfilled until late in the semester.

The second part of his plan calls for the vice president to be a publicity officer, and attend dorm meetings regularly to "catch people at the moment of decision" and ensure that the dorms are receiving adequate input from President's Council. He emphasized the fact that President's Council handles a budget of over $120,000 yearly and feels that students don't have enough to say about the use of that money.

McIntosh also stresses the need for fresh involvement. If he were elected, he says the best thing that could happen would be "two or three years after I leave, to see lots of people running for office and lots of people voting." It has to start with the freshmen.

The Whitworthian asked each candidate if they were making any campaign promises. Said Cochran, "I don't believe in promises, I'll do my best." McIntosh makes one promise—to increase accessibility of the exec, even if it means that he has to go door to door personally and talk to people. He vows that he's willing to "make the time to do that if I need to."
Candidate Glower stresses financial accountability

by Doug Cooley

The next time you leaf through the Whitworth College Directory, picking the winners and losers as you fancy among the student body faces, scribble glasses and a beard on the picture of Jim Glower. However, whether that's the face of a winner or loser will be the matter of the ASWC elections on April 2.

Jim Glower is one in the field of two choices for ASWC President. He has wafted with Whitworth for two years now and as a junior looks like a double major in sociology and nursing.

From ASWC politics he personally wants the enrichment from the experience and the variety of people he can contact. (Although the Presidential benefits of 85 percent paid tuition, $500 for expenses, and a couple credits aren't exactly repulsive.)

He talks intensely and with well organized thoughts. He has a fetish for pounding his finger on the table in order to emphasize.

"Student government has quite a bit of power potential," says Glower. In his opinion this power is not fully appreciated by the student body. As we all lack $100 in student body fees, (the highest in the state), he believes students should adopt the attitude that they own student government. "A $120,000 budget went through the hands of President's Council this year. There is power there, and the power is theirs (ours)."

Glower did a lot of finger pounding over the need for ASWC's awareness of student interests and awareness of what they can do with ASWC.

"Student government must articulate and reflect student opinion." Glower suggests that social issues--like athletics, blacks and people living in the larger dorms aren't represented well.

He sees a need for more effective surveying of the student body--as simple opinion polls to be taken while loitering in the Saga line. He also thinks ASWC should "advertise its resources" better.

The President, stresses Glower, must be seen and approachable to the students in order to appeal to them. He plans to campaign door to door on campus and give all the students a chance. If elected, he promises (his only promise) to impersonate the Avon Lady once or twice again next year.

Glower sees the President's Council as providing services such as entertainment. "That means spending money." For more efficient spending he thinks Whitworth should adopt co-operative spending, which combined our purchasing power with other area schools by trading movies, plays, etc. by integrating our entertainment with education more--such as the plan the platform, who last fall gave a performance as well as workshops -- "we'll get them for our money."

The desertion of the yearbook for the "Points" is currently a specific issue among Whitworthians says Glower. However, he believes that making an issue out of a policy isn't in the students interest due to the college's financial pickle.

Reflecting on this financial crisis, Glower reveals perhaps a deeper issue--that a growing sentiment for conservative change in the nature of Whitworth now drifts around the college. Students, he says, should be aware and should have the strongest voice in such caliber of change.

The Calvin cohorts of Glower associate him with energy. "Something, he just goes, says one bearded buddy. In Calvin he has helped start a Sunday afternoon political fellowship. They write nasty letters to congressmen about the repressiveness of Senate Bill One and applauding the efforts of "Peace Platform."

"Student government must articulate and reflect student opinion." Glower suggests that social issues--like athletics, blacks and people living in the larger dorms aren't represented well.

Rudolph concerned with quality of campus community

by Sally Mueller

Rudolph, presently Executive Vice President of ASWC, feels that the problem of community is the biggest issue in the campaign. He also stresses improved day to day communication, a renewal of Whitworth's theme, promotion of a strong and active President's Council, and expanded student co-op, and an effort to find alternative ways of financing college education.

His theory of student government is that the President has three main areas of responsibility. The president should oversee (not run) every aspect of ASWC. He should focus on making things available to students at a savings, ordering things in bulk if enough interest is shown, and creating a bookstore in the HUD with more variety.

Finding alternative ways to finance college education is an important issue to Rudolph. He is aware of the cost of running a college can do nothing but go up every year and that it is getting harder and harder for people to afford this. Thus, the very survival of Whitworth depends on coming up with ideas in this area.

Rudolph does not consider the drinking policy as a very important issue in the present campaign. He feels that those interested in changing the policy should start with the state drinking age. As is, few students can drink legally anyway. He also does not see that there is enough chance that the Board of Trustees will change the policy.

What does need to be changed, he feels is the enforcement of the drinking policy. He is disturbed that the present policy was developed without student input. "It's a right of a student to refuse anyone entry to their room at any time. To try to enter a student's room to collect incriminating evidence is illegal. Rudolph feels that the present enforcement policy should go through the Student Affairs Council for re-evaluation.

Rudolph says that recent rumors that Whitworth is going back to the days of dorm hours and mandatory chapel are unfounded. An independent company, writing a report on how to make Whitworth financially solvent, is a joke. They "push the Christian theme." He doesn't foresee that the Board of Trustees would interpret this to mean a more conservative approach. Rudolph feels that the worst thing they could do would be to limit freedom. "One of Whitworth's greatest strengths is that people can make their own decisions," he says.

He considers the ASWC presidency a challenge, and says that while he was not a Christian he wouldn't be running. "If Christians claim to have the answer," he notes, "they have to go after the tough problems."
Catherine Pocka

We're facing yet another ASWC election Friday and this editorial will have two points. One, of course is to urge all you Whitworthians out there to take a few minutes Friday and vote. If you don't vote this spring, you have no right to complain next fall.

Next point. It is important, I think, to consider the candidate's positions with regard to the Whitworthian. A free student press is essential to the vitality of the college, and we need a President concerned with preserving that freedom.

The Whitworthian has traditionally remained neutral in ASWC election. However, there is some information pertinent to the election that is our responsibility to disclose.

Kevin Rudolph, a Presidential candidate has not shown respect for the integrity of student publications in his ten as Executive Vice President. As ex-officio member of the Publication's Committee, he has not demonstrated the kind of openness necessary.

Rudolph once told The Whitworthian editorial staff (during a Publications Committee meeting), "If President's Council tells you to print six pages of bananas, you'll have to print six pages of bananas." He based this logic on the fact that The Whitworthian is funded primarily through ASWC, maintaining that this enables the ASWC organization to dictate the paper's content. By this logic, because all students contribute money to The Whitworthian through ASWC, any student could march into the paper's office and demand that we print anything he desires. The absurdity of this is obvious.

If Rudolph has changed his mind about ASWC control of the paper, we'd be glad to hear it. Otherwise, we cannot in good conscience support him.

Lunt running unopposed for financial slot

by Steve Weber

Although no campaign is needed for the office, Brad Lunt is still concerned about students getting out and voting for him in the financial vice-president election.

The reason no campaign is necessary is that there is no opposition for Lunt running for the office. He does feel that it is important for people to know that he cared and wants the office. All that counts, according to Lunt, is having the desire to run. "Just by signing my name on a nomination ballot shows that I want the job," he said.

Getting elected to the office still won't be an easy chore, Lunt stated. Even with no opponent, 50 percent of the student body still have to cast votes for him. He is worried somewhat about this and will stress the importance of voting in his semi-campaign.

Lunt is feeling hesitant about entering the office, but he has the determination to follow through with his duties. He said when asked about the responsibilities of the job, "I'm scared a little about the hassles." The responsibilities are very demanding, he said. Lunt is ready to work at least 20 hours a week with the job if necessary.

Brad Sprague, the retiring financial vice-president, will be breaking Lunt into the job this spring and will stay on and give Lunt a hand next year as an assistant. Lunt thinks this is going to be a very "beneficial experience for both of them."

Being a business major, the job is going to give him "on the job training," which will be excellent training. It will also give Lunt the needed background to execute duties of the office more effectively. According to Lunt, there will be many "resource people around" for him to go to with a problem.

He has hopes that by bringing problems of his office to George Weber or Harry Dixon he will be able to "get closer to his department and the people in it."

Lunt has always had a desire to be involved in student government in hopes that it will aid in "developing myself as an individual." He believes he can learn much from the office that will help him all through his life.

Letter to the Editor of the Whitworthian:

WHITWORTH GRAPEVINE: True or False?

...we want to make explicit some of the components of our educational philosophy...Christian higher education requires the open and liberal pursuit of truth. Undergraduate education today depends upon the responsibility and initiative of the student...The commitments and values of faculty members are not hidden....

Recent rumors have once again sprouted profusely across the sod and, having tripped over a few of the roots, we have found ourselves face to face with mud. In an attempt to keep our ears clean and our heads above water, we bring the Whitworth community the following rumors in the hope of inciting clarification and understanding:

1) Whitworth may not survive its present financial situation;

2) In an attempt to rescue the school financially, Whitworth may need to yield to pressures from the minority of the Board of Trustees and become "conservative," like Westmont College;

3) In doing so, faculty retention will decrease and divisions would be faced with the reality of further recruitment of professors, as is now the case within the Physical Education Department, for one reason or another;

4) Neither will the existing administration remain intact if such a move were to occur, therefore curtailing further recruitment.

The beginning quote, taken from the recent Whitworth catalogue, reiterates the roles of faculty and students and the expressed commitment of Whitworth College. We challenge the student body, faculty and administration to unite as one and to clarify and reconcile all such rumors in a manner conducive to positive change.

IF THEY FIND A JOB, THAT IS

(CPB)--The Wall Street Journal reports that college students will probably pay taxes equal to 40 percent of what they earn in their lifetimes with five successful ones paying more than 50 percent.

Speaking of taxes, Ralph Nader's Tax Reform Research Group has discovered that IRS agents and public accountants are just as bad. If not worse, then the average tax payer when it comes to filling out tax forms.

The project found that IRS's own tax helpers erred on 79 percent of the returns monitored. Attorney-prepared returns had a 78 percent error rate and that everyone else from CPAs to R and R Block himself had at least a 72 percent error rate.

BATTLE IN THE OFFICE OF EDUCATION

The attention of education budget-watchers is traditionally focused on the six student aid programs administered by the Department of Health Education and Welfare's Office of Education (OE). Under Ford's proposals, these programs would be slashed by $2.7 billion. This potential loss of 800,000 grants, loans and work-study jobs.

Ford once again chose to follow the Nixon budget-cutting plan of concentrating funds in Basic Educational Opportunity Grants while eliminating Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants and all National Direct Student Loans. Two other programs, Guaranteed Student Loans and State Scholarship Incentive Grants would be maintained at their present levels, while College Work-Study would be cut by more than one third of its current budget funding.

MONTANA STUDENTS WIN TEACHER REVIEW

(CPB)--Students at the University of Montana now have the chance to take care of teachers who don't teach, thanks to a recent decision by the school's regents giving students a voice in faculty tenure reviews.

"Every academic department should formulate procedures to provide for student input in academic decisions concerning selection, retention, review and tenure of faculty members," the proposal says.

According to U of M President Richard Bowers, when the school's academic departments were polled on the proposal, only three said they were against it.

A second proposal which would give students a voice in administration review was defeated by the regents until each of the Montana system's presidents has had a chance to study the plan.

Ford held an audience of regents that "We (the president's) have seen this experience...unusual version," the student paper, The Kaimin, reported.

FORD'S BUDGET SQUEEZES STUDENT AID

(CPB)--Students stand to lose more than $1.1 billion in federal financial aid under President Ford's proposed new federal budget that slashes, jobs and squeezes current student aid programs.

Ford asked Congress for a reduction in spending for regular Office of Education student aid programs and called for the phaseout of Social Security and Veterans educational benefits. The combined effect of these proposals could be the loss of some $2.6 billion in grants, loans and jobs for students.

While Congress will undoubtedly reject many of the Ford budget cuts, the budget analysts have less marked the opening salvo in Washington's annual battle of statistics between the President and Congress. Republicans and Democrats, military hardliners and social activists.

By the surprising costs of the Basic Grants program, Congress' traditional prerogative of deciding OE funds among all the education programs may no longer be possible.

Ford asks for only $1.1 billion to fund an estimated 1.27 million Basic Grants for the '77-'78 academic year, while Ford's estimates of the number of student aid programs and called for the phaseout of Social Security and Veterans educational benefits. The amount this would costs for the '77-'78 academic year are already off by hundreds of thousands of students and millions of dollars.

In estimating that 1.27 million students would receive Basic Grants during the '77-'78 year, Ford failed to take into account the addition of a fourth undergraduate class's eligibility next fall plus generally broadened eligibility requirements. And use of Basic Grants during the '75-'76 academic year slashed the targets Ford's budget set for the '77-78 academic year. Office of Educational analysis are predicting Basic Grants use for that year somewhere between 1.5 and 1.8 million students.

To make matters worse, if certain changes in the Basic Grants program's description now being considered by Congress are adopted, the cost for the '77-'78 year could skyrocket to a total of $2 billion. Consequently, Basic Grants alone could be expected to take up the slack that would be left by the elimination of the current $240 million in guaranteed grants. Furthermore, the $1,000 ceiling on Basic Grants means that students could have received $2,000 or more in guaranteed grants and the programs would now be restricted to a total grant of $1,400.

Unfortunately the Basic Grants do not show the increase in funding to pick up the slack that would be left by the elimination of the current $240 million in guaranteed grants. Furthermore, the $1,000 ceiling on Basic Grants means that students could have received $2,000 or more in guaranteed grants and the programs would now be restricted to a total grant of $1,400.

SPOTLIGHT ON LEGISLATION IN WASHINGTON

The toll-free hotline to the Washington Legislative is operating and is one of the most popular telephone circuits in the state. The operators receive over 1,000 calls per day.

By dialing: 1-600-562-6000 anyone can obtain information on the status of legislation, request copies of bills, or leave a brief message for a legislator.

The hotline office is located behind the billing-room on the ground floor of the capitol with a staff of six women. They have five telephones and a computer screen at their disposal.

The screen is connected to the legislature's computer system which stores information on bills. The operators type a coded request into the computer and the answer flashes on the screen.

The computer will give information on the status of a bill, its sponsors and a brief description of the legislation. It will also list all the bills a legislator has sponsored.

Messages to legislators should be brief (as a telegram) or the caller may be encouraged to write a letter.

The service operates between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. on Monday thru Friday - 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturday.

BATTLE OVER G.I. BENEFITS

Veterans educational benefits, currently providing $4.8 billion in student aid to more than two million students, would also be squeezed out by the next 15 years or so. The House has already agreed to go along with the President in cutting out GI benefits.

Advocates of the cutbacks argued that GI benefits should be reduced to combat soldiers in wartime or claim that they are too high and should be reduced to eliminate the need for specifically targeted educational aid anyway.

Opponents of the change claim GI benefits are an important recruitment tool for the military and provide a unique and substantial mechanism for helping educational institutions that generally would otherwise not attend college. And because many veterans attend public colleges and particularly community colleges, GI benefit funds are a substantial source of income for these schools.

Reactions in the number of eligible students for GI benefits are reflected in a $1.3 billion reduction in GI benefit spending. While exact figures are not available, calculations based on figures for total GI benefit spending indicate that some $500 million of the $1.3 billion in reduced spending would be the result of cutbacks.

Although the House has already passed a bill phasing out GI educational benefits, the fate of the measure in the Senate is unclear.

THE LOAN CRUNCH

Because Ford believes that the National Direct Student Loans are "unnecessary," the Guaranteed Student Loans, he proposed no new funds for this program which provides schools with funds to make student loans at a three percent interest rate.

The result would be that few students would 320,000 fewer loans to students. But because of repayments already made by students to the program, $250 million within this $320 million would be available to finance 500,000 even without additional funds.

Guaranteed Student Loans—which unlike National Direct Loans are administered almost entirely through private lenders like banks and credit unions—would be replaced by the National Direct Loans but additional funds to pick up the 300,000 lost National Direct Loans were not budgeted.

And in another small squeeze for students, Ford proposed phasing out Guaranteed Loan interest rates from 7 to 8 percent to make the loans more profitable for private lenders.

Ford's proposed cuts in College Work-Study from $360 million to $250 million would result in a loss of 243,000 jobs. Work-study money is currently matched by a 20 percent contribution from the school. Ford has proposed raising the institutional share to 50 percent over a three-year period.

A SLASH AT SOCIAL SECURITY

The Office of Education programs distribute only 26 percent of federal student aid dollars with Social Security and Veterans educational benefits passing out most of the remainder. Therefore, proposed reductions in these two programs—which now provide $5.5 billion in aid to some 2.7 million students—constitutes the greatest threat to funds specifically earmarked for education.

In what one education lobbyist called a "particularly mean" proposal, Ford asked to phase out Social Security educational benefits for the survivors and dependents of deceased Social Security beneficiaries, with retirement or disability benefits. If one of the survivors, both new beneficiaries. The budget analysts project that the programs would be reduced to $2.3 billion in lost student aid.
Gray Panther leader calls for understanding

by Ricarda Miller

Only a few lucky people got to see Maggie Kuhn when she spoke in the Hub last week. Due to lack of publicity - no signs put up, no notices in the Flash, nothing.

But back to a more pleasant subject, and you couldn't ask for a better one than Ms. Kuhn. She is the head of Gray Panthers, a service organization of people near seniors' grandchildren age often working along with college students helping people to keep informed on what is actually happening in this country.

Maggie herself is 70 and looks like the world's sweetest computer-taker, towering over those who are four feet tall by several inches, white hair swept back in a bun, sharp eyes looking out of a lined pretty face, talking in a soft, high voice, calling other older people "are tired of being treated like a pile of shit.

The Gray Panthers were originally formed several years ago in opposition to the war in Indochina. Since then it became apparent that if we could no longer keep silent about it, "We shared a common concern for a war we thought was immoral and illegal. We have to have it stopped." It was a little ironic, to say you'd get your grandmother hung up on a wall with her face all jagged, yelling about having denture breath or let you see them...something..." (Maggie hates that expression) are almost the rights of old people, which because of senility; people get forgetful, I'll...if Maggie was talking, "Old..." or even now, "The age factor is undeniable also on an economic status basis. The rich are never old.

Maggie says there are many unjust laws yet to be dealt with. "The lending policy in this country stinks. You can't get credit if you are young or old." And she gave the entire medical profession a good working over. "There are doctors who won't take Medicare patients, or who won't bother with the necessary paperwork involved." She suggested more of a socialized system in this country to "redistribute the concentration of wealth and power. It would certainly make a difference if there had some retired nuts and priests on the board of directors of Lockheed..."

Since many old people are going back to school, Maggie suggested a possible solution to a lot of problems would be to have intergenerational living, since both old and young have trouble finding and affording decent housing. People of all ages could live together in a house or a dorm. A poll taken of those over 70 showed that a majority wanted intergenerational living. The G.P.'s are going to hit the networks next, attacking stereotypes like the Barbour's edition of old, senile people.

The Gray Panthers also have a tough time getting their message across to the people because of the media. Although they, and Kuhn, have been written up in such magazines as Time, Newsweek, and People, the whole story still hasn't gotten out. The G.P.'s go to bat against every kind of social injustice, the red tape about having to do with the fight for old people's rights, as if that's all they work for, thereby not only succeeding to the formed image of old people, but also help to spread and strengthen that image.

Even the very way we talk shows how far our stereotypes go. When we compliment someone older than us, we tell them how young they look, as if it's bad or wrong to be old. There is nothing wrong with having your age, and wearing this age-conscious, youth-hungry society of ours.

Kuhn said it was unfortunate that the Gray Panthers do not get the support they need; they even get static from The American Association of Retired People - "they think we're too militant," But she defends them with radical saying, "I mean radical in terms of getting to the root of it all, getting to the cause of it all. We're not happy with partial answers."

Youth in this country, maintains Maggie, have less to do with how old you are than how much money you have. "The age factor is undeniable also on an economic status basis. The rich are never old."

Maggie Kuhn and the Gray Panthers are out to show that you're not dead till you're dust. In fact, she's more alive at age 70 than most of the people on this campus.

Dixon Hall gets spring trim

by Steve Veeber

You may be asking where the new building between the auditorium and Warren Hall came from. It has always been there as part of our campus routine, but some changes and some special people are bringing Dixon Hall out of its monotony and bleakness.

Anyone who has ever spent a semester in one of Dixon's white, pale classrooms knows that it is one of the most comforting places to learn, no matter how well a professor may know his stuff. A number of other people have noticed this problem too and have donated their time and their funds to make Dixon more attractive to the student.

Mrs. Kathy Peterson, head of the renovation committee, stated she would like to think and let all people to the project know their efforts and contributions are greatly appreciated. The Johnston Foundation, Bill Fix, and Howard Stengel are responsible for the vivid lighting now installed in the classrooms.

A special $40,000 grant was donated by the Arthur Vining Davis Foundation for all other improvements to the building. Mrs. Peterson also said, "The renovation has been almost cooperative in helping with the work. There are many people involved in the project and they are all donating for the student and should be thanked."

The main objective, according to Dr. Pat McDonald, Psychology professor and a renovation committee member, is making the "building pleasing to be in." Eye appeal is the committee's goal. At present the building is not an eye sore but there just isn't anything for the mind to focus on as a person walks down a corridor, except may be a smudge of dirt on a white wall. This is what the committee is working for, to rid the walls of Senility; People of all colors, the headquarters remaining where it had started, in Philadelphia.

Kuhn said skipping a generation seems to be the key to why the young and the old get along so well, saying but her generation was "mess up and messed over:.

"I think I'll throw up if I see another damn book! But we are not about to trivialize our lively playboy gizmos.

Maggie spoke vehemently against those over 45 are shown to be, especially on TV. She said what she considers is showing everyone who is watching about having denture breath or let you see your grandmother..."Old age is not always a problem, we worry about a lot of things with Young people get forgetful, too. TV shows none of the problems older people, and tend to dwell on the negative aspects.

Kuhn compared old people fighting for their rights with each other had to fight to get anywhere. Just as Blacks got tired of racism, old people got tired of agists, now it's time to get tired of agists. The G.P.'s are going to hit the networks next, attacking stereotypes like the Barbour's edition of old, senile people.

The Gray Panthers also have a tough time getting their message across to the people because of the media. Although they, and Kuhn, have been written up in such magazines as Time, Newsweek, and People, the whole story still hasn't gotten out. The G.P.'s go to bat against every kind of social injustice, the red tape about having to do with the fight for old people's rights, as if that's all they work for, thereby not only succeeding to the formed image of old people, but also help to spread and strengthen that image.

Student-operated day-care center provides service

by Marc Medefind

As a service to the Whitworth Community, a child day-care center is in operation in the Hardwick Union Building. The center is open Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., with seven students on the work-study program running the center.

According to Kevin Rudolph, ASWC vice president, the center was initiated by Karla Jackson who wrote the constitution for the facet early in fall term 1975. The center is open to the Whitworth Community, though first priority is given to students with children and then to faculty and staff with children.

At this writing, there are fourteen kids involved. This number is irregular for the reason that one child might be in the center full time while others might be involved part time or on a drop-in basis. The rates for the use of the center run as follows: $55-full time rate (a month), $20-part time rate (a month) and the drop in rate is 50¢ per hour.

These rates are tremendously cheap when compared with other day care centers. The center is located in the room at the south east corner of the HUB. It is easily found by the sign on the door: "Knock-So you don’t squish a kid."

Dave Pfeiffer, coordinator, outlined the purpose of the center as follows: 1) to free parents to pursue a career or education as a convenience to themselves and 2) to provide a positive environment where the kids can go. He emphasized the fact that the center serves as a multidimensional facility for child development - socially, mentally and physically (particulaly at the level of motor skills).

Pfeiffer, who has acted as director since February, finds the developmental range of the kids tremendous, "Some kids want to paint or build with their hands while others are still at the rattle stage, (the kids' age range from 1½ to 5 years).

The students on the staff have generally had prior experience in other child care centers and act as role models for the children as well as supervisors. There are three males and four females on the staff (so as not to give the model of just female supervisors).

Pfeiffer sees the center as an area of fantastic potential of what could happen given the opportunities, "Exciting things could happen in terms of the Whitworth community-benefits for the parents as well as the kids involved."

Something could happen if enough people are willing to get involved—from the level of do-

The evil flu bug bugging many on campus

by Ricardo Miller

The annual flu bug has migrated through Whitworth again, so now that you know what it is that laid you low, you can dispel any vague rumors about the bubo-c plague creating a campus Dark Ages.

At least once during every school year, flu germs of varying intensity hit, affecting both students and faculty in bond of kinship that has made this school what it is today—unhealthy. The kind of germ differs from year to year. You may recall that a few years ago, the Asian Flu was in vogue; later, a cheaper version made in Hong Kong conquered the masses.

Last month, the infirmary treated nearly 700 people from this institute of higher learning for hypochondriacs of every creed and kind. Although that is not much of an increase from the usual crowd, the number of flu-related cases, just as respiratory problems, did go up.

The symptoms of the flu are pretty much that of a bad cold, and the cure, unfortunately, is even more like it: rest in bed, drink plenty of liquids, take aspirin (the cheapest kind works just as well as Bayer, aspirin is aspirin), and use deconges-

The center does seem to have tremendous potential all that seems needed is more input from the Whitworth community.

A victim of the flu suffering at the health center.

Foreign Policy:

Supports aid and extension of U.S. fishing rights to 200 mile limit.

Government:

Supports campaign reform and openness in government.

Social Issues:

Says that welfare is one of the curses of the country and that those on welfare must be made part of the productive work force. Supports unemployment compensation, feels that government should provide grants to the states for free public education for the handicapped, and he supports cancer and blood disease research.

JIMMY CARTER - Democrat
Born, Oct. 1, 1924 in Plains, Georgia

Political Experience:

Governor of Georgia 1970-74

Political Leaning:

At 1972 Democratic convention, he led the "Stop McGovern" forces and nominated Sen. Henry M. Jackson for President. George McGovern for V.P.

Calls himself a conservative, but can be liberal on some issues. Has campaigned on his "Why not the best?" slogan, using his personality to give voters impression that he is a winner.

STAND ON ISSUES:

Budget and Economy:

Favors elimination of most income tax deductions, feels that cities should receive revenue sharing from Federal government. Would reduce defense budget from $7 billion to $5 billion, cut the Pentagon by 5%, cancel production of B-1, go ahead with Trident submarines. On unemployment, he is for free enterprise to provide jobs, against the Humphrey-Hawkins bill which he feels would cause inflation.

Law and Order:

Quoted as saying: "No President can promise to end crime." Is for hand gun control and for death penalty and preventive detention.

Personal Rights:

Supports Civil Rights Acts of the 60's, opposed abortion, supports Equal Rights Amendment and right to work law.

Energy and Environment:

Supports tough environmental and energy policies--but has never specified these policies.

Foreign Policy:

Supports detente with Russia, but has expressed ideas that we are being taken advantage of by the U.S.S.R. Favors U.S. withdrawal from Korea in the next five years, wants to reduce U.S. NATO forces, feels that Kissinger is a "secretive", and favors gradual nuclear disarmament.

Government:

Has pledged to deal harshly with illegal CIA and FBI activities, would like to reduce government red tape, but has given no specific plan of action.

Social Issues:

Opposes forced busing, opposes aid to New York City, favors comprehensive national health insurance plan, favors FED take-over of welfare system.

FRANK CHURCH - Democrat
Born, 1926

Political Experience:

U.S. Senator from Idaho

Now in his fourth term in Congress, twelfth in seniority in the Senate, next in line to chair the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Chairman, Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations, Senate Committee on Aging, and Senate Interior Subcommittee on Energy Research and Water Resources.

Political Leaning:

One of earliest supporters of Vietnam War in 1964, the only boss of the John Birch Society tried to recall him in 1967. Described as a "grass-roots" liberal.

STANDS ON ISSUES:

Budget and Economy:

He sought estate tax exemption increase, strongly opposed excess military spending and would cut military budget, opposed space program. On unemployment, feels that federal government should help alleviate, but not become mass employer.

Law and Order:

Against federal gun control, opposed federal control of sale of ammunition. For the death penalty "in certain cases."

Personal Rights:

Supports civil rights and busing, supports Supreme Court decision on abortion, but wants "conscience amendment" so that hospitals can refuse to grant abortions for religious reasons. Supports ERA.

Energy and Environment:

Against water exportation, for non-nuclear power research, for gas rationing, against price rises by Saudi Arabia. One of the earliest supporters of conservation measures.

Foreign Policy:

Against "appeasement" program to Saudi Arabia, strongly supports Israel. For nuclear arms slowdown and nuclear test ban treaty with Russia. Against U.S. Intervention in Latin America, against political and military-minded form of foreign aid, wants to cut aid by $250 million yearly.

Government:

Advocates limiting executive powers, opposed Nixon's impoundment of funds, does not want to take power away from CIA or FBI. As is for delineating their respective jurisdictions through clarifying the gray areas of the law." In 1973, proposed and passed amendment to campaign reform bill, requiring all Congressmen and their opponents make complete disclosures of funds.

Social Issues:

Introduced cost-of-living clauses and other increases in Social Security payments to aid elderly, supported Education Appropriations bill of 1974, supports aid to cities, sympathetic to national health insurance plan, but sees need to improve Medicare first, thinks states should retain large share of welfare control, but federal government should increase its portion of costs. Supports small farmers and small businesses, generally distrusts bureaucracy.
A Bicentennial overdose

by Doug Cooley

With the Bicentennial T-shirt, the Bicentennial button, the Bicentennial trinket, the Bicentennial bread-bake-off, and Whitworth’s Bicentennial recycling of the revolution, you’ve no doubt Bicentennialized until you’re red, white and blue in the face.

Yet perhaps you feel your Bicentennial experience has been limited to the academic and conventional. Perhaps the real essence and ecstasy of the Bicentennial trip eludes you. Perhaps you’ve not found that proper extravaganza with crumbs of victory or souvenir to take home.

For those who really want to bite into our colonial struggle for independence, you can buy an exact Bicentennial replica of George Washington’s false teeth (wisdom teeth optional), complete with crumbs of Virginia cornbread stuck between the bicuspids. Hang them on the mantle, or put them in a box before the Fourth, and stage your own Boston Tea Party! Sometime later, you can wear your George Washington wig on campus.

For revolutionary re-enactments, why not volunteer to serve as a mohawk, break into this discount K-Mart’s cap, and put on an early-summer suit. It’s called “Scent of ’76,” and is Bicentennial-scented. It may not be as important and beautiful as this in our short lives, but I would love to hear about it. This is sheer adventure. Nothing more to say.

Write to grandma, if she is still taking residence on this old Earth. If she’s not, just sit down for a minute and think about her.

Use your head and save your back

That was a saying of the early settlers and it referred, among other things, to using the gifts of nature to lighten the burdens that plagued their lives. In a wilderness they travelled the streams, natural coal outcroppings made better fuel than sage brush or buffalo chips. River water turning a wheel could saw more wood or mill more flour than forty men.

Resourcefulness was the name of the game. It built the west and made better living for following generations. Now we need to use our heads again. An energy crisis threatens our nation and the whole world. The slackness of the problem is clear and so is the logical solution: build more energy producing facilities without delay.

The utility industry has been trying to go ahead with its planned program but is being blocked by strong resistance from anti-power plant organizations.

The ultimate losers in a power crisis will be the nation and its people. Public support and understanding is urgently needed if these power plants are to be built in time.

In the March 8 meeting of the Presidents Council, the financing of a record as a supplement to the Points was reconsidered. Previously, the request of $613.00 dollars had been turned down, but the council asked to hear the record before closing the issue.

Again it was moved not to pass the request. This motion was amended until the next week in order to take it to the dorms, but again it was not passed.

ASWC President Craig Grant then reported on the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees. For financial concerns of the college, this year it is $200,000 in the red, which will increase the school debt to $2,000,000 by this summer. This, coupled with the fact that banks allow only limited loans during the summer make the situation critical.

In face of the situation, some board members feel it will be necessary to run more conservatively with our Christian theme in hopes of favoring possible donations. As a move in this direction, it has been proposed that Whitworth join the Christian Consortium, an organization of Christian colleges.

Failure to do so, David K. Winter, Executive Vice President, suggested, might mean a loss of leadership in our standing, because of our isolation. Consequently the drop in enrollment would be aggravated due to increased tuition, which is already the highest in the state. Such a move, to remedy the situation, would be a major change from the process orientation practiced by the board since the sixties.

Related to the financial situation is the issue concerning the alcohol policy. The trustees have strongly stated that it is in no way up for reconsideration. To do so involves a strong risk of a loss of support. Just the mention of it being reconsidered has led some sources to withdraw their donations.

At the March 15 meeting, the publication of the Points was discussed. This semester the publication is to be expanded to include some of the features of a yearbook. The main addition will be a senior picture supplement to be printed separately and inserted. Also, the new edition will include short stories, pictures of creative art, an illusory art for the literature and a photo essay.

The Park and Arboretum Committee, in connection with the Garden Club, reported on an offer of decorating some parts of the campus with 50 deciduous trees, slated for Campus Clean Up Day. At the meeting, the committee gave a slide show describing possible improvements of the campus park aspect, designating the areas behind Baldwin-Jenkins and the Steam Plant as projected sites.

Because of recent difficulties with the campus traffic regulation policy, a resolution was put forward by Joe Alwood to have the situation investigated. The reasons for the proposed resolution were specifically the presence of insufficient signs, the lack of student input into the present system, and that the policy is arbitrary with no judicial review of the issued tickets.

Presidential candidates square off

(CPS)—Anti-abortion forces have been trying to dismantle the Supreme Court decision which struck down all state anti-abortion laws for three years now, but this year their efforts are finally bearing fruit.

Abortion foes in many states are making their views known to presidential candidates campaigning in the primaries by picketing meeting places and badgering them with tough questions about their stands on abortion. Many of the presidential hopefuls are being forced to take positions on an issue they thought had been settled once and for all by the high court. And if they stand firm in favor of "abortion on demand," they risk losing thousands of votes in the primaries where each vote carries more weight than in the general election.

Sen. Birch Bayh of Indiana has been the hardest hit by the anti-abortion movement in his campaign stumping. Bayh was a leader in the Senate battle last year which defeated a proposed constitutional amendment which would have banned most abortions. Bayh has been subjected to fierce confrontations with the abortion foes who spread tacks outside one meeting hall were Bayh was to speak, beat on the walls of the room in another making his speech all but inaudible and repeatedly called him "murderer."

Other presidential candidates confronted with abortion questions have tried to walk a thin line between approval of the Supreme Court decision and opposition to an anti-abortion constitutional amendment. Some candidates, like Democrat Jimmy Carter, apprise the abortion foes by stating they are personally opposed to abortion on demand but support the Supreme Court decision which made it legal.

Like the rest of the Democratic candidates, Carter opposed a constitutional amendment forbid­ding abortions but his half-hearted condemnation of abortion won him a great deal of support from the Catholic rank and file in Iowa.

The only candidate—besides the pro-life movement's own Ellen McCracken—who endorses the idea of a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion is Republican Ronald Reagan. Reagan has come out firmly against abortion on demand and promises to make it illegal except in rare cases posing a clear risk to a woman's life.

Both enemies and supporters of abortion on demand have called President Ford's stand on abortion "wildly" and of no help to either side. Last week Ford told Walter Cronkite that the Supreme Court had gone "too far" in striking down state laws against abortion. Ford himself offered a moderate position opposing abortion on demand but recognizing that there were cases including rape and illness when abortion "should be permitted." What Ford envisioned for the issue was a constitutional amendment allowing each state to decide for itself whether to allow abortions.

The anti-abortion forces, although continuing their warfare with the candidates on a state level, now have their own presidential candidate to swing their votes behind. A 49-year-old suburban housewife from New York, threw her hat into the Democratic ring recently and raised enough funds from supporters to qualify for federal election funds. Although Ellen McCormack is known as the right-to-life candidate, she insists that she is not just a one-issue candidate. She has taken stands against busing and in favor of Soviet-American detente.

But the $100,000 already raised for her campaign came primarily from anti-abortion groups who have placed her name on the ballots in 20 state presidential primaries. McCormack won about one percent of the votes in the New Hampshire primary. McCormack was asked to deny the federal funds because many people think she is using the money to promote the anti-abortion cause and not her own candidacy. Federal Election Commission Chairman Neil Stahlter voted against giving federal funds to McCormack's candidacy because he didn't think the commission could tell whether the individual contributions were for McCormack's presidential race or the anti-abortion movement.

Although there's little chance that McCracken will even gain bargaining power with the few votes she gains in the primaries, the anti-abortion movement will be back in the public eye for the next several months. And politicians on the state and local levels will be watching for the mood of the voters on abortion laws.

The cold story of an impatient patient

by Debbie Estep

I'm dying and nobody cares. Actually I've only had a cold for a week now but it's very reliable source that once you've got it you don't get rid of it until you've put up with it. It's like a 100 degree comma, sleeping pneumonia and 103 degree temperatures. This is enough to scare the living daylights out of anybody, especially when the reliable source has the walking pneumonia and the best they can do is cough.

I knew then and there that I was going to get rid of my cold, put a stop to it, nip it in the bud.

Having made this momentous decision I bound up like a Californian and headed for the infirmary.

I'd just stepped out of the dorm of Baldwin, when I noticed a long line of people all dressed like me. Knew that something was coming off to investigate only to find that the line was coming out of the infirmary. How gross! I definitely didn't want to catch.

I was going to go to the dorm and call the doctor, the heck with standing in line.

I waited 45 minutes to use the phone. Some girl had gotten a phone call from a long forgotten boyfriend and I just lost my girlfriend to a doctor too. She'd had just lost her boyfriend to the doctor. Her boyfriend had just lost his girlfriend to a doctor (half an hour later) Dr. Dudley speaking. What seems to be the problem? I've got a cold and....

In that case stick out your tongue, I did.

It's definitely shivered.

How can you tell? You can't even see it. I'm the doctor, don't argue. I want you to take two aspirin and call back in the morning.

I was licked, I was going to have to go to the infirmary and wait in line - what a pill!

When I reached the infirmary I found the line had disappeared but as I stepped inside I knew where it had been. The waiting room was crammed full. People were beginning to line up for the night while others were taking up a collection for a burger run since some of them hadn't eaten in days. I knew it was going to be a long wait.

Four hours later I was still sitting by the kid with poison oak and the RA who had tried to rescue him and had ended up in the infirmary. He was beginning to getitchy and the blood dripping from the RA's broken arm had almost filled my shoes.

I stood up, walked nonchalantly over to the front desk and fainted. What else could I do?

I vaguely remember the nurse pressing over the desk and asking me if I'd like a chair.

I think the only reason they finally moved me was I was blocking traffic.

The next thing I remember was the doctor looking up my nose. He turned around muttered something about blood and went back to my left nostril. It was then that I sneezed.

While they were cleaning up the doctor I was given a crutch and a chair with wheels, apparently all the wheelchairs were in for repair and was told to report to the infirmary. They could draw a blood sample.

I wasn't too worried if they were just going to use a pencil and paper but if they came at me with a needle there was going to be trouble.

I was sitting there fairly calmly waiting for something to happen when a nurse came in. She looked at me, walked over to a table, picked up the biggest syringe and rubber hose. I'd ever seen, headed towards me and said:

You'll have to forgive me if I mess up. I can't quite remember how to do this.

Knowing my very life was in danger I dashed for the door while the nurse yelled VIPPEE and tried to hog tie me with the rubber hose. I realized I was going to have to hide until she got another victim so I slipped into a room just down the hall. Boy, was I sick when I found out it was a quarantine for chicken pox.

Quickly exiting the other side I found myself at the end of a line. I figured anything was better than what I'd just come from so I stayed put.

I was next when a white shrouded figure came up, stuck a thermometer in my mouth and told me to shut up. The figure then began counting and when it got to 699 it jerked the thermometer and my two front teeth out of my mouth, glanced at it and declared me officially dead.

This made me very sad and I had just decided to go make arrangements for my cremation when two other hands rolled up in a coffin, plopped me into it, nailed it shut and sent it to Student Activities, Campus Mall. It seems somebody had organized a mass funeral for the next day and all the dead students including me were invited.

What could I say? I was touched. I quietly rolled myself home, took two aspirin and proceeded to die quietly. I'd just call in the morning.

AFTER THOUGHT: If someone is interested in a slightly used coffin call Dead-438 and ask for Eger.
Riemcke seeks a more relaxed life-style

(Thanks to Butch Brown for this article.)

When Cal Riemcke announced his retirement in January as head coach at Whitworth, some basketball followers believed Whitworth’s medi­cum record at the time was a major factor in his decision.

Was it? “Not really,” a relaxed Riemcke controlled in the color-surroundings of his Country Homes residence recently. “It was just a cul­mination of little things and I felt it was time to get out and do something else.”

It’s difficult to make that kind of decision after riding the bench for 26 years and watching young men execute the skills that you’ve spent hundreds of hours patiently teaching them. “Sure, it’s tough to leave it but coaching is becoming a little more difficult each year. I feel I have reached a point where I can look back and say I am satisfied with my career as it stands now.”

Riemcke’s coaching aspiration blossomed while a student at the University of California basketball team in the late 1940’s. He was a three-year varsity member on a team that finished fourth in the NCAA playoffs in 1946. He later player on the 1949-50 AAU national champions. “That was a great team,” Riemcke remembers. “We were 69-1 that season and had the most successful Americans on that team. One of the guys, Don Barksdale, was the first black to play on the 1949 team. He later went on the star for the Boston Celtics before Bill Russell came along.

Sensing that basketball was about to spread like a disease among the fans, Riemcke, then working on his masters in physical education at UC, took his first coaching job at Lambr High School in 1955. Riemcke’s 1966 team posted a 23-3 mark and ranked third in the state. In 1973 he decided to give the junior college ranks a shot and assumed the head coaching job at College of Marin, just outside San Francisco. “A lot of pleasant mem­ories flash back when I think about my 12 years there. “Riemcke said. “One of my greatest teams took third in the state without a starter over 6-2. Nobody believed we could compete without any big players but the kids played with great desire and really scrapped.”

Among the “Achievers” that Riemcke coached was Mike Jarrett, who later moved to Kansas State University, who was a successful high school coach in California, and Jim Holm, a former player and coach at the University of Hawaii and one of Riemcke’s assistant coaches this past season at Whitworth. No discussion of his days in Marin was complete without mentioning some of the adversary his team faced. “We woke up one morning to find that our gym­nasium had burned down during the night. And it was right in the middle of the season. The college was building a new facility at the time but it was far from being completed. So we had to borrow­neighboring high school gyms to practice and play our games. “Of course that meant scheduling at all kinds of weird hours.” Riemcke continued. “On top of that we only had one bag of practice pants left because everything including our uniforms were burned. We were so bad that we had to borrow the junior varsity uniforms of a nearby high school team for our next game. They weren’t even the right colors. But worse, they had sweat pants a part of the uniform, something we weren’t used to.”

Riemcke came to Whitworth in 1969 with 19 years of coaching experience behind him. And the first thing he learned about coaching professionals was that it was next to impossible to out-recruit the state schools, which could offer varying degrees of scholarships and financial aid. And it hasn’t changed any. “We are caught in the middle when it come to recruiting.” Riemcke explained. “In the Spokane area a school like Gonzaga has much lower tuition rates and Washington State has a scholarship program that is second to none. When we recruit we have to ask the kid just how much money he can afford to spend. And with athletic budgets constantly being cut back, it sure doesn’t look good for the future.”

Riemcke said that every member of 1975-76 team, with the exception of Mike Jarrett, was a former player for a coaching friend of his. “Most of the basketball players in this state come from middle-income families and there is no way those families can afford tuition at Whitworth. Unless the kid’s family is extremely rich or terrible poor, we don’t stand much of a chance to recruit him because of the expense here.” Riemcke is not critical of Whitworth College nor the Northwest Conference “need” program but sees it as a para­dox: “Athletes qualify for financial aid based on family income. As there is a maximum amount for which an athlete can qualify, higher tuition costs at an institution tend to offset any financial edge the athlete may gain by attending that institution.”

Riemcke has never been a fan of the recruiting game and would like to see some changes in the entire high school-to-college process. “At California we had a great team without a single scholarship or any recruiting. I’d like to see it set back to that because it’s hard to pressure a kid into coming to your school just for athletics. I believe kids should choose a school first and then decide on a scholarship or any recruiting.”

Riemcke seeks a more relaxed life-style. Does one game stand out in Riemcke’s seven years at Whitworth? Says Riemcke, “Yes, I guess it would have to be the Seattle Pacific game in Seattle in the 1971-72 season. When we arrived in Seattle and checked into the hotel, there was a message for me to read, ‘Eileen (his wife) has a back injury. Everything’s OK though. Hugh (Camp­bell).’ The team found out about it and dedicated the game to Eileen. They went out and beat SPC which is a tough team at home. Ever since then I’ve kidded Hugh that that was the greatest message. He made it seem like we would be up and ready to go for the next big game. That message is what Riemcke sought. ‘Typical coach I thought,’

Indiana wins

The University of Indiana Hoosiers overcame a four-point deficit of halftime to defeat the Univer­sity of Michigan 65-60 to win the NCAA nati­onal title last night in Philadelphia. The nationally televised game ended a disappointing season for Indiana, going through the entire year without a loss. Two All-Americans, Scott May and Kent Benson, led Indiana to the win and the title.

Whitworth swim team season a “super performance”

by Mike Repovich

The Pirate swimmers came through with a season that coach Harvey felt was called, “A super performance on everyone’s part.”

The women’s team competed in 12 dual and relay meets. Then the women tested their ability in the Northwest College Women’s Sport Associa­tion meet at Pullman. This meet included all the college and university women’s swim teams from Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon. They took sixth place against this major college competition.

The men’s team members were; Beth

Strong, Nancy Schenkel, Liz Neckar, Mary Willis, Wendy Walberg, Julie Rye, and Sue Boscetti.

Coach Harvey felt that Sue Boscetti, Nancy Schenkel, and Liz Neckar were the outstanding swimmers on the women’s squad. The 200 free­style relay was the teams most outstanding and successful event.

Sue Boscetti did an excellent job all year in the butterfly and individual medley. Nancy Schenkel swam primarily the 200 individual medley and was a part of the 200 freestyle relay team that won several meets during the season. Liz Neckar was a very consistent winner for the women in the freestyle events.

The men’s team competed in 10 dual and relay events during the season. They took fifth place in the Northwest Conference meet at Pacific Lutheran.

Jerry Thalhammer, Jeff Elder, Steve Sapp, Steve Thompson, Mike Bobo, Mike Wilkowski, and Dean Freeman made up the men’s team.

“Our really strong point is that we are very young. We will only lose Jeff Elder at graduation,” said coach Harvey. He cited Freeman, Sapp, and Wilkowski as being the men’s outstanding indi­viduals.

Dean Freeman was very outstanding in the 100 and 200 freestyle races. Steve Sapp swim very well for the men in the individual medley and backstroke.

“Mike Wilkowski will most likely take first in the conference meet this year,” said coach Harvey. He took second and third individually at the conference meet this year. He had been out until a month before the conference meet with a back injury.

“We have a tremendous group. They are the most fantastic individuals we’ve ever had. Everyone gave their all. We were outnumbered in all of our meets and the flu hit us hard. Recruiting looks good with a few outstanding women swimmers coming in next year,” said coach Harvey.
Track team in full swing

by Dave Vaughn

The Whitworth men and women's track team has been getting in to full swing lately, as the Bucs have been competing in various Invitational meets.

In last weeks Martin Relays, at Walla Walla, the men grabbed two seconds and a fourth to take 6th place, while the women had two firsts, a second and a third for a 4th place team finish.

Top individual efforts went to hurdler Larry Lynch who ran the high hurdles in a time of 15.15 to take a second. Teammate Chris Roberts leaped 6' 6" for a new Whitworth record in the high jump and freshman distance ace Brian Hafferkamp finished 4th in the grueling six-mile run for the Pirates.

Peggy Wanner's women fared a bit better, as Cindy Chapman and DeeDee Deesten picked up firsts in the three mile run and 100 meter hurdles. Chapman's time was 18:37.4 for the distance, while Deesten's was 19.6 in the hurdles.

Other outstanding performances were turned in by Sue Dale, who jumped 16' 14" for second in the long jump and Sue Poland who took third in the 100 meter hurdles. Dale and Claudia Smith were also standout on the various relay dashes.

The 27th of this month the men will take part in the Invitational relays while the women's next meet is April 3rd.

Bucs gunning for first place finish

by Tim Wysaske

The Whitworth College Pirate baseball team opened up its 1976 season Tuesday, with two games against the University of Idaho Vandals. The Bucs will be gunning for first place in the Northwest Conference, with hopes of a District spot in May.

Coach Walter "Spike" Grosvenor will open with veterans Ned Nelson, Tim Brennan, Dave Barnes and Junior college transfer Jason Tannenberg on the mound against the Idahoans. Last year the "Whites" earned a split with the Vandals, but with a much more experienced club the Pirates are looking for the "clean sweep."

The B-batters have been practicing quite regularly outside and are getting a much earlier "start" than last year, while cold weather and snow put a damper on any outside practice.

"Nellie" went on to say that, "We've got a lot of talent this season, definitely more depth than last year, and I am looking for a really good team effort this year." He concluded.

Senior Dave Barnes is looking forward to this years team with a lot of optimism.

"Our hitting seems quite a bit stronger this year, and if the hitters continue to be aggressive at the plates then we should do real well," Barnes said.

"We are a lot deeper in experience and I'm confident this will help our cause tremendously. We're a veteran club now and our pitching is by far the finest group of pitchers I've ever had the privilege of playing with," Barnes continued.

with three games against College of Idaho from Caldwell. The Pirates will play six games in a three day span in Walla Walla, the 20th through the 22d, in a Central Washington College Invitational, getting the season under way in a hurry.

Action against Idaho

Two time All-Conference honorable mention pick Dave Nelson had this to offer about the early start.

"Getting outside early is a definite advantage and I'm positive that it will show up in our game play. Those close games could go our way this year."

Nelson was referring to the close contests that the Bucs were involved in last year-losing more than their share.

But, as Coach Grosvenor said earlier in the year, "It's up to the players this season and nothing but hard work and determination will make a true winner."

Position for position, the Pirates can match up with anyone, if they put everything together they should be one of the finer clubs in the Northwest, and without a doubt a real contender in league play.

First league competition begins March 26-27
FROM XBNC.

HOPPER'S GOODBOLD LIST OF PRESIDENTIAL AND GENTLEMEN IS THE AND THAT LADIES
The current controversy surrounding 'The Whitworthian' heightened Monday night as President's Council debated a resolution calling for the resignation of Whitworth's editor-in-chief, Kathy Pecka. In an editorial concerning Kevin Rudolph's (one of the presidential candidates) attitudes concerning student publications was printed.

The editorial charged that Rudolph "has not shown respect for the integrity of student publications in his term as Executive Vice President. As ex-officio member of the Publications Committee, he has not demonstrated the kind of openness necessary." It went on to conclude that Rudolph, in statements to Publications Committee, favored ASWC control of the paper's content.

In the Election's Forum on April 1, Pecka spoke at the end of forum without the permission of the Student Election's Committee, refuting Rudolph's charge that she had been disinterested and stating that the purpose of the editorial had not been to attack Rudolph.

In refutation of the editorial, a letter from current ASWC President, Craig Grant, and current ASWC Financial Vice-President Brad Sprague was placed in all student's mailboxes. The letter charged the Whitworthian with choosing "to ignore our concerns and must serve the wishes of the ASWC...."

It defended Rudolph's actions as "doing his job," and charged further that "the Whitworthian editors did not understand that there is a student publication accountable to the student body through President's Council."

The letter also stated that "It was inappropriate that Kathy Pecka used the Whitworthian to articulate her own personal feelings so close to the elections that Kevin has no opportunity to respond," and closed with a hope that the editorial would not affect voting.

A Publications Committee meeting was held from 10 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. Monday, Chairperson Nancy Haught stated that the purpose of the meeting was two-fold: to get committee response concerning a letter from a minister expressing disgust with last year's "nutshell," and two, to have an accurate picture of the committee's feelings about the Whitworthian controversy so that when she attended President's Council that evening she could more honestly represent the committee.

In President's Council later that evening, Haught stated that the meeting had not been conclusive in any manner, but was "an airing of feelings." In the Publication's Committee meeting, the setting up of future guidelines for student publications was discussed with some heated debate over the possibilities of requiring proper approval prior to printing, but no conclusions were arrived at.

After two other items of business were discussed in President's Council Monday evening, the Whitworthian issue was introduced with a statement by Haught concerning the duties and responsibilities of Publications Committee. The committee's role was explained and questions answered, then the Gardner resolution was introduced to the floor.

The resolution charges that "(the Whitworthian and indirectly the Nutrition Plan) have failed to explore issues found in the vested interests of students, and these (sic) is considered to be ineffective as these publications in regards to their purpose," and further charges editors Pecka with deliberate misuse of office and responsibilities and with "further destroying the efforts of the SEC (Student Elections Committee) to conduct a fair, just and objective campaign" by her action during the elections forum. It then calls for the two resignations with the fund-freezing stipulation added.

Student Bill of Rights

Preface

This policy statement concerning student rights and privileges was written in order to clarify and articulate those behavioral and procedural standards that should be associated with the educational function of any college or university. The document, subject to the preceptive powers of the student body Constitution, includes new educational documents.

Preamble

Academic institutions exist to transmit the knowledge, the pursuit of truth, the development of students and the general welfare of the community. The various missions that institutions are independent of the attainment of these goals must not be lost. Therefore, students should be encouraged to develop and engaged in a sustained and independent and individual classroom. Students' freedom of inquiry must be protected in the campus, but the minimal standards of academic performance and the rules of the community are necessary.

The responsibility to preserve and to respect personal freedom is inherent in the role of a student. Personal freedom is inherent in the role of a student. Once granted, it cannot be limited by the institution. The institution has the freedom to require that the policies of each institution be observed and that the policies of the community be observed. The institution also has the responsibility to safeguard this freedom. Such freedom is not absolute;

Section I. Freedom of Expression

The admissions policies of all colleges and universities are such that they do not make clear the characteristics and expectations of the students who are accepted for admission. The admission policies of each institution should be clearly and publicly stated. Without such policies, students may be barred from admission to a particular institution. The institution and the legal rights of students should be clear.

Section II. Freedom of Association

Student organizations and extramural organizations may be required to face only at the request of the school or institution. Student organizations and extramural organizations may be required to face only at the request of the school or institution. Student organizations and extramural organizations may be required to face only at the request of the school or institution. Student organizations and extramural organizations may be required to face only at the request of the school or institution.

Section III. Freedom of the Press

Every student has the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work.

Section IV. Student Affairs

Student affairs must be free of the freedom of expression. Those bodies being on the campus a variety of interests generally are represented by student and faculty members of the campus community. They should be free to organize and to speak to the general public.

Section V. Off-Campus Freedom of Students

A. Rights of Student

Every student has the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work.

B. Rights of Student Education

Every student has the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work.

C. Rights of Students in Conflict

Every student has the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work. The only right of the student is the right to be free of censorship and advance approval of their work.

D. Rights of Students in Conflict

Glower edges Rudolph; amendments pass

by Debbie Fox

Executive positions for the 1976-77 ASWC staff were decided last Friday. On the strength of sound voter turnout, President Jim Glower, Executive Vice-President Alec McIntosh, and Financial Vice-President Brad Lunt were elected.

Glower defeated Kevin Rudolph in the presidential race, 344-279. The winner said, "I was really pleased with voter turnout and anxious to all those who worked for and supported me during the campaign." He stressed the need for cooperation and for one another.

Glower foresees some important decisions in terms of determining the direction of the college and stressed the need for a community "with cooperation and respect for one another."

In the vice-presidential race, Alec McIntosh finished ahead of Cochran, 334-272. McIntosh said that the ASWC members consider the director of financial management to be responsible for holding a monthly financial meeting and for preparing a detailed explanation of expenditures of the ASWC. This was requested because very few attended the meetings. This amendment passed, 306-204.

The second amendment requested deletion of the statement: "The president shall initiate and be responsible for holding a monthly informational meeting with the membership of the ASWC." Again poor attendance initiated this amendment. It won, 396-207.

The third amendment stated that the financial vice-president will submit a detailed report of expenditures and programs of the ASWC each semester and every month. The amendment passes, 497-96.

The last amendment called for a rewarding of Article X, Section 1 to state, "The ASWC shall have an annual Presidential and Vice-President's election within two weeks of spring semester." This is so elections will not conflict with final week of spring break. It succeeded, 518-43.

SEC committee chairwoman Lynn Stocker reported the total voter number to be 836. This was a fairly strong turnout competitively with other years.

President Jim Glower wanted to remind students that as of April 12, the ASWC budget committee will be creating the budget for the next fiscal year. Interested students and organizations should contact Jim Glower or Brad Lunt. Remember that money is yours and you have the right to provide input. The executive will be happy to provide assistance in facilitating your involvement in the budgeting process.

ON THE SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE

(CPS)—If you are an American Indian, celebrating the American Bicentennial is like "celebrating your own funeral," said the director of the Center for American Indian Law at the University of Oklahoma.

In a speech given in San Francisco, Dr. Jerry Williams Muskrat said that the U.S. Constitution has failed to protect the rights of Indians or preserve the sovereignty of Indian tribes.

The American Indian, said Muskrat, has little to celebrate. "I would just like people to remember that 100 years ago Americans were practicing genocide and exploitation," said the professor of law.

The separation of church and state is a "subtly disguised form of Hinduism," said Local TM practitioners have denied the charges. But the coalition against TM argues that TM contains some features of the practice.
EDITORIAL

To the Associated Students

During the past week I have been involved in many conversations with students concerning the recent Whitworthian conflict. I have been surprised at the apparent ignorance within this "Institute of Higher Learning," of the basic principles of our American democratic society, and of our rights as citizens of a private college. I have heard everything in the past week from "What's wrong with censorship of the press?" to "We should censor Whitworth's publications."

I think that part of the problem is that many people don't know exactly what "censorship" means. In journalistic terms, it is defined as "any kind of pre-publication control of what goes into the news." What is allowed by law, however, is post-publication censure by the publisher, (AWCO)-i.e. hand picking and there are no doubt those who go that route.

By definition, it would not appear that censorship is something that we should fear, but allow me to point out a few historical facts. If the U.S. press had been censored Richard Nixon would still be President and Watergate would have been unheard of. America would probably still be involved in the Vietnam War, as it was the press that discovered and related the futility of the war and authorized the press in opposition to an administration policy. And the Civil Rights movement would probably have never gotten the ground (at least not in our lifetime) alive and well if the press that communicated the progress of the movement in the various parts of the country, and allowed for the correlating of ideas, protest marches, etc.

Most of our major social change has occurred because the press has been able to communicate and the people have reacted to the basis of that change to people, even when those ideas were in opposition to the government.

It has been said that the freedom of the press is guardian of all other freedoms and there can be no doubt that the press plays a major role in all of these. What is being proposed in President's Council is purely and simply censorship. The charge being made against Mr. Gray is that he has tried to force the resignation of the editor. Were it not for the press, our other rights and freedoms could be taken from us one by one without our knowing it, or without our being able to communicate our predicament to others.

Were it not for the press, our other rights and freedoms could be taken from us one by one without our knowing it, or without our being able to communicate our predicament to others.

Even though we are students at a private college (and that does change our legal rights by the mere fact of being in a private college) it is protected under the First Amendment of the Constitution guaranteeing us freedom of the press.

There are many students of higher learning who would like to prohibit Kathy Pecka from printing her editorial, which plainly and simply would be by definition-censorship. Our President, Mr. Gray, has won an award given by The Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi, for Excellence in Journalism. The awards will be presented at the Western Washington Professional Chapter's annual Award Banquet on Saturday, April 24 at the Olympic Hotel in Seattle. The awards will be displayed in the Whitworthian.
Dear Editor,

I find it interesting to note that John Stuart Mill, who lived in the 19th century stated that, "The time, it is to be hoped, is gone by when any offense would be necessary to the "liberty of the press" as one of the securities against corrupt or tyrannical government." However, it has been brought to my attention that the issue of whether student government can have the right of censorship over The Whitworthian is hotly contested. Therefore, I would like to exercise the right of freedom of the press by sharing some of my past experience.

I have lived in two totalitarian countries where criticism of the government was suppressed through censorship of the press. During the year I spent in Portugal, the country was involved in fighting independence movements in their colonies. The press wasn't allowed to report any news concerning such things as the independence movement, acts of brutality, or the number of casualties on either side. Indeed, by reading the propaganda presented in the newspaper, I learned how grateful most Mozambique and Angolan people were for the Portuguese help and faithfulness. At any rate, this kind of press censorship was a direct factor in the downfall of the Portuguese government.

In order for people to grasp an understanding of a situation, and arrive at a decision, it is essential that people have the right to state their view. The Whitworthian should be a place where this freedom is used. Thus I support the right of Kathy Peck to write the editorial of March 30, though I disagree with her timing. In closing I would like to quote another thought from John Stuart Mill who noted that:

"If the opinion is right, they are deprived of the means of checking their error; if wrong they lose, what is almost as great a benefit, the clearer perception and livelier impression of truth, produced by its collision with error."

Sincerely,

Kathryn Pierson

by Susan D. Coles

As news editor of the Whitworthian, I feel that it is my duty loyally and answer some of the charges brought against the paper and the members of the editorial staff in the letter to students written by Craig Grant, ASWC President, and Brad Sprague, ASWC Financial Vice President on March 31, 1976. I feel that this letter was written without a complete knowledge of the situation and is therefore inaccurate in its calculations.

I would like to quote a few sentences from this letter: "The Whitworthian has chosen to ignore our activities instead of giving them the critical examination that a part of the student newspaper. This decision to ignore most of the activities of the ASWC was certainly within the scope of editorial policy that the Whitworthian editors are charged to make."

It is my contention that this charge was made irresponsible and unfairly. I would like to apologize if the ASWC feels it has been wronged; I'm sorry both sides of the situation aren't obvious. As news editor of the Whitworthian, I am faced each time we put out a paper with the dilemma of news selection.

On a campus of 1300 students, I have three reporters, besides myself to cover the activities of these 1300 students, and the administration. In my eyes, at least, that's not a very good ratio. In all fairness, the ASWC should not be the only group to get ignored. Rarely do I have enough reporters to cover any of the various council meetings on campus, when many times actions that are vital to students are taken at these meetings.

I have at various times in the year sent reporters to the ASWC headquarters to talk to Craig Grant about news tips he has given us. Everytime, these reporters have been told to pack it up and go home. I, myself, have talked with various student officers and have also come back without a story. I would be more than happy to give extensive coverage to the ASWC, but in the interest of fairness to the other groups on campus, the ASWC will have to take it's lumps just like everyone else.

What I see as the basic problem of the entire situation is a fundamental misunderstanding of the role of the campus newspaper. In all my years as a journalism student, it has been my understanding that a campus newspaper, regardless of which campus it is on, is a learning experience for the aspiring journalist, as well as a medium of information for the entire student body. The newspaper is a practical application of the skills learned in the journalism classroom; it is a place to learn and apply professional ethics, standards, and skills.

As I see it, the Whitworthian has not violated any journalism ethics or standards, and is therefore entirely within its rights as a free press in the things that we have accomplished this far. We on the staff of the Whitworthian have never denied that we are accountable to the students of Whitworth who fund us, but in the same token, the officers of the ASWC must not forget that they are accountable to the student body as well, as they too are funded by the ASWC.

While I may not agree totally with the timing involved in this letter, I am standing beside our editor Kathy Peck in their attempts to make school a whole lot less unfortunate. The Whitworthian will not be intimidated or forced into submission.

Sincerely,

Susan D. Coles

"Still sits the schoolhouse"

Whittier created a nostalgic word picture of his bygone school. Modest as it was, it was almost palatial compared to the early schools of the Western frontier.

At first, classes were held in a mission or church or the corner of some settler's cabin. Then, perhaps, a one room log house with all grades and just about anyone with "familiar enough to serve as teacher.

But education was a symbol of the better life these people sought and it held high priority. They had the fairest means of living scraped and shared to sustain their precious school. Changes have been dramatic and for the better but the importance of good schooling is still unchallenged. Like any good education doesn't come for cheap, forcing the teacher and passing the bat has long since given way to school support by taxing bodies.

Tax revenues, like any others, depend on the productivity of people and industry. The economy of our country, and indeed the world, depends on energy. Now, with a serious energy crisis upon us, industry efforts to bring new power plants on line are being blocked. Public understanding of the problem and support of power plant construction is needed more than ever. The ball is rolling. The hour is late.
Track: Will there finally be a winner?

by Mike Repovich

"I am pleased with the attitude of the team, the progress, and conditioning at this point in the season," said coach Arnie Tyler. "Come Saturday against Whitman we are looking forward to a good performance from everyone."

One amazing aspect of tomorrow's track meet is that we have tied Whitman in each of the past two year's meets. "This year is time to settle it one way or another. If everything is going right we should finish ahead," said Tyler.

As far as tied being an oddity in track, the track meet last weekend was also a rarity. It marked the return of track to the Pine Bowl after a three year absence. Tomorrow's meet is also the first dual meet in the Pine Bowl in three years.

Besides being very pleased with the work of his track team, Tyler has cited the following members as being very strong competitors.

Larry Lynch, who has been progressing all year, ran a 14.9 in the high hurdles and a 55.06 in the intermediate hurdles at the SFCC Invitational Meet last Saturday.

Jim Lust ran a 9.9 in the 100 yd. dash and a 22.6 in the 220 at the UPS meet, the latter of which could be the fastest time in the conference.

"Both sprinters are a lot stronger than I had expected," said Tyler. Besides Lust's fine showing, we also captured 2nd in the 100 yd. dash and the 220. The men coming through with these excellent performances are Jerry Nonababu, Sanyo Aha, John Klingelhofer, and Ted Envelta.

High jumping is not the best area of the track season, and Whitman is no exception. This year Whitman had a very strong area of the track program to keep up the interest. Coach Warner attributes part of this interest to the military or civilian insurance customers.

Track: Will there finally be a winner?

Army ROTC usually to you can do it in two.

If, for example, you during your first two years of college.

Or if you just didn't want

But now you recognize the benefits:

You start the Two-Year six-week Basic Camp the summer for Camp—a little classroom physical training—replaces the Basic taken during your first two years of this six-week catch-up.

Then, after camp, you complete your Advanced Course during your junior and senior years.

Maybe you'll decide that the chance to get real management experience earlier than most people will be worth a lot later on.

Maybe you can use the $100 per month subsistence allowance you will get for up to 10 months of each school year.

Maybe qualifying for two careers simultaneously—military or civilian—is insurance against job uncertainties.

Or, maybe the opportunity for an Army ROTC scholarship is exciting.

BASEBALLERS MEET LEWIS AND CLARK

by Chuck Laird

The Whitworth Pirate baseball team will play a double-header against the Lewis and Clark Pirates tomorrow. After a layoff of close to a week, the Pirates will have plenty of time for preparation for tomorrow's games. After a 5-4 victory, Whitworth ace hurler Tim Brennan is a probable starter for the Pirates.

The Pirates are in second place in the Northwest Conference after they won three of their four conference games last week. The Pirates blasted College of Idaho 11-3. Then in a non-conference battle the Gonzaga Bulldogs nipped Whitworth 3-0. Whitworth then had three games against Whitman College of Walla Walla.

In the first game, Pirate third baseman Ron Brooks, slammed a solo home run in the bottom of the ninth inning to push the Pirates to a 6-5 win. Tim Hillem picked up the win, coming in relief for Ned Nelson, the second game, Pirate hurler Tim Wysaske pitched Whitworth to a 4-0 win. In the final game, erratic late inning play cost the Pirates a sweep of the series and Whitman finished with a 3-0 win.

The games tomorrow against Lewis and Clark could well turn into a pitching battle with two strong pitching teams. Lewis and Clark is two and three in conference action, but picked up their two wins last weekend, both shutouts. They will be going against a fine Pirates team, Wysaske lead pitching staff with an excellent 2.2 ERA, Brennan has the second best, 2.92 in 20 innings. The team ERA is 3.28, compared to opponents 4.93. Working against the Pirates is the walks column. The Bucs have given up 74 free passes in 108 innings.

In hitting, Whitworth has six men batting over .400, Gregg Redd, .472, Todd Spencer, .400, Mark Lichty, .387, Jim Lusk, .355, Larry O'Brien, .333 and Jeff Lamm, .321. Red and Lamm have collected 17 hits each, Pat Irvin tops runs scored with 14 and RBIs with 13. Lichty leads base-stealing with six. In team hitting, the Pirates lead their opponents .217 to .212, and average one more run than the opposition.

BUCS FACE EAGLES, 'CATS

The Whitworth College tennis team returned this week into pre-season action after returning from the Hawaiian Islands. The team played a tough seven match schedule over Spring Vacation that will certainly be noted in the archives of Coach Ross Cutter. The trip, being described by Dr. Cutter as "very enjoyable and profitable," provided the team with excellent early season competition. Although the team's win-loss record was not impressive, the Whits played well against a strong University of Hawaii team. The nettles lost by only 4-6 to Chaminade College and took St. Ambrose College to three sets in four matches while winning one match. The Pirates also faced Kapiolani College and the Hawaii Army team.

Back to the Northwest tennis scene, Dr. Cutter's squad defeated College of Idaho 3-0 in Whitworth's first home match of the season. Carl Cutter came through with a three hour affair and Scott Rozelle also won in singles action. Dr. Cutter was pleased with the performance of Olu Fashoyin and Peter Lynch at first doubles as well as with Brian Moore and Dave Macke at third doubles, winning 7-5 in the third set.

Today the Bucs face EWSC at Cheney, one of the two strongest teams in the Northwest district. Tomorrow afternoon Whitworth will host the Montana State University Bobcats. The Cats are coming off an eight match trip through California where Nevada and Cal Poly witnessed to avenge a 6-4 loss to Whitworth last season.

Due to the large turnout this year (20 players, one of the largest teams in Whitworth tennis history), Dr. Cutter has also scheduled seven Jr. Varsity matches. He notes that participation and competition are important for a team's success. The J.V.'s dropped their first two openers to North Idaho College and yesterday lost to SCC in their courts. Tomorrow's match between the two teams will be at 2:30 p.m.

Dorothy Vale Kissinger to speak at commencement
by Ricarda Miller

In accordance with the emergence of women in public affairs in recent years, this year's commencement speaker is a woman, Dorothy Vale Kissinger, who holds responsibility in the Presbyterian Church.

She has been well-prepared for her role in public affairs, receiving a B.A. degree from Beloit College in Wisconsin in both French and psychology, then did graduate work at the University of Michigan and Wayne State University. In addition, she had not neglected her private life, studying piano for six years at the Chicago Conservatory.

Nationally, Kissinger served as vice-chairperson of the Support Agency of the Presbyterian General Assembly for two years. She was also elected as the representative of the General Assembly Mission Council, and was responsible for its many services, including the Personnel Committee for General Assembly Agencies.

Last year, Mrs. Kissinger was elected the Vice-Moderator of the 197th General Assembly, an office she still holds. From 1974 to 1975, she was the Associate Editor for The Presbyterian Outlook, and served as Special International Women's Year Editor in 1975.

Also in 1975, Mrs. Kissinger had the distinct honor of being appointed by President Ford to the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year. If she had any spare time after that, it was taken up by Soroptimist International of the Americas, which is the largest women's classified service organization in the world. She was elected president for 1976 and she will preside over SIA which includes 15 countries, and assigned Asian-Pacific areas and has 30,000 members.

Because of her duties as Vice-Moderator of the Presbyterian denomination of 3 million people Kissinger has travelled extensively across the United States to speak at churches and various organizations. And according to A.D. magazine, she is the most active V.M. in recent Presbyterian history. But when she relaxes, it is at the Sahuaro Lake Guest Ranch in Mesa, Arizona, which she owns and operates.

Dr. Kissinger enjoys being with her family of two sons and three grandchildren.

Graduation weekend will be activity-filled with events planned for not just students, but also parents and alumni who will be visiting, it will all start off with the annual Student Honors Forum which is planned for May 4.

On May 14, the Whitworth Concert Band will be presented in the Auditorium at 8 p.m. at no cost to students or public. Then at 9 p.m., an informal gathering in the Tom of Reception and Convivialities is planned in the Hub, for all faculty, parents, seniors and alumni.

Saturday, May 15, will find everyone busy all day, beginning at 9 a.m. with both a tennis and golf tournament. Both require advance registration. Only the tennis is free; the golf is $6.00. At 9:30 are the class reunion banquets, for those who graduated in 1960 or 1966, held at seven campus locations. Four mini-courses will also be available, ranging from religion to psychology, at 11 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. At noon, there will be a picnic lunch held in the loop. And at 5:30 the Gala Banquet for Alumni, seniors and parents will fill the Davenport Hotel's Marie Antoinette room. The Whitworth Jazz Ensemble will provide entertainment. Tickets cost $6.00, and reservations must be made in advance.

The big day, Sunday, May 16, will see the Baccalaureate speaker, Dr. Nick Faber begin at 8 a.m. And Commencement will be at 2 p.m. in the Pine Bowl, with a reception in the fieldhouse following.

Trustees to discuss budget, fund raising
by Ricarda Miller

Any rumors to the effect that Whitworth is going more conservative next year in order to attract big money were dispelled by Dr. David Winter, college executive vice president in a recent Whitworthian interview. Although his main topic focused in on what the plans are and the budget, the ground he walked on was the uniqueness function it serves now as one of the more liberal colleges attracting normal students in an area that has always been known for its strict conservatism. "There isn't any room for any change to a more conservative school," he said.

Getting back to the subject at hand, Winter said that the trustees will be mainly concerned with the board meeting: a major fund drive that may be planned within a few years, and, the topic was dear to our hearts, the budget.

A study is currently going on, seeing if Whitworth could benefit from an all-out fund drive, and if so, the groundwork, being laid out for it now, will be put into action, but certainly not before two years. The budget will be submitted to the trustees to see if they approve.

Winter commented favorably on Whitworth's trustees, saying how impressed with them he was. He expressed a wish for all students to be able to know them in the way that he does, just as we could see for ourselves how involved with Whitworth they really are, and how much they care about the school.

"There is nothing more important than the Board of trustees, and there is nothing more misunderstood by students. He went on to say that the popular image of a trustee being an old guy who visits the campus because of twice a year to relive the glories simply isn't true here. The various committees keep in touch with the school, holding monthly meetings all year long, then report at the board meetings.

Whitworth has a very large board of trustees, with over 40 people, concerned with the more usual size of between 20-30. And Winter stressed the good relationship the administration has with its trustees, saying, "We run on a relationship of trust," said Winter. He gave as an example that whenever he was a little worried about the budget, feeling confident that it was only temporary. "I don't know of another college that could do that," he said.

In general, the administration initiates many of the ideas, and the trustees approve it. In effect, "they own it, but we run it."

Dr. Winter also said that he thought the students would benefit from more contact with the trustees, suggesting it may give them even more confidence in their school, knowing the kind of people who back us up. "I've learned since I've been here at Whitworth that I didn't know before, of the great significance of trust. And the trustees are the ones that inspire that kind of trust.

Just hours before press time, the Whitworthian learned that there may be a major new development at the board meeting concerning a proposal to build a new facility on campus. More details were not available.
Sharond Parks loves and leaves

by Steve Weber

It almost seems appropriate for Ralph Ed- wards to make an appearance on campus and say, "Sharon Parks, this is your life!" There is only one drawback with this, the life of Sharon Parks, as the song goes, "has only just begun."

Although Parks' life is progressing, she will never forget all she has learned at Whit- worth. There will never forget her for what she has taught them. Her experience at Whitworth has been much like the lives of many students. To put it in very common words, Parks has had a growing Whitworth experience.

Sharon Parks came to Whitworth in 1972 to serve as Assistant Chaplain. During this time she served as many different things to many different people as a counselor, and minister are a few of the positions that according to other members, "will be impossible to fill." When she leaves this summer to attend Harvard Divinity School in Boston, she will begin her doctoral studies and apply some of the valuable knowledge about her Christian faith that she learned at Whitworth.

While at Whitworth there were many programs and different projects Parks was a part of. According to her, the theme domes were probably the most important task she undertook. Although she modestly- says she had much help, the theme domes, the domes would most likely never have been established without her help.

The reason Parks became involved with the theme domes was because of her interest in a place that has continuity but is always changing. She believed tremendously in the idea be- hind a theme dome; helping other people but all the while learning from the people you are help- ing.

Parks also feels another big part of her Whitworth experience has to do with the trips to San Francisco. She was in on the beginnings of those and she went on the first trip. These trips, like the theme domes, had the serve and learn principle behind them. She benefited much from serving people and learning from it.

In regards to leaving Whitworth, Parks said she is "very scared." She also said it was going to be hard to leave all the excellent people there that she has worked with. All these people said the same about her, it is going to be hard to see such an excellent person go.

Morley to transfer; his repertoire grows

by Doug Cooley

David A. Morley is the man who travels 15 weeks out of the year stalking the wily Whitworthian. He must face 100 high school students after they've sat for 48 hours on a bus from Portland. According to Morty, "It is like finding enough room. He is the man who vaguely resembles one of the Beach Boys. He is the man reaching (who is in the role of Director of Admissions at Whitworth College.

Morley has decided that the demands of ad- missions work make it hard to give his family the priority, "I realize that my kids aren't getting as young, and I want them to know me."

He says admissions people today are "working twice as hard as they used to to get the same results." He finds fewer students interested in private Christian schools, and press stress on the importance of education creating fewer available students.

But Morley has another reason. Morley has been Director of Admissions at Whitworth Col- lege since 1970. From 1968 to 1970 he was As- sociate Director of Admissions. In 1966 he was called Associate Director of Admis- sions. And the three years before that he was Director of Student Activities. Morley had re- ceived his BA in Business Administration from the University of Washington where in 1961, he added a Masters in Education/Guidance and Counseling in "71 from the same anonymous school, Whitworth College. You can't go on six years without going somewhere."

Thus prompts 36 year old Morley to say he "feels anxious about all his experience being at Whitworth. It's going to be hard to let him go."

For the next year anyway. Morley will still work for admissions because he is anxious about his passing the reigns to a new admision director. Morley will leave however, with the assurance that the new admision director will have all the good reasons there are for staying. He says admissions people today are "very anxious about leaving Whitworth."

Winters tasks back to Lindaman

by Marc Medefind

In an interview with the Whitthoman Tuesday, Dr. Edward Lindaman, college president, stated the responsibilities held by his wife, Diane, executive vice president will fall back on himself.

The revelation came as a result of Winters' announced resignation. He, and the concern over the gap he will leave in the administrative faculty. Lindaman made it immensely clear that a new executive vice president will not in any way be sought out of hired. "Dave is leaving a hole which will be impossible to fill...._jobs revolve around people and Diane has been able to fulfill such a special role in this respect that it would be impossible to replace him."

The executive vice president's job was originally performed by the president, now that Winter is president of West- moor College, the job will again fall to the president. In this case, there will be two "major shifts" as Lindaman stated in the April 8 edition. The shifts in regard to policy or goals as set forth by the administrative faculty are still to be worked out, his goals are clear, we know where we are going," said Lindaman.

As regards the resignation of David Winter, admissions director, and that the president is being sought out to fill the gap he is anxious to leave his family is moving to Sacramento, California where Dave will be a regional admissions director for Whitworth.
Whitworthian receives award

by Ann Hollifield

The Whitworthian received an award for "general excellence in journalism" at last Saturday night's Western Washington chapter of the national Society for Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

At a banquet and awards ceremony held at the Kitsap Golf and Country Club, journalism from six different sections—daily, weekly, college, high school, radio, and television—were honored for award-winning achievement.

The Whitworthian received the third place award for four year colleges, making it one of the top three for four year colleges in the state. Western Washington State College took first place at the University of Washington's daily was second.

College newspapers were required to submit three consecutive issues for judging. A total of 39 colleges were entered in the two categories of two and four year colleges.

The judges of all the divisions, both professional and school, were journalists from 24 different states, and were often connected with such university recognized publications as Editor and Publisher and the Kansas.

Professional newspapers organizations entered individual stories, photos and newsletters in various highly specialized categories. (There were 27 categories for daily newspapers alone, including six for photography.) Colleges and high schools were judged only on overall journalism, as well as the master of ceremonies. It was "only on just everything."

The judges of the four year college division commented the Whitworthian for "light, lively writing, well-based, and serious treatment of subjects where required." They described the Whitworthian as "highly readable in magazine format with good coverage of campus activities."

"We are naturally gratified," Kathy Pecka, editor-in-chief of the Whitworthian commented, "to win an award in the face of competition from state schools with much larger staffs and budgets. The award came at an especially good time."

There was a total of 2,487 entries in the competition. One editor enclosed a letter with his decision saying that "judging between the excellent entries was a difficult task, that is as soon as I seal the envelope, I'm going out for dinner."

Notable among the many winners were the humorous entries and the general qualities that the judges seemed to find most commendable in stories—namely warmth, insight, and drama, as well as of course, as good background and writing.

The banquet and awards ceremony was held in the Olympic Room of the Olympic Hotel, and an estimated 2,000 people were present. Four members of the Whitworthian staff, Kathy Pecka, Editor-in-Chief, Ann Hollifield, Feature Editor, Les Schloetel, Advertising and Circulation Manager, and Randy Mohr—Staff Artist, were also there.

Dorothy Powers of the Spokane Review tied for the third place award in the "Public Affairs—Science and Health" category and Dave Smith of KREM Radio took first place in "Documentary" radio reporting and third in "Commendable Award" category. The three awards and the Whitworthian award were the only local news services honored.

Director Pat Stien (far left) and composer Suzanne Steen (far right) work with leads Bob Frost and Laurie Jones in "Savage in the White House," which premieres Friday.

Drama department head Albert Gunderson coaches Hilary Barr and Doug Wunsch in stage movement. The production is a musical tribute to Andrew Jackson.

Many employers can give you the answer. Because to fill responsible jobs, they often look for college graduates who have held responsible positions.

As an Army officer, you will shoulder greater responsibilities far earlier than most other college graduates --- responsibilities for men, money and materials.

This means giving your absolute best and getting the people you supervise or command to give theirs.

It's no wonder that many employers, looking for demonstrated leadership, rate "Army officer" above most other qualifications. Or why career-minded college students so often take Army ROTC.

Two-Year Program for Sophomores

College sophomores can apply for the special Two-Year Program, right now. You'll attend a six-week basic camp with pay. Approximately $500.

Do well and you can qualify for the Army ROTC Advanced Course in the fall. Do exceptionally well, and you may be heading back to college with a two-year full tuition scholarship.

So, weigh carefully what you want and then decide how "Army officer" would look on your job application.

ARMY ROTC. LEARN WHAT IT TAKES TO LEAD.
Musical premieres Friday, features life of Jackson

The premier performance of "Savage in the White House" will open at 8 p.m., Friday night in Cowles Memorial Auditorium. The musical, with script by Richard M. Daley and music by Suzanne Steen, is the story of the 7th U.S. President, Andrew Jackson and his wife, Rachel.

Directed by Pat Stien, the musical features freshman Bob Frost as Jackson, senior Laurie Jones as Rachel, junior Hillary Barr as Aberdeen MacDougall, Rachel's fiery Scottish friend, and freshman Doug Wunch as Aberdeen's beau and Jackson's aide, Jamesy O'Neal.

Junior Tom Wegeleben plays Col. Overton, Mike Brothers, a freshman plays Saveworthy, freshman Dirk Stratton is the villainous Mr. Dickinson, with Liz Peterson as his wife. Clay, and senior Scott Shaw plays John Quincy Adams, Jackson's political foe, Judy James, a senior is the assistant director for the production.

Suzanne Steen is Pat Stien's daughter and has been working with the cast for the last month. She recently expressed her appreciation of the opportunity to work so closely on the premier, and commented that it isn't often a composer gets to be close at hand while his/her work is performed. Steen is here from her home in Minneapolis with her two children.

The collaboration between Steen and Daley that eventually produced "Savage in the White House" began as a lark. Steen and Daley were high school classmates and Daley had written a novel about Jackson which he asked Steen to add music to. The work progressed through many revisions over a nine year period, and the two writers communicated during the last several years by mail alone. Serious work on the production began seven years ago.

The main characters are backed by a 17 member group of chorus and dancers. The dancers have been choreographed by junior Nancy Norby. The Whitworth College Orchestra directed by junior Don Caron, will also be part of the production. Dr. Tom Tavenner has provided voice instructions.

The production marks a new venture for director Stien, who has been known at Whitworth for her work in oral interpretation and her direction of many well-received Reader's Theatre productions. She terms this show as an experience in "musical theatre without walls." It is in between a full-scale drama production and the stools and reader's stands of traditional Reader's Theatre.

The musical offers a glimpse of the personal problems and achievements of Jackson...
The Whitworth Pirates will make their last road trip of the season this weekend, as the Bucs travel to the Valley in Pullman for a four game series with Linfield and Pacific University.

As of this writing the Bucs are packing an 11-7-2 record with games to be played against Willamette, and single contests with Eastern and Gonzaga University.

Coach Spike Greswom's diamond men just recently completed a tour of the coast, and the Pirates dropped two out of three in Tacoma to Pacific Lutheran, earning a tie with Bellevue and splitting with Central Washington in Ellensburg.

Against PLU, Tim Brennan came in to relieve during the fifth inning, stranded 3-2 and blanked the Lutes the rest of the way, while his teammate put together a three-run ninth inning rally to give the Bucs a 7-3 win.

However, on the following day the Bucs batters were stymied by Pacific Lutheran's pitching and could manage only a split against no defeats.

Bellvue raced off to a 4-1 lead against the Pirates, but Whitworth battled back with two runs in the nine inning, to take a 5-5 lead heading into the bottom half of the inning.

Greg Red's single in to center, had tied the score at four, and Larry O'Brien raced home on a double. Whitworth then picked up single runs in the third and fourth to take a 2-1 lead, then added three more in the sixth, to earn a 5-1 win and the split of the double header.

Vaughn who doubled in the only run of the game had thrown a pitch to hit. Pitcher Bob Bums struck out nine and pitched a fine game even though he picked up the loss.

Winding up their collegiate careers at Whitworth are seniors Tim Brennan and Dave Barnes. Brennan who was an all-conference selection as a pitcher last season is almost certain to repeat this year. Both players would enjoy nothing more than to close out their campaign with a league championship.

Whitworth, currently 6-5 in conference, needs to sweep its remaining league games to have a shot at the Northwest Conference title.

NEW MANAGERS SELECTED

The Student Activities office has been bustling with activity in the past few weeks as 77 new ASWC student managers prepare to take on the responsibilities of their respective jobs. In fact, some of the new managers are already at work arranging activities for next fall.

The managers had to apply to the ASWC for their jobs, and once chosen, their hiring had to be ratified by the President's Council. The ratification took place at the April 19 meeting.

Kaye Mickelson, student activities coordinator and the person who reviewed the applications, commented, "I have seen a lot of energy, creativity and excitement about student activities in the new student managers. We are all looking forward to a great year.

The student managers for 1974-75 are: travel: Steve Linn, presently a sophomore, and John Roti, freshman, Nancy Chan, freshman; dances, Domingo Taumanupepe, junior; weddings, Larry Bob Turner, junior; recreation, Laurie Granath and Randy Sitton, freshman; movies, Mary Sue Fairchild and Jim Motteller, freshman; concessions, Elbert Wallace, freshman; Fall semester events, Marcia Kelley, freshman; Student Co-op, David Breckinridge and Dave S. Doherty, sophomores; cultural, Louis Hill, sophomore; and special services, Tom Preston, sophomore.

"I really feel that the students hired as managers are a good cross representation of the campus community," stated Mickelson. She encourages students to feel free to talk to the new managers and establish a flow of ideas from the campus community.

WHITWORTH 'PROBLEM' ROUNDUP

The controversial resolution calling for the resignation of Kathy Pelka, Whitworthian editor and A. O. Gray, Whitworthian advisor was amended to drop the resignation request and seed the issues raised in the resolution to Publication's Committee for review and recommendation, in a recent President's Council meeting.

Joe Atwood, Carlson's president proposed the amendment after an earlier amendment asking for Pelka's apology was defeated.

The first resolution culminated several days of controversy starting when the Whitworthian published an editorial by Pecka, commenting on the views of a ASWC presidential candidate, Kevin Rudolph. Carlson later on that same day, exposed the resolution to the campus community.

Publication's Committee met Tuesday and formed several task forces to examine issues included the role of Publication's Committee to President's Council, the question of prior copy approval, the role of advisors, and the purpose of student publications. The findings of these task forces will be reported to President's Council.

RADIO STATION REALLY IS GOING TO HAPPEN

Why is FM 90.3 still silent?

For six years Whitworth students have unsuccessfully attempted to establish a college radio station. A license application was submitted to the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) in the name of the ASWC in June 1974. No results. The application could not be approved because licenses are not given to student governments.

In February 1976 the application for a license was again submitted to the FCC in the name of the college. Station manager and program director, Jon Flora, says, "We anticipate to hear from them before the end of the year." FM 90.3 will be heard daily from twelve noon to twelve midnight. Programming will include requests for rock, soul, folk, and jazz music as well as forums, sports events and shows by various departments. The station's broadcasts will reach a five to ten mile radius.

About 30 interested people are volunteering to help Flora, who has worked on the station for a year and a half, and his assistant, Craig Malone, interested people who wish to help can contact Flora, his office and the station are located in Room #3 in the HUB.

Pirate catcher Jim Last greets Willamette baseballer in action this past weekend. The Bucs split the two game series with Willamette, winning the first game 9-6, then dropping the second game 3-2.
Track returns to Bowl

by Mike Repovich

"Although we lost, the attitude between the teams and their athletes in the finals showed me one thing," said coach Tyler. "We accomplished our goal of bringing track back to the Pin Bowl." Pacific Lutheran won the meet of two and a half weeks ago. 52% to 46. Although we didn’t make a real strong showing, we did have our high points.

Jessa Snyder and Dennis Dochelt took first and third respectively in the hammer throw with marks of 116’7" and 93’11”. High jumper Chris Roberts cleared 6’ to take first place.

Jim Lust, Jerry Nanabu, Larry Guin, and Sonya Alta continued to improve and won the 440 relay. The mile run was by far the most exciting event of the day. PLU won the race in 4:29.3, Dick Day and Paul Johnson of Whitworth finished 2nd and 3rd respectively with times of 4:29.5 and 4:29.6.

Last Saturdays meet was held in La Grande, Oregon under ideal weather conditions. The school’s competing against us were college of Idaho, Eastern Oregon State College, and North-basically on the move and use some innovative things,” said Eckland. He is hopeful of involvement and support from the Spokane community.

Eckland, who will officially take control of the athletic program in August, said of his involvement with Whitworth right now, “I want a chance to sit back, a little bit, and take over the situation and familiarize myself with the school and personnel.”

The approach Eckland will bring to his new assignment here at Whitworth is “to build a strong athletic program built on Christian principles within the philosophy of the institution.” He also feels women’s athletics “are extremely important.”

Berge Borrevik announced his resignation earlier in the year, after holding the athletic director position for four years. After I asked what problem would Eckland be facing, with including any financial problems within the department’s budget, “It will be a tight budget year, and funds for all programs will be tightened,” said Borrevik. With the college having to tighten their belts on money, can we expect any programs to be cut by Eckland for the next year? “I can assure you 100%, we will not cut back any programs, not while we are in the Northwest Conference. We will continue to have teams representing Whitworth in the nine major sports in the Conference.”

west Nazarene College. Some athletes from the different schools were unable to compete because they couldn’t warm up.

Dick Day was able to run well enough in the mile to qualify for the conference meet. Anderson Jones took first in the 440 yd. dash with a time of 52.1 and James Brown was third in 55.6. Jones had a previous best of 51.1 the week before.

Jim Lust ran a ten flat to win the 100 yd. dash and Jerry Nanabu placed third in a 10.4. Lust also won the 220 yd. dash with his best effort yet of 22.0.

The highlight of the rain drenched afternoon was the mile relay. Whitworth’s Jones, Guin, Creed and Brown won it with a time of 3:36.6. Every runner was within a few feet of each other until Brown pulled away from his man in the backstretch of the anchor leg.

Whitworth’s women’s team has won two consecutive meets. Two and a half weeks ago they were the sponsors of a meet which included the University of Idaho, and Yakima Valley in the Pin Bowl. Whitworth won with a score of 72, Idaho 55, and Yakima 32.

Sue Dale won the long jump and the 220. The women’s relay team took first in the 2 mile relay, Janice Droge and Vicki Abbott placed first and second respectively in the mile.

Two personal beats were achieved by DeeDee Deedeen and Sue Polan as they tied. DeeDee ran a 19.1 to take first place and Sue a 19.4 to place fourth.

Sandy Schiller won the 440 and Liz Roys the 880. Cindy Chapman ran an 11:51.4 to take the two mile and the mile relay team also took first place.

The women were again victorious this last Saturday in La Grande in what coach Warner called "a disappointing and frustrating afternoon due to the weather. The women competed against teams from Northwest Nazarene, Eastern Oregon, and Blue Mountain Community College.

Sue Day won the 100 yd. dash in 12.0 and the 220 in 27.2. She needs to take off 2/10 of a second to qualify for the regional meet. Cindy Chapman won the mile in 5:25.2 and also the two miles. Janice Durie and Shelly Holme took second and third respectively to complete a sweep of the mile.

This Saturday the men and women’s teams travel to Ellensburg for the Northwest area meet. This will be the last meet that they will be able to use to qualify for the regional meet on May 8th at Boise State.
